First, the date, which will fix the time for its commencement, unless some other period is specified in the instrument itself for that purpose; Keyes v. Dearborn, 12 N. H. 52; Styles v. Wardle, 4 B. & C. 908; but if there is no date, or an impossible one, the time will be considered as having commenced from the delivery of the deed; id.; Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 230.

Second, the names of the parties, with respect to which the law knows but one Christian name; and therefore the middle letter of the name of either party is immaterial, and a person may always show he is as well known by one name as another; this is the rule as to deeds generally; Games v. Stiles, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 322, 10 L. Ed. 476; Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362; and it is applied in the case of a lease; Tayl. L. & T. § 149. The entire omission of the lessee's name from a lease will render the instrument simply void; Jackson v. Titus, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 430; Taylor, L. & T. § 149, where many cases are cited, but only showing the rule as to deeds generally which applies also to leases. In West Virginia one whose name is not mentioned in the body of a lease is not a party to it or bound by it as a grantor, although he signs and acknowledges it as his deed; Barnsdall v. Boley, 119 Fed. 191. When one partner signed the name of both and the firm entered under the lease, it was held a parol ratification; Holbrook v. Chamberlin, 116 Mass. 155, 17 Am. Rep. 146.

Third, recitals of title or other circumstances of the case (though not usual in practice).

Fourth, some consideration must appear, although it need not be what is technically called rent, or a periodical render of compensation for the use of the premises; Failing v. Schenck, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 344; State v. Page, 1 Speers (S. C.) 408, 40 Am. Dec. 608; but it may be a sum in gross, or the natural affection which one party has for the other. It may also consist of grain, animals, or the personal services of the lessee; Tayl. L. & T. § 152 et seq.; or a promise to pay rent; McFarlane v. Williams, 107 Ill. 33; and when the lease does not stipulate for the cessation of rent upon the destruction of the building by fire, or that the lessor shall repair, a tenant is not relieved from the payment of rent by a partial destruction of the building; Cook & Co. v. Anderson, 85 Ala. 99, 4 South. 713. See LANDLORD AND TENANT. An agreement that the occupation is to be rent free may be inferred from the circumstances attending its inception; Sherwin v. Lasher, 9 Ill. App. 227; and a written acknowledgment that one holds as tenant raises no presumption of a promise to pay rent; Savings Bank v. Getchell, 59 N. H. 281. Where there is no compensation mentioned to be paid for the use and occupation of the premises, the landlord should be allowed what it is reasonably worth; Scrantom v. Booth, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 171.

Fifth, the operative words of a lease are usually "demise, grant, lease, and to farm let." The use of the term "demise" in a lease imports covenants of good right and title to make the lease and for quiet enjoyment; Crouch v. Fowle, 9 N. H. 219, 32 Am. Dec. 350, with an extended note on implied covenants of title, in which are collected many cases on the covenants for title, implied from the words "demise, concessi, or the like," said to have been recognized from the earliest times; Rawle, Cov. 461.

Sixth, the description of the premises need not specify all the particulars of the subject-matter of the demise, for the accessories will follow the principal thing named: thus, the garden is parcel of a dwelling-house, and the general description of a farm includes all the houses and lands appertaining to the farm; Bennet v. Bittle, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 339; or machinery in a building used for its operation; Thropp v. Field, 26 N. J. Eq. 82; Lanpher v. Glenn, 37 Minn. 4, 33 N. W. 10; or which is necessary to its enjoyment; Chesebrough v. Pingree, 72 Mich. 438, 40 N. W. 747, 1 L. R. A. 529; or a lease of land includes the buildings on it; Isham v. Morgan, 9 Conn. 374, 23 Am. Dec. 361. But whether certain premises are parcel of the demise or not is always matter of evidence; Smith v. McCallister, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 434; Trimble's Heirs v. Ward, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 8; 2 B. & C. 608, where it was queried whether evidence dehors the lease was admissible, although the question was not necessary to be decided.

Seventh, the rights and liabilities of the respective parties are regulated by law in the absence of any particular agreement in respect thereto; but express covenants are usually inserted in a lease, for the purpose of limiting or otherwise defining their rights and duties in relation to repairs, taxes, insurance renewals, residence on the premises, modes of cultivation, fixtures, and the like. Certain covenants are also implied in law from the use of certain technical terms in leases. For example there is an implied covenant that the lessee shall have a right of entry at the time set by the lease as the beginning of the term; Herpolsheimer v. Christopher, 76 Neb. 352, 107 N. W. 382, 111 N. W. 359, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1127, 14 Ann. Cas. 399. The intention of the parties to a lease must be gathered from the instrument taken as a whole. Upper Appomattox County v. Hamilton, 83 Va. 319, 2 S. E. 195.

Termination. Leases are terminated in various cases, as to which see, at large, LANDLORD AND TENANT. The death of a life tenant of real estate terminates his subtenant's right of possession; Edghill v. Mankey,

In every well-drawn lease, provision is made for a forfeiture of the term in case the tenant refuses to pay rent, commits waste, or is guilty of a breach of the covenant to repair, insure, reside upon the premises, or the like. This clause enables the lessor or his assigns to re-enter in any such event upon the demised premises and eject the tenant, leaving both parties in the same condition as if the lease were a nullity; but in the absence of a proviso for re-entry the lessor would possess no such power, the mere breach of a covenant enabling him to sue for damages only; Brown v. Kite, 2 Overton (Tenn.) 233; Den v. Post, 25 N. J. L. 285; Fox v. Brissac, 15 Cal. 223; and if he does so enter and eject the tenant, the latter may recover damages for vegetables and fruit on the land and planted by him; id. The provision for re-entry for condition broken can operate only during the term and the right vanishes when that ends; Johns v. Whitley, 3 Wils. 127.

The forfeiture will generally be enforced by the courts, except where the landlord's damages are a mere matter of computation and can be readily compensated by money; Jackson v. Brownson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258; Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price 200. One condition essential to the forfeiture of a lease by the lessor is a demand of the rent; Henderson v. Coke Co., 140 U. S. 25, 11 Sup. Ct. 691, 35 L. Ed. 332; but where the forfeiture, if taken advantage of, works a hardship, and full compensation can be made, courts of equity generally relieve against it upon the making of such compensation; Hagar v. Buck, 44 Vt. 285, 8 Am. Rep. 368; Thompson v. Whipple, 5 R. I. 144. But if the performance of the covenant is impossible, as where the condition was of personal services and the like and the time therefor has passed, equity will not relieve; Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415, 50 Am. Dec. 44; a court of equity never lends its aid to enforce forfeiture; Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 468; and it will not relieve against the legal consequences of a breach of a covenant as well in cases which rest in contract as where the legal relation between the parties is fully established; it must be a strong case of equity created by a landlord against himself to control his legal right; 9 Hare 683. In case of a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent, the proviso is allowed to operate simply as a security for rent, and the tenant will be relieved from its effects at any time by paying the landlord or bringing into court the amount of all arrears of rent, with interest and costs. The right to terminate the lease for the non-payment of rent will not give the lessee any right to avoid the lease or his liability for agreed rent; Lehigh Zinc & I. Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 14 Sup. Ct. 219, 37 L. Ed. 1215; Morris v. De Wolf, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 701, 33 S. W. 556. Where the lessee has forfeited his rights under the lease and abandoned the same, the lessor may have it cancelled; Reese v. Zinn, 103 Fed. 97. A provision in a lease that the lessee may buy the land "at the option of the parties" means that the lessee may buy at his own option; Mack v. Dailey, 67 Vt. 90, 30 Atl. 686; and where the lease contains such an option if the lessee keeps all its conditions, the acceptance by the landlord of the rent after it is due, without objection, waives a breach of the condition as to the time of its payment; id. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

A lease may be surrendered by any agreement between the parties that the term shall be terminated, which is irrevocably acted upon by both; Buffalo County Nat. Bank v. Hanson, 34 Neb. 455, 51 N. W. 1035; but a mere agreement, unless accompanied by the act, is inoperative; National Union Bldg. Ass'n v. Brewer, 41 Ill. App. 223.

A lease may also be terminated before the prescribed period if the premises are taken for public uses or improvements; O'Brien v. Ball, 119 Mass. 28; Barclay v. Picker, 38 Mo. 143 (and the subsequent reconveyance of the property by the city to the lessor would not revive the lease); or sold under process of law; Clarkson v. Skidmore, 46 N. Y. 297; or the total destruction of the demised building by fire, there being no covenant to repair; Ainsworth v. Ritt, 38 Cal. 89; Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio 477; or the use of the premises for immoral purposes, which, if contemplated in the making of the lease, invalidates it, and the court will not aid either party to enforce it; 2 C. & P. 347; Demartini v. Anderson, 127 Cal. 33, 29 Pac. 207 (and the lessor is indictable for such letting; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. [Mass.] 26); or any illegal use, as gambling; Ryan v. Potwin, 62 Ill. App. 134.

A lease of land is not terminated by the death of the lessee, but an action will lie against his administrator for rent during the remainder of the term; Alsup v. Banks, 68 Miss. 664, 9 South. 895, 13 L. R. A. 598, 24 Am. St. Rep. 294. So a lease is terminated by merger in the inheritance or the fee when the tenant acquires it by descent or purchase; Carroll v. Ballance, 26 Ill. 9, 79 Am. Dec. 354; and as to this point see further LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Assignment. It is not unusual for a lease to contain a covenant forbidding the assignment of it by the lessee without the written consent of the lessor. Such covenant does not bind the lessee where he signs the lease, and at the request of the lessor assigns it to a third person, to whom it is never, in fact, delivered; Stetson v. Briggs, 114 Cal. 511, 46 Pac. 603.

An assignment of a lease does not become complete and valid until there is consent by the proposed assignee; Beattie v. Copper

Co., 7 Mont. 320, 17 Pac. 451. Where a lease contained a covenant against assignment by the lessee and the latter devised his interest to his executors upon certain trusts in the execution of which they transferred the estate to themselves as trustees, there was no breach of covenant; Squire v. Learned, 196 Mass. 134, 81 N. E. 880, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 634, 124 Am. St. Rep. 525, 12 Ann. Cas. 977.

Parol evidence. The general rule that a deed cannot be varied by parol applies to leases, and it has been enforced with respect to their date; Henson v. Coope, 3 Scott, N. R. 48; the amount of the rent; Flinn v. Calow, 1 Man. & Gr. 589; the contemporaneous grant of rights and privileges inconsistent with the terms of the lease; Jungerman v. Boyee, 19 Cal. 354; Sientes v. Odier, 17 La. Ann. 153; time of payment of rent; Carpenter v. Shanklin, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 308; that the lessee agreed to pay taxes; Rich v. Jackson, 6 Ves. Jr. 334, n.; or that the lessor, at the time of the lease, agreed to repair; Post v. Vetter, 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 248; though a subsequent agreement for a consideration may be proved; Mayor, etc., of City of New York v. Price, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 542; Ten Eyck v. Sleeper, 65 Minn. 413, 67 N. W. 1026; but an allegation that the lessee was induced to occupy the premises by the lessor's promise to put in fixtures, made after the execution of the lease, does not show such consideration; Johnson v. Witte (Tex.) 32 S. W. 426. See as to this rule, generally, and the exceptions to it, PAROL EVIDENCE; CONTRACT; DEED. It was held that the question whether there had been a modification, as between lessor and lessee, was for the jury unless it was admitted by the pleadings; Evers v. Shumaker, 57 Mo. App. 454.

Leases by corporations. Aside from the question of power to make a lease, which is usually covered by the general powers conferred upon business corporations both under special charters and general incorporation laws, leases by and to such corporations will be found to be governed by the same rules as those applied to leases by natural persons. Accordingly, the general charter powers of purchasing, holding and dealing in real estate and other property and of selling, leasing or buying land were held sufficient to authorize the leasing and maintenance of a summer hotel by a railroad company at its terminus; Jacksonville, M. P. R. & Nav. Co. v. Hooper, 160 U. S. 514, 16 Sup. Ct. 379, 40 L. Ed. 515. So chartering a yacht by a newspaper corporation for the purpose of collecting news at the time of the war with Spain, was valid as within the means proper for the exercise of its charter powers; Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n v. Moore, 183 U. S. 642, 22 Sup. Ct. 240, 46 L. Ed. 366. A corporation authorized to hold real estate may lease its real estate to be used in a business different to that which the corporation is authorized to carry on; Nye v. Storer, 168 Mass. 53, 46 N. E. 402.

The execution of a lease by an authorized agent of a corporation is valid and effectual to create a term without the use of the corporate seal; Crawford v. Longstreet, 43 N. J. L. 329; Phillip v. Aurora Lodge, 87 Ind. 505.

A corporation may lease a portion of its real estate to its directors subject to ratification by the stockholders; Nye v. Storer, supra. See also Gamble v. Water Co., 123 N. Y. 91, 25 N. E. 201, 9 L. R. A. 527; Bjorngaard v. Bank, 49 Minn. 483, 52 N. W. 48.

As to the nature of the interest and liability for rent under gas and oil leases, see GAS; OIL. See generally LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Individuals who sign a lease to a fictitious corporation as officers of it are individually liable on the lease though it is under seal; Schenkberg v. Treadwell, 94 N. Y. Supp. 418.

Lease of railroad. A lease by a railroad company of all its road, rolling stock, and franchises, for which no authority is given in its charter, is ultra vires and void; Thomas v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. Ed. 950, the leading case. The decision is based upon the ground that such a company exercises its functions in a large measure for the public good, and that it is forbidden by public policy to disable itself to perform its duties to the public without the consent of the state; id. The ordinary clause in a charter authorizing the company to contract with other transportation companies for the mutual transfer of goods and passengers over each other's roads does not authorize a lease of the road and its franchises; id. Unless specially authorized by its charter or some legislative action, a railroad company cannot, by lease or other contract, turn over to another company for a long period of time its road and appurtenances or the use of its franchises and the exercise of its powers, nor can any other railroad company make a contract to run and operate such road, property, and franchises. Such a contract is not among the ordinary powers of a railroad company; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 290, 6 Sup. Ct. 1094, 30 L. Ed. 83; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Grayson, 88 Ala. 572, 7 South. 122, 16 Am. St. Rep. 69; Middlesex R. Co. v. R. Co., 115 Mass. 347; State v. R. Co., 24 Neb. 143, 38 N. W. 43, 8 Am. St. Rep. 164; Black v. Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 455. "If it were otherwise, a railroad company, by leasing its road to irresponsible persons, might enjoy all the benefits conferred by its charter and practically leave the public generally, as well as individuals, without any of the protection which the obligations imposed upon the company by its charter, as well as the general law of the state, were designed to afford;" Harmon v. R. Co., 28 S. C. 401, 5 S. E. 835, 13 Am. St. Rep. 686. In Woodruff v. R. Co., 93 N. Y. 609, it was held that the making of a lease of its road and franchises to an individual, being a railroad corporation, though not authorized under the general incorporating act, is neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum, nor is it void as contrary to public policy, but as to whether such a lease is ultra vires, quære. In that case the lessee brought suit to obtain from the receiver of the defendant payment for the use, but the receiver of the leased property and the lessee set up the defence that the lease was ultra vires. The court held that having had possession and use of the property the defendant was estopped from questioning its validity in an action to recover the rent and that the estoppel bound all who claimed through or under it. Judgment having been recovered for the plaintiff at the special term, it was reversed at the general term, which in its turn was reversed and the judgment of the special term affirmed by the Court of Appeals. In Mahoney v. R. Co., 63 Me. 68, where one company leased its entire road to another under authority of a statute, it was held "that the lessee corporation becomes the owner pro hac vice of the road leased and is liable for damages" accruing from negligence in the operation of the road. The act authorizing the lease, provided specifically that nothing in it, or in any law or contract entered into under the authority of the same should exonerate the company from any of its duties or liabilities imposed upon it by its charter or by the general laws of the state. The authority to the lessee company to make such lease is not authority to the lessor company for that purpose; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. R. Co., 130 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 32 L. Ed. 837. Where a railroad company of New Jersey leased its franchises and roads to a railway corporation of another state, the lease being not only not authorized, but expressly forbidden by law, and its effect being to combine coal producers and carriers of anthracite coal, it was held to be an excess of corporate power which tended to monopoly and the public injury; Stockton v. R. Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 24 Atl. 964, 17 L. R. A. 97; and the lessor road is subject to forfeiture; State v. R. Co., 24 Neb. 143, 38 N. W. 43, 8 Am. St. Rep. 164.

A lease made by one railroad corporation to another, neither of which is expressly authorized by law to enter into the lease, is ultra vires and void; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bridge Co., 131 U. S. 371, 9 Sup. Ct. 770, 33 L. Ed. 157; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. R. Co., 130 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 32 L. Ed. 837.

A corporation of one state lawfully leasing a railroad in another state is, as to it, subject to local legislation to the extent to which the lessee would have been subject had there been no lease; Stone v. R. Co., 116 U. S. 347, 6 Sup. Ct. 348, 29 L. Ed. 650. The laws of a state granting to a railroad company authority to lease its roads do not authorize a lease of a part of it which runs in the Indian country, without the consent of the United States expressly given; Briscoe v. R. Co., 40 Fed. 280.

A corporation in debt cannot transfer its entire property by lease so as to prevent the application of the property to the satisfaction of its debts; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Bank, 134 U. S. 276, 10 Sup. Ct. 550, 33 L. Ed. 900; and in such case equity may decree the payment by the lessee of a judgment debt of the lessor; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 290, 6 Sup. Ct. 1094, 30 L. Ed. 83.

A lease of a parallel or competing railroad, if prohibited by the constitution, is void ab initio and no action lies on a covenant even if the lessee has had the benefit of the lease; East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Jarvis, 92 Fed. 735, 34 C. C. A. 639; and foreign corporations are within such prohibition; Von Steuben v. R. Co., 4 Pa. Dist. R. 153. There is no prohibition against such leases in New York; Gere v. R. Co., 19 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 193. Within the meaning of such prohibitions, lines connecting two important cities and seeking to obtain for one of them a monopoly of the trade in one part of the state, are parallel and competing; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849; or lines having a separate and through line of communication between two cities; Texas & P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 41 La. Ann. 970, 6 South. 888, 17 Am. St. Rep. 445; or where one of two lines reaches a common terminus only by means of a third line with which it has traffic arrangements; Com. v. R. Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 214. The court will take judicial notice that two lines touching the same points are competing; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 72 Tex. 404, 10 S. W. 81, 1 L. R. A. 849, 13 Am. St. Rep. 815, 2 Interst. Com. Rep. 335. Mere incidental competition by reason of common intersecting lines does not make roads competing which are not so in their general features; Burke v. R. Co., 22 Ohio L. J. 11; nor are lines such which approaching each other at right angles are not available for the same business; Cumberland Val. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 177 Pa. 519, 35 Atl. 952; or not having the same termini; Rogers v. Ry. Co., 91 Fed. 299, 33 C. C. A. 517; or not touching any two common points and having for a considerable distance another road interposed; Kimball v. R. Co., 46 Fed. 888. Parallel in such prohibitions means in the same general direction; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com., 97 Ky. 675, 31 S. W. 476; traversing the same section of country, and running within a few miles of each other; State v. Ry. Co., 21 Mont. 221, 53 Pac. 623, 45 L. R. A. 271, and note collecting cases on leases and combinations.

A lessee is not estopped to deny the validity of a lease by the fact that he has paid rental under it for three years; Oregon Ry.

& Nav. Co. v. Ry. Co., 145 U. S. 52, 12 Sup. Ct. 814, 36 L. Ed. 620; but see Woodruff v. Ry. Co., 93 N. Y. 609; but a stockholder who has waited nineteen years cannot then object; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. R. Co., 33 Fed. 440.

Two railroads contracted that one should operate the other for a term of years, the operating road to receive 65 per cent. of the gross earnings of the line so operated, and out of the remaining 35 per cent. pay interest on the road's bonds, and pay the residue to the company owning the road; this was held not to be a lease; Archer v. R. Co., 102 Ill. 493; nor a consolidation, but merely a connection between the two roads leaving in one the ownership of the road franchises and rolling stock and in the other the use and control of it.

A lease is not necessarily void because it extends beyond the time of the lessor's corporate existence, it may be valid for the period of the company's corporate existence; Gere v. R. Co., 19 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 193. The fact that the majority of the directors of a lessor company are personally interested in the lessee company will not make the lease void, but merely voidable at the election of the lessor, or at the suit of stockholders brought within a reasonable time; Jesup v. R. Co., 43 Fed. 483.

Where the rental was reduced by directors who were substantially the same in both companies, it was held that this action was voidable at the election of either company, so far as the power of the directors was concerned, but that as their act had been approved by the stockholders, it was valid; Harkness v. Ry. Co., 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 532, 11 N. Y. St. R. 732. But where the rental was reduced on account of the financial embarrassment of the lessee, it was held within the power of the board of directors; Beveridge v. R. Co., 42 Hun (N. Y.) 656, affirmed 112 N. Y. 1, 19 N. E. 489, 2 L. R. A. 648.

Charter power to a railroad company to "let or farm out" the right of transportation authorizes a lease of the road; Hill v. R. Co., 143 N. C. 539, 55 S. E. 854, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606; Harmon v. R. Co., 28 S. C. 401, 5 S. E. 835, 13 Am. St. Rep. 686. A lease of railroad property, by its terms, extends beyond the life of the corporation and is valid as long as it exists; id. Where a railroad contracted with a ferry company for the use of land for its business, paying taxes, not interfering with the business of the ferry company and employing the latter for its transportation across the river, it was not a lease and there was no relation of landlord and tenant; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 396, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055.

A lease requires the consent of a majority of the stockholders, which must be expressed at a stockholders' meeting; Peters v. R. Co., 12 Fed. 513; Metropolitan Elevated Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 14 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 103; so also does a modification of a lease; id.; and the action of a majority of the stockholders in favor of a lease will not be upheld where it appears that the interests of the minority will be seriously prejudiced by it; Mills v. R. Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 1. But it has been held that if power to lease its railroad is conferred upon a corporation by its charter or by statute, the board of directors may execute a lease thereof; Beveridge v. Elevated R. Co., supra, where the state law provided that the lease should not be binding until at a meeting of the stockholders a majority had assented in writing or until the holders of a majority of the stock assented in writing and a certificate thereof signed by the president and secretary, was filed with the secretary of state, and no meeting was called of the stockholders, but a certificate was filed, signed by the president, who owned nearly all of the stock, and the secretary, and the road was operated by the lessee without any objection from the lessor. It was held that the lessee could not plead ultra vires as to the lease in a suit on a car trust agreement; Humphreys v. Ry. Co., 37 Fed. 307, where the court considered that having obtained the use of the equipments by its agreement to pay the balance unpaid by the lessor, the consideration was the use of the property and the right to acquire title by such payment and the contract of the lessee was a direct undertaking and not a guarantee within the statute of frauds.

Where one company owns substantially all the stock and bonds of another, a lease of the latter's line is not void for want of consideration; Union Pac. R. Co. v. R. Co., 51 Fed. 309, 2 C. C. A. 174.

The mere fact that the same persons were directors of both corporations is not of itself sufficient to avoid the lease at the instance of stockholders against the will of the corporation. The fact alone might entitle either corporation to avoid the lease, but does not give the right to a stockholder; Wallace v. R. Co., 12 Hun (N. Y.) 460. The lease of a railroad does not dissolve the corporation, and it remains liable for debts incurred prior to the lease; U. S. v. R. Co., 1 Fed. 700. A lessee assumes all the duties of the lessor in relation to the property as well as its rights and privileges, but this would not include the payment of the debts of lessor; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bridge Co., 131 U. S. 371, 9 Sup. Ct. 770, 33 L. Ed. 157; Brown v. R. Co., 35 Fed 444.

Where a lease of a railroad provided for the payment of the net earnings to mortgage bondholders who were creditors of the lessor, the agreement between the lessor and lessee, having been assented to by the bondholders, operated as an irrevocable assignment to them of the net earnings; Grand Trunk R. v. R. Co., 78 Fed. 690.

Without a law authorizing it, railroads cannot guarantee the performance of a lease of a road entered into by two other roads, the leased road being outside of the states creating the guaranteeing roads, and not connecting with their lines; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 290, 6 Sup. Ct. 1094, 30 L. Ed. 83.

Where, under a void lease, the property had been used for a time, the railroad company may recover compensation for the use of its property; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 2 Fed. 117; Central Trans. Co. v. Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55; but a lessee, who had received nothing, but had been paying out money under a void contract, cannot be compelled to pay more money under the same contract; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. R. Co., supra; but relief in such case must be based on the invalidity of the contract, and not in aid of its enforcement; id. The lessee of a railroad under a lease which all parties admit to be illegal, cannot be compelled by mandamus to operate the road; People of State of Colorado v. R. Co,, 42 Fed. 638. See ULTRA VIRES.

Where a railroad lease for ninety-nine years contained covenants for monthly instalments of rent to keep the road in repair, etc., a bill which shows failure to pay rent, depreciation of the road, and a combination between the guarantors of the lease and the lessee to divert the earnings of the road to the benefit of the guarantors, presents a case of equitable jurisdiction when it prays for the specific performance of the obligations of the lease. A suit at law on each instalment of rent is not an adequate remedy; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. R. Co., supra.

A lease does not vest in the lessee the right of eminent domain as to the lessor company; Mayor, etc. of Worcester v. R. Co., 109 Mass. 103; Gottschalk v. R. Co., 14 Neb. 389, 15 N. W. 695; Englewood Connecting Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 117 Ill. 611, 6 N. E. 684.

A receiver does not become liable upon the covenants of a lease because of his position of receiver, but only by virtue of an election to adopt the lease, if he sees fit to make such election; and even if the lessee is solvent, the lessor cannot force upon the receiver the adoption of the lease; Empire Distilling Co. v. McNulta, 77 Fed. 700, 23 C. C. A. 415. It is well settled that a receiver may take and retain possession of leasehold interests for such period as will enable him to elect intelligently whether it is best to adopt the lease or return the property; Carswell v. Trust Co., 74 Fed. 88, 20 C. C. A. 282; U. S. Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 150 U. S. 287, 14 Sup. Ct. 86, 37 L. Ed. 1085. It is his duty to take possession of a leasehold estate included in the property, but he does not thereby become assignee of the term and is under no obligation to adopt the company's contracts; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Ry. Co., 198 Fed. 721, 117 C. C. A. 503, reversing 188 Fed. 343, and modifying 189 Fed. 661, and 190 Fed. 609; Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 82, 12 Sup. Ct. 787, 36 L. Ed. 632. He holds the property for the court; id. But where the lessor immediately demands of the receivers and of the court either an adoption of the lease or a surrender of the road, and against its protest a decision is delayed for several months, in order to determine which policy is expedient, then the receivers should equitably pay the full rental during the time of their possession; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 58 Fed. 257. And where, in a lease of a consolidated electric railway company composed of several independent companies, there was a provision that the property should be kept up to its value and efficiency at the date of the lease, and that at the end thereof the lessee should return it to the consolidated companies in as good condition and repair as at the date of the lease with additions, betterments, etc., it was held that the receiver of the lessee was bound to return equipment to each constituent company equal in value and efficiency to that which was received, and not merely equal in value and efficiency to that received under the lease as a whole; Johnson v. Traction Co., 138 Fed. 601. A receiver is not required to pay rental for a depot property as stipulated by the railway company, and is liable only for a reasonable rental if he occupies the property; Carswell v. Trust Co., 74 Fed. 88, 20 C. C. A. 282. The appointment of a receiver is not an eviction of a lessee, nor is an unexecuted decree for the sale of a portion of the demised railroad, to satisfy a mortgage made prior to the lease, such an eviction of the lessor by a paramount title as to terminate the lease; Pittsburg, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 8 Biss. 456, Fed. Cas. No. 11,197.

As to the relative liability of the lessor and lessee for injuries committed in the operation of the road, the following conclusions are stated in Wood, Railroads, 2054, where many cases are collected: 1. The lessee is liable for all injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the road. 2. Where the lease is void the liability of the lessor continues. 3. Where the lease is valid, some authorities hold that the lessor is relieved from liability for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the road. But the last rule admits of serious question, unless the lease contains a specific provision for the lessor's exemption from liability. Some of the cases hold that the lessor cannot be relieved from liability unless there is express authority in the statute.

Though, however, the cases are so numerous and to some extent conflicting, they will be found to arrange themselves along well-defined lines. When the lease is authorized by law, a lessor railroad company is not liable to third persons for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of the line by the lessee company; Caruthers v. R. Co., 59 Kan. 629, 54 Pac. 673, 44 L. R. A. 737, and note reviewing the cases in detail. The doctrine of the Kansas case seems to be with the weight of authority, though the mere authority to lease without express statutory exemption does not relieve the lessor company from liability for wrongs arising from the breach of its own duty as indicated by defects in the original construction; Logan v. R. Co., 116 N. C. 940, 21 S. E. 959; or release the lessor from the discharge of its charter obligations; Central & M. R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 49, 3 S. W. 457; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Willard, 220 U. S. 413, 31 Sup. Ct. 460, 55 L. Ed. 521; or enable it to evade any duty it may owe to the general public; Lakin v. R. Co., 13 Or. 436, 11 Pac. 68, 57 Am. Rep. 25; Nugent v. R. R., 80 Me. 62, 12 Atl. 797, 6 Am. St. Rep. 151; and in several states the courts go further and hold that there must be express statutory exemption to relieve the lessor from liability for the torts of the lessee; Singleton v. R. R., 70 Ga. 464, 48 Am. Rep. 574; Balsley v. R. Co., 119 Ill. 68, 8 N. E. 859, 59 Am. Rep. 784; Chollette v. R. Co., 26 Neb. 159, 41 N. W. 1106, 4 L. R. A. 135; Braslin v. R. Co., 145 Mass. 64, 13 N. E. 65; Arrowsmith v. R. Co., 57 Fed. 165. On the other hand, in much the greater number of states, the courts accept the doctrine that statutory authority for lease, whether under general or special act, relieves the lessor company from liability for the torts of the lessee; Briscoe v. Ry. Co., 40 Fed. 273; Philips v. R. R., 62 Hun 233, 16 N. Y. Supp. 909; Heron v. R. Co., 68 Minn. 542, 71 N. W. 706; Cain v. R. Co., 27 App. Div. 376, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1; Byrne v. R. Co., 61 Fed. 605, 9 C. C. A. 666, 24 L. R. A. 693; Virginia M. R. Co. v. Washington, 86 Va. 629, 10 S. E. 927, 7 L. R. A. 344; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Watts, 63 Tex. 549; Harper v. R. Co., 90 Ky. 359, 14 S. W. 346. The lessee is liable whether the lease is valid or invalid; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 27 Fla. 1, 157, 9 South. 661, 17 L. R. A. 33, 65. But it has been held that though the lease is void, a servant of the lessee company cannot recover against the lessor company for injuries sustained in the operation of the road; Hukill v. R. Co., 72 Fed. 745; Abbot v. R. Co., 80 N. Y. 27, 36 Am. Rep. 572; East Line & R. R. Ry. Co. v. Culberson, 72 Tex. 375, 10 S. W. 706, 3 L. R. A. 567, 13 Am. St. Rep. 805; Hanna v. R. Co., 88 Tenn. 310, 12 S. W. 718, 6 L. R. A. 727. While the lessor may be liable to a party injured by the negligence of its lessee's servants, the lessee is also liable; 35 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 440.

In some states statutes provide for the joint and several liability of both lessor and lessee; Fort Wayne, M. & C. R. Co. v. Hinebaugh, 43 Ind. 354; Stephens v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 327; Stearns v. R. Co., 46 Me. 95; Braslin v. R. Co., 145 Mass. 64, 13 N. E. 65; Brown v. R. Co., 27 Mo. App. 394.

LEASE AND RELEASE. A species of conveyance much used in England, consisting theoretically of two instruments, but which are practically united in the same instrument.

It was invented by Sergeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the statute of uses. It is thus contrived: a lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him.

The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance; 2 Bla. Com. 339; 4 Kent 482; Co. Litt. 207; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.

LEASEHOLD. The estate held by virtue of a lease. In practice the word is generally applied to an estate for a fixed term of years. A lease of chattels is not a leasehold interest; 48 L. J. Ex. 35.

LEAVE AND LICENSE. A defence to an action of trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of. Whart. Lex.

LEAVE OF COURT. Permission granted by the court to do something which, without such permission, would not be allowable.

The statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 4, provides that it shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with leave of the court, to plead as many several matters thereto as he shall think necessary for his defence. The principles of this statute have been adopted by most of the states of the Union.

When the defendant, in pursuance of this statute, pleads more than one plea in bar to one and the same demand or thing, all of the pleas except the first should purport to be pleaded with leave of the court. But the omission is not error nor cause of demurrer; Lawes, Pl. 132; 2 Chitty, Pl. 421; And. Steph. Pl. 167; Story, Eq. Pl. 72, 76; Gould, Pl. c. 8, § 21; Steph. Pl. 272; Pearson v. Eames, 3 N. H. 523.

Asking leave of court to do any act is an implied admission of jurisdiction of the court, and in those cases in which the objection to the jurisdiction must be taken, if at all, by plea to the jurisdiction, and it can be taken in no other way, the court, by such asking leave, becomes fully vested with the jurisdiction. Bacon, Abr. Abatement (A); Bacon, Abr. Pleas, etc. (E 2); Lawes, Pl. 91; Guild v. Richardson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 371. But such admission cannot aid the jurisdiction except in such cases.

LEAVE TO DEFEND. The bills of exchange act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67) allowed actions on bills and notes commenced within six months after being due to be by writ of summons in a form provided by the act, and unless the defendant should within twelve days obtain leave to appear and defend the action, allowed the plaintiff to sign judgment on proof of service. This procedure was retained by the judicature act, but abolished in 1880. It is now provided that in all actions where the plaintiff seeks merely to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money, or possession where a tenancy has expired or been determined by notice to quit, the writ of summons may be specially indorsed with the particulars of the amount sought to be recovered after giving credit for any payment or set-off; in which case, if the defendant fail to appear, judgment may be signed for the amount claimed; and it is further provided that where the defendant appears on a writ of summons especially indorsed, the plaintiff may, on affidavit verifying the cause of action and swearing that in his belief there is no defence to the action, call on the defendant to show cause why the plaintiff should not sign final judgment for the amount so indorsed; and the court or judge may, unless the defendant, by affidavit or otherwise, satisfy the court or judge that he has a good defence on the merits or disclose sufficient facts to entitle him to be permitted to defend the action, make an order empowering the plaintiff to sign judgment accordingly. Whart. Lex. See ALLOCATUR.

LECCATOR. A debauched person. Cowell.

LECTOR DE LETRA ANTIQUA. In Spanish Law. The person duly authorized by the government to read and decipher ancient documents and titles, in order to entitle them to legal effect in courts of justice.

LECTORES. A term applied to notaries in the Middle Ages. So. Afr. Law Dict.

LECTRINUM. A pulpit. Mon. Ang. iii. p. 243.

LECTURER. An instructor; a reader of letters who has the copyright in them if he be an author by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 65. See COPYRIGHT.

A clergyman who assists rectors in preaching. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 59; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 127. Whart. Lex.

Assistants appointed to the rectors of churches. They are chosen by the vestry or chief inhabitants. Within the meaning of the term a readership is not an ecclesiastical preferment; 4 D. & R. 720; 3 B. & C. 49; nor is it included under the definition of benefice given by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. The power of the bishop over the lecturer is limited to the right to judge of his qualification and fitness for the office; he may not determine his right to a particular lectureship; 13 East 419. In the absence of a custom to employ a lecturer, and where the lectureship is to be supported by voluntary contributions, and where the rector has refused his consent to the person applying for the lectureship, the ordinary is the proper judge as to whether or not a lecturer should be admitted; 1 Wils. 11; 4 Term 125. In the language of Lord Mansfield, "No person can use the pulpit of another unless he consents. But if there has been an immemorial usage, the law supposes a good foundation for it; and if the lectureship be endowed, that furnishes a strong argument to support the custom." 1 Term 331.

The court will not grant a mandamus to compel a bishop to grant a license to a clergyman to preach as lecturer to a parish; 1 Wils. 11. Trustees of a lecture to be preached at a convenient hour may appoint any hour they please and vary their appointment; 1 W. Bla. 210. As to the right of and qualification for voting in the nomination of a lecturer, the usage of the parish is, if consistent with the deed of trust, a safe criterion; 14 Ves. 7; 3 Atk. 599; but no person can be a lecturer, although elected by the parishioners, without the rector's consent, unless there be an immemorial custom to such effect; 1 Add. 97; 4 B. & C. 569. See 2 Burn, Eccl. L. 398.

LEDGER. In Commercial Law. A book in which are inscribed the names of all persons dealing with the person who keeps it, and in which there is a separate account, composed generally of one or more pages for each. There are two parallel columns, on one of which the party named is the debtor, and on the other the creditor, and presents a ready means of ascertaining the state of the account. As this book is a transcript from the day-book or journal, it is not evidence per se.

LEDGER BOOK. In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a book kept in the prerogative courts in England. It is considered as a roll of the court, but, it seems, it cannot be read in evidence. Bacon, Abr.

LEEMAN'S ACTS. Acts 30 Vict. c. 29 and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 91, by which contracts for the sale of bank shares are void unless the number of the shares are set forth in the contract. 9 Q. B. D. 546; and by which are authorized the application of the funds of municipal corporations and other governing bodies under certain conditions towards promoting or opposing parliamentary and other proceedings for the benefit or protection of the inhabitants.

LEET COURT. See COURT LEET.

LEGACY. A gift of personal property by last will and testament.

A gift or disposition in one's favor by a last will. Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 459. The term is more commonly applied to a bequest of money or chattels, although sometimes used with reference to a charge upon real estate; 2 Wms. Ex. 1051; see Quincy v. Rogers, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 297; Williams v. McComb, 38 N. C. 450; 7 Ves. 391, 522. A direction to the executor to support and maintain a person during his life gives him a legacy; Farwell v. Jacobs, 4 Mass. 634; but a recommendation "to give from time to time some little assistance to A" does not; Succession of Trouard, 5 La. Ann. 390. It is said that the word legacy in a will may include real as well as personal property; Homes v. Mitchell, 6 N. C. 228, 5 Am. Dec. 527.

An absolute legacy is one given without condition, to vest immediately; 1 Vern. 254; 19 Ves. 86; Com. Dig. Chancery (I 4); they are usually absolute; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 466; 19 Ves. 86.

An additional, or, more technically, a cumulative legacy is one given to a legatee to whom a legacy has already been given. It may be given by the same will in which a legacy has already been bequeathed, or by a codicil thereto; 1 Bro. C. C. 90; Edwards v. Rainier's Ex'rs, 17 Ohio St. 597; Minor v. Ferris, 22 Conn. 371.

An alternate legacy is one by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.

A conditional legacy is a bequest the existence of which depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event; 1 Rop. Leg. 645. The condition may be either precedent; Wheeler v. Walker, 2 Conn. 196, 7 Am. Dec. 264; Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 393; Inhabitants of Princeton v. Adams, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 129; or subsequent; Brown v. Town of Concord, 33 N. H. 285; Finlay v. King's Lessee, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 376, 7 L. Ed. 701; Hammond v. Hammond, 55 Md. 575.

A demonstrative legacy is a bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or the like, payable out of a particular fund or security; Wms. Ex. 360; Wallace v. Wallace, 23 N. H. 154; Corbin v. Mills' Ex'rs, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 438; In re Barklay's Estate, 10 Pa. 387; Giddings v. Seward, 16 N. Y. 365. See DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY.

A general legacy is one so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money, of a particular fund, distinguished from all others of the same kind; 1 Rop. Leg. 170; Tifft v. Porter, 8 N. Y. 516; 6 Madd. 92. It is a gift of quantity, merely, and embraces all bequests, not specific or demonstrative; Kelly v. Richardson, 100 Ala. 584, 13 South. 785.

An indefinite legacy is a bequest of things which are not enumerated or ascertained as to numbers or quantities: as, a bequest by a testator of all his goods, all his stocks in the funds; Lownd. Leg. 84; Swinb. Wills 485; 1 P. Wms. 697; of this class are generally residuary legacies.

A lapsed legacy is one which, in consequence of the death of the legatee before the testator or before the period for vesting, has never vested. See LAPSED LEGACY.

A legacy for life is one in which the legatee is to enjoy the use of the legacy for life.

A modal legacy is a bequest accompanied with directions as to the mode in which it should be applied for the legatee's benefit: for example, a legacy to Titius to put him an apprentice; 2 Vern. Ch. 431; Lownd. Leg. 151.

A pecuniary legacy is one of money. Pecuniary legacies are in most cases general legacies, but there may be a specific pecuniary legacy, for example, of the money in a certain bag; 1 Rop. Leg. 150, n. In Maryland pecuniary legacies are by statute to be paid out of the real estate if the personal is insufficient; Laws 1894, ch. 438.

A residuary legacy is a bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will; Lownd. Leg. 10; Bacon, Abr. Legacies (I); 6 H. L. Cas. 217. An ordinary residuary bequest cannot be treated as specific, but from its very nature must be considered as a general legacy; L. R. 3 Ch. D. 309; even though some of its particulars are enumerated in the will; 4 Hare 628; but a bequest of the remainder of a particular thing or fund after the payment of other legacies or of all one's estate in a particular locality may be specific so long as the identity of the thing or fund is not destroyed; 5 Ves. 150; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 462.

A specific legacy is a bequest of a specified part of the testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind; 3 Beav. 349; Bradford v. Haynes, 20 Me. 105; In re Walker's Estate, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 237; Perkins v. Mathes, 49 N. H. 107; L. R. 20 Eq. 304; Kahl v. Schober, 35 N. J. Eq. 461; Johnson v. Goss, 128 Mass. 433. Such a legacy may be the undistributed balance of a partnership or a good-will; 31 Beav. 602; or debt due testator; Titus v. McLanahan, 2 Del. Ch. 200; Farnum v. Bascom, 122 Mass. 282; in such case it is rendered worthless by insolvency; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 461. A specific legacy may be of animals or inanimate things, provided they are specified and separated from all other things, as money in a bag, or money marked and so described: as, I give two eagles to A B, on which are engraved the initials of my name. Such a legacy may also be given out of a general fund; 4 Ves. 565. If the specific article given be not found among the assets of the testator, the legatee loses his legacy.

All natural persons and all corporations are capable of becoming legatees, unless prohibited by statute or alien enemies. The statute under which it is created must be resorted to in order to ascertain whether a corporation has legal capacity to take a legacy, but the act of incorporation or legislative confirmation of the rights may be secured after the legacy takes effect; England v. Vestry of Prince George's Parish, 53 Md. 466; Zimmerman v. Anders, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 218, 40 Am. Dec. 552. The right of a corporation to take by will is subject to the general laws of the state passed after the incorporation; Kerr v. Dougherty, 79 N. Y. 327. See CORPORATION; FOREIGN CORPORATION. A bequest to the United States from which came the Smithsonian Institute was held valid in the English chancery court; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 460, note; but under the terms of the state statute a devise of lands in New York to the United States was held void; U. S. v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. Ed. 192; In re Fox, 52 N. Y. 530, 11 Am. Rep. 751. As to the difference of the law applicable to real and personal property, see CONFLICT OF LAWS. Legacies to the subscribing witnesses to a will are by statute often declared void. See 2 Wms. Ex. 1053; Rop. Leg. 201; L. R. 13 Eq. 381; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 106 Mass. 474, 8 Am. Rep. 356. It was held in England that a subscribing witness to whom a legacy was given was incompetent by reason of interest, and that the will would fail unless there was enough witnesses without him; 2 Stra. 1253. To save the will it was enacted that the legacy should be void; 25 Geo. II. c. 6. Similar statutes have been enacted in most of the states; Schoul. Wills § 357; 1 Stims. Am. St. L. § 2650. In most of these, if there are enough witnesses without the legatee, the legacy is saved, but in a few states it is said that it seems that it may be void in any case; id. Bequests to superstitious uses are prohibited by many of the English statutes; 5 Myl. & C. 11. But in the United States the free toleration of all religious opinions would seem to make it almost impossible to hold any use superstitious; Hoge v. Hoge, 1 Watts (Pa.) 218, 26 Am. Dec. 52; Gass v. Wilhite, 2 Dana (Ky.) 170, 26 Am. Dec. 446. Legacies by Roman Catholics for masses for the repose of the soul were held in England void as for superstitious uses; 2 Myl. & K. 684; but in this country have been held valid; Hagenmeyer v. Hanselman, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 87; In re Schouler, 134 Mass. 426; contra, McHugh v. McCole, 97 Wis. 166, 72 N. W. 631, 40 L. R. A. 724, 65 Am. St. Rep. 106.

It is held the courts will not intervene to support and maintain a legacy for any purpose which is illegal or subversive of public policy; Zeisweiss v. James, 63 Pa. 465, 3 Am. Rep. 558. Bequests to charitable uses are favored both in England and the United States. See CHARITABLE USE.

Construction of legacies. First, the technical import of words is not to prevail over the obvious intent of the testator; 1 M. & K. 571; L. R. 11 Eq. 280; Crocker v. Crocker, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 257; Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 375; Jackson v. Babcock, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 389; Dow v. Dow, 36 Me. 216; In re Fetrow's Estate, 58 Pa. 427; Mathes v. Smart, 51 N. H. 443; Nutter v. Vickery, 64 Me. 490; Peet v. Ry. Co., 70 Tex. 522, 8 S. W. 203. Second, where technical words are used by the testator, or words of art, they are to have their technical import, unless it is apparent they were not intended to be used in that sense; 1 Younge & J. 512; Ide v. Ide, 5 Mass. 500; In re France's Estate, 75 Pa. 220; Campbell v. Rawdon, 18 N. Y. 417. Words are to be construed with reference to the surrounding of the testator when the will was made; Peet v. R. Co., 70 Tex. 522, 8 S. W. 203. The particular intent will always be sacrificed to the general intent; Appeal of Yarnall, 70 Pa. 335; Schaffer v. Wadsworth, 106 Mass. 24; Rose v. McHose's Ex'rs, 26 Mo. 590; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68, 8 L. Ed. 322. Third, the intent of the testator is to be determined from the whole will; 1 Coll. Ch. 681; Finlay v. King, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 377, 7 L. Ed. 701; Loring v. Loring, 100 Mass. 342; Gale v. Drake, 51 N. H. 83; Estate of Schott, 78 Pa. 40; Grimes' Executors v. Harmon, 35 Ind. 198, 9 Am. Rep. 690; Wetmore v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 450; Price v. Cole's Ex'x, 83 Va. 343, 2 S. E. 200. In ascertaining this intention, courts should not seek it in particular words and phrases, or confine it by technical objections, but should find it by construing the provisions of the will with the aid of the context and by considering what seems to be the entire scheme of the will; Riker v. Cornwell, 113 N. Y. 115, 20 N. E. 602; McMurry v. Stanley, 69 Tex. 227, 6 S. W. 412; Thackston v. Watson, 84 Ky. 206, 1 S. W. 398; and should put itself in the position occupied by a testator; Lee v. Simpson, 134 U. S. 572, 10 Sup. Ct. 631, 33 L. Ed. 1038. Fourth, every word shall have effect, if it can be given without defeating the general purpose of the will, which is to be carried into effect in every reasonable mode; Annable v. Patch, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 360; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68, 8 L. Ed. 322; 9 H. L. Cas. 420; Dennett v. Dennett, 40 N. H. 500; Chrystie v. Phyfe, 19 N. Y. 348. But where it is impossible to form a consistent whole the latter part will prevail; 5 Beav. 100; Orr v. Moses, 52 Me. 287; Van Nostrand v. Moore, 52 N. Y. 12; Snively's Ex'rs v. Stover, 78 Pa. 484; Covert v. Sebern, 73 Ia. 564, 35 N.

W. 636; Ball v. Ball, 40 La. Ann. 284, 8 South. 644. Fifth, the will will be favorably construed to effectuate the testator's intent, and to this end words may be transposed, supplied, or rejected; 7 H. L. Cas. 68; Latham v. Latham, 30 Ia. 294; Tayloe v. Johnson, 63 N. C. 381; Butterfield v. Hamant, 105 Mass. 338; Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 204, 6 L. Ed. 303; McBride v. Smyth, 54 Pa. 245; East v. Garrett, 84 Va. 523, 9 S. E. 1112; Marshall's Ex'rs v. Hadley, 50 N. J. Eq. 547, 25 Atl. 325; it will be so construed when not inconsistent with rules of law; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138; In re Stewart, 74 Cal. 98, 15 Pac. 445; Weed v. Knorr, 77 Ga. 636, 1 S. E. 167; McCulloch v. Valentine, 24 Neb. 215, 38 N. W. 854. Sixth, in the case of a will of personalty made abroad, the lex domicilii must prevail, unless it appear the testator had a different intent; Story, Confl. Laws § 479 a, 490; L. R. 1 H. L. 401; Bowditch v. Soltyk, 99 Mass. 136; Bascom v. Albertson, 34 N. Y. 584; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. (U. S.) 426, 14 L. Ed. 472. Seventh, a will of personalty speaks from the time of testator's death; 8 De G. M. & G. 391; McNaughton v. McNaughton, 34 N. Y. 201; Loveren v. Lamprey, 22 N. H. 434. In interpreting a will several of the states provide by statute that they are to be construed and take effect, as of the date of the death of testator, with respect to both real and personal property, unless a contrary intention appear in the will. It is so provided in Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee. And in Georgia words of survivorship refer to the death of the testator in order to vest remainders. In Louisiana a legacy must be delivered with everything appertaining to it in the condition in which it was on day of testator's decease. In some states where death or survivorship are referred to, the words relate to the time of testator's death unless possession is actually postponed, in which case they refer to time of possession. Such is the statute law in California, the Dakotas, Montana, and Utah; Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 2806.

In interpreting a will, the true inquiry is not what the testator meant to express, but what the words used express; Couch v. Eastham, 29 W. Va. 784, 3 S. E. 23; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387; and effect cannot be given to unexpressed intention; Montgomery v. Montgomery, 11 S. W. 596, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 87; Sutherland v. Sydnor, 84 Va. 880, 6 S. E. 480. As to the weight to be given to previous decisions upon the construction of certain words, it may be said that if the words are identical they are not strictly binding, much less so if the words are only similar; L. R. 10 Ch. 397; and this is true even of the decision of the appeal court; 23 Ch. D. 111.

The general policy of the law and the rules of interpretation require that legacies in all cases, unless clearly inconsistent with the intention of the testator, should be held to be vested rather than contingent; Neilson v. Bishop, 45 N. J. Eq. 473, 17 Atl. 962; Coggins' Appeal, 124 Pa. 10, 16 Atl. 579, 10 Am. St. Rep. 565; Willett's Adm'r v. Rutter's Adm'r, 84 Ky. 317, 1 S. W. 640.

Whether cumulative or repeated. Where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to one person it becomes a question whether the legatee is entitled to both or one only. Where there is internal evidence of the intention of the testator, that intention is to be carried out; 2 Beav. 215; 7 id. 107; L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 738; Dewitt v. Yates, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 156, 6 Am. Dec. 326; Jones v. Creveling's Ex'rs, 19 N. J. L. 127; and evidence will be received in support of the apparent intention, but not against it; 2 Beav. 115; 1 My. & K. 589; 4 Hare 216. Where there is no such internal evidence, certain presumptions are recognized; 10 Sim. 453; and the following positions of law appear to be established. First, if the same specific thing is bequeathed twice to the same legatee in the same will, or in the will and again in a codicil, in that case he can claim the benefit of only one legacy; Toll. Ex. 335; 2 Hare 432. Second, where two legacies of quantity of equal amount are bequeathed to the same legatee in one and the same instrument, there also the second bequest is considered a mere repetition, and he is entitled to one legacy only; 1 Bro. C. C. 30; 3 Myl. & K. 29; Dewitt v. Yates, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 156, 6 Am. Dec. 326. See Cunningham v. Spickler, 4 Gill (Md.) 280; Creveling's Ex'rs v. Jones, 21 N. J. L. 573. Third, where two legacies of quantity of unequal amount are given to the same person in the same instrument, the one is not merged in the other, but the latter shall be regarded as cumulative, and the legatee entitled to both; 2 Bro. C. C. 225; 3 Hare 620. Legacies not of the same kind are presumed to be cumulative; 2 Russ. 257; otherwise the presumption is slight and easily shaken; 17 Ves. 34, 41. Fourth, where two legacies are given simpliciter to the same legatee by different instruments, in that case also the latter shall be cumulative, whether its amount be equal; 17 Ves. Ch. 34; 4 Hare 216; or unequal to the former; 1 P. Wms. 423; 4 H. L. Cas. 393; 7 Ch. App. 448. For cases where they were held cumulative, see Utley v. Titcomb, 63 N. H. 129; Barnes v. Hanks' Adm'r, 55 Vt. 317; Appeal of Sponsler, 107 Pa. 95. See, generally, on this subject notes to Hooley v. Hatton, 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. *346; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 468, n. 3.

Description of legatee.—Children. This may have reference to the time of the testator's death, or that of making the will. The former is the presumed intention, unless from the connection or circumstances the latter is the apparent intent, in which case it must prevail; 11 Sim. 42; 2 Wms. Ex. 1089; Chase v. Lockerman, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 185, 35 Am. Dec. 277; Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 325; Worcester v. Worcester, 101 Mass. 132; Quinn v. Hardenbrook, 54 N. Y. 83; Watson v. Watson, 110 Mo. 164, 19 S. W. 543; Sevier v. Douglas, 44 La. Ann. 605, 10 South. 804; 2 Jarm. Wills 154, 156, and Bigelow's notes. And this rule extends to grandchildren, issue, brothers, nephews, and cousins; 3 De G. M. & G. 649; Whall v. Converse, 146 Mass. 345, 15 N. E. 660; Schoul. Wills § 529. The judicial disposition to let in subsequent issue and near relations of a class as generously as possible has resulted in a rule thus stated by the author last cited: "Hence the English rule, confirmed by many American precedents, that the devise or bequest of a corpus or aggregate fund to children as a class, where the gift is not immediate, vests in all the children in existence at the testator's death, but so as to open and let in children who may come into existence afterwards, at any time before the fund is distributable." Id. § 530; 1 Bro. C. C. 537; Dulany v. Middleton, 72 Md. 67, 19 Atl. 146; Moore v. Dimond, 5 R. I. 129; Scott v. Terry, 37 Miss. 65; Handberry v. Doolittle, 38 Ill. 206. This rule also extends to grandchildren, issue, brothers, nephews, and cousins; 3 De G. M. & G. 649.

This term will include a child en ventre sa mère; Smart v. King, Meigs (Tenn.) 149, 33 Am. Dec. 137; Hall v. Hancock, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 255, 26 Am. Dec. 598; Coggins' Appeal, 124 Pa. 10, 16 Atl. 579, 10 Am. St. Rep. 565; Russell v. Russell, 84 Ala. 48, 3 South. 900; Toole v. Perry, 80 Ga. 681, 7 S. E. 118; L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 460. Such a child is included in a devise by a father to his children "living" at his death; Picot v. Armistead, 37 N. C. 226. The rule of construction by which a child en ventre sa mère is in law considered as a child in esse is not confined to cases in which the unborn child is benefited by its application; [1895] 2 Ch. 497.

Where the division of a fund to legatees is postponed until a certain event or period, the word "child" will apply to all those answering that description when the fund is to be divided; 8 Ves. 38; Cole v. Creyon, 1 Hill Ch. (S. C.) 322, 26 Am. Dec. 208; Worcester v. Worcester, 101 Mass. 128; Inge v. Jones, 109 Ala. 175, 19 South. 435. But it will sometimes have a more restricted application, and thus be confined to children born before the death of the testator. But children born after the period of distribution take no share; L. R. 12 Eq. 427; Hill v. Bank, 45 N. H. 270; Bull v. Bull, 8 Conn. 49, 20 Am. Dec. 86; State v. Raughley, 1 Houst. (Del.) 561. And it will make no difference that the bequest is to children begotten, or to be begotten, or which "may be born"; 14 Beav. 453; Brown v. Williams, 5 R. I. 318; 1 Rop. Leg. 51; unless such be the testator's clear intent; 19 Ves. 566; Moore v. Weaver, 16 Gray (Mass.) 305; Shinn v. Motley, 56 N. C. 490; 2 Jarm. Wills 84.

"Children," when used to designate one's heirs, may include grandchildren; Hughes v. Hughes, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 115, 121; Prowitt v. Rodman, 37 N. Y. 42; Rop. Leg. 68; Estate of Schedel, 73 Cal. 594, 15 Pac. 297; Douglas v. James, 66 Vt. 21, 28 Atl. 319, 44 Am. St. Rep. 817; but see Demill v. Reid, 71 Md. 175, 17 Atl. 1014. But if the word "children" is used, and there are persons to answer it, then grandchildren cannot be comprehended under it; L. R. 11 Eq. 91; Tayloe v. Mosher, 29 Md. 443; Feit's Ex'rs v. Vanatta, 21 N. J. Eq. 85; Hallowell v. Phipps, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 376. The general rule is, that a bequest to a man and his children, he having children living at the time the will takes effect, creates a joint estate in the father and children; but if he have no children, he takes an absolute estate; L. R. 14 Eq. 415; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 253; Parker v. Converse, 5 Gray (Mass.) 336. But in both cases slight circumstances will warrant the court in holding the limitation to be for life to the father, with remainder over to the children; 4 Madd. 361; Nebinger v. Upp, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 68; Carr v. Estill, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 309, 63 Am. Dec. 548; Furlow's Adm'r v. Merrell, 23 Ala. 705.

The term children will not include illegitimate children, if there are legitimate to answer the term; Appel v. Byers, 98 Pa. 479; Heater v. Van Auken, 14 N. J. Eq. 159; 2 Russ. & M. 336; see 2 Wms. Ex. 1100 (but see Elliott v. Elliott, 117 Ind. 380, 20 N. E. 264, 10 Am. St. Rep. 54; Sullivan v. Parker, 113 N. C. 301, 18 S. E. 347); otherwise, it may or may not, according to circumstances; Kirkpatrick v. Rogers, 41 N. C. 135; Collins v. Hoxie, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 88; Stewart v. Stewart, 31 N. J. Eq. 398; L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 644; Hughes v. Knowlton, 37 Conn. 429; L. R. 7 H. L. 576. See Schoul. Wills § 534. Nor will it include a child adopted after the will was made; Russell v. Russell, 84 Ala. 48, 3 South. 900. It is said that although, prima facie, the word "children" in a will means legitimate children, there may be sufficient explanation, in the light of surrounding circumstances, that the word is not used in its primary meaning, and the word was held to mean stepchildren; 13 Reports 627. But a legacy to a natural child of a certain man still en ventre sa mère was held void, as contravening public morals and decency; 2 My. & R. 769; contra, L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 773; Pratt's Lessee v. Flamer, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 10. It is said that the term grandchildren will not usually include great-grandchildren; 4 My. & C. 60; 8 Beav. 247; but it has been held otherwise in the absence of anything to show a contrary intent; Morton's Estate, 43 Pittsb. L. J. (Pa.) 403. See CHILD. The same rule applies to adopted children who are not prima facie included; Schafer v. Eneu, 54 Pa. 304.

It is held that a bequest to "my beloved wife," not mentioning her by name, applies exclusively to the wife at the date of the will, and is not to be extended to an after-taken wife; L. R. 8 Eq. Cas. 65. One not lawfully married may, nevertheless, take a legacy by the name or description of the wife of the one to whom she is reputed to be married; 1 De G. J. & S. 177; but not if the reputed relation is the motive for the bequest; 5 My. & C. 145; L. R. 2 Ex. 319. But see 1 Keen 685.

Nephew and niece are terms which, in the description of a legatee, will receive their strict import, unless there is something in the will to indicate a contrary intention; Lewis v. Fisher, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 196; Van Gieson v. Howard, 7 N. J. Eq. 462; L. R. 6 Ch. App. 351. "All my nephews and nieces" was held to include only those of the testatrix and not those of her husband; Appeal of Green, 42 Pa. 25; but "nephews and nieces on both sides" was held to include those by marriage; 3 De G. F. & J. 466; and such was the inference where a testator had no nephews or nieces of his blood; L. R. 8 Ch. 928; L. R. 15 Eq. 305; great-nephews and great-nieces are not usually included; 43 Ch. D. 569; but may be if such intention is shown by the context; Shepard v. Shepard, 57 Conn. 24, 17 Atl. 173. A provision that the residue was to be divided among the testator's grand-nephews and grand-nieces does not include the nephews and nieces; Kimball v. Chappel, 18 N. Y. Supp. 30.

The term cousins will be restricted in its signification, where there is something in the will to limit its meaning; 9 Sim. 457. A rule of convenience limits the term to first cousins only, if there be such, or if there are cousins of different degrees, to the nearer rather than the more remote; 31 Beav. 305; and "first cousins" does not include first cousins once removed; 4 Myl. & C. 56; but "all the first and second cousins" embraced equally first cousins once removed and first cousins twice removed; 2 Bro. C. C. 125; 1 Sim. & Stew. 301.

Terms which give an estate tail in lands will be construed to give the absolute title to personalty; 8 H. L. Cas. 571; Usilton v. Usilton, 3 Md. Ch. 36; Williams v. Turner, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 287; Appeal of Smith, 23 Pa. 9.

A legacy to one and his heirs, although generally conveying a fee-simple in real estate and the entire property in personalty, may, by the manner of its expression and connection, be held to be a designation of such persons as are the legal heirs of the person named, and thus they take as purchasers by name; 4 Bro. C. C. 542; Haley v. City of Boston, 108 Mass. 579; Doremus v. Zabriskie, 15 N. J. L. 404; King v. Beck, 15 Ohio 559. But the authority of these cases is doubtful. The word "heirs," when used to denote succession or substitution, is understood in the case of a legacy to mean persons entitled under the intestate law; Lord v. Bourne, 63 Me. 368, 18 Am. Rep. 234; Cushman v. Horton, 59 N. Y. 151; Harrison v. Nixon, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 483, 9 L. Ed. 201; L. R. 9 Eq. 258; Bassett v. Granger, 100 Mass. 348; Appeal of Baskin, 3 Pa. 305, 45 Am. Dec. 641. But if not so used, the word heir is construed in its ordinary and legal sense; Lord v. Bourne, 63 Me. 379, 18 Am. Rep. 234; Cushman v. Horton, 59 N. Y. 149; Appeal of Guthrie, 37 Pa. 9; Haley v. City of Boston, 108 Mass. 579; 3 H. L. Cas. 557; the words heir and heirs are interchangeable, and embrace all legally entitled to partake of the inheritance; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387. See HEIR.

The word "issue," used as a word of purchase, comprises all descendants of him to whose issue the bequest is made; 23 Beav. 40; Taylor v. Taylor, 63 Pa. 484, 3 Am. Rep. 565; Bigelow v. Morong, 103 Mass. 288; Pearce v. Rickard, 18 R. I. 142, 26 Atl. 38, 19 L. R. A. 472, 49 Am. St. Rep. 755; Soper v. Brown, 65 Hun 155, 20 N. Y. Supp. 30. It may mean heirs at law; Chwatal v. Schreiner, 3 Misc. 192, 23 N. Y. Supp. 206; children and not descendants generally; Daly v. Greenberg, 69 Hun 228, 23 N. Y. Supp. 582. See ISSUE.

The word descendants cannot be construed to include any but lineal heirs without clear indications in the will of a different purpose; Schoul. Wills § 535; Baker v. Baker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 101; a sister's child is not a descendant; Armstrong v. Moran, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 314; this word, like issue, is very general, but is said to be less flexible in construction, requiring a stronger context to confine it to such; Schoul. Wills § 535; 2 Jarm. Wills 98–100. See DESCENDANTS.

The term "relations" includes those only who would otherwise be entitled under the statute of distributions; 1 Bro. C. C. 31; Drew v. Wakefield, 54 Me. 291; Varrell v. Wendell, 20 N. H. 431; McNeilledge v. Galbraith, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 45, 11 Am. Dec. 572; and so of the word "family"; L. R. 9 Eq. Cas. 622; Huling v. Fenner, 9 R. I. 412. The term family is very flexible and may mean, according to circumstances, a man's household, consisting of himself, his wife, children, and servants; it may mean his wife and children, or his children, excluding the wife; or if he has no wife and children, it may mean his brothers and sisters, or his next of kin; or it may mean the genealogical stock from which he sprung, since all these applications of the word and even others are found in common parlance; 1 Keen 181.

The word family may include an illegitimate child; L. R. 6 Ch. 597. See FAMILY; RELATIONS. Nearest relations means brothers and sisters to the exclusion of nephews and nieces; Locke v. Locke, 45 N. J. Eq. 97, 16 Atl. 49. "Poor relations, equally," was held to include testator's brothers and sisters, and the mother of his wife per capita, as if the word "poor" were not used; McNeilledge v. Galbraith, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 43, 11 Am. Dec. 572.

A legacy to A and his executors and administrators, legal representatives or personal representatives (which titles see), gives A an absolute interest in the legacy; Cox v. Curwen, 118 Mass. 198; Brent v. Washington's Adm'r, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 529; L. R. 4 Eq. 359. But in some instances these words will be taken as words not of limitation but of purchase; L. R. 4 Eq. 359; Brendel v. Strobel, 25 Md. 401. Generally when persons take under this description they will be bound to apply the legacy as the personal estate of the testator or intestate; 3 Bro. C. C. 224; Ware's Lessee v. Fisher, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 587.

Mistakes in the name or description of legatees may be corrected whenever it can be clearly shown by the will itself what was intended; 10 Hare 345; Stokeley v. Gordon, 8 Md. 496; Trustees of South Newmarket Methodist Seminary v. Peaslee, 15 N. H. 317; Thayer v. City of Boston, 15 Gray (Mass.) 347; Lefevre v. Lefevre, 59 N. Y. 441; L. R. 10 Eq. 29.

The only instances in which parol evidence is admissible to show the intention of the testator as to a legatee imperfectly described, is that of a strict equivocation: that is, where it appears from extraneous evidence that two or more persons answer the description in the will; L. R. 2 P. & D. 8; Trustees of South Newmarket Methodist Seminary v. Peaslee, 15 N. H. 330; Howard v. Peace Society, 49 Me. 288; Lefevre v. Lefevre, 59 N. Y. 441; Coulam v. Doull, 133 U. S. 216, 10 Sup. Ct. 253, 33 L. Ed. 596; and to explain names in the will, which the testator has used and which are peculiar or incomprehensible owing to testator's idiosyncrasies or other reasons; 2 P. Wms. 141; Thomas v. Stevens, 4 John. Ch. (N. Y.) 607; 5 H. L. Cas. 168. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to remove latent ambiguity in a will; but as to the character and extent of such evidence see LATENT AMBIGUITY.

By statute in Massachusetts legacies may be distributed by order of court to such persons as seem indicated by will. Laws 1895, ch. 134.

Interest of legatee. Property given specifically to one for life, and remainder over, must be enjoyed specifically during the life of the first donee, although that may exhaust it; L. R. 11 Eq. 80; Healey v. Toppan, 45 N. H. 261, 86 Am. Dec. 159; Evans v. Iglehart, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 171; Eichelberger v. Barnetz, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 293; Wootten v. Burch, 2 Md. Ch. 190. But where the bequest is not specific, as where personal property is limited to one for life, remainder over, it is presumed that the testator intended the same property to go over, and if any portion of it be perishable, it shall be sold and converted into permanent property, for the benefit of all concerned; 2 My. & K. 699; L. R. 4 Eq. Cas. 295. See In re Foster's Will, 76 Ia. 364, 33 N. W. 135, 41 N. W. 43.

In personal property there cannot be a remainder in the strict sense of the word, and therefore every future bequest of personal property, whether it be preceded or not by any particular bequest, or limited on a certain or uncertain event, is properly an executory bequest, and falls under the rules by which that mode of limitation is regulated; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 401, n. An executory bequest cannot be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever in the estate, out of which or after which it is limited; 8 Co. 96 a; 10 id. 476. And this privilege of executory bequests, which exempts them from being barred or destroyed, is the foundation of an invariable rule, that the event on which a limitation of this sort is permitted to take effect must be such that the estate will necessarily vest in interest from the time of its creation within a life or lives in being and twenty-one years thereafter and the fraction of another year, allowing for the period of gestation, afterwards; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 431.

Where the legacy is payable at a future time a question often arises as to when the legacy vests. The rule seems to be that if a legacy is payable or to be paid at a future time, then a vested interest is conferred on the legatee eo instanti the testator dies, transmissible to his executors or administrators; 31 Beav. 425; Brown v. Brown, 44 N. H. 281; Willis v. Roberts, 48 Me. 257; Eldridge v. Eldridge, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 516; Marsh v. Wheeler, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 156. But if it be payable at, if, when, in case, or provided a certain time comes or contingency arrives, then the legatee's right depends upon his being alive at the time fixed for payment; Prescott v. Morse, 62 Me. 449; Young v. Stoner, 37 Pa. 105; Gardiner v. Guild, 106 Mass. 28; 5 Beav. 391. For exceptions to this rule see 2 Will. Ex. 1224.

No particular form of words is requisite to constitute one a residuary legatee. It must appear to be the intention of the testator that he shall take the residue of the estate, after paying debts and meeting all other appointments of the will; 2 Jac. & W. 399; Morgan v. Dodge, 44 N. H. 255, 82 Am. Dec. 213; Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 264. The right of the executor to the residue of the estate when there is no residuary legatee is well established, both at law and in equity, in England, except so far as it is controlled by statute; 2 P. Wms. 340; but the rule has been controlled in equity by aid of slight presumptions in favor of the next of kin; 14 Sim. 8, 12; and is now altered by stat. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 40. The rule never obtained in this country, it is believed, to any great extent; Wilson v. Wilson, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 557; Wilson v. Hamilton, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 424; Hays v. Jackson, 6 Mass. 153.

A general residuary clause carries property, a gift of which has failed by reason of misdescription; Eckford v. Eckford (Ia.) 53 N. W. 345; and though a general residuary clause carries lapsed or void legacies, it does not include any part of the residue itself which fails; Church v. Church, 15 R. I. 138, 23 Atl. 302. See, generally, 9 L. R. A. 200, n.

The assent of the executor to a legacy is requisite to vest the title in the legatee; Lott v. Meacham, 4 Fla. 144; Finch v. Rogers, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 559; Nelson's Adm'r v. Cornwell, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 724; McClanahan v. Davis, 8 How. (U. S.) 170, 12 L. Ed. 1033; Cheshire v. Cheshire, 19 N. C. 254. But this seems to be merely a necessary requirement to adjust the matter to the reasonable convenience of the executor; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 488. This will often be implied or presumed; George v. Goldsby, 23 Ala. 326; 10 Hare 177; as where the legatee was in possession of the thing at the decease of the testator, and the executor acquiesces in his right; Schley v. Collis, 47 Fed. 250, 13 L. R. A. 567. The premature assent of an executor named where another qualifies will not avail; 4 Dev. & B. 401; nor will an assent before the issue of letters testamentary; Gardner v. Gantt, 19 Ala. 666; otherwise in England where the doctrine was that the authority of the executor was derived from the will; Wms. Exrs. 303, 1378. If the assent is unreasonably withheld, it may be compelled by a court of equity; Lark v. Linstead, 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 162; Trustees of Harvard College v. Quinn, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 514; Crosw. Ex. & Ad. 491.

A legatee cannot sue for his legacy until the time given to the executor for payment has expired. This time is commonly one year; 16 Beav. 298; Marr v. M'Cullough, 6 Port. (Ala.) 507; Hoyt v. Hilton, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 202. So also the assent of the legatee is required to complete the gift, although it is presumed, after the will is proved, unless the legacy is actually declined, and in that case the bequest is subject to distribution as intestate property; Walker v. Bradbury, 15 Me. 207; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 489. Of cumulative legacies one onerous and the other beneficial, the latter cannot be accepted and the former declined; 3 Myl. & K. 254; but an intention will control if expressed in the will; Wms. Ex. 1448.

Abatement. The general pecuniary legacies are subject to abatement whenever the assets are insufficient to answer the debts and specific legacies. The abatement must be upon all pro rata; 4 Bro. C. C. 349, 350; Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100; Appeal of Knecht, 71 Pa. 333; but a residuary legatee has no right to call upon general legatees to abate proportionally with him; L. R. 3 Ch. App. 537; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 555. And, generally, among general legatees there is a preference of those who have relinquished any right in consideration of their legacy over mere volunteers; Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100; L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 714. Specific legatees must abate, pro rata, when all the assets are exhausted except specific devises, and prove insufficient to pay debts; 1 P. Wms. 679; 2 Bla. Com. 513; but in ordinary cases of a deficiency of assets, the specific legacy will not be liable to abate with the general legacies; 3 Bro. C. C. 160; 3 Wms. Ex. 436. Specific bequests and devises cannot be forced to abate in relief of a pecuniary legacy by contributing to payment of costs of administration and funeral expenses; Moore's Estate, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 459. A bequest to a widow in lieu of dower is not subject to abatement in case of a deficiency of assets, but will be preferred to other general legacies; Matter of McKay, 5 Misc. 123, 25 N. Y. Supp. 725. Demonstrative legacies will not abate with general legacies; 11 Cl. & F. 509; Pierrepont v. Edwards, 25 N. Y. 128. Where an estate is insufficient to pay all the legacies, the general will abate before the specific legacies; Heath v. McLaughlin, 115 N. C. 398, 20 S. E. 519. Demonstrative legacies are subject to abatement, but specific legacies are not; Dunn's Ex'rs v. Renick, 40 W. Va. 349, 22 S. E. 66. Demonstrative legacies are a prior claim on the fund out of which they are payable, but if it is insufficient the legacies must be reduced proportionally; Dunford v. Jackson's Ex'rs (Va.) 22 S. E. 853. In default of special provision the following order is observed in calling upon the estate to supply a deficiency of assets; (1) General residuary estate; (2) Estate devised for payment for debts; (3) Real estate descended; (4) Real estate devised subject to debts; (5) General legacies; (6) Specific legacies and devises pro rata; Appeal of Cryder, 11 Pa. 72. Legacies given by a codicil are on the same footing as legacies in the original will, when the estate is insufficient to pay them all in full; Wood v. Hammond, 16 R. I. 98, 17 Atl. 324, 18 Atl. 198. See ABATEMENT; DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY.

Ademption of legacies. A specific legacy is revoked by the sale or change of form of the thing bequeathed; as, by converting a gold chain into a cup, or wool into cloth, or cloth into garments: 2 Bro. C. C. 110; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 262, 11 Am. Dec. 456; see In re Crawford, 113 N. Y. 560, 21 N. E. 692, 5 L. R. A. 71; so if a debt specifically bequeathed be received by the testator the legacy is adeemed; 3 Bro. C. C. 431; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 262, 11 Am. Dec. 456; Ford v. Ford, 23 N. H. 218; Gilbreath v. Alban, 10 Ohio 64; and so of stock, which is partially or wholly disposed of by testator before his death; Appeal of Welch, 28 Pa. 363; 1 Ves. Sen. 426; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456.

A bequest of a certain number of shares of stock, of a kind of which testator owns a large number, is a general legacy, and not adeemed by a substitution, during testator's lifetime, of other stock for that owned at the execution of the will; Snyder's Estate, 217 Pa. 71, 66 Atl. 157, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 118 Am. St. Rep. 900, 10 Ann. Cas. 488.

A demonstrative legacy is not adeemed by the sale or change of the fund; 6 H. L. Cas. 883; Walls v. Stewart, 16 Pa. 275; Pierrepont v. Edwards, 25 N. Y. 128; Roquet v. Eldridge, 118 Ind. 147, 20 N. E. 733.

The doctrine of ademption does not apply to demonstrative legacies inasmuch as they are payable out of the general estate, if the fund out of which they are payable fail; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1131; 2 Wms. Ex. 632. Where a legacy is given for a specified purpose, it is in the nature of a specific legacy, and if such purpose is accomplished by the testator in his lifetime there is an ademption of the legacy; Taylor v. Tolen, 38 N. J. Eq. 91; so where a legacy was given expressly to pay a debt, the legacy was held adeemed or satisfied; Hine v. Hine, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 507; 6 Ch. App. 136. Where the payment made by the testator subsequent to the execution of a will is equal to or exceeds the amount of the legacy, it will be deemed a satisfaction or an ademption thereof, but where it is less than the amount of the legacy, it is deemed a satisfaction pro tanto, and if the difference between the amounts be slight, it may be deemed a complete satisfaction or ademption; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1111; Tanton v. Keller, 167 Ill. 129, 47 N. E. 376. A bequest to a son of a certain sum payable out of the shares of the daughter's children, and providing that on such payment the son shall surrender an agreement of the daughter to pay him the amount of such legacy, is a bequest for a particular purpose, and hence is adeemed by payment by the testator, during his life of the daughter's debt to the son; Tanton v. Keller, 167 Ill. 129, 47 N. E. 376. See ADEMPTION.

A legacy to a child is regarded in courts of equity as a portion for such child: hence, when the testator, after giving such a legacy, settles the child and gives a portion, it is regarded as an ademption of the legacy. And it will make no difference that the portion given in settlement is less than the legacy; it will still adeem the legacy pro tanto; L. R. 14 Eq. 236; Langdon v. Astor's Ex'rs, 16 N. Y. 9; Appeal of Garrett, 15 Pa. 212; 2 Story Eq. Jur. § 1111. The principle of the ademption of legacies by gifts made during testator's life is applicable to a residuary legacy, where such appears to be the clear intent; Matter of Turfler's Estate, 1 Misc. 58, 23 N. Y. Supp. 135.

Payment of legacies. A legacy given generally, if no time of payment be named, is due at the death of the testator, although not payable until the executor has time to settle the estate in due course of law. See DEVISE. Legacies are not due by the civil law or the common law until one year after the decease of the testator and from that time interest is chargeable on them. The same term is generally allowed the executor in the American states to dispose of the estate and pay debts, and sometimes, by special order of the probate court, this is extended, from time to time, according to circumstances; Bradner v. Faulkner, 12 N. Y. 474; Loring v. Woodward, 41 N. H. 391; Sparks v. Weedon, 21 Md. 156; Rotch v. Emerson, 105 Mass. 431; Rop. Leg. 856; 4 Cl. & F. 276.

The great rule in legacies is, that if the testator's estate is not sufficient for paying all his debts and legacies, first, the debts must be paid in full; secondly, the specific legacies are to be paid; thirdly, general legacies are to be paid, in full if possible, if not, pro rata.

If given by will, an annuity is a legacy; Heatherington v. Lewenberg, 61 Miss. 372; and under a charge of legacies, an annuity will be included unless the testator expressly distinguishes between annuitants and legatees; 3 App. Cas. 989; 3 De G. & G. 601; See CHARGE.

An annuity given by will shall commence at the death of the testator, and the first payment fall due one year thereafter; 3 Madd. 167; Cooke v. Meeker, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 533; Hilyard's Estate, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 30.

In the civil law a distinction is made between an annual legacy and the legacy of a usufruct in that whereas the legacy of a usufruct was only one legacy of a right to enjoy as long as it shall last, an annual legacy contained as many legacies as it may last years; Dom. Civ. L. § 3572; Mack. Rom. L. § 763; and a similar distinction is made between gifts of the income and profits of particular funds and annuities payable from time to time, in that the latter are at each time of payment gross sums to be regarded as separate legacies at each recurring period. In this respect it is often difficult to determine to which particular class a gift belongs. A bequest of the income of certain shares of bank stock during life was held not an annuity, and the devisee was required to pay the tax on the stock, the court admitting the difficulty and citing Swett v. City of Boston, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 123, as an authority for the opposite view; Pearson v. Chace, 10 R. I. 455.

The importance of the distinction is evident when it is remembered that the gift of the produce of a fund, without limit as to time, has been held to amount to a gift of the fund itself whether the gift be made directly or through a trustee; Hartson v. Elden, 50 N. J. Eq. 522, 26 Atl. 561; while an annuity charged upon personalty is usually dependent on the legatee's life, the fund reverting to the residuary legatee; Bates v. Barry, 125 Mass. 83, 28 Am. Rep. 207.

It has been held that there is no substantial difference between the gift of an annuity for life and of the interest or income of a fund for life; nor between the gift simply of interest and of interest payable annually; Eichelberger's Estate, 170 Pa. 242, 32 Atl. 605.

A distinction is taken between an annuity and a legacy, in the matter of interest. In the latter case, no interest begins to accumulate until the end of one year from the death of the testator; 1 Sch. & L. 301; Gaskins v. Gaskins, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 390; 2 Rop. Leg. 1253; Esmond v. Brown, 18 R. I. 48, 25 Atl. 652. In cases where a legacy is given a child as a portion, payable at a certain age, this will draw interest from the death of the testator; L. R. 1 Eq. 369; Magoffin v. Patton, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 113; but this rule does not apply when any other provision is made for the child; 9 Beav. 164; Appeal of Seibert, 19 Pa. 49; Jordan v. Clark, 16 N. J. Eq. 243; Loring v. Woodward, 41 N. H. 393; Merritt v. Richardson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 239. The qualified recognition of a legacy by an executor will not carry with it the right to interest thereon, prior to demand for its delivery; Succession of Stephens, 45 La. Ann. 962, 13 South. 197. See INTEREST.

Where legatees are under disabilities, as infancy or coverture, the executor cannot discharge himself by payment, except to some party having a legal right to receive the same on the part of the legatee, which in the case of an infant is the legally-appointed guardian; Kent v. Dunham, 106 Mass. 586; 1 P. Wms. 285; and, at common law, in the case of a married woman, the husband; 1 Vern. 261; but in the latter case the executor may decline to pay the legacy until the husband make a suitable provision out of it for the wife, according to the order of the court of chancery; 8 Bligh. 224; Bisph. Eq. § 109. By statute in England and in some of the United States the executor is allowed in such cases to deposit the money on interest, subject to the order of the court of chancery; 2 Will. Ex. 1407.

The executor is liable for interest upon legacies, whenever he has realized it by investing the amount; L. R. 5 Ch. App. 233; Eliott v. Sparrell, 114 Mass. 404; Barney v. Saunders, 16 How. (U. S.) 542, 14 L. Ed. 1047; and usually with annual rests; 29 Beav. 586; Lathrop v. Smalley's Ex'rs, 23 N. J. Eq. 192. Where an executor was compelled to pay money out of his own funds on account of the devastavit of a co-executor, and the matter had lain along for many years on account of the infancy of the legatees, no interest was allowed under the special circumstances until the filing of the bill; Sparhawk v. Buell's Adm'r, 9 Vt. 41.

The better opinion is that at common law no action lay against an executor for a general legacy; 5 Term 690. But in case of a specific legacy it will lie after the assent of the executor; Blackler v. Boott, 114 Mass. 26; and assumpsit will generally lie for all legacies even before assent by the executor; Cowell v. Oxford, 6 N. J. L. 432; Dewitt v. Schoonmaker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 243; Doolittle v. Hilton, 63 Me. 537.

The proper remedy for the recovery of a legacy is in equity; 5 Term 690; Walker v. Cheever, 35 N. H. 349; Ballard v. Kilpatrick, 71 N. C. 281; Wms. Ex. 2005. In most of the United States statutory proceedings to recover legacies are provided in the orphans' or probate courts. As to federal jurisdiction over the administration of estates, see EXECUTOR.

Satisfaction of debt by legacy. In courts of equity, if a legacy equal or exceed the debt, it is presumed to have been intended to go in satisfaction; but if the legacy be less than the debt, it shall not be deemed satisfaction pro tanto; Strong v. Williams, 12 Mass. 391, 7 Am. Dec. 81; Byrne v. Byrne, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 54, 8 Am. Dec. 641; Williams v. Crary, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 246; Crocker v. Beal, 1 Lowell 418, Fed. Cas. No. 3,396. This rule, founded on a series of equity precedents, was said by Judge Redfield to maintain "a kind of dying existence;" 2 Redf. Wills 185, 186; and it is termed by a later author "whimsical and unsatisfactory"; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 469. See Bronson, J., in Eaton v. Benton, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 576; Wms. Ex. 1297. The courts allow very slight circumstances to rebut this presumption of payment: as, where the debt was not contracted until after the making of the will; 2 P. Wms. 343; 3 P. Wms. 353; or the debt is unliquidated; 1 P. Wms. 299; or due upon a bill or note negotiable; 3 Ves. 561; Smith v. Marshall, 1 Root (Conn.) 159; Smith v. Smith, 1 Allen (Mass.) 129; where the legacy is made payable after the debt falls due; 3 Atk. 96; where the intention appears otherwise; 2 G. & J. 185; 1 P. Wms. 410; or where the legacy is of a different nature from the debt; 1 Atk. 428; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 1110. Satisfaction is not favored in America.

Release of debt by a legacy. If one leave a legacy to his debtor, it is not to be regarded as a release of the debt unless that appears to have been the intention of the testator; 15 Sim. Ch. 554; Sorrelle's Ex'rs v. Sorrelle, 5 Ala. 245; Baily's Estate, 153 Pa. 402, 26 Atl. 23; and parol evidence is admissible to prove this intention; 23 Beav. 404; Perry v. Maxwell, 17 N. C. 488.

Where one appoints his debtor his executor, it is at law regarded as a release of the debt; Co. Litt. 264; 8 Co. 136 a; but this is now controlled by statute in England and in many of the states; Choate v. Arrington, 116 Mass. 552; In re Piper's Estate, 15 Pa. 533; Williams v. Morehouse, 9 Conn. 470. But in equity it is considered that the executor is still liable to account for the amount of his own debt; 13 Ves. Ch. 262.

Where one appoints his creditor executor, and he has assets, it operates to discharge the debt, but not otherwise; 2 Will. Ex. 1316. See CHARGE; DEVISE; LAPSED LEGACY; WILL.

LEGACY DUTY. A legacy tax in Great Britain, the rate of which rises according to the remoteness of the relationship of the legatee, and reaches its maximum where he is not related to the testator. See 26 Ch. Div. 538; COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX; TAX.

LEGAL. That which is according to law. It is used in opposition to equitable: as, the legal estate is in the trustee, the equitable estate in the cestui que trust.

LEGAL ASSETS. Such property of a testator in the hands of his executor as is liable to debts in temporal courts and to legacies in the spiritual, by course of law; equitable assets are such as are liable only by help of a court of equity. 2 Will. Ex. 1408–1431. The distinction is not important in the United States; In re Sperry's Estate, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 347. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 551; 2 Jarm. Wills, 543; Crosw. Ex. & Ad. 421, 423.

LEGAL CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

LEGAL CRUELTY. Such conduct on the part of a husband as will endanger the life, health, or limb of his wife, or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt; such acts as render cohabitation unsafe, or are likely to be attended with injury to the person or to the health of the wife; Odom v. Odom, 36 Ga. 286; 2 Curt. Eccl. 281; Mahone v. Mahone, 19 Cal. 626, 81 Am. Dec. 91; Hughes v. Hughes, 44 Ala. 698; Ward v. Ward, 103 Ill. 477; Beyer v. Beyer, 50 Wis. 254, 6 N. W. 807, 36 Am. Rep. 848; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 73 N. Y. 369; Smith v. Smith, 33 N. J. Eq. 458.

In McMahen v. McMahen, 186 Pa. 490, 40 Atl. 795, 41 L. R. A. 802, a definition was adopted from Bish. M. & D., taken from Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Con. 35: "Cruelty is such conduct in one of the married parties as renders further cohabitation dangerous to the physical safety of the other, or creates in the other such reasonable apprehension of bodily harm as materially to interfere with the discharge of marital duties." No single act of cruelty, however severe, that comes short of endangering the life, is sufficient to justify a divorce; May v. May, 62 Pa. 206.

Cruelty usually means the infliction or threatened infliction of bodily harm, by personal violence, actual or threatened, or by words or conduct causing mental suffering, and thereby injuring or tending to injure the health. In a few states bodily injury is not necessary; Tiffany, Dom. Rel.

Those acts which affect the life, the health, or even the comfort, of the party aggrieved, and give a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt, are called cruelty. What merely wounds the feelings is seldom admitted to be cruelty, unless the act be accompanied with bodily injury, either actual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional outbreaks of passion, will not amount to legal cruelty; Shaw v. Shaw, 17 Conn. 189; à fortiori, the denial of such indulgences and particular accommodations, as are ordinarily considered necessaries, is not cruelty.

That which merely wounds the feelings without being accompanied by bodily injury or actual menace does not amount to legal cruelty; Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 307; Pidge v. Pidge, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 257; Close v. Close, 24 N. J. Eq. 338; Faller v. Faller, 10 Neb. 144, 4 N. W. 1036; the infliction of mental suffering cannot constitute cruelty unless it endangers the life or health of the person injured; [1895] Prob. 315; Ashton v. Grucker, 48 La. Ann. 1194, 20 South. 738; Burney v. Burney, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 174, 32 S. W. 328; but it has been held that there may be such legal cruelty as to endanger the health of the wife without threats of bodily injury; as where a husband subjected his wife to a severe course of what he deemed to be affectionate moral discipline, and by so doing broke down her health and rendered a serious malady imminent; L. R. 2 P. & M. 31; Lyster v. Lyster, 111 Mass. 327; so compelling a wife to live at times in an attic without any conveniences whatever, leaving her for a period of six weeks without means to pay her board, and using insulting and abusive language to her is legal cruelty; Cary v. Cary, 106 Mich. 646, 64 N. W. 510; and falsely accusing her of unchastity; Smith v. Smith, 8 Or. 100; Palmer v. Palmer, 45 Mich. 150, 7 N. W. 760, 40 Am. Rep. 461; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 151; Waltermire v. Waltermire, 110 N. Y. 183, 17 N. E. 739; Folmar v. Folmar, 69 Ala. 84; repeatedly and causelessly charging the husband before others with adultery; Wagner v. Wagner, 36 Minn. 239, 30 N. W. 766; (contra, McAlister v. McAlister, 71 Tex. 695, 10 S. W. 294; and where the husband has reason to suspect his wife of infidelity; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 73 N. Y. 269). So when coupled with many other matrimonial shortcomings; Massey v. Massey, 40 Ind. App. 407, 80 N. E. 977, 81 N. E. 732.

A public accusation of unchastity, either in or out of the presence of the wife, is a greater degree of legal cruelty than one made in private; Graft v. Graft, 76 Ind. 136; Cass v. Cass, 34 La. Ann. 611; Crow v. Crow, 29 Or. 392, 45 Pac. 761; and it is legal cruelty for a wife to accuse her husband constantly, publicly, and without cause, of unfaithfulness to her, thereby disgracing him and endangering his means of livelihood; Whitmore v. Whitmore, 49 Mich. 417, 13 N. W. 800; but it has been held that adultery itself is not cruelty; Haskell v. Haskell, 54 Cal. 262.

The following have been held cruelty: An attempt to kill; Wand v. Wand, 14 Cal. 512; Dillon v. Dillon, 32 La. Ann. 644; an attempt to poison; Rie v. Rie, 34 Ark. 37; Peavey v. Peavey, 76 Ia. 443, 41 N. W. 67; Jones v. Jones, 66 Pa. 494; choking; Mercer v. Mercer, 114 Ind. 558, 17 N. E. 182; Thompson v. Thompson, 79 Mich. 124, 44 N. W. 424; kicking; Hughes v. Hughes, 19 Ala. 307; Sharp v. Sharp, 116 Ill. 509, 6 N. E. 15; Schichtl v. Schichtl, 88 Ia. 210, 55 N. W. 309; Myers v. Myers, 83 Va. 806, 6 S. E. 630; whipping; Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625; Hawkins v. Hawkins, 65 Md. 104, 3 Atl. 749; spitting in the face; Clutch v. Clutch, 1 N. J. Eq. 474; Beatty v. Beatty, Wright (Ohio) 557; communicating venereal disease; Venzke v. Venzke, 94 Cal. 225, 29 Pac. 499; inexcusable neglect during sickness; Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78 Ia. 691, 43 N. W. 616, 6 L. R. A. 187; Sharp v. Sharp, 116 Ill. 509, 6 N. E. 15; Mercer v. Mercer, 114 Ind. 558, 17 N. E. 182; the commission of certain crimes, such as rape; Fleming v. Fleming, 95 Cal. 430, 30 Pac. 566, 29 Am. St. Rep. 124; keeping a mistress; [1891] Prob. 189.

Where acts of violence have been condoned, wilfully depriving a wife of her proper position in the household, neglecting her, degrading her to the level of a servant, and compelling her to do the menial work of the house, and to take her meals and to sleep apart from the rest of the household, was held, in itself, legal cruelty; 72 L. T. 295. The husband is responsible for the ill-treatment of his wife by persons whom he supports in his house in spite of her remonstrances, and where she is justified in apprehensions of personal violence from them, she is entitled to a divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment and personal indignities; Hall v. Hall, 9 Or. 452; excessive sexual intercourse is legal cruelty, and it may be shown by the wife's testimony; Melvin v. Melvin, 58 N. H. 569, 42 Am. Rep. 605. A husband who unreasonably and brutally has sexual intercourse with his wife to the injury of her health is guilty of intolerable cruelty; Mayhew v. Mayhew, 61 Conn. 283, 23 Atl. 966, 29 Am. St. Rep. 195. The refusal of a husband to have sexual intercourse with his wife is not cruel and inhuman treatment or ground for a divorce à vinculo; Schoessow v. Schoessow, 83 Wis. 553, 53 N. W. 856.

Charges by a husband of beating and bruising by his wife, with expressions of a wish that he were dead and suggestions of poisoning him, are held such inhuman treatment as to endanger life; Beebe v. Beebe, 10 Ia. 133. So any course of conduct which would have the effect of impairing health would be legal cruelty; Day v. Day, 84 Ia. 221, 50 N. W. 979.

A wife's habitual use of profanity and telling of obscene stories before others in her husband's presence is ground for divorce; Mosher v. Mosher, 16 N. D. 269, 113 N. W. 99, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 820, 125 Am. St. Rep. 654. So is applying vile epithets, accompanied with physical violence; Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184, 52 Pac. 298; Douglass v. Douglass, 81 Ia. 258, 47 N. W. 92; Day v. Day, 56 N. H. 316. A series of assaults on one day may be "persistent cruelty" under the English act providing for separation and a support order for the wife; Broad v. Broad, 78 L. T. R. 687. It seems that when a physician, desiring not to have children, persuaded his wife that it was dangerous for her to have children and induced her to submit to an operation which caused much suffering, it was cruel and inhuman treatment; Sheldon v. Sheldon, 146 App. Div. 430, 131 N. Y. Supp. 291.

A woman marrying a drunkard with full knowledge is not on that account held to take without redress the risk of anything that may happen to her as a result of his continued drunken habits; Walker v. Walker, 77 L. T. R. 715.

Desertion and failure to support a wife when during the time she had been seriously ill and greatly in need of the assistance, and of the society, nursing, and comfort of her husband, was held legal cruelty on the ground that it inflicted on her mental suffering and public disgrace; Eastes v. Eastes, 79 Ind. 363. A wife is entitled to a divorce for legal cruelty where the acts complained of are the result of insane delusion; Smith v. Smith, 33 N. J. Eq. 458. But it has been held that a single act of personal violence does not constitute cruelty; Hoshall v. Hoshall, 51 Md. 72, 34 Am. Rep. 298; and that insulting and degrading language to her is not ground for a divorce, although in case of actual cruelty it may be shown in aggravation; Folmar v. Folmar, 69 Ala. 84; and misunderstandings and difficulties between husband and wife will not afford a foundation for a divorce; Castanédo v. Fortier, 34 La. Ann. 135; nor will a succession of petty annoyances, complaints, fault-finding, and disparagement of the husband's common sense constitute legal cruelty to him; Johnson v. Johnson, 49 Mich. 639, 14 N. W. 670. In Russell v. Russell the English court of appeal held that: (1) A false charge of having committed an unnatural crime circulated by a wife against her husband, although published to the world and persisted in after she did not believe its truth, is not sufficient evidence of legal cruelty to entitle the husband to a judicial separation; (2) but was enough to justify the court in refusing a petition of the wife for a restitution of conjugal rights; [1895] Prob. 315; affirmed in the House of Lords as to (1), the second contention having been withdrawn; four judges out of nine dissented; [1897] A. C. 395.

See DIVORCE.

LEGAL DUTY. That which the law requires to be done or forborne to a determinate person, or to the public at large, and is correlative to a right vested in such determinate person. Emry v. Water-Power Co., 111 N. C. 94, 16 S. E. 18, 17 L. R. A. 699. See DUTY.

LEGAL EDUCATION. See CASE SYSTEM; EDUCATION.

LEGAL EDUCATION, COUNCIL OF. A body consisting of Benchers of the Four Inns of Court established in London in 1852.

LEGAL ESTATE. One the right to which may be enforced in a court of law.

It is distinguished from an equitable estate, the right to which can be established only in a court of equity.

The party who has the legal title has alone the right to seek a remedy for a wrong to his estate, in a court of law, though he may have no beneficial interest in it. The equitable owner is he who has not the legal estate, but is entitled to the beneficial interest.

The person who holds the legal estate for the benefit of another is called a trustee; he who has the beneficiary interest and does not hold the legal title is called the beneficiary, or more technically, the cestui que trust.

When the latter has a claim, he must enforce his right in a court of equity, for he cannot sue any one at law in his own name; 1 East 497; 8 Term 322; 1 Saund. 158, n. 1; 2 Bingh. 20; still less can he in such court sue his own trustee; 1 East 497.

LEGAL FRAUD. See FRAUD.

LEGAL HEIRS. See HEIR, LEGAL.

LEGAL HOLIDAY. See HOLIDAY.

LEGAL INCAPACITY. See INCAPACITY; LIMITATIONS.

LEGAL INTEREST. See INTEREST.

LEGAL IRREGULARITY. See IRREGULARITY.

LEGAL MALICE. An expression used as the equivalent to constructive malice or malice in law. Humphries v. Parker, 52 Me. 502. See MALICE.

LEGAL MEMORY. See MEMORY, TIME OF LEGAL; PRESCRIPTION.

LEGAL MERCHANDISE. Under the words "other legal merchandise" in a charter party, the charterer is at liberty to ship any lawful article he pleases, but is bound to pay the same amount of freight the vessel would have earned if loaded within the terms of the charter. 18 L. J. C. P. 74; 6 C. B. 791.

LEGAL MORTGAGE. A first mortgage. This is unquestionably so as regards land, because it is only the first mortgage which can grant the legal estate in land; and it has been held that where there was an agreement to give a legal mortgage of a ship, the expression signified a first mortgage. 11 W. R. 23.

LEGAL NEGLIGENCE. See NEGLIGENCE.

LEGAL NOTICE. Such notice as is adequate in point of law, such notice as the law requires to be given for the specific purpose or in the particular case. A legal notice to quit is a notice provided by law as distinguished from one provided by contract. 57 L. J. Q. B. 225; 20 Q. B. D. 374.

LEGAL OBLIGATION. See DUTY; OBLIGATION.

LEGAL PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES. See LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES.

LEGAL PROCESS. See PROCESS.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES. The primary meaning of the terms "representatives," "legal representatives," "personal representatives," or "legal personal representatives," is executors and administrators in their official capacity; 36 L. J. Ch. 793; L. R. 4 Eq. 359; and it cannot be construed as excluding them; Wason v. Colburn, 99 Mass. 342; but the meaning may be controlled by the context; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Abernathy, 32 Mo. App. 211. It may mean the next of kin; Hodge's Appeal, 8 W. N. C. (Pa.) 209; 4 De G. & J. 477; 26 Beav. 26; Schultz v. Ins. Co., 59 Minn. 308, 61 N. W. 331; 28 L. J. Ch. 835; 16 Sim. 329. It has been held to mean next of kin according to the statute of distribution; 13 L. J. Ch. 147; Willard, Ex.; and heirs or legal descendants; Warnecke v. Lembca, 71 Ill. 91, 12 Am. Rep. 85; and heirs, assignees or receivers; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 85 Am. Dec. 157; Robinson v. Hurst, 78 Md. 59, 26 Atl. 956, 20 L. R. A. 761, 44 Am. St. Rep. 266; Phelps v. Smith, 15 Ill. 574; Barbour v. Bank, 45 Ohio St. 133, 12 N. E. 5; Hammond v. Organ Co., 92 U. S. 724, 23 L. Ed. 767; see Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 6 Sup.

Ct. 877, 29 L. Ed. 997, where the term was said to be not necessarily restricted to the personal representatives of the deceased, but is sufficiently broad to cover all persons who with respect to his property stand in his place and represent his interests, whether transferred to them by his act or by operation of law, reversing Armstrong v. Ins. Co., 11 Fed. 573. When used with reference to land, it ordinarily means those to whom the land descends; Ewing v. Jones, 130 Ind. 251, 29 N. E. 1057, 15 L. R. A. 75. See PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES; LAPSED LEGACY.

Within the meaning of a life insurance policy it has been held to mean wife and children rather than administrators; Griswold v. Sawyer, 125 N. Y. 411, 26 N. E. 464, reversing id., 56 Hun 12, 8 N. Y. Supp. 517, 565, 960; Murray v. Strang, 28 Ill. App. 608; and the widow, orphan, heir, assign, or legatee of the member; Masonic Mut. Relief Ass'n v. McAuley, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 70; but it has been held, where nothing shows that the words were used with a different meaning, the words legal representatives make the proceeds a part of the assets of the insured; People v. Phelps, 78 Ill. 147. The words families, heirs, or legal representatives are held to include those who would take property as in cases of intestacy; Bishop v. Grand Lodge, 112 N. Y. 627, 20 N. E. 562, reversing id., 43 Hun 472; and where the benefit appears to have been intended for the family it may mean heirs or next of kin; Loos v. Ins. Co., 41 Mo. 538.

The rule that devises lapse by the death of the devisee is not changed by adding to the devise the words "to have and to hold the same to them, their heirs and assigns forever;" In re Wells, 113 N. Y. 396, 21 N. E. 137, 10 Am. St. Rep. 457. See LAPSED DEVISE; LAPSED LEGACY.

LEGAL TENDER. That currency which has been made suitable by law for the purposes of a tender in the payment of debts.

The following descriptions of money are legal tender in the United States:—

All the gold coins of the United States are a legal tender in all payments at their nominal value when not below the standard weight and limit of tolerance prescribed by law for the single piece, and, when reduced in weight below such standard and limit of tolerance, they are a legal tender at valuation in proportion to their actual weight.

Treasury notes (of the act of July 14, 1890) and standard silver dollars for all payments.

Silver coins of a smaller denomination than one dollar, for all sums not exceeding ten dollars.

The minor coins, of nickel and copper for all amounts not exceeding twenty-five cents.

United States notes are legal tender for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt. (United States notes, upon resumption of specie payments, January 1, 1879, became acceptable in payments of duties on imports and have been freely received on that account since the above date, but the law has not been changed.)

Gold certificates, silver certificates, and national bank notes are not legal tender, but both classes of certificates are receivable for all public dues, while national bank notes are receivable for all public dues except duties on imports, and may be paid out by the government for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt and in redemption of the national currency. All national banks are required by law to receive the notes of other national banks at par.

In the Philippine Islands, the unit of value is the gold peso (12 9/10 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine), and the gold coins of the United States at the rate of one dollar for two pesos hereinafter in the act authorized, are legal tender for all debts, public and private. Act March 2, 1903. Section 2 of that act provides the coinage of a silver peso (416 grains, nine-tenths fine), which is made legal tender for all debts, public and private, except that debts contracted prior to December 31, 1903, may be paid in the legal tender currency of the Islands existing at the time of making the contract.

In Hawaii silver coins coined under the laws of Hawaii are received in payment of all dues to the territory and the United States, but are not, when received, to be again put in circulation. Act January 14, 1903. Section 5 of that act provided that such coins should be legal tender for debts in the territory until January 1, 1904, and not afterwards.

As to trade dollars, see DOLLAR. See EAGLE; HALF EAGLE.

By acts of February 25, 1862, July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, congress authorized the issue of notes of the United States, declaring them a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt. 12 Stat. L. 345, 532, 709. These notes are obligations of the United States, and are exempt from state taxation; Bank of New York v. New York County, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 26, 19 L. Ed. 60; but where a state requires its taxes to be paid in coin, they cannot be discharged by a tender of these notes. A debt created prior to the passage of the legal tender acts, and payable by the express terms of the contract in gold and silver coins, cannot be satisfied by a tender of treasury notes; Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 229, 19 L. Ed.

141; Butler v. Hórwitz, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 258, 19 L. Ed. 149; Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 687, 20 L. Ed. 460. The legal tender acts are constitutional as applied to pre-existing contracts, as well as to those made subsequent to their passage; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287, overruling the previous opinion of the court in Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 19 L. Ed. 513. See 17 Am. L. Reg. 193; 19 id. 73; 25 id. 601. Congress has the constitutional power to make the treasury notes of the United States a legal tender in payment of private debts, in time of peace as well as in time of war; Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 4 Sup. Ct. 122, 28 L. Ed. 204.

Federal reserve notes (Act of Dec. 23, 1913) are obligations of the United States and are made receivable by all national and member banks and federal reserve banks, and for all taxes, customs, and other public dues.

A postage currency has also been authorized, which was receivable in payment of all dues to the United States less than five dollars. They were not, however, a legal tender in payment of private debts. (Act of Congress, approved July 17, 1862.) See GOLD; MONEY; SILVER.

The quality of legal tender of coin is an attribute of law aside from its bullion value, and renders such coin as the government has made legal tender subject to such reasonable regulation by the police power as public policy may require, including prohibition against exportation; Ling Su Fan v. U. S., 218 U. S. 302, 31 Sup. Ct. 21, 54 L. Ed. 1049, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1176.

LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.). A person who stands rectus in curia, who possesses all his civil rights. A lawful man. One who stands rectus in curia, not outlawed nor infamous. In this sense are the words probi et legales homines.

LEGALIZATION. The act of making lawful.

By legalization is also understood the act by which a judge or competent officer authenticates a record, or other matter, in order that the same may be lawfully read in evidence.

LEGALIZE. To confirm acts already done, not to authorize new proceedings in the future. Barker v. Chesterfield, 102 Mass. 128.

LEGANTINE CONSTITUTIONS. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Pope Gregory IX. and Clement IV., in the reign of Hen. III., about the years 1220 and 1268. 1 Bla. Com. 83. Burn says, 1237 and 1268. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 30 d.

LEGATARY. One to whom anything is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

LEGATEE. The person to whom a legacy is given.

The court will apply the popular rather than the technical meaning to the term "legatee" in a will, and read it as if it were "distributee," when, after looking at all the circumstances, and all the clauses of the will, the alternative is between this disposition and a total failure of the dispository scheme for want of certainty, and that seems to have been the testator's meaning; Lallerstedt v. Jennings, 23 Ga. 571. See LEGACY.

LEGATES. Persons sent by the pope to sovereigns or governments, or merely to members of the episcopate and faithful of a country, as his representatives.

Legates à latere hold the first rank among those who are honored by a legation; they are always chosen from the College of Cardinals, and are called à latere in imitation of the magistrates of ancient Rome, who were taken from the court or side of the emperor.

Legati nati. Legates who by their appointment to a certain see became ipso facto apostolic legates, since the office was attached to the see itself. By the 11th century they had practically ceased to exist.

Legati missi. Envoys sent upon some special mission. The appointment dates from the 10th and 11th centuries.

Nuncio. A name applied to legati missi in the 13th century. Besides having an ecclesiastical mission, they have also a diplomatic character, having been from their origin accredited to courts or governments.

Internuncios. Envoys ranking as nuncios and sent to smaller states.

Apostolic delegates. Papal representatives sent to missionary countries or to countries which do not maintain diplomatic relations with the Holy See, as the United States.

The Congress of Vienna, of 1815, in determining the question of precedence among diplomatic representatives, placed legates and nuncios in the same class with ambassadors (q. v.). See Catholic Encyc., Legates.

LEGATION. An embassy; a mission. All persons attached to a foreign legation, lawfully acknowledged by the government of this country, whether they are ambassadors, envoys, ministers, or attachés, are protected by the act of April 30, 1790, from violence, arrest, or molestation; Respublica v. De Longchamps, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 117, 1 L. Ed. 59; Ex parte Cabrera, 1 Wash. C. C. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 2,278; U. S. v. Ortega, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 467, 6 L. Ed. 521; Torlade v. Barrozo, 1 Miles (Pa.) 366; U. S. v. Benner, 1 Baldw. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 14,568. See AMBASSADOR; ARREST; PRIVILEGE.

LEGATORY. The third part of a freeman's personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will. Bacon, Abr. Customs of London (D 4). See DEAD MAN'S PART.

LEGATUM. A legacy given to the church or an accustomed mortuary. Cowell.

LEGEM HABERE. Capable of giving evidence upon oath.

LEGEM SCISCERE (Lat.). To give consent or authority to a proposed law.

LEGENITA. A fine for criminal conversation with a woman. Whart. Lex.

LEGES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Laws proposed by a magistrate of the senate and adopted by the whole people in comitia centuriata. See POPULISCITUM; LEX.

In English Law. Laws.

Leges scriptæ, written or statute laws.

Leges non scriptæ, unwritten or customary laws; the common law, including general customs, or the common law properly so called; and also particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom, and those particular laws that are, by custom, observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. 1 Bla. Com. 67. "These parts of law are therefore styled leges non scriptæ, because their original institution and authority are not set down in writing, as acts of parliament are, but they receive their binding force from long and immemorial usage." 1 Steph. Com. 40, 46. See LAW; JUS; LEX.

LEGES BARBARORUM. A class name for the codes of mediæval European law. For a list, see Jenks, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 154.

LEGES EDWARDI CONFESSORIS. A name used for a legal treatise written from 1130 to 1135, which presents the law in force toward the end of Henry I. Its authority is said to be undeserved. 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Am. Leg. Hist. 17.

LEGES ET CONSUETUDINI REGNI. The accepted name for the common law from an early time; Green, in 9 L. Q. R. 153; since the latter half of the 12th century at least; Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 249.

LEGES HENRICI. A book written between 1114 and 1118 containing Anglo-Saxon and Norman law. It is said to be an invaluable source of knowledge of the period preceding the full development of the Norman law. 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Am. Leg. Hist. 16.

LEGES JULIÆ. Laws enacted during the reign of Augustus or of Julius Cæsar which, with the lex abutia, effectually abolished the legis actiones.

Lex Julia de Ambitu. (B. C. 18.) A law to repress illegal methods of seeking office. Inst. 4, 18.

Lex Julia de Adulteriis. (B. C. 18.) The law relating (1) to divorce, requiring the presence of seven witnesses and a repudium to show the fact of repudiation and (2) prohibiting the husband from alienating or mortgaging any fundus italicus comprised in the dos. This provision was extended by Justinian to any fundus dotalis whatever. Sohm, Rom. L. 374, 382.

Lex Julia de Annona. (B. C. about 43.) A law to repress combinations for heightening the price of provisions.

Lex Julia de Bonorum Cessione. (B. C. about 20.) A law allowing debtors to make a voluntary assignment of their property. Inst. 3, 12; Sohm, Rom. L. 211.

Lex Julia de Majestate. (B. C. 100.) A law which inflicted the punishment of death on all who attempted anything against the emperor or state, and condemning the wrongdoer after his death. Inst. 4, 18.

Lex Julia de Maritandis Ordinibus. (B. C. 18.) A law forbidding senators and their children to intermarry with freedmen or infames, and freedmen to marry infames. Sohm, Rom. L. 497.

Lex Julia de Residuis. A law punishing those who gave an incomplete account of public money committed to their charge. Inst. 4, 18.

Lex Julia de Peculatu. (Date unknown; it existed in B. C. 90.) A law punishing those who had stolen public money or property or anything sacred or religious. Magistrates and those who had aided them in stealing public money during their administration were punished capitally; other persons were deported. Inst. 4, 18, 9.

Lex Julia et Papia Poppæa. See LEX PAPIA ET POPPÆA.

LEGES SACRATÆ. All solemn compacts between the plebeians and patricians were so called.

LEGIOSUS. Subjected to a course of the law. Cowell.

LEGIS ACTIO. Actio represented a right of the plaintiff not only as against the defendant, but also against the magistrate—a right to have a judicium placed at his disposal or to have a private individual appointed for the purpose of deciding by his judgment the question at issue between him and his adversary. The actio rested in early times on lex or on custom with the force of lex, and for this reason it was called legis actio.

There were five of the legis actiones: (1) the legis actio sacramento, (2) the legis actio per judicis postulationem, (3) the legis actio per condictionem, (4) the legis actio per manus injectionem, (5) the legis actio per pignoris capionem. Private law granted a legis actio either directly or indirectly, and a private right which was not directly enforceable by the ordinary civil procedure could nevertheless secure a trial or actio by a solemn affirmation or a solemn act of execution, which latter could be either personal or real. The general form of action was actio sacramenti, the other forms being restricted to such cases as were determined by statute (lex) or ancient custom with statutory force. The special legis actiones were all modes of enforcing obligatory rights, or, in other words, they were forms of so-called personal actions. But whenever the claim was not personal, but real, the legis actio sacramenti was the sole form available. Sohm, Rom. L. 242.

The procedure in these actions was open only to Roman citizens and the parties were almost always obliged to appear personally, but an assertor liberatus could appear to claim the freedom of a person wrongfully treated as a slave. The necessity of adherence to the prescribed forms was so rigid that if, in an action for damage to a vineyard, the plaintiff used the word vites instead of the general word arbores employed in the law of the Twelve Tables, he lost his action, and if an action failed, even on the most technical ground, the plaintiff had no further legal remedy. The sentence was ordinarily to give the thing demanded, not a pecuniary equivalent. Sand. Just. Introd. § 96.

LEGISLATION. The act of giving or enacting laws. See STATUTE; CONSTITUTIONAL; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

LEGISLATIVE POWER. Authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with the enactment of laws as distinguished from the executive and judicial functions. The law-making power of a sovereign state.

The authority conferred by or exercised under the constitution of a state or of the United States, to make new laws or to alter or repeal existing ones.

"Legislative power" is the power to prescribe rules of civil conduct. Schaake v. Dolley, 85 Kan. 598, 118 Pac. 80, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 254.

A law in the sense in which the word is implied in these definitions is a rule of civil conduct, or a statute described by the legislative will, and not law in the more general sense in which the term is applicable to that which owes its origin, either wholly or in part, to the judicial power. See LAW; JUDGE-MADE LAW; JUDICIAL POWER.

The separation of the three powers of government which underlie all modern civilized government has been discussed under the title EXECUTIVE POWER, in which, as well as well as in the title JUDICIAL POWER, many of the questions arising in connection with the difference of the spheres of action of these three powers have been discussed, and to these titles reference should be made and they should be read in connection with this title.

The powers of the departments of the government are not merely equal, but are exclusive; Langenberg v. Decker, 131 Ind. 471, 31 N. E. 190, 16 L. R. A. 108.

"Legislation is essentially an act of sovereign power; . . . the very definition of law, . . . shows the intrinsic superiority of the legislature. It may be said, the power of the legislature, also, is limited by prescribed rules. It is so. But it is nevertheless the power of the people and sovereign as far as it extends." Gibson, J., in Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 330.

"Plenary power in the legislature for all the purposes of civil government is the rule. A prohibition to exercise a particular power is the exception." People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532.

"The legislative power of a state extends to everything within the sphere of such power, except as it is restricted by the federal constitution or that of the state." Swayne, J., in Pine Grove Tp. v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 666, 22 L. Ed. 227.

The legislature of a state does not look to the state constitution for power to act on a particular subject, but only to determine whether the sovereign legislative will has been in any manner restricted or limited by that instrument; Platt v. Le Cocq, 150 Fed. 391; McCreary v. Fields, 148 Ky. 730, 147 S. W. 901. The state may provide not only for the health, morals and safety of its people, but for their well-being, peace, happiness and prosperity; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696, 10 Ann. Cas. 525. "Questions of power do not depend on the degree to which it may be exercised;" Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 439, 6 L. Ed. 678, per Marshall, C. J.

A state legislature possesses all legislative power except such as has been delegated to congress and prohibited by the constitution of the United States, or is impliedly withheld from it by the state constitution; and the only limitations on its power are those of the state and federal constitutions and the treaties and acts of Congress enacted and adopted under the latter; Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 47 N. E. 19, 37 L. R. A. 294, 62 Am. St. Rep. 477; Motlow v. State, 125 Tenn. 547, 145 S. W. 177; Gautier v. Ditmar, 204 N. Y. 20, 97 N. E. 464, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 960; Moss v. Tazewell County, 112 Va. 878, 72 S. E. 945.

There has been some discussion as to the meaning of the term "legislature" in the federal constitution. It is said to occur there thirteen times, and the conclusion is reached that where the power given is legislative, it must be taken to mean the two branches acting separately with the approval of the governor, but in other cases the word is to be taken in its popular sense; 24 Harv. L. Rev. 220.

"The state does not act by its people in their collective capacity, but through such political agencies as are duly constituted and established. The legislative power is the supreme authority except as limited by the constitution of the state, and the sovereignty of the people is exercised through their representatives in the legislature, unless, by the fundamental law, power is elsewhere reposed." McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 25, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869. "Irrespective of the operation of the federal constitution and restrictions asserted to be inherent in the nature of American institutions, the general rule is that there are no limitations upon the legislative power of the legislature of a state, except those imposed by its written constitutions." Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 661, 13 Sup. Ct. 721, 37 L. Ed. 599.

It is in the legislative department that the supreme and absolute authority is vested; 1 Bla. Com. 52, 142; Locke, Govt. ch. xii. xiii. par. 153.

"The legislative power is that which has the right to direct how the force of the community shall be employed for preserving the community and the members of it." Locke, Govt. ch. xii. par. 143. But it was only upon the ruins of the royal prerogative, so far as concerned the right to dispense with any statute, that the foundations were laid on which by a steady, if at times an interrupted growth, was built up the final omnipotence of parliament. The power of the king was defined by the decision in Godden v. Hales, Comb. 21; s. c. Show. 475. See also 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L. 29, n.

A state constitution, adopted before that of the United States, is a result of all the plenary legislative power of the people untrammelled by any higher law; Sage v. City of New York, 154 N. Y. 61, 47 N. E. 1096, 38 L. R. A. 606, 61 Am. St. Rep. 592.

It has always been understood that the sovereignty of the federal government is in congress, though limited to specified objects. "The wisdom and the discretion of congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections, are, in this, as in many other instances, as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied, to secure them from its abuse." Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 187, 6 L. Ed. 23, per Marshall, C. J.

So the state legislature is vested with authority to make law and that authority involves legislative discretion; State v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500.

Legislative discretion is of two kinds, legal and political. "Legal discretion is limited. It is thus defined by Lord Coke: Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum. Political discretion has a wider range. It embraces, combines, and considers all circumstances, events, and projects, foreign or domestic, that can affect the national interests. Legal discretion has not the means of ascertaining the grounds on which political discretion may have proceeded." Hall, Am. L. J. 255.

While each of the three departments of government is essential to the existence of a state, as modern government is understood, it is undoubtedly true that the strongest is the legislative. That would result from its control of the public purse, if from nothing else; but notwithstanding this fact, the judiciary which is in theory the weakest of the departments has held its own place as a co-equal and co-ordinate department, and after the lapse of a century it is said "that the three departments still retain their balance, each with its prerogatives unimpaired." 1 Fost. Const. § 45.

Besides the vantage ground which the legislative department naturally occupies as contrasted with the other two by reason of the character of its functions, it has been said that it is the branch of the government which has grown the most. And it is suggested, that coming as it does from the people, much is tolerated which would not be permitted in the other departments; Miller, Const. U. S. 95. It has been maintained by some writers that congress has encroached permanently upon the other departments, but this opinion is controverted; 1 Fost. Const. § 45, n. 11. There is no question as to the importance of the constitutional restraint upon the power of congress. Montesquieu said that the English constitution would perish if the legislative power should become more corrupt than the executive; and a later writer considered that while it was important to restrain the executive power, it was still more important to restrain the legislative; De Lolme, Const. 190.

It has been said that: "In the United States, all legislative power exists in two forms, viz.: 1st. As political or sovereign power, the nation as a whole embodying the political sovereignty supreme and unlimited; 2d. As civil or delegated power, the legislature representing the legal sovereignty as bounded by constitutional limitations. Political legislation, therefore, being among the powers of sovereignty, belongs exclusively to the people as a nation.

Civil legislation, being morally an act of agency performed by the delegates or representatives of the people, belongs to the legislature proper, and indirectly to the judiciary in the exercise of a supervisory power arising out of actual controversy. In the hierarchy of government the people frame the constitution, the constitution creates the legislature, and the legislature enacts the laws." Ordron. Const. Leg. 15.

The legislative institutions of England are considered by the best constitutional historians to have been of Teutonic origin; id. 62; Freeman, Eng. Const. 18.

The ancient Teutonic assembly in its twofold operation is thus described by Tacitus: "About minor matters the chiefs deliberate; about the more important, the whole tribe. Yet even when the formal decision rests with the people, the affair is always thoroughly discussed by the chiefs. They assemble, except in the case of sudden emergency, on certain fixed days, either at new or at full moon, for this they consider the most auspicious season for the transaction of business. Their freedom has this disadvantage, that they do not meet simultaneously, or as they are bidden, but two or three days are wasted in the delays of assembling. When the multitude think proper, they sit down armed. Silence is proclaimed by the priests, who have on these occasions the right of keeping order. Then the king or the chief, according to age, birth, distinction in war, or eloquence, is heard, more because he has influence to persuade, than because he has power to command. If his sentiments displease them, they reject them with murmurs; if they are satisfied, they brandish their spears. The most complimentary form of assent is to express approbation with their weapons." Church and Brodribb's translation of Agricola and Germania, 95, 96.

"Such," it is said, "was the earliest form of our racial legislature of which there is record. And in it were the germs of all that came after it. The essential features of Saxon markmoot, shiremoot, folkmoot and witenagemot; of Norman great council; of parliament; of colonial and state legislature; and of the American congress, were historically derived from this ancient and original Teutonic source." Stevens, Sources of the Constitution 60.

The same view of the origin of our legislative institutions is taken by another writer on the subject who says: "The present congress of the United States is a national legislature, and its source may be traced through the British parliament to the meetings in the woods described by Tacitus." 1 Fost. Const. 307. So also it was said by the great Frenchman by whom first was given verbal expression to the modern system of government: "Ce beau système a été trouvé dans les bois." (This splendid system was found in the forest.) Montesquieu, L'Esprit des Lois, xi. ch. vi. Foster gives an interesting account of some primitive legislative assemblies of a whole people which are still in existence; of which probably no more perfect democracy has ever existed than the town meeting of New England. See 1 Fost. Const. § 47; Spencer, Pol. Inst. § 491; TOWN MEETING.

Going back still further it is said that the Aryan instinct of popular government finds expression in representative government, and confides the lawmaking power to a legislature rather than to a personal sovereign, the latter system being always adhered to among the Oriental nations and those of Europe not affected by Aryan origin or admixture: Ordronaux, Const. Leg. 5.

The legislative system of America is undoubtedly derived from that of England; the senate being a development from the house of lords and the privy council, and the house of representatives confessedly from the house of commons. The earliest impressions which were received of legislative authority in England, reflected the characteristic powers "of ancient Teutonic assemblies,—the exercise of authority over tribal or national affairs, and the combining of judicial with legislative functions." Stevens, Sources of the Constitution 86. This authority gives an interesting and instructive sketch of the growth of legislative power as it is known in England and America. Prior to Edward the Confessor, the powers of the witenagemot were very great, extending to the making and unmaking of kings; including lease, taxation, treaties, land grants, control of military and naval forces, and ecclesiastical officers, including also the functions of a supreme court of justice. It survived the Norman conquest theoretically with the same powers, but practically they were minimized by the Conqueror and his successors at the same time that they observed the formality of professing to act by its counsel and advice. With the Plantagenets the legislative power increased, and under Edward I. parliament attained the perfected organization of the two houses, and the essentials of its subsequent authority which was subject to fluctuations. Subsequent alternations of power and weakness led up to the contest with the Stuarts and the final overthrow both of the throne and the lords, which, it is said, was "so disastrous that neither has since fully recovered the place once held in the fabric of the state." After a partial reaction, the Revolution of 1688 finally established the legislative power in England, and through the opposing forces of the rise of the cabinet system, the feebleness of the first two Georges, and on the other hand, the assertion of the royal power by George III., there happened to be at the period of colonial growth in America, and the establishment of American independence, that condition of distinct and independent executive and legislative power which left its impress upon the American constitutions; although in England the result of the cabinet system was the development of the final domination of the crown by parliament; id. ch. 4.

The same author finds several points in which the legislative procedure in the United States is traced naturally to that of England. The system of originating legislation by bills passed by both houses and submitted to the approval or veto of the executive, he traces back to the period when parliament began to take the initiative, and legislation arose from its petitions to the king. A like origin is attributed to certain privileges possessed by each house, such as, on the one hand, the judicial rights of the senate and the power of impeachment and of initiating money bills in the house. So also the privileges of members of both houses of freedom of speech, freedom from arrest, and the provision that each house is the judge of the election and qualification of its members; id.

Most of the American constitutions provide, in express though in different terms, for the separation of the three powers of government. See EXECUTIVE POWER. The constitutions of the United States, and a few of the states, do not have such a formal provision, but simply vest in the legislature, the legislative power; in the courts, the judicial power; in the executive, the executive power. In most of them there is not only an express separation of powers, but also a prohibition against the assumption or discharge of the functions of any one department by a person or persons exercising the functions of another. And the Ohio constitution, art. 2, § 32, provides that the legislature can exercise no judicial power not expressly conferred by the constitution. It is generally conceded, however, that those constitutions which simply vest the three powers in three distinct departments operate as clearly and distinctly as enjoining the separation of the departments as those in which there is an express provision, and this may be accepted as a settled principle of American constitutional law. In an early case it was said that "no power can be properly a legislative and properly a judicial power at the same time; and as to mixed powers, the separation of the departments in the manner prescribed by the constitution precludes the possibility of their existence." Bates v. Kimball, 2 D. Chip. (Vt.) 77. It is true, as suggested by another court, that there are many minor duties devolving upon a government which cannot be assigned, strictly speaking, to any one of the three departments; People v. Provines, 34 Cal. 520. A suggestion has been made to characterize these nondescript duties as "administrative," but it is very truly remarked that this "does not much mend the matter, for it is at once obvious that this does not make a fourth department, but merely gives a name to a group of duties taken from the legislative and executive departments." 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 438. It might be added that the term administrative in this sense might have an application under the systems of continental Europe, where the executive exercises certain legislative functions not belonging to the office as we understand it. See EXECUTIVE POWER. The three departments are not merely equal, but exclusive, in respect to their duties, and absolutely independent of each other; Smith v. Myers, 109 Ind. 8, 9 N. E. 692, 58 Am. Rep. 375; one cannot inquire into the motives underlying the action of another; Wright v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 298. The executive power is much more easily defined than the other two. The greater difficulty of determining the boundary line between legislative and judicial power has been already alluded to under the latter title, as also have some of the reasons why the legislature has continued to exercise some powers which in their nature are judicial, even after the general acceptance of the theory that they should be separated. The difficulties of the subject arise more particularly in the determination of what are legislative and what are judicial acts, rather than in the scientific definition of the distinctive powers. The statement of the principles upon which the definitions rest is comparatively easy, and the cases abound in statements which in varying terms express the difference with sufficient accuracy; some of these cases have been cited in the other titles referred to. A terse expression is that of Mr. Justice Field: "The distinction between a judicial and a legislative act is well defined. The one determines what the law is, and what the rights of the parties are, with reference to transactions already had; the other prescribes what the law shall be in future cases arising under it." Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 761, 25 L. Ed. 496. Another early statement of the distinction is: "A marked difference exists between the employment of judicial and legislative tribunals. The former decide upon the legality of claims and conduct, and the latter make rules upon which, in connection with the constitution, those decisions should be founded. It is the province of judges to determine what the law is upon existing cases. In fine, the law is applied by the one and made by the other. To do the first, therefore, to compare the claims of the parties with the law of the land before established, is, in its nature, a judicial act. But to do the last, to pass new rules for the regulation of new controversies, is, in its nature, a legislative act." Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 204, 8 Am. Dec. 52. "The distinction between legislative and judicial acts is that the former establishes a rule regulating and governing matters occurring after its passage, while the latter determines rights and obligations concerning matters which already exist, and have transpired before the judicial power is invoked to pass upon them." Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 197, 8 Pac. 852; Lane v. Dorman, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 238, 36 Am. Dec. 543; Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 204, 8 Am. Dec. 52. In cases where the doubt can be otherwise resolved, probably the best solution of the difficulty may be found in the suggestion that: "Since the legislative department is the broadest in scope, and perhaps corresponds most nearly to the original depositary of all the powers," or, it might be added, of the ultimate sovereignty, "it seems logical to leave to it the residuum, and say that everything not clearly executive or clearly judicial is legislative." 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 438. "And, in general, it is to be borne in mind that the question always is, not what is the etymological meaning of legislative and judicial, but what were in fact the functions of legislature and courts, respectively, at the time the constitution in question was framed." Id.; Shepard v. Wheeling, 30 W. Va. 482, 4 S. E. 635; Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179, 20 Am. Rep. 194.

It is of course to be borne in mind that this question is to be dealt with, so far as the states are concerned, solely with reference to the state constitution. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States which forbids the legislature of a state to exercise judicial functions; Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 413, 7 L. Ed. 458.

In the earlier development of constitutional government in the United States the separation of the powers of government was less strictly observed than has been necessarily done under the later constitutions, in which it is expressly provided for and insisted upon; it may be remarked that the provisions of later constitutions on this subject are directed more particularly to the restraint of the legislative power within what are considered its proper bounds, with the view to abolish or avoid the abuses thought to attend the exercise of it in the past.

Mr. Justice Miller, in alluding to the settlement of the principle that the courts under the United States constitution are purely judicial bodies, observes that, under United States laws, the converse of this proposition does not hold good as to legislative bodies. He illustrates this by a case in which it was held that a territorial statute of Oregon divorcing a husband and wife, the former being a resident of Oregon and the latter with her children residents of Ohio, where they had been left by the husband under a promise to return or send for them, was a legitimate exercise of legislative power according to the then prevailing judicial opinion of the country, and the understanding of the legal profession at the date of the act creating the territorial government; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654; and he adds by way of comment: "So extreme a case as this, where manifest injustice was done under the form of law, shows that legislatures ought not to exercise judicial powers; or, at least, if they do exercise them, should be required to cite in all interested parties before they do it." Miller, Const. U. S. 356. The passage of divorce bills by legislatures has, at times, been very frequent in some states; but the tendency of public opinion is decidedly in the line of the comment of Mr. Justice Miller above cited. It is undoubtedly the most extreme case of exercise of legislative power which verges nearly upon the judicial.

In many of the later state constitutions the legislature is expressly prohibited from passing divorce bills, but in the absence of such provision it has been held that the legislature has the power; Head v. Head, 2 Ga. 191; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654. The recognition of this power in the United States was simply a continuance of the rule which was in force in England at the time of our independence; and it was treated as a matter of history that the power existed. The English parliament has always passed such bills, and may do so at the present time, except so far as the power may be considered modified by the divorce act of 1857; L. R. 11 App. Cas. 294; 12 id. 312, 361, 364.

In states where there was an express division of governmental powers the question has arisen in several cases whether the power to grant a divorce was so far judicial as to make its exercise by the legislature unconstitutional. It has been so held in several cases; Chouteau v. Magenis, 28 Mo. 192; Ponder v. Graham, 4 Fla. 23; see Jones v. Jones, 12 Pa. 351, 51 Am. Dec. 611. In some cases it has been held that a legislative divorce was valid where the court had no jurisdiction; Adams v. Palmer, 51 Me. 480; Levins v. Sleator, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 604; but not otherwise, under a constitution separating the powers; Opinion of Justices, 16 Me. 479. On the other hand it has been held that such action by the legislature is not an invasion of the judicial power; Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 547; Wright v. Wright's Lessee, 2 Md. 429, 56 Am. Dec. 723; Maynard v. Valentine, 2 Wash. Ter. 3, 3 Pac. 195; and the United States supreme court in a case cited supra held that the separation of governmental powers, and the implied prohibitions resulting therefrom were not intended to exclude the legislative power over the marriage relation; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654. In Delaware, where the practice of legislative divorces formerly prevailed, while as an original question it was considered that the power might be doubted, too many rights of person and property would be disturbed to warrant the court in doing otherwise than to uphold legislative divorces; Townsend v. Griffin, 4 Harring. (Del.) 442. And in Kentucky there have been a number of intimations on the subject, the result of which seems to be that the separation of the governmental powers would be violated by legislative divorces; Berthelemy v. Johnson, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 90, 38 Am. Dec. 179; at least after the commencement of a suit in the courts; Gaines v. Gaines' Ex'r, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 295, 48 Am. Dec. 425; that where it was founded on the application of one party for breach of contract by the other, it was judicial; Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana (Ky.) 184; but not where it was for the benefit of and acquiesced in by both parties; Cabell v. Cabell's Adm'r, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 319. The theory of the last case would seem to violate the doctrine which underlies divorce as a judicial proceeding, that no divorce should be obtainable by collusion. See Jones v. Jones, 95 Ala. 443, 11 South. 11, 18 L. R. A. 95, where cases arising under different constitutional provisions are collected; DIVORCE.

In some early cases efforts were made to obtain legislative relief from what were considered "hard cases" in the courts, and acts granting an appeal in a special case were held to be an encroachment upon the judicial power; Bates v. Kimball, 2 D. Chip. (Vt.) 77; Lewis v. Webb, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 326; but in a similar case from Connecticut it was held an act of judicial and not legislative authority, but was sustained upon the ground that under the then existing constitution of Connecticut, judicial power was not forbidden to the legislature; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 398, 1 L. Ed. 648. Though the idea of the effect of the constitutional separation of powers was not at first easily understood, it was made apparent as cases were passed upon by the courts that their judgments were subject to no control by the other departments of the government except such as might be given to them by constitutional provisions concerning pardons; Ratcliffe v. Anderson, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 105, 31 Am. Rep. 716; nor is interference by the legislature permissible "to change the decision of cases pending before the courts, or to impair or set aside their judgments, or to take cases out of the general courts of judicial proceedings;" Denny v. Mattoon, 2 Allen (Mass.) 361, 79 Am. Dec. 784. It has been held that the legislature cannot regulate the issuing of injunctions; Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. 73, 63 Am. Dec. 85; interpret such existing laws as do not apply to its own duties; Tilford v. Ramsey, 43 Mo. 410; People v. City of New York, 16 N. Y. 424; grant a new trial, or direct the court to order it; De Chastellux v. Fairchild, 15 Pa. 18, 53 Am. Dec. 570; open a judgment to let in garnishees to amend and set aside a verdict obtained against them; Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 324; make a judgment of a justice of the peace final and conclusive (under the constitution of the state); Ex parte Anthony, 5 Ark. 358; practically deprive justices of the peace of their powers when the office is constitutional, subject to legislative regulation of number, classification and jurisdiction; State v. Hinkel, 144 Wis. 444, 129 N. W. 393; authorize the sale and conversion into personalty of land devised in perpetuity for a charitable use; Tharp v. Fleming, 1 Houst. (Del.) 580; give construction to a charter; McCulloch v. Stone, 64 Miss. 378, 8 South. 236; legalize defective pleadings without first requiring them to be amended; People v. Mariposa Co., 31 Cal. 196; remit fines and forfeitures; Haley v. Clark, 26 Ala. 439; provide by resolution that a criminal should be discharged by a court; State v. Fleming, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 152, 46 Am.

Dec. 73; validate a transaction which the courts have held void; Forster v. Forster, 129 Mass. 559; or ascertain indebtedness and direct payment between parties; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430; Lane v. Dorman, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 238, 36 Am. Dec. 543.

Legislation that proof of one fact shall be prima facie evidence of the main fact is within the general power of government; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 31 Sup. Ct. 136, 55 L. Ed. 78, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 226, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 463; citing Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575; People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759, 36 Am. St. Rep. 868; Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 45 N. E. 991, 35 L. R. A. 176, 54 Am. St. Rep. 447; Com. v. Williams, 6 Gray (Mass.) 1; State v. Thomas, 144 Ala. 77, 40 South. 271, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011, 113 Am. St. Rep. 17, 6 Ann. Cas. 744. In short, the determination of a question of right, or obligation, or of property as the foundation of a proceeding is a judicial act and not within the legislative power; Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 197, 8 Pac. 852; Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 761, 25 L. Ed. 496. The legislature cannot declare what the law was, but what it will be; Ogden v. Blackledge, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 272, 2 L. Ed. 276; and the decision of rights of property inter partes is always a judicial question; Miller, Const. U. S. 348. See 1 De Tocqueville, Dom. in America 83.

Where the legislature has power over a subject it is the sole judge of the means that are necessary and proper to accomplish the object that it seeks to attain; State v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 434, 29 N. E. 595, 14 L. R. A. 566.

The legislature has power when unrestrained by a constitutional provision to make a void thing valid by a curative statute; Walpole v. Elliott, 18 Ind. 258, 81 Am. Dec. 358; to declare that executions provisionally issued by justices of the peace, more than two and less than five years after the judgments on which they were issued were rendered, shall not be invalid on that account; Selsby v. Redlon, 19 Wis. 17; or to authorize the reopening of judgments in which the state is plaintiff for the purpose of setting up a new defence; People v. Frisbie, 26 Cal. 135.

It may provide that the admission of one as an attorney of the state supreme court shall operate as his admission in every other court of the state; Hoopes v. Bradshaw, 231 Pa. 485, 80 Atl. 1098.

But it cannot overthrow judgments by legislative mandate, curative statutes, or otherwise; Johnson v. Board of Com'rs of Wells County, 107 Ind. 31, 8 N. E. 1; nor render valid a judgment which would otherwise be void, since the effect would be the rendition of a judgment by the legislature which is beyond its power; Houseman v. Montgomery, 58 Mich. 364, 25 N. W. 369; Maxwell v. Goetschius, 40 N. J. L. 383, 29 Am. Rep. 242; even if expository statutes be held effective from their date, being practically a new enactment, to give them retroactive effect would reverse decisions already made, and they cannot control the interpretation of the courts in dealing with causes of action already accrued; Holden v. James, 11 Mass. 396, 6 Am. Dec. 174; Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 489, 51 Am. Dec. 567; Cooley, Const. Lim. [94].

It is not important that a legislative act which cures an irregularity, defect or want of original authority was passed after suit brought in which such irregularity or defect became matter of importance. The bringing of suit vests in a party no right to a particular decision; U. S. v. Heinszen, 206 U. S. 370, 27 Sup. Ct. 742, 51 L. Ed. 1098, citing Bacon v. Callender, 6 Mass. 303; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 324; Cowgill v. Long, 15 Ill. 202; Miller v. Graham, 17 Ohio St. 1; State v. Squires, 26 Ia. 340. A case must be determined on the law as it stands, not when the suit was brought, but when the judgment is rendered; U. S. v. Heinszen, 206 U. S. 370, 27 Sup. Ct. 742, 51 L. Ed. 1098, citing Gladwin v. Lewis, 6 Conn. 54, 16 Am. Dec. 33; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 20 Mich. 95; Satterlee v. Matthewson, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 169; Excelsior Mfg. Co. v. Keyser, 62 Miss. 155; McLane v. Bonn, 70 Ia. 752, 30 N. W. 478; Johnson v. Richardson, 44 Ark. 365.

See RETROSPECTIVE; STATUTE; EX POST FACTO.

There is nothing in the constitution of the United States which forbids the legislature of a state from exercising judicial functions; Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 380, 7 L. Ed. 458.

In most of the cases above referred to the distinction between judicial and legislative power is sharply defined, but the cases which present difficulty are of a different character. Cases of a class presenting more difficulty arise under statutes authorizing the organization of municipal corporations and the change of their boundaries by the courts. Such acts have been held to present judicial questions; City of Burlington v. Leebrick, 43 Ia. 252; Wahoo v. Dickinson, 23 Neb. 426, 36 N. W. 813; Kirkpatrick v. State, 5 Kan. 673. A critical examination of these cases and the authorities upon which they were based results in the conclusion that they did not "afford a very secure foundation for a decision that needs authority to rest on and . . . will be generally regarded as out of harmony with the principles heretofore laid down as settled." The real nature of the proceedings it is said are "more apparent in the Kansas cases because they masquerade less in the guise of an ordinary lawsuit." 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 443. The writer just cited suggests that the mere necessity of determining facts does not constitute a judicial act, nor is a question judicial simply because it calls for judgment and discretion. The subdivision of a state for the purpose of local government is pre-eminently a subject for legislative action. The practical effect of the Kansas statute was said by the court to be the submission to a judge in advance of its enactment the question of the legality of a city ordinance; Callen v. Junction City, 43 Kan. 633, 23 Pac. 652, 7 L. R. A. 736; and this, it is suggested, was sufficient to cast doubt upon its validity.

The decision of questions of public policy relating to the organization of municipal corporations cannot be exercised by a judge, but properly belongs to the legislative department; In re Ridgefield Park, 54 N. J. L. 288, 23 Atl. 674; in this case it was held that a justice of the supreme court could not be authorized by an act of assembly to decide within what territory resident voters should be permitted to assume municipal existence and authority. It is well settled that mere abstract questions or moot cases cannot be submitted for the decision of the court; Cooley, Const. L. 139; Brewington v. Lowe, 1 Ind. 21, 48 Am. Dec. 349; Blair v. Bank, 8 Mo. 313; accordingly it has been held that: "Whether cities, towns or villages should be incorporated, whether enlarged or contracted in their boundaries, presents no question of law or fact for judicial determination. It is purely a question of policy to be determined by the legislative department." City of Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 152; State v. Simons, 32 Minn. 540, 21 N. W. 750; People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107; People v. Carpenter, 24 N. Y. 86; People v. City of Riverside, 70 Cal. 461, 9 Pac. 662, 11 Pac. 759. Upon the same principle it was held that the division of a state into drainage districts and their organization was a legislative function and could not be delegated to executive officers if it could be delegated at all; People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 624. So an act authorizing a court upon petition of taxpayers to supersede, revoke, and annul municipal ordinances was a grant of legislative power and void; Shephard v. Wheeling, 30 W. Va. 479, 4 S. E. 635; there is no legislative power to confer upon the judiciary the power of taxation; State v. Assessors of City of Rahway, 43 N. J. L. 348; or to require courts to state in writing the reasons of their decisions; Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec. 565; or to appoint surveyors; Houseman v. Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 364, 25 N. W. 369; or judges to write headnotes for their opinions; Ex parte Griffiths, 118 Ind. 83, 20 N. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. 398, 10 Am. St. Rep. 107; to fix railroad rates of transportation; Steenerson v. Ry. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713.

But courts have no power to inquire into the necessity for an act creating a new judicial district, as that is purely a legislative question; In re Fourth Judicial Dist., 4 Wyo. 133, 32 Pac. 850.

The question whether a law is wise or just is a legislative and not a judicial question; Chae Chan Ping v. U. S., 130 U. S. 581, 9 Sup. Ct. 623, 32 L. Ed. 1068. So congress can determine whether claims upon the public treasury are founded upon moral and honorable obligations, and upon principles of right and justice; and having decided such questions in the affirmative, and having appropriated public money for the payment of such claims, its decision can rarely, if ever, be the subject of review by the judicial branch of the government; U. S. v. Realty Co., 163 U. S. 427, 16 Sup. Ct. 1120, 41 L. Ed. 215.

The courts have no power to inquire whether notice of an application to the legislature for local or special legislation required by the state constitution, and legislation defining it, has been given. But the legislature is the sole judge of that, and the passage of an act is a legislative judgment that it was properly done; Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 1, 10 South. 688, 15 L. R. A. 42.

Corporations are rightful subjects of legislation and within the general grant of legislative power; Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. 124; and the power of the legislature to grant municipal aid to railroads rests under the general grant of legislative power vesting in the legislature the legislative power of the state; Com'rs of Leavenworth County v. Miller, 7 Kan. 479, 12 Am. Rep. 425; in which case it was said that the term "legislative power" had a definite signification established by legislative, executive and judicial structure and usage, and that it must be presumed that, in framing the constitution, that signification was intended. The mode of levying and collecting taxes is a matter confided to the legislative power and such laws are "laws of the land"; De Arman v. Williams, 93 Mo. 158, 5 S. W. 904; so long as the rate is uniform and equal as to property of the same class; Smith v. Stephens, 173 Ind. 564, 91 N. E. 167, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704.

The construction of statutes is as a general rule a question for the courts and not for the legislature; Rambo v. Larrabee, 67 Kan. 634, 73 Pac. 915; Parish of Caddo v. Parish of Red River, 114 La. 370, 38 South. 274 (where the purpose of the law was to establish boundaries between parishes). After the court has construed a statute, however, and based on it a judgment which has become final, the legislature cannot affect it by the passage of an act, declaring the statute to have a different meaning; In re Handley's Estate, 15 Utah 212, 49 Pac. 829, 62 Am. St. Rep. 926.

The legislature may create special public quasi corporations for governmental purposes in designated parts of the state, and in doing so may disregard local county and township lines; Board of Trustees of Youngsville Tp. v. Webb, 155 N. C. 379, 71 S. E. 520. But the legislature cannot declare a constitutional office vacant; State v. Frear, 146 Wis. 291, 131 N. W. 832, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480.

Legislative power to pass a statute is not established by the enactment of previous statutes of the same character, unless such legislation has been uniform and its validity acquiesced in; Rathbone v. Wirth, 6 App. Div. 277, 40 N. Y. Supp. 535.

The legislative power has been held to authorize acts: To make conspiracy to do an act punishable more severely than the doing of the act itself; Clune v. U. S., 159 U. S. 590, 16 Sup. Ct. 125, 40 L. Ed. 269; to prohibit the removal into a court of errors and appeals of cases of contested elections; O'Brien v. Benny, 58 N. J. L. 189, 33 Atl. 380; to provide that courts shall be open at any place in the district where the judge may be; U. S. v. Gwyn, 4 N. M. (Gild.) 635, 42 Pac. 167; to deprive individuals of the right to engage in liquor traffic, though such power is not expressly granted by the constitution, and there is a general reservation to the people of all rights not enumerated; State v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 222, 20 S. E. 221, 26 L. R. A. 345; to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; to authorize a particular person to act as guardian without bond; Henderson v. Dowd, 116 N. C. 795, 21 S. E. 692; to convert real into personal estate for purposes beneficial to those interested, not sui juris; Rice v. Parkman, 16 Mass. 326; but not for those who are qui juris; Brevoort v. Grace, 53 N. Y. 245; Powers v. Bergen, 6 N. Y. 358; or providing that motions for new trials are deemed to be overruled if not acted upon by the end of the term; James v. Appel, 192 U. S. 129, 24 Sup. Ct. 222, 48 L. Ed. 377.

A provision in the charter of a railroad company authorizing the guardian of a minor to agree upon the amount of damages for taking the land of a minor is not an invasion of the judicial power but is an exercise of legislative power only; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Blythe, 69 Miss. 939, 11 South. 111, 16 L. R. A. 251, 30 Am. St. Rep. 599.

The legislature has no power to reimburse a public officer for money lost in his official capacity, particularly where the money belonged to the state school fund, and was not raised by taxation; and the officer repaid the money lost out of his private funds; McClelland v. State, 138 Ind. 321, 37 N. E. 1089.

A question which has given rise to much discussion is the authority of the legislature to require what are known as advisory opinions from courts or judges upon general questions submitted as distinguished from the questions naturally arising in a litigated case. As to the effect of such opinions as precedents, see PRECEDENT. It was early settled as to the federal judges that their judicial duties did not require or empower them to answer such questions; see 4 Am. Jur. 293; 2 Dall. 410, n.; 13 How. 52, n. In some states there are constitutional provisions authorizing the request for such opinions, and in other states there are statutes merely, at least one of which has been held unconstitutional; In re Senate of State, 10 Minn. 78 (Gil. 56); s. c. 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L. 181; and it has been said, "one would expect the same decision with regard to the others if they were contested;" 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 456.

In Massachusetts, where there is a constitutional authority for such questions (with reference to a statute making education compulsory), the justices declined to give an opinion when "required" to do so by the legislature, assigning the reason that the legislature had power to ask for such opinions only "upon important questions of law and upon solemn occasions;" Answer of Justices, 148 Mass. 623, 21 N. E. 439. This decision is criticised in an elaborate article, which discusses the power historically and reviews the opinions given by judges in all the states having constitutional provisions on the subject; 24 Am. L. Rev. 369. See also Opinion of Justices, 126 Mass. 557; Thayer, Legal Effect of Opinions of Judges.

See OPINIONS OF JUDGES.

Not only is it beyond the power of the legislature to confer non-judicial functions upon courts and judges, but also, to vest judicial power in any one else. Hence a statute authorizing the election, by agreement of parties, of a member of the bar to try a case in which a judge is interested, was held void; Van Slyke v. Ins. Co., 39 Wis. 390, 20 Am. Rep. 50.

Congress can neither withdraw from judicial cognizance any matter which from its nature is the subject of a suit at common law, or in equity, or admiralty, nor bring under the judicial power a matter which, from its nature, is not a subject for judicial determination; Den v. Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. (U. S.) 272, 15 L. Ed. 372.

As to the legislative power to provide for taking private property for public use, and the legislative function of determining what is a public use, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

As to the authority of the courts to declare statutes unconstitutional and invalid, see CONSTITUTIONAL; JUDICIAL POWER. In the former is also discussed the theory sometimes advanced, but having no substantial basis of authority, that upon some higher ground than that of constitutionality the acts of the legislature may be reviewed by the courts. In a line with the authorities there cited on this subject, and speaking upon the point that the legislative power operating upon proper subject-matter is uncontrolled otherwise than by constitutional restriction, it was said by Storrs, J., speaking for the supreme court of Connecticut: "The defendant insists that we should pronounce the law now in question to be void, on the ground that it is opposed to natural right, and the fundamental principles of civil liberty. We are by no means prepared to accede to the doctrine involved in this claim, that, under a written constitution like ours, in which the three great departments of government, the executive, legislative, and judicial, are confided to distinct bodies of magistracy, the powers of each of which are expressly confined to its own proper department, and in which the powers of each are unlimited in its appropriate sphere, except so far as they are abridged by the constitution itself, it is competent for the judicial department to deprive the legislature of powers which they are not restricted from exercising by that instrument. It would seem to be sufficient to prevent us from thus interposing, that the power exercised by the legislature is properly legislative in its character, which is unquestionably the case with respect to the law we have been considering, and that the constitution contains no restriction upon its exercise in regard to the subject of it." State v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 290. "I am opposed to the judiciary attempting to set bounds to legislative authority, or declaring a statute invalid upon any fanciful theory of higher law or first principles of natural right outside the constitution. If the courts may imply limitation, there is no bound to implication except judicial discretion, which must place the courts above the legislature and also the constitution itself. This is hostile to the theory of the government. The constitution is the only standard for the courts to determine the question of statutory validity." Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 430; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 1 L. Ed. 648.

It is well settled that the validity of an exercise of legislative power is presumed, and must be sustained by the court unless it can be clearly shown to be in conflict with the constitution. The principle is thus well stated: "But it is to be borne in mind, that in determining the question whether a statute is within the legitimate sphere of legislative action, it is the duty of courts to made all reasonable presumptions in favor of its validity. It is not to be supposed that the law-making power has transcended its authority, or committed, under the form of law, a violation of individual rights. When an act has been passed with all the requisites necessary to give it the force of a binding statute, it must be regarded as valid, unless it can be clearly shown to be in conflict with the constitution. It is therefore incumbent on those who deny the validity of a statute, to show that it is a plain and palpable violation of constitutional right." Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray (Mass.) 417. It is a well-settled principle of American constitutional law that the legislative power of the state is unlimited except by constitutional prohibition, while that of the Federal congress, though equally unlimited within the scope of its granted powers, is limited to the exercise of these powers. "The distinction between the United States constitution and our state constitution is, that the former confers upon congress certain specified powers only, while the latter confers on the legislature all legislative power. In the one case the powers specifically granted can only be exercised. In the other, all legislative powers not prohibited may be exercised." Church, C. J., in People v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 401, 404.

"With as full respect for the authority of former decisions as belongs, from teaching and habit, to judges trained in the common-law system of jurisprudence, we think that there may be questions touching the powers of legislative bodies, which can never be finally closed by the decisions of a court, and that the one that we have here considered is of this character." Piqua Branch of State Bank of Ohio v. Knoop, 16 How. (U. S.) 369, 14 L. Ed. 977.

Among the administrative rules laid down by Judge Cooley and quoted with great approval by Professor Thayer, is this: "When a statute is adjudged to be unconstitutional, it is as if it had never been. Rights cannot be built up under it; contracts which depend upon it for their consideration are void; it constitutes a protection to no one who has acted under it, and no one can be punished for having refused obedience to it before the decision was made. And what is true of an act void in toto is true also as to any part of an act which is found to be unconstitutional, and which, consequently, is to be regarded as having never, at any time, been possessed of any legal force." Cooley, Const. Lim. 188 and cases cited; 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L. 175. Other authorities, however, have taken a different view, and the expression that a law is declared by the courts to be unconstitutional and void has been characterized as a common misapprehension as to the effect of a judicial decision upon the constitutionality of a law. It is said that what the court really does in such a case is to ignore the statute and decide the case in hand as if it did not exist; Shephard v. Wheeling, 30 W. Va. 479, 4 S. E. 635; the question is simply whether the act furnishes the rule to govern the particular case, and the general abstract question of the constitutionality of an act cannot be directly presented; Foster v. Com'rs of Wood County, 9 Ohio St. 543; "The act is not stricken from the statute book, and it is not superseded, revoked, or annulled. If the courts afterwards change their minds, as did the supreme court of the United States in the legal tender cases, the statute is just as effective as if it had never been pronounced unconstitutional." 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 448. It was an early custom for the legislature to repeal laws which had been held to be unconstitutional; 19 Am. L. Rev. 188. It is nevertheless true that the practice of the government seems to have settled down to the view expressed by Judge Cooley as it is customary where serious doubt is expressed regarding the constitutionality of a law, to have presented to a court a test case and when a decision has been rendered by the court of last resort adverse to the statute, it is acquiesced in by the other departments of the government. Familiar instances of this were the decisions adverse to the federal income tax law and the Pennsylvania alien tax law, each of which were held to be unconstitutional and thereupon no further attempt was made to enforce them.

It is not within the legislative power to declare that things done and created under and by virtue of unconstitutional acts of assembly shall, nevertheless, continue to be and remain to be recognized and regarded as legal; Bartlett v. State, 73 Ohio St. 54, 75 N. E. 939. Accordingly, where the court of last resort finally determines a tax to be invalid, the legislature cannot thereafter validate it and make it collectible; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 219 Ill. 408, 76 N. E. 571; and where proceedings before a certain judge had been adjudged void, the legislature had no power subsequently to confirm the proceedings; Denny v. Mattoon, 2 Allen (Mass.) 361, 79 Am. Dec. 784.

It is a familiar principle that one legislature cannot limit or control the legislative actions of its successors and needs no citation to support it; Brick Presbyterian Church Corp. v. City of New York, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 538. In a late case this principle was reiterated and it was said to be necessary that each successive body should be left untrammelled except by the restraints of the fundamental law; Buffalo E. S. R. Co. v. R. Co., 111 N. Y. 132, 19 N. E. 63, 2 L. R. A. 284; N. Y., L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 153 U. S. 628, 14 Sup. Ct. 952, 38 L. Ed. 846.

The legislature has power to make a contract binding on the state; it is a necessary attribute of sovereignty; Piqua Branch of State Bank of Ohio v. Knoop, 16 How. (U. S.) 369, 14 L. Ed. 977; and it may by such contract, based on a consideration, exempt the property of an individual or corporation from taxation, either for a specified period or permanently; Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 430, 439, 19 L. Ed. 495; see also Gordon v. Appeal Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 133, 11 L. Ed. 529. In these cases there was a line of very vigorous dissenting opinions in one of which Mr. Justice Miller said: "We do not believe that any legislative body sitting under a state constitution of the usual character has a right to sell, to give, or to bargain away forever the taxing power of the state." Washington University v. Rouse, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 441, 19 L. Ed. 498.

Nor can the police power be bartered away or shackled by any one legislature. It may, for example, create a corporation with power to do the business of handling and slaughtering live stock, but it cannot continue that right so that no future legislature can repeal or modify it, or grant similar privileges to others; it cannot by contract with an individual restrain the power of a subsequent legislature to legislate for the public welfare and to that end to suppress practices tending to corrupt public morals; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 111 U. S. 746, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Moore v. State, 48 Miss. 147, 12 Am. Rep. 367; Metropolitan Board of Excise v. Barrie, 34 N. Y. 657, 663; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 28, 24 L. Ed. 989; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. Ed. 1079.

When its power has not been exceeded and the state is bound by its action, a legislature has no power to revoke its own grants; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 547.

The general principle that the legislative power cannot be delegated is thus tersely expressed by Chief Justice Gibson: "Under a well-balanced constitution the legislature can no more delegate its proper function than can the judiciary." In re Borough of West Philadelphia, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 283. And see Locke, Civ. Govt. § 142.

For a discussion of the important questions under this title relating to the delegation of power, see DELEGATION.

A very important branch of this subject is the question of legislative power to make the enactment of a law depend in one form or another upon the result of a submission to a popular vote. There have been many cases upon the subject and some conflict of opinion, but the right of the legislature to refer to the voters of a district or territory, such as a county or municipality, a question local in its nature would seem to be quite well settled. Such questions are the division of a county or township and the formation of a new one; People v. Reynolds, 5 Gilm. (Ill.) 1; see also State v. O'Neill, 24 Wis. 149; In re Opinion of Supreme Court Judges, 55 Mo. 295; the reuniting of two separate ones which were formerly one; Call v. Chadbourne, 46 Me. 206; People v. Nally, 49 Cal. 478; whether a general school law shall be operative in a particular municipality; State v. Wilcox, 45 Mo. 458; as to the location of a county seat; Com. v. Painter, 10 Pa. 214; or its removal; Hamilton v. Carroll, 82 Md. 326, 33 Atl. 648; so whether a municipality may make an improvement or incur a debt; Ex parte Selma & Gulf R. Co., 45 Ala. 696, 6 Am. Rep. 722; Starin v. Town of Genoa, 23 N. Y. 439; Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 654, 18 L. Ed. 79; State v. Linn County Court, 44 Mo. 504; Johnson v. Stark County, 24 Ill. 75; or have a revision of its charter; Mayor, etc., of Brunswick v. Finney, 54 Ga. 317; or the regulation of live stock in a subdivision of a county; Armstrong v. Traylor, 87 Tex. 598, 30 S. W. 440. Such questions as these, it is said, may always with propriety be referred to the voters of a municipality for decision; Cooley, Const. Lim. [120], where a very large number of cases are collected.

Upon the question whether this principle may be applied to the state at large and the operation of a law be made to depend upon the result of a popular vote, the weight of judicial opinion is decidedly to the effect that it is an unlawful delegation of legislative power; State v. Beneke, 9 Ia. 203; Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 279, 313, 17 Am. Rep. 425; Bank of Chenango v. Brown, 26 N. Y. 470; State v. Pond, 93 Mo. 606, 6 S. W. 469; State v. Swisher, 17 Tex. 441; Caldwell v. Barrett, 73 Ga. 604; Bradshaw v. Lankford, 73 Md. 428, 21 Atl. 66, 11 L. R. A. 582, 25 Am. St. Rep. 602.

Earlier cases, however, have maintained this view more strongly than later ones. The ground upon which the doctrine of the invalidity of such legislation is based is very well stated in the leading case of Barto v. Himrod, 8 N. Y. 489, 59 Am. Dec. 506. In that case it was said by Ruggles, C. J., that the exercise of such power by the people is forbidden by necessary implication. The entire power of legislation is vested in the legislature, and it has no power to submit a proposed law to the people who voluntarily surrendered the power of direct legislation when they adopted as a form of government a representative democracy.

There are, however, opposing opinions expressed with much force. Redfield, C. J., considers the arguments by which the doctrine is sustained to be "the result of false analogies and so founded upon a latent fallacy," though he admits that he was "at first, without much examination, somewhat inclined to the same opinion." State v. Parker, 26 Vt. 357.

The argument pressed as against the prevailing doctrine is that it is competent for the legislature to pass a law which shall only take effect upon the happening of a contingency and that it is no extension of this principle to provide that the contingency shall be a popular vote in its favor; Smith v. City of Janesville, 26 Wis. 291. In the Vermont case the act held valid was to take effect in any contingency; but in case of a popular vote being against it, the time when it should take effect was postponed to a later day; and in the Wisconsin case an act taxing shares in national banks was to take effect only after approval of a majority of the electors voting on the subject at a general election. In another case similar to that in Vermont the court was equally divided; People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343.

This question of the submission of the legislation to a popular vote has been specially considered in connection with so-called local option laws as to which there has been strong pressure of public opinion tending towards the relaxation of the strictness of the earlier rule and the tendency to hold that the question, whether a general police regulation should be of force in a particular locality, might be submitted to the voters of the district.

Acts (commonly called local-option laws) permitting the people of a locality to accept or reject for themselves particular police regulations, have been upheld as constitutional; Appeal of Locke, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716; Com. v. Fredericks, 119 Mass. 199; Groesch v. State, 42 Ind. 547; contra, Parker v. Com., 6 Pa. 507, 47 Am. Dec. 480; Rice v. Foster, 4 Harring. (Del.) 479; State v. Weir, 33 Ia. 134, 11 Am. Rep. 115. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 150; State v. Carpenter, 60 Conn. 97, 22 Atl. 497; and see DELEGATION; LIQUOR LAWS; LOCAL OPTION.

With respect to any subject matter proper to be submitted to a popular vote it is held that the expression of the sovereign will of the legislature that a particular proposition or question be so submitted need not take the form of a law, but it may be in the form of a joint resolution; the secretary of state must certify to the proper officers of the various counties in the state a joint resolution passed by the legislature, that the question whether a constitutional convention should be held should be submitted to the people; and in case of his refusal he may be compelled by mandamus to do so; State v. Dahl, 6 N. D. 81, 68 N. W. 418, 34 L. R. A. 97.

The legislature cannot delegate its lawmaking power, but it has the power to create municipal corporations and to invest them with the powers of local government, including particularly local taxation and police regulation; Cooley, Const. Lim. [191].

The state government may delegate to a municipal corporation part of its own powers, but these powers cannot be delegated by the corporation, unless the authority to delegate is specially granted by the legislature, nor can the corporation divest itself of the discretion vested by the statute; State v. Garibaldi, 44 La. Ann. 809, 11 South. 36.

Judge Cooley considers that local self-government being a part of the English and American system, it is to be understood that even if it is not expressly recognized in a constitution, the instrument is presumed to contemplate its existence and continuance; Cooley, Const. Lim. [35]; People v. Common Council of Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202; People v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50. It is a legitimate exercise of sovereignty belonging to the legislative power of a state to create corporate bodies for municipal purposes with the means of self-government; Hope v. Deaderick, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 1, 47 Am. Dec. 597; or to delegate to municipal assemblies the power of enacting ordinances relating to local matters; New Orleans Water Works Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 471, 17 Sup. Ct. 161, 41 L. Ed. 518. This is not regarded as a delegation of legislative power, because the local board or municipal body which is invested with such powers is regarded as exercising them as an agency for local legislation of the sovereign power of the state. The settled judicial opinion is thus well expressed: "It seems to be generally conceded that powers of local legislation may be granted to cities, towns, and other municipal corporations. And it would require strong reasons to satisfy us that it could have been the design of the framers of our constitution to take from the legislature a power which has been exercised in Europe by governments of all classes from the earliest history, and the exercise of which has probably done more to promote civilization than all other causes combined; which has been constantly exercised in every part of our country from its earliest settlement, and which has raised up among us many of our most valuable institutions." 10 Fost. 292; Stone v. Charlestown, 114 Mass. 214; Com. v. Conyngham, 65 Pa. 76; Mills v. Charleton, 29 Wis. 415, 9 Am. Rep. 578; People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532; State v. Wilcox, 45 Mo. 458; Goldthwaite v. City Council, 50 Ala. 486. The creation of such corporations and the grant to them of powers of local legislation do not divest or impair the general legislative power and control of the state legislature, which may increase, diminish, or take away such powers, amend the charter, overrule their legislative action, or abolish them altogether. There can be acquired by the municipal corporation as against the state no vested right in the rights and franchises granted to it, and the municipal charter does not constitute a contract, so that such legislation would be considered in violation of the constitutional provision protecting the obligation of contracts; Cooley, Const. Lim. [192]. This principle is recognized in the Dartmouth College case; Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629; Dillon, Municipal Corporations, §§ 24, 30, 37; see People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 87, 9 Am. Rep. 103; and it may be affirmed that it is supported by a uniform current of authority. It is true that here and there may be found expressions by courts and judges, which, to the casual reader, would give the impression that there may be some inviolable character attached to a grant of municipal franchises, but an examination of such cases will usually, if not invariably, disclose the fact that the expressions referred to go beyond the proper consideration of the case in question, and in any case are unsupported by authority. The true principle is thus stated: "Public corporations are but parts of the machinery employed in carrying on the affairs of the state; and they are subject to be changed, modified, or destroyed as the exigencies of the public may demand. The state may exercise a general superintendence and control over them and their rights and effects, so that their property is not diverted from the uses and objects for which it was given or purchased;" Trustees of Schools v. Tatman, 13 Ill. 30. The complete legislative control over municipal corporations is said to be subject to some limits, of which some are "expressly defined; others spring from the usages, customs, and maxims of our people; they are a part of its history, a part of the system of local self-government, in view of the continuance and perpetuity of which all our institutions are framed, and of the right to which the people can never be deprived through express renunciation on their part." Cooley, Const. Lim. [230.] See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

Such is the right of choosing under forms and restrictions prescribed by the legislature, officers of local administration, and the determination by the local administration of the pecuniary burdens it will assume; Cooley, Const. Lim. [230]; so it has been held that the legislature cannot divest a municipal corporation, of property legally acquired by it; City of Savannah v. Steam Boat Co., R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 342. As the rule is sometimes expressed, municipal powers may be changed by the legislature if vested rights acquired thereunder are saved; People v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343.

Illustrations of the authority which may be delegated to municipal corporations are: The regulation of charges of common carriers; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 65 N. E. 451, 59 L. R. A. 631; making it a crime to carry deadly weapons; Town of Ocean Springs v. Green, 77 Miss. 472, 27 South. 743; passing ordinances for the protection of the safety of citizens; Sluder v. Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186; the appointment of municipal administrative officers; Attorney General v. Bolger, 128 Mich. 355, 87 N. W. 366; the suppression of gambling games; City of Lake Charles v. Roy, 115 La. 939, 40 South. 362; requiring fire escapes and providing for their inspection; Arms v. Ayer, 192 Ill. 601, 61 N. E. 851, 58 L. R. A. 277, 85 Am. St. Rep. 357; sealing and regulating weights and measures; Thompson v. District of Columbia, 21 App. (D. C.) 395; the formation of sanitary districts for the construction of sewers, etc.; In re Werner, 129 Cal. 567, 62 Pac. 97; the control of the streets of a city by a local board, administrative or legislative; Wilcox v. McClellan, 185 N. Y. 9, 77 N. E. 986; the classification of lawyers for taxation, to be made according to the circumstances of each case and subject to appeal for correction if erroneous; Ould v. City of Richmond, 23 Grat. (Va.) 464, 14 Am. Rep. 139; prescribing the duties of justices of the peace; State v. Nohl, 113 Wis. 15, 88 N. W. 1004; the appointment of commissioners to divide a city into wards and voting districts; Kennedy v. Mayor of Pawtucket, 24 R. I. 461, 53 Atl. 317; authorizing the common council to apply to a court for the appointment of a municipal excise board; Schwarz v. Dover, 72 N. J. L. 311, 62 Atl. 1135. But the legislature has no power by contract to invest a municipal corporation with an irrevocable franchise of government over any part of its territory; Horton v. City Council, 27 R. I. 283, 61 Atl. 759, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 512, 8 Ann. Cas. 1097; nor to invest it with power to suspend a penal law within its corporate limits; Ex parte Coombs, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 618, 44 S. W. 854.

Where the legislature uses its power to change or modify the political rights and privileges of municipal corporations, a distinction is drawn between those rights and mere property rights acquired by the corporation, which are protected for the same reasons and upon the same principle as are similar rights in individuals; Cooley, Const. Lim. [237], where the cases are collected.

In any state the legislative power must spend its force within its own territorial limits. It cannot make laws by which people outside of the jurisdiction must govern their actions except as they choose to resort to the remedies provided by the state or deal with property situated within it. See FOREIGN CORPORATIONS; LEX FORI. It can have no authority upon the high seas beyond state lines because that is the point of contact with other nations and brings into operation and consideration the principles of international law with which the federal government alone can deal. See FISHERY; SEA. As a general rule the state cannot provide for the punishment of acts committed beyond the state boundary, because such acts, if offences at all, are such only against the sovereignty within whose limits they have been done; Cooley, Const. Lim. [128]. In some cases, however, where "the consequences of an unlawful act committed outside the state, have reached their ultimate and injurious result within it, it seems that the perpetrator may be punished as an offender against such state." Id. Such cases arise most frequently where property is stolen in one jurisdiction and carried into another, or where a homicide is committed by a mortal blow in one jurisdiction while death results in another; see Morissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327; Watson v. State, 36 Miss. 593.

The legislative power over a place purchased by the United States with the consent of the legislature of the state, is transferred from the state to the federal government, except as restrained by some qualification in the expression of state consent; Allegheny County v. McClung, 53 Pa. 482. See JURISDICTION.

LEGISLATURE. That body of men which makes the laws for a state or nation. See LEGISLATIVE POWER.

LEGITIM. (Called otherwise Bairn's Part of Gear.) In Scotch Law. The legal share of the father's free movable property due on his death to his children. See BAIRN'S PART; DEAD MAN'S PART; LEGITIME.

LEGITIMACY. The state of being born in lawful marriage. See BASTARD; PRESUMPTION; PARENT AND CHILD.

LEGITIMATE. That which is according to law.

To make lawful; to confer legitimacy; to place a child born before marriage on the same footing as those born in lawful wedlock; Town of Rockingham v. Town of Mount Holly, 26 Vt. 653.

LEGITIMATION. The act of giving the character of legitimate children to those who were not so born.

Legitimation is a fiction of the law, whereby one born out of lawful wedlock is considered the offspring of the marriage between the parents. Succession of Caballero v. Executor, 24 La. Ann. 580.

The legitimation of natural children was permitted in none of the earlier German codes, except the Lombard, and was strongly opposed to the whole spirit of German family law, but that the father could, by symbolic forms, acknowledge his natural child and give him a place of protection within his household is proved from German and Scandinavian sources. Among the Angle-Saxons, a child born in unlawful marriage had no rights of inheritance, and it may be inferred that all other rights of kindred were denied to it except that of protection, even when acknowledged by the father. Essays, Ang.-Sax. L. 126. In the conflict between the church and the law at the Merton parliament in regard to the question whether a bastard could be legitimatized, the barons declared with one voice that they would not change the laws of England, and that nothing could make a bastard legitimate, although it was contended that the old English custom authorized legitimation by allowing the parents on the occasion of their marriage to place such children beneath the cloak under which they stood whilst the marriage ceremony was performed, the children thereby becoming "mantle children," but this practice the king's court of Henry II. had rejected and that of Henry III. refused to retreat from the precedent. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 395. See MANTLE CHILDREN.

In Maine, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington, the Dakotas, Idaho, Montana, and New Mexico, subsequent marriage of the parents legitimatizes their illegitimate child.

In Massachusetts, Vermont, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Arizona, in addition to the marriage of the parents the father must have acknowledged or recognized the child as his.

In New Hampshire, Connecticut, and Louisiana, both parents must acknowledge, but in the last named state the acknowledgment is made either by an authentic act before marriage or by the contract of marriage, and an exception is made of those children born of an incestuous or adulterous connection. In California, Nevada, the Dakotas, and Idaho, a public acknowledgment by the father of an illegitimate child, receiving such child (with the consent of his wife, if married) into his family, and otherwise treating it as if it were legitimate, thereby renders it legitimate for all purposes. Acknowledgment by either or both parents, or by the father with the consent of his wife, or by the mother with the consent of her husband, will legitimatize a child. In Michigan, if the father, by writing executed, acknowledged, and recorded like deeds of real estate, but with the judge of probate, acknowledged such child, he is legitimate for all purposes. In North Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, and New Mexico the putative father of a bastard has a process in court by which he may legitimatize the child.

That illegitimate children were the result of adulterous intercourse does not prevent their acknowledgment by the father, as provided by statute, from effecting their legitimation, unless the statute provides otherwise; Miller v. Pennington, 218 Ill. 220, 75 N. E. 919, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 773; Hawbecker v. Hawbecker, 43 Md. 516; Ives v. McNicoll, 59 Ohio St. 402, 53 N. E. 60, 43 L. R. A. 772, 69 Am. St. Rep. 780. In Louisiana, the code expressly excepts such offspring from legitimation; Succession of Fletcher, 11 La. Ann. 59; and in Kentucky it is held that such children may not be legitimatized; Sams v. Sams' Adm'r, 85 Ky. 396, 3 S. W. 593. Even though the mother objects, a father is entitled to the child's custody for the purpose of legitimation; Allison v. Bryan, 21 Okl. 557, 97 Pac. 282, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 17 Ann. Cas. 468.

A question considerably discussed in England is where one who is domiciled in a country sustaining the doctrine legitimatio per subsequens matrimonium marries a woman who had before the marriage a child by him, the husband having been domiciled prior thereto in a country where the doctrine does not prevail. In one case the exact question arose where the husband domiciled in England went to France, and before changing his domicile cohabited with a French woman who had by him a daughter, and afterwards becoming domiciled in France, he married the woman at the British Embassy in English form, and later in French form with recognition of the child, but the latter was held not to be legitimate; 2 K. & J. 595. This case is the subject of severe criticism in an article in 22 Law Mag. & Rev. 171, where the English cases touching upon the subject are reviewed, with the conclusion that "it is not rash to say that before the case last mentioned such authority as existed on the point was in favor of the legitimacy." See 7 Cl. & F. 817, 842; 11 Eq. 474; 17 Ch. Div. 266; 24 Ch. Div. 637; [1892] 3 Ch. 88; L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 441. See BASTARD.

LEGITIME. In Civil Law. That portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause.

The civil code of Louisiana declares that donations inter vivos or mortis causa cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the disposer, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half if he leaves two children; and one-third if he leaves three or a greater number. Under the name of children are included descendants of whatever degree they may be, who are only counted for the child they represent.

In Holland, Germany, and Spain, the principles of the Falcidian law, more or less limited, have been generally adopted; Coop. Just. 516.

In the United States (except Louisiana) and in England there is no restriction, except as to the widow's rights, on the right of bequeathing. But this power of bequeathing did not originally extend to all a man's personal estate: on the contrary, by the common law, as it stood in the reign of Henry II., a man's goods were to be divided into three equal parts, one of which went to his heirs or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; or, if he died without a wife, he might then dispose of one moiety, and the other went to his children; and so e converso if he had no children, the wife was entitled to one moiety, and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal; Glanville, l. 2, c. 5; Bracton, l. 2, c. 26; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 346. The shares of the wife and children were called their reasonable part; 2 Bla. Com. 491.

This law existed in the province of York till 1692, and still exists in Scotland. The respective parts are called dead's part—dead man's part,—wife's part, bairn's part. There is every reason to believe that this was the practice in the 13th century in England. 2 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. E. L. 348.

See DEAD MAN'S PART; BAIRN'S PART; FALCIDIAN LAW.

LEGITIMI HÆREDES. Agnati, because the inheritance was given to them by the laws of the Twelve Tables, whereas the cognati only received it from the prætor. Sand. Just. 280.

LEGULEIUS. One skilled in the law. Calvinus, Lex.

LEHURECHT. The German feudal law. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 214.

LEIDGRAVE. See LATHREEVE.

LEIPA. A fugitive; one who escapes or runs away from service. Spelman.

LENDER. He from whom a thing is borrowed. The bailor of an article loaned. See BAILMENT; LOAN.

LENT. The annual forty days of penitence and fast from Ash Wednesday until Easter.

Easter is a movable feast; its date, in each year, fixes the period of Lent. It was first commanded to be observed in England by Ercombert, king of Kent, before 800. Cowell.

LEOD. The people; the nation; the country. Spelman, Leodes.

LEODES. A vassal or liege man; service; a wer-gild. Spelman.

LEONINA SOCIETAS. An attempted partnership in which one party was to bear all the losses, and have no share in the profits. This was a void partnership in the Roman law. Brown.

LEP AND LACE. A custom in the manor of Writtle in Essex, that every cart, except that of a nobleman, which went over Greenbury within that district should pay 4d. to the lord. Blount.

LEPROZO AMOVENDO. An ancient writ that lay to remove a leper or lazar who thrust himself into the company of his neighbors in any parish. Reg. Orig.

LÈSE MAJESTÉ (Fr.). High treason.

LESION. In Civil Law. A term used to signify the injury suffered, in consequence of inequality of situation, by one who does not receive a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract.

The remedy given for this injury is founded on its being the effect of implied error or imposition; for in every commutative contract equivalents are supposed to be given and received. Persons of full age, however, are not allowed in point of law to object to their agreements as being injurious, unless the injury be excessive; Pothier, Obl. p. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 3, § 4. But minors are admitted to restitution, not only against any excessive inequality, but against any inequality whatever; Pothier, Obl. p. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 3, § 5; La. Code, art. 1858. See FRAUD; GUARDIAN; SALE.

LESPEGEND. An inferior officer in the forests who cared for the vert and venison; quos dani Yoong Men vocant. Cowell.

LESS. In a mining lease, a covenant to pay certain royalties where "less than" a stated quantity is gotten, is applicable to a case where none is gotten. 26 L. J. Ex. 41; 1 H. & N. 195. The words "less than" have been held synonymous with "not exceeding." 21 L. J. Ex. 160; 7 Ex. 591.

LESSA. A legacy. Mon. Ang., t. 1, p. 562.

LESSEE. He to whom a lease is made. He who holds an estate by virtue of a lease. The word has been held to include the assignee of a lease. Cab. & El. 348. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LESSOR. He who grants a lease. See LEASE; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LESTAGE, LASTAGE (Sax. last, burden). A custom for carrying things to fairs in markets. Fleta, l. 1, c. 47; T. L. See LASTAGE.

LESWES. Pastures. Co. Litt. 4 b.

LET. Hindrance; obstacle; obstruction.

To lease; to grant the use and possession of a thing for compensation. It is the correlative of hire. As an operative word in a lease, it is synonymous with demise; 12 M. & W. 68; 13 L. J. Ex. 135; 1 C. P. D. 152; 45 L. J. C. P. 405. See DEMISE; HIRE. To award a contract of some work to a proposer, after proposals have been received. Eppes v. R. Co., 35 Ala. 33.

LETTER. He who, being the owner of a thing, lets it out to another for hire or compensation. Story, Bailm. § 369. See HIRING.

LETTER. An epistle; a despatch; a written message, usually on paper, folded up and sealed, and sent by one person to another. Lyle v. Clason, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 582. It will include the envelope in which it is sent. U. S. v. Duff, 6 Fed. 45, 19 Blatchf. 10.

A writer of letters has a special property in them to prevent their publication or communication to other persons; Kiernan v. Telegraph Co., 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 194; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; U. S. v. Tanner, 6 McLean 128, Fed. Cas. No. 16,430.

The writer of a letter has a right of property in the letter, superior to that of the party to whom the letter is sent; Loog v. Bean, 26 Ch. Div. 306. The writer of letters, or his representative, whether they are literary compositions, or familiar letters, or letters of business, possesses the sole and exclusive right of publishing them; and they cannot be published without his consent by the person to whom they are addressed, or by any other; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 379. The recipient of a private letter sent without any reservation, express or implied, is invested with the right to keep the letter or destroy it, or to dispose of it in any other way than by publication; Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14, 36 Atl. 411, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617; Hopkinson v. Burghley, L. R. 2 Ch. 447. The writer is not entitled to reclaim it, nor is the receiver bound to keep it for his inspection or transcription; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush (Ky.) 481, 92 Am. Dec. 509; he has such property in it that he may by injunction restrain its publication; Eyre v. Higbee, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 502; in sending it, he makes a gift to his correspondent of the actual paper on which the letter is written; 2 V. & B. 19.

The writer during his lifetime has a certain species of property in the publication of his letters, but this property only stands so far as to prevent the recipient from making any unfair or improper use of them; 77 L. T. R. 559.

Letters written to a wife by a former husband belong to her and not to his estate, or to her second husband; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush (Ky.) 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509; see Wilcox v. Moon, 64 Vt. 450, 24 Atl. 244, 15 L. R. A. 760, 33 Am. St. Rep. 936; and the recipient of a letter has no such property in it as passes to his executor as an asset of the estate; Eyre v. Higbee, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 198.

Where a bill in equity charged that the defendant surreptitiously and illegally took from the trunk of the plaintiff's son and from the plaintiff's own bureau certain letters written by the plaintiff to her son, and by her son to her, it was held that the special right in the letters written by plaintiff was one that could only be adequately protected in equity, and that the court having jurisdiction for discovery should proceed further and order all the letters to be restored; Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14, 36 Atl. 411, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617. See INJUNCTION; PRIVACY; LITERARY PROPERTY.

Letters in evidence. A letter is not admissible in evidence without proof of its being genuine, and such proof cannot be supplied solely by what appears on its face, as its contents, the letter head, etc.; Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 165; but letters received in the regular course of business responsive to letters on the same subject, with proper letter heads, envelopes, etc., are presumably authentic, according to their purport; Scofield v. Parlin & Orendorff Co., 61 Fed. 804, 10 C. C. A. 83. In order to prove a memorandum, under the statute of frauds, a letter and envelope are considered as one document; 76 L. T. Rep. 441.

Letters in themselves inadmissible are so if they communicate any fact to the party against whom they are read which either affects the right in question or explains his subsequent conduct; 22 E. C. L. R. 273, 845. A letter stating particular facts cannot be read in evidence merely because it was sent, but if the party to whom it was addressed wrote an answer, such answer might be read as evidence against the party who wrote it, and the letter to which it was an answer would be admissible for the purpose of explaining such answer. A letter and answers thereto are subject to the same rule as applies to a conversation; if part is given in evidence by one party, the other party is entitled to have the whole produced; McIntyre v. Harris, 41 Miss. 81. Failure to answer a letter is not generally deemed an admission of its contents; Learned v. Tillotson, 97 N. Y. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 508.

Letters in evidence fall within the general rule as to written documents; 27 L. J. C. P. 193; their construction is for the court unless extrinsic circumstances be capable of explaining them; 27 L. J. Ex. 34; but if they are written in so dubious a manner as to be capable of different constructions, or to be unintelligible without the aid of extrinsic circumstances, their meaning becomes a question for the jury; 8 C. B. 44; so the jury must deal with the whole question, where a contract is made partly by letter and partly oral; 17 C. B. N. S. 107.

It is a general prima facie presumption that all documents were made on the day they bear date, and this presumption obtains where the document is a letter; 2 Ex. 191, 196; 2 B. & Ad. 502; 2 M. & H. 853; but the date of a letter is not evidence that it was forwarded on that day; Uhlman v. Brewing Co., 53 Fed. 485; Shelburne Falls Nat. Bank v. Townsley, 102 Mass. 177, 3 Am. Rep. 445; nor can the date of the receipt of a letter be established by witnesses who base their calculations upon its date; the date of a letter does not prove the date of its deceipt, or the time of mailing it, or that it was ever mailed; Uhlman v. Brewing Co., 53 Fed. 485. In an action for criminal conversation, where the letters offered are those of a wife to a husband, to show the terms on which they lived; evidence must show when they were written; 1 B. & Ald. 90; 9 C. & P. 198; 2 Stark. 193.

Postmarks on letters are prima facie evidence that the letters were in the post at the time and place specified; 7 East 65; 29 How. St. Tr. 103; U. S. v. Williams, 8 Fed. 484; 1 Camp. 215; 7 M. & W. 515; 7 H. L. Cas. 646; although it be shown that in aid of justice, postmasters sometimes furnish empty envelopes bearing the post-office stamp, where they have never in fact been in the mail; U. S. v. Noelke, 1 Fed. 426. Postmarks are evidence that the letter was mailed and sent, rather than that it was merely put in the post office; New Haven County Bank v. Mitchell, 15 Conn. 206; Oaks v. Weller, 16 Vt. 63; Russell v. Buckley, 4 R. I. 525, 70 Am. Dec. 167; U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 571, Fed. Cas. No. 14,485.

The burden of proving the receipt of a letters rests upon the party who asserts it; Huntley v. Whittier, 105 Mass. 391, 7 Am. Rep. 536; Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 185, 4 Sup. Ct. 382, 28 L. Ed. 395. If a letter properly directed is proved to have been either put in the post office or delivered to the postman, it is presumed to have reached its destination at the regular time, and to have been received by the person to whom it is addressed; 16 M. & W. 124; 1 H. L. Cas. 381; Bussard v. Levering, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 102, 5 L. Ed. 215; see Russell v. Buckley, 4 R. I. 525, 70 Am. Dec. 167, where it is held that any further evidence of the receipt of a letter than that it was properly directed and mailed would be wholly unnecessary, always difficult and often impossible. But this presumption is not one of law, but solely one of fact; Whitmore v. Ins. Co., 148 Pa. 405, 23 Atl. 1131, 33 Am. St. Rep. 838; Freeman v. Morey, 45 Me. 50, 71 Am. Dec. 527; founded upon the probability that the officers of the government will do their duty, and the usual course of business; Huntley v. Whittier, 105 Mass. 391, 7 Am. Rep. 536; Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 185, 4 Sup. Ct. 382, 28 L. Ed. 395. It may be rebutted by evidence showing that it was not received; Austin v. Holland, 69 N. Y. 571, 25 Am. Rep. 246; De Jarnette v. McDaniel, 93 Ala. 215, 9 South. 570; German Nat. Bank of Denver v. Burns, 12 Col. 539, 21 Pac. 714, 13 Am. St. Rep. 247; Whitmore v. Ins. Co., 148 Pa. 405, 23 Atl. 1131, 33 Am. St. Rep. 838. But the fact of non-return of a letter bearing a request for return in case of failure to deliver so strengthens the presumption of receipt from mailing that it becomes wellnigh conclusive; Jensen v. McCorkell, 154 Pa. 323, 26 Atl. 366, 35 Am. St. Rep. 843. On proof of the posting of a letter, properly addressed, the fact that it was not returned to the dead letter office is evidence of its receipt; 16 M. & W. 124. The facts that all letters put in a certain place were in the proper course of business put in the mail, and that a particular letter was put in such place, are evidence that it was despatched; 4 Campb. 193. See L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 574; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Hall v. Brown, 58 N. H. 97.

Proof that government stamped envelopes were exclusively used in the sender's office is evidence that a properly addressed letter was duly stamped; Burch v. Grocery Co., 125 Ga. 153, 53 S. E. 1008.

In the absence of evidence that a letter was stamped before mailing, no presumption arises as to its receipt; Bless v. Jenkins, 129 Mo. 647, 31 S. W. 938; but when one alleges that he duly mailed a letter, the court will presume that the requirements of the law as to stamping, etc., were complied with; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Schultz, 80 Fed. 337, 25 C. C. A. 453. The question of the receipt of the letter is for the jury; Whitmore v. Ins. Co., 148 Pa. 405, 23 Atl. 1131, 33 Am. St. Rep. 838; Briggs v. Hervey, 130 Mass. 186; Hastings v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 473, 34 N. E. 289; Lee v. Indemnity Union, 135 Mich. 291, 97 N. W. 709. See PRESUMPTION.

Contract by letter. The rule that a contract is complete at the instant when the minds of the parties meet is subject to modification where the negotiation is carried on by letter, for it is in that case impossible that both parties should have knowledge of the moment it becomes complete. The offer and acceptance cannot occur at the same moment of time; nor can the meeting of the minds of the parties on the subject be known by each at the moment of concurrence. The acceptance must succeed the offer after the lapse of some interval of time, and if the process is to be carried further in order to complete the bargain, a notice of the acceptance must be received; the only effect is to reverse the position of the parties, changing the knowledge of the completion from one party to the other; Benj. Sales § 69. When an offer is made by letter, it is presumed to continue during such period as is determined by or is reasonable with regard to, the terms of the offer, or until notice of its recall has reached him to whom the offer is made; 1 B. & Ald. 681; 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 80; even if, through fault of the sender, the letter containing the offer is delayed; Mactier's Adm'rs v. Frith, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 21 Am. Dec. 262; Averill v. Hedge, 12 Conn. 436; provided the offer is standing at the time of the acceptance; Mactier's Adm'rs v. Frith, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 104, 21 Am. Dec. 262; and where a proposal is made by letter, the mailing of a letter containing an acceptance of the proposal completes the contract; Mactier's Adm'rs v. Frith, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 104, 21 Am. Dec. 262; 1 B. & Ald. 681; 1 H. L. Cas. 381; Hamilton v. Ins. Co., 5 Pa. 339; Tayloe v. Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390, 13 L. Ed. 187; Patrick v. Bowman, 149 U. S. 411, 13 Sup. Ct. 811, 866, 37 L. Ed. 790; Ferrier

v. Storer, 63 Ia. 484, 19 N. W. 288, 50 Am. Rep. 752; Bryant v. Booze, 55 Ga. 438; Stockham v. Stockham, 32 Md. 196; Blake v. Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 163, 2 S. W. 368, 60 Am. Rep. 15; Washburn v. Fletcher, 42 Wis. 152; Perry v. Iron Co., 15 R. I. 380, 5 Atl. 632, 2 Am. St. Rep. 902; Darlington Iron Co. v. Foote, 16 Fed. 646; L. R. 7 Ch. 587; 20 Q. B. Div. 640; although the acceptance may be delayed or may not be received through fault of the mail; Tayloe v. Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390, 13 L. Ed. 187; Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307, 93 Am. Dec. 511; Abbott v. Shepard, 48 N. H. 14; Hutcheson v. Blakeman, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 80; Levy v. Cohen, 4 Ga. 1; Wheat v. Cross, 31 Md. 99, 1 Am. Rep. 28; Bishop v. Eaton, 161 Mass. 496, 37 N. E. 665, 42 Am. St. Rep. 437; and this seems to be the general rule both in this country and in England, although it has been held that the contract is not complete until the letter of acceptance has been received by the party who makes the offer; McCulloch v. Ins. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 281; L. R. 6 Ex. 108, overruled in 4 Ex. D. 216; but if undue delay or failure of delivery of the letter of acceptance is caused by the acceptor, there is no contract; Thayer v. Ins. Co., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 326; Bryant v. Booze, 55 Ga. 438. Placing the acceptance in a letter box at the defendant's place of business completes the contract; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; but entrusting it to a messenger for delivery is not sufficient, where there is no evidence that it was received; Ehrlich v. Adams, 4 Misc. 614, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1163.

The acceptance must be unconditional and in accordance with the terms of the offer and within the time prescribed by the offer; Beaupre v. Telegraph Co., 21 Minn. 155; Jenness v. Iron Co., 53 Me. 20; Chicago & G. E. Ry. Co. v. Dane, 43 N. Y. 240; Baker v. Johnson County, 37 Ia. 186; Allen v. Kirwan, 159 Pa. 612, 28 Atl. 495; even where the offer called for reply by return mail, compliance was held essential; Maclay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525, 32 Am. Rep. 35; Sawyer v. Brossart, 67 Ia. 678, 25 N. W. 876, 56 Am. Rep. 371; and where in answer to a letter of proposal, the accepting party merely writes that he is willing to make arrangements on the terms proposed, it was held to be not an unconditional acceptance; Commercial Telegram Co. v. Smith, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 494; Martin v. Fuel Co., 22 Fed. 596.

Where there is no limitation as to time in the offer, the acceptance must be within a reasonable time; Ferrier v. Storer, 63 Ia. 484, 19 N. W. 288, 50 Am. Rep. 752; the following day will suffice; 1 H. L. Cas. 381; but four months will not; Chicago & G. E. Ry. Co. v. Dane, 43 N. Y. 240. See 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 91.

In the leading case of Cooke v. Oxley the rule was laid down that one who gives time to another to accept or reject an offer is not bound to wait until the specified time expires, if no consideration has been given for the offer; 3 Term 783; see Pothier, Contrat de Vérité, No. 32; Craig v. Harper, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 158; Eskridge v. Glover, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 264, 26 Am. Dec. 344; Abbott v. Shepard, 48 N. H. 16; but in this case the offer was not by letter, and the question as to the revocation of such an offer (when the offer was made by mail) was for a long time unsettled. In McCulloch v. Ins. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 278, it was held that a revocation of an offer not then accepted takes effect from the time it is posted, although not received by the other party until after he had mailed his acceptance, and that no contract existed because, at the moment the acceptance was sent, the mind of the party offering had changed; in L. R. 6 Ex. 108; the same doctrine is laid down, but this case was doubted in 7 Ch. App. 592; and the English and American rule is now well settled that the offer cannot be withdrawn unless the withdrawal reaches the party to whom it is addressed before the letter of acceptance has been mailed; Tayloe v. Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390, 13 L. Ed. 187; 49 L. J. C. P. 316; 5 Q. B. D. 351. The withdrawal of the offer after the acceptance has been posted is inoperative; as a state of mind not notified cannot be regarded in dealings between man and man, and an uncommunicated revocation is, for all practical purposes, no revocation at all; 5 C. P. D. 344; 5 Q. B. D. 346; 2 App. Cas. 666; White v. Corlies, 46 N. Y. 467. The posting a letter of withdrawal is not a communication to the person to whom it is sent; 5 C. P. D. 344. See Wald. Poll. Contr. 26; Benj. Sales § 65; 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 80. A revocation of an offer is not complete till it is brought to the mind of the offeree; merely mailing a letter of revocation is not a revocation; [1892] 2 Ch. 27, C. A. Nor is the mere posting of a letter allotting shares in a company to an applicant such a communication as to bind the applicant; L. R. 11 Eq. 86; 20 L. T. R. N. S. 729.

The mailing of a letter of acceptance of an offer completes the contract; [1892] 2 Ch. 27; after mailing an acceptance, the party cannot countermand it by a telegram though it be received before the letter of acceptance; 6 Hare 1; another view is that the Post Office is the agent of the sender of a letter; if so, a letter is not effective to close a contract until received; and this theory seems to be inconsistent with the case above in [1892] 2 Ch. 27; see Leake, Contracts 25.

Contracts by telegraph, under most of the authorities, follow the same rule as contracts by mail; Hare, Contr.; U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 571, Fed. Cas. No. 14,485.

Payments may be made by letter at the risk of the creditor, when the debtor is authorized, expressly or impliedly, from the usual course of business, and not otherwise; Peake 67; 1 Ex. 477; Ry. & M. 149; Wakefield v. Lithgow, 3 Mass. 249.

A false pretense by letter is made at the place where the letter is mailed; 12 Q. B. D. 23.

See, generally, as to contracts by letter, 32 Am. Rep. 40, n.; Wald, Poll. Contr. 26; Benj. Sales §§ 44, 69; 9 Jurid. Rev. 291; 3 Add. Contr. App. 4–13; 9 L. Q. R. 185, 265, n.; Langd. Contr. 15; Story, Contr. § 198. See SALE; DECOY LETTER; MAIL; OFFER; LITERARY PROPERTY; TRANSCRIPT.

LETTER BOOK. A book containing the copies of letters written by a merchant or trader or other person to his correspondents.

A press copy in a letter book stands in the same relation to the original as a copy taken from the letter book; both are secondary evidence, and are receivable on the loss of, or after notice to produce, the original; but the decisions are not entirely uniform on this point; 3 Camp. 305; Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 555; Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, 3 Am. Rep. 469. See 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 72, 93, 133; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 116; Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123; King v. Worthington, 73 Ill. 161.

A letter-press reproduction cannot be considered as a duplicate, as they are not uniformly identical or accurate, 2 Wigm. Evid. § 1234.

See COPY; EVIDENCE; PRESS COPY.

LETTER CARRIER. A person employed to carry letters from the post-office to the persons to whom they are addressed. See various provisions in U. S. Rev. Stat.

Eight hours constitute a day's labor for letter carriers; 1 Supp. R. S. p. 587. For time employed in excess of eight hours a day, he is entitled to extra pay; U. S. v. Post, 148 U. S. 124, 13 Sup. Ct. 567, 37 L. Ed. 392; and time worked in excess of eight hours in one day cannot be set off against a deficiency on another when he worked less than eight hours; U. S. v. Gates, 148 U. S. 134, 13 Sup. Ct. 570, 37 L. Ed. 396. See EIGHT-HOUR LAWS.

LETTER MISSIVE. A letter from the king to a dean or chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect as bishop. 1 Steph. Com. 666. See CONGÉ D'ELIRE.

A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament, against whom a bill has been filed, desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. It is issued by the lord chancellor, on petition, after the filing of the bill; and a neglect to attend to this places the defendant, in relation to such suit, on the same ground as other defendants who are not peers, and a subpœna may then issue; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 196; Coop. Eq. Pl. 16; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 366.

LETTER OF ADVICE. A letter containing information of any circumstances unknown to the person to whom it is written; generally informing him of some act done by the writer of the letter.

It is usual and perfectly proper for the drawer of a bill of exchange to write a letter of advice to the drawee, as well to prevent fraud or alteration of the bill, as to let the drawee know what provision has been made for the payment of the bill. Chitty, Bills 185.

LETTER OF ATTORNEY. A written instrument, by which one or more persons, called the constituents, authorize one or more other persons, called the attorneys, to do some lawful act by the latter for or instead, and in the place, of the former. 1 Moody, 52, 70. It may be parol or under seal. See POWER OF ATTORNEY; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

LETTER OF CREDENCE. In International Law. A written instrument addressed by the sovereign or chief magistrate of a state to the sovereign or state to whom a public minister is sent, certifying his appointment as such, and the general object of his mission, and requesting that full faith and credit may be given to what he shall do and say on the part of his court.

When it is given to an ambassador, envoy, or minister accredited to a sovereign, it is addressed to the sovereign or state to whom the minister is delegated; in the case of a chargé d'affaires, it is addressed by the minister of foreign affairs of the one government to the minister of foreign affairs of the other; Whart. Int. L. §§ 217–321; Wicquefort, de l'Ambassadeur, l. 1, § 15.

LETTER OF CREDIT. An open or sealed letter, from a merchant or bank or banker, in one place, directed to another, in another place or country, requiring him, if a person therein named, or the bearer of the letter, shall have occasion to buy commodities, or to want money to any particular, or to an unlimited, amount, either to procure the same, or to pass his promise, bill, or other engagement for it, the writer of the letter undertaking to provide him the money for the goods, or to repay him by exchange, or to give him such satisfaction as he shall require, either for himself or the bearer of the letter. Pars. N. & B. 108; Byles, Bills, Wood's ed. 173; 3 Chitty, Com. Law 336.

It is a general offer of a contract, addressed to all persons who may be willing to act upon it, and may be accepted by any such person making advances upon bills drawn according to its terms. L. R. 2 Ch. 391.

These letters are either general or special: the former is directed to the writer's correspondents generally, wherever the bearer of the letter may happen to go; the latter is directed to some particular person. When the letter is presented to the person to whom it is addressed, he either agrees to comply with the request, in which case he immediately becomes bound to fulfill all the engagements therein mentioned; or he refuses, in which case the bearer should return it to the giver without any other proceeding, unless, indeed, the one to whom the letter is directed is a debtor of the one who gave the letter, in which case he should procure the letter to be protested; 3 Chitty, Com. Law 337; 1 Beaw. Lex Mer. 607; McClung v. Means, 4 Ohio 197.

A letter requesting one person to make advances to a third person on the credit of the writer is a letter of credit; President, etc., of Mechanics' Bank v. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 599; First Nat. Bank v. Fiske, 133 Pa. 241, 19 Atl. 554, 7 L. R. A. 209, 19 Am. St. Rep. 635.

In England it seems questionable whether an action can be maintained by one who advances money on a general letter of credit; Russell v. Wiggin, 2 Story 214, Fed. Cas. No. 12,165; 11 M. & W. 383; the reason given being that there is no privity of contract between the mandant and the mandatory. But in this country the contrary doctrine is well settled; Union Bank of Louisiana v. Coster's Ex'rs, 3 N. Y. 214, 53 Am. Dec. 280; Northumberland County Bank v. Eyer, 58 Pa. 102; Pollock v. Helm, 54 Miss. 1, 28 Am. Rep. 347, n. In England, a letter of credit is not negotiable; 1 Macq. 513; Grant, Bank. ch. 15; except when it relates to bills of exchange; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 397; 3 id. 154. The same rule has been generally followed here, but it has been held that a general letter of credit, if it authorize more than a single transaction with the party to whom it is given, may be honored by several persons successively, keeping within the specified aggregate; Union Bank of Louisiana v. Coster's Ex'rs, 3 N. Y. 203, 53 Am. Dec. 280; Lowry v. Adams, 22 Vt. 160. A telegram authorizing the use of a person's name for a certain sum of money is not in the nature of a general or continuing letter of credit, and does not extend the right to use the name beyond the amount specified; Bullen v. Dawson, 139 Ill. 633, 29 N. E. 1038.

The debt which arises on such letter, in its simplest form, when complied with, is between the mandatory and the mandant; though it may be so conceived as to raise a debt also against the person who is supplied by the mandatory. First, when the letter is purchased with money by the person wishing for the foreign credit, or is given in consequence of a check on his cash account, or procured on the credit of securities lodged with the person who gave it, or in payment of money due by him to the payee, the letter is, in its effects, similar to a bill of exchange drawn on the foreign merchant or banker. The payment of the money by the person on whom the letter is given raises a debt, or goes into account between him and the writer of the letter, but raises no debt to the person who pays on the letter, against him to whom the money is paid. Second, when not so purchased, but truly an accommodation, and meant to raise a debt on the person accommodated, the engagement generally is to see paid any advances made to him, or to guaranty any draft accepted or bill discounted; and the compliance with the mandate, in such case, raises a debt both against the writer of the letter and against the person accredited; 1 Bell, Com. 371, 5th ed. The bearer of the letter of credit is not considered bound to receive the money; he may use the letter as he pleases, and he contracts an obligation only by receiving the money; Pothier, Contr. de Change, 237.

LETTER OF EXCHANGE. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

LETTER OF LICENSE. An instrument or writing made by creditors to their insolvent debtor by which they bind themselves to allow him a longer time than he had a right to, for the payment of his debts, and that they will not arrest or molest him in his person or property till after the expiration of such additional time. Since the general abolition of imprisonment for debt, and under the modern system of laws for settling insolvents' estates, it is seldom, if ever, used.

LETTER OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL. A commission granted by the government to a private individual, to take the property of a foreign state, or of the citizens or subjects of such state, as a reparation for an injury committed by such state, its citizens or subjects. The prizes so captured are divided between the owners of the privateer, the captain, and the crew. A vessel loaded with merchandise, on a voyage to a friendly port, but armed for its own defence in case of attack by an enemy, is also called a letter of marque. 1 Boulay-Paty, tit. 3, § 2, p. 300.

Letter of marque is now used to signify the commission issued to a privateer in time of war.

By the constitution, art. 1, § 8, cl. 11, congress has power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. And by another section of the same instrument this power is prohibited to the several states. The granting of letters of marque is not always a preliminary to war or necessarily designed to provoke it. It is a forcible measure for unredressed grievances, real or supposed; Story, Const. § 1356. It is a means short of actual war, well recognized in international law, for terminating differences between nations; Wheat. Int. Law § 290. Special reprisals are when letters of marque are granted in time of peace, to particular individuals who have suffered an injury from the government or subjects of another nation; they are to be granted only in case of clear and open denial of justice; id. § 291.

By the Declaration of Paris (q. v.) the practice of privateering was abolished between the signatory powers, and although the United States was not a party to the Declaration, she refrained from issuing letters of marque in the war with Spain in 1898.

See REPRISAL; PRIVATEER; DECLARATION OF PARIS.

LETTER OF RECALL. A written document addressed by the executive of one government to the executive of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former to him has been recalled.

LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION. In Commercial Law. An instrument given by one person to another, addressed to a third, in which the bearer is represented as worthy of credit. 1 Bell, Com., 5th ed. 371; 3 Term 51; Russell v. Clark, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 69, 3 L. Ed. 271; Fell, Guar. c. 8; Upton v. Vail, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 181, 5 Am. Dec. 210; Barney v. Dewey, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 224, 7 Am. Dec. 372; Wise v. Wilcox, 1 Day (Conn.) 22. See Lord v. Goddard, 13 How. (U. S.) 198, 14 L. Ed. 111; RECOMMENDATION.

LETTER OF RECREDENTIALS, LETTRE DE RÉCRÉANCE. A document, in reply to a letter of recall (q. v.), delivered to a minister by the secretary of state of the government to which he was accredited. It is addressed to the executive of the minister's country, and generally contains an expression of the friendly relations which have existed between the foreign government and the recalled minister.

LETTER PRESS COPIES. See PRESS COPIES; LETTER BOOK.

LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI. In Practice. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant to such person as he approves, letters to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods and keep them in his safe custody. 2 Bla. Com. 505. See LETTERS OF COLLECTION.

LETTERS CLOSE. Letters commonly sealed with the royal signet, or privy seal, so called in contradistinction to letters patent which were left open and sealed with the broad seal. They are sometimes called Letters Claus. Whart. Lex. See CLOSE ROLL.

LETTERS OF ABSOLUTION. Letters whereby, in former times, an abbot released a monk ab omni subjectione et obedientia, etc., and enabled him to enter some other religious order. Jacob.

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

LETTERS OF CAPTION. See CAPTION.

LETTERS OF COLLECTION. Letters issued for the temporary purpose of enabling some one to collect and hold the assets pending a controversy as to the right to have letters of administration or letters testamentary. See LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI.

LETTERS OF FIRE AND SWORD. See FIRE AND SWORD.

LETTERS OF REQUEST. In English Ecclesiastical Law. An instrument by which a judge of an inferior court waives or remits his own jurisdiction in favor of a court of appeal immediately superior to it.

Letters of request, in general, lie only where an appeal would lie, and lie only to the next immediate court of appeal, waiving merely the primary jurisdiction to the proper appellate court, except letters of request from the most inferior ecclesiastical court, which may be direct to the court of arches, although one or two courts of appeal may by this be ousted of their jurisdiction as courts of appeal; 2 Add. Eccl. 406. The effect is to give jurisdiction to the appellate court in the first instance. See a form in 2 Chitty, Pr. 498; 3 Steph. Com. 306. The same title was also given to letters formerly granted by the Lord Privy Seal preparatory to granting letters of marque.

Letters of request were sent by the king to a foreign prince to aid an injured party to obtain justice, with a promise to reciprocate the favor. They are still in use. See Thayer, Legal Essays 187.

LETTERS OF SAFE CONDUCT. See SAFE CONDUCT.

LETTERS PATENT. The name of an instrument executed by a government to grant a right to the patentee: as, a patent for a tract of land; or to secure to him an exclusive right to a new invention or discovery. Letters patent are matter of record. They are so called because they are not sealed, but are open. See PATENT.

Letters patent are issued to an English peer, and for other like purposes.

LETTERS REQUISITORY. In Civil Law. See LETTERS ROGATORY.

LETTERS ROGATORY. An instrument sent in the name and by the authority of a judge or court to another, requesting the latter to cause to be examined, upon interrogatories filed in a cause depending before the former, a witness who is within the jurisdiction of the judge or court to whom such letters are addressed.

They are sometimes denominated commissions sub mutuæ vicissitudinis obtentu, ac in juris subsidium, from a clause which they generally contain. Where the government of a foreign country, in which witnesses purposed to be examined reside, refuses to allow commissioners to administer oaths to such witnesses, or to allow the commission to be executed unless it is done by some magistrate or judicial officer there, according to the laws of that country, letters rogatory must issue.

These letters are directed to any judge or tribunal having jurisdiction of civil causes in the foreign country, recite the pendency of the suit, and state that there are material witnesses residing there, whose names are given, without whose testimony justice cannot be done between the parties, and then request the said judge or tribunal to cause the witnesses to come before them and answer to the interrogatories annexed to the letters rogatory, to cause their depositions to be committed to writing and returned with the letters rogatory; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 320.

There is always an offer, on the part of the court whence they issued, to render a mutual service to the court to which they may be directed, whenever required. The practice of such letters is derived from the civil law, by which these letters are sometimes called letters requisitory. A special application must be made to court to obtain an order for letters rogatory, and it will be granted in the first instance without issuing a commission upon satisfactory proof that the authorities abroad will not allow the testimony to be taken in any other manner; 1 Hoffman, Ch. Pr. 482; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 3d Am. ed. 953.

Though formerly used in England in the courts of common law; 1 Rolle, Abr. 530, pl. 13; they have been superseded by commissions of dedimus protestatem, which are considered to be but a feeble substitute. Dunl. Adm. Pr. 223, n.; Hall, Adm. Pr. 37. The courts of admiralty use these letters; and they are recognized by the law of nations. See Fœlix, Droit Intern. liv. 2, t. 4, p. 300; Denisart; Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 221; Bened. Adm. § 533; 1 Hoffm. Ch. 482.

In Nelson v. U. S., 1 Pet. C. C. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 10,116, will be found a copy of letters rogatory, issued to the courts of Havana, according to the form and practice of the civil law, on an occasion when the authorities there had prevented the execution of a commission, regarding any attempts to take testimony under it as an interference with the rights of the judicial tribunals of that place. See also, In re Robert's Will, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 446; 2 Ves. Sr. 336; Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 475.

The United States revised statutes provide for the taking of testimony of witnesses residing within the United States to be used in any suit for the recovery of money or property depending in any court, in any foreign country, with which the United States are at peace, and in which the government of such foreign country shall be a party or shall have an interest. Where a commission of letters rogatory to take such testimony upon interrogatories has been issued from the court in which such suit is pending, it may be produced before the district judge of the district in which the witness resides or is found, and on proof to the judge that the testimony of a witness is material, he shall issue summons to the witness requiring him to appear before the officer or commissioner named in the commission or letters rogatory. The summons must specify the time and place, which shall be within one hundred miles of the place where the witness resides or is served. In case of neglect of a witness to attend and testify he is liable to the same penalties incurred for the like offence in the trial of a suit in the district court of the United States, and he is entitled to the same fees and mileage as are allowed to witnesses in that court. No witness shall be required to criminate himself on such examination; U. S. R. S. §§ 4072-4. When letters rogatory are addressed from a foreign court to any circuit court of the United States the commissioner appointed by the latter court shall have power to compel witnesses to appear and testify; id. § 875, as amended by U. S. Stat. 1 Supp. 266.

When a commission or letter rogatory is issued to take testimony of a witness in a foreign country, in a suit in which the United States are parties or have any interest, after being executed by the commissioner it is to be returned to the minister or consul of the United States nearest the place where it is executed, and by him transmitted to the clerk of the court from which it was issued; and when so taken and returned the testimony shall be read as evidence, without objection to the method of returning the same; U. S. R. S. § 875.

Among the class of cases held not to be within the statutes are criminal proceedings; In re Petition of Spanish Consul, 1 Ben. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 13,202; and proceedings relating to an investigation as to the smuggling of some cases of cotton; In re Letters Rogatory from First Dist. Judge, 36 Fed. 306. See, generally, 1 Fost. Fed. Prac., 2d ed. § 290, in the notes to which will be found a great deal of interesting matter relating to the diplomatic correspondence on this subject. See, also, Cunningham v. Otis, 1 Gall. 166, Fed. Cas. No. 3,485; 1 Hall, Adm. Pr. 37, 38, 55–60; Clerke, Praxis, tit. 27; 3 Whart. Int. L. § 413; 1 Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum 150–152; 1 Rolle, Abr. 530, pl. 15.

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

LETTING OUT. The act of awarding a contract.

This term is much used in the United States, and most frequently in relation to contracts to construct railroads, canals, or other commercial works. A notice is generally given that proposals will be received until a certain period, and thereupon a letting out, or award of portions of the work to be performed according to the proposals, is made. See Eppes v. R. Co., 35 Ala. 55.

LEVANDÆ NAVIS CAUSA (Lat.). In Civil Law. For the sake of lightening the ship. See Leg. Rhod. tit. de Jactu. Goods thrown overboard with this purpose of lightening the ship are subjects of a general average.

LEVANT AND COUCHANT (Lat. Levantes et cubantes). A term applied to cattle that have been so long on the ground of another that they have lain down, and are risen up to feed, until which time they cannot be distrained by the owner of the lands, if the land were not sufficiently fenced to keep out cattle. 3 Bla. Com. 8.

LEVARI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be levied). A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment.

Under this writ the sheriff was to sell the goods and collect the rents, issues, and profits of the land in question. It has been generally superseded by the remedy by elegit, which was given by statute Westm. 2d (13 Edw. I.), c. 18. In case, however, the judgment debtor is a clerk, upon the sheriff's return that he has no lay fee, a writ in the nature of a levari facias goes to the bishop of the diocese, who thereupon sends a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the church-wardens, to collect and pay them to the plaintiff till the full sum be raised. The same course is pursued upon a fi. fa.; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 329. See Com. Dig. Execution (c. 4) ; 3 Bla. Com. 471.

In American Law. A writ used to sell mortgaged lands after a judgment has been obtained by the mortgagee or his assignee against the mortgagor, under a peculiar proceeding authorized by statute.

LEVATO VELO (Lat.). An expression used in the Roman law, Code, 11. 4. 5, and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes required despatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. Emerigon, Des Assurances c. 26, sect. 3.

LEVEES. Embankments to prevent overflow in rivers. See ASSESSMENT; RIVERS; DRAINAGE DISTRICT.

LEVEL CROSSING. See GRADE CROSSING. The former term is usual in England.

LEVITICAL DEGREES. Those degrees of kindred set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus, within which persons are prohibited to marry. 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 737.

LEVITY. A term used in connection with collusion in a Pennsylvania divorce act. Lyon v. Lyon, 30 Pa. C. C. 359. See COLLUSION.

LEVY. To raise. Webster, Dict. To levy a nuisance, i. e. to raise or do a nuisance, 9 Co. 55; to levy a fine, i. e. to raise or acknowledge a fine, 2 Bla. Com 357; 1 Steph. Com. 236; to levy a tax, i. e. to raise or collect a tax; to levy war, i. e. to begin war, to take arms for attack; 4 Bla. Com. 81; to levy an execution, i. e. to raise or levy so much money on execution; Reg. Orig. 298.

A seizure; the raising of the money for which an execution has been issued.

In order to make a valid levy on personal property, the sheriff must have it within his power and control, or at least within his view; and if, having it so, he makes a levy upon it, it will be good if followed up afterwards within a reasonable time by his taking possession in such manner as to apprise everybody of the fact of its having been taken into execution. See Carey v. Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 80, 54 N. W. 18, 20 L. R. A. 267, 36 Am. St. Rep. 907; Perry v. Hardison, 99 N. C. 21, 5 S. E. 230; Dorrier v. Masters, 83 Va. 459, 2 S. E. 927. To constitute a levy, a seizure is necessary, if from the nature of the property that is possible, but if not, then some act as nearly equivalent as practicable must be substituted for it; Long v. Hall, 97 N. C. 286, 2 S. E. 229. It is not necessary that an inventory should be made, nor that the sheriff should immediately remove the goods or put a person in possession; Wood v. Vanarsdale, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 405; Barnes v. Billington, 1 Wash. C. C. 29, Fed. Cas. No. 1,015; Linton v. Com., 46 Pa. 294. See Delaney v. Martin, 51 N. J. L. 148, 16 Atl. 189. A levy of an attachment effected in the night time by opening a window, or forcing an outer door of the house containing the goods, is valid; Solinsky v. Bank, 85 Tenn. 368, 4 S. W. 836. A levy on a leasehold need not be in view of the premises if sufficiently descriptive; Appeal of Titusville Novelty Iron Works, 77 Pa. 103. The usual mode of making levy upon real estate is to describe the land which has been seized under the execution, by metes and bounds, as in a deed of conveyance; 1 T. & H. Pr. § 1216. See Johnson v. Walker, 23 Neb. 736, 37 N. W. 639. The lien of an attachment on real estate levied upon, dates from the time the officer indorses the levy on the writ; Riordan v. Britton, 69 Tex. 198, 7 S. W. 50, 5 Am. St. Rep. 37.

Property cannot be placed in custodia legis by an unauthorized levy; The Bonnie Doon, 36 Fed. 770. Retaining possession under a levy is not necessary to preserve the lien of the levy against a subsequent deed of assignment by the debtor; Sawyer v. Bray, 102 N. C. 79, 8 S. E. 885, 11 Am. St. Rep. 713; where the debt and costs are paid before seizure there is no levy: 9 L. J. Q. B. 232; 3 P. & D. 511; or where the fi. fa. was, after seizure but before sale, set aside for irregularity; 31 L. J. C. P. 361; or where the sale was prevented by a compromise between the parties; 5 Term 470. See POUNDAGE; EXECUTION.

It is a general rule that when a sufficient levy has been made the officer cannot make a second; Hoyt v. Hudson, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; Ontario Bank v. Hallett, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 192.

If an officer violates his duty, by making an excessive levy on property pointed out, he is liable for such special damages as the defendant may incur thereby; Barfield v. Barfield, 77 Ga. 83; and when damages result from the wrongful seizure under judicial process of property exempt, not only the officer making the seizure but those for whom it was made and who ratified the act, as well as those who direct it, are liable in damages; Brown v. Bridges, 70 Tex. 661, 8 S. W. 502. See ATTACHMENT.

LEVY COURT. The name given in Delaware to the governing body of a county, corresponding to county commissioners, freeholders, etc., in other states. The name was probably given because it made the county tax levy.

LEVYING WAR. The assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution; 4 Cra. (U. S.) 473, 474; Const. art. 3, s. 3. See TREASON; Fries Trial, Pamphl. This is a technical term, borrowed from the English law, and its meaning is the same as it is when used in stat. 25 Ed. III.; 4 Cra. (U. S.) 471; U. S. v. Fries, Pamphl. 167; Hall, Am. L. J. 351; Burr's Trial; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 62; 9 C. & P. 129. Where war has been levied, all who aid in its prosecution by performing any part in furtherance of the common object, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, are guilty of treason; U. S. v. Greathouse, 2 Abbott (U. S.) 364, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254. See INSURRECTION.

LEWDNESS. That form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity. U. S. v. Males, 51 Fed. 41. See LASCIVIOUSNESS; OBSCENITY; INDECENCY.

LEX (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A rule of law which magistrates and people had agreed upon by means of a solemn declaration of consensus. Sohm, Inst. R. L. 28.

Its two main meanings are said to be: A written law; and a stated or written condition or understanding proposed and accepted. Nettleship, Lexicog.

In the later empire, which dates from the fourth century, there were two groups of the sources of the law, jus (q. v.), i. e. the old traditional law, and leges which had sprung from imperial legislation. Jus was based upon the law of the Twelve Tables, plebiscite, senatus-consulta, the prætorian edict, and the ordinances of the earlier emperors, which, partly owing to their language and partly on account of the bald sententiousness, and the pregnant phraseology in which they were couched, came to be mainly used, both by the prætor and by the parties, through the classic literature where their results were set forth and worked out. This resulted in identifying jus with jurist-made law, and on the edict of the Law of Citations (q. v.) by Valentinian III., the distinction between jus and lex was practically lost. See Inst. 1. 2. 3; Sohm, Inst. R. L. 82; JUS SCRIPTA.

In England there was no careful discrimination between jus, and lex, and consuetudo, although they were not, in all contexts, used with exactly similar meaning. Leges was sometimes applied by both Glanville and Bracton to the unwritten laws of England, and although Bracton contrasts consuetudo with lex, there was no general definite theory as to the relation between enacted and unenacted law—the relation between law and custom, and the relation between law as it was and law as it ought to be. The king's justices claimed a certain power of improving the law, but they might not change the law, and the king might issue new writs without the consent of a national assembly, but not where such writs were contrary to the law. Jus commune was used by the canonists to distinguish the general and ordinary law of the universal church from any rules peculiar to a particular national or provincial church, and from the papal privilegia, and the phrase was also used in the dialogue on the Exchequer, but it was not until the time of Edward I. that it was superseded by lex communis, or that the common law could be contrasted with the statute law, the royal prerogative or local custom. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 154.

Lex is used in a purely juridical sense, law, and not also right; while jus has an ethical as well as a juridical meaning, not only law, but right. 15 L. Q. R. 367 (by Salmond). Lex is usually concrete, while jus is abstract. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 14–18. In English we have no term which combines the legal and ethical meanings, as do jus and its French equivalent, droit. id.

Among the following titles will be found many of the leges (plebiscita) and senatus consulta; a conspectus of the principal laws that have come down to us from the Empire, with particular titles or definite authorship, may be found in Hunter, Rom. Law 61.

LEX ÆBUTIA. (B. C. about 170; perhaps between B. C. 300 and 100.) The law which, with the leges Juliæ, in part abolished the legis actiones. It was confined to legal proceedings before the prætor urbanus, i. e. to those cases where a judicium was appointed to try a cause between Roman citizens within the first milestone from Rome. It provided that a judicium could be instituted in a city court without legis actio, merely by means of the formula or prætorian decree of appointment, and placed the legis actio and the formula, so far as the civil law was concerned, on a footing of equality. In cases falling under the jurisdiction of the centumviral court, cases of voluntary jurisdiction and damnum infectum, the legis actio remained in use; as, according to the prætorian law in such cases, no judex was appointed, and consequently no formula was granted, and it was only in cases where there was no formula and no decree of appointment that the legis actio survived. Sohm, Rom. L. 173. See JUDEX; FORMULÆ.

LEX ÆLIA SENTIA. (A. D. 4.) The law restraining the manumission of slaves. Morey, R. L. 99. See MANUMISSION.

LEX AGRARIA. See AGRARIAN LAW.

LEX ANASTASIANA. (A. D. 503.) The law admitting as agnati the children of emancipated brothers and sisters. Inst. 3. 5.

LEX APULEIA. (B. C. 100.) A law establishing a kind of partnership between the different sponsores or fide promissors, and allowing any one of them who had paid the whole debt to recover from the others what he had paid in excess of his own share by an action pro socio. Inst. 3. 20.

LEX AQUILIA. (B. C. about 287.) The law, superseding the earlier portions of the Twelve Tables, providing a remedy for wilful and negligent damage to corporeal property.

Although an action founded upon the text of this law could only be brought when the damage was caused by actual contact of the offending party with the body of the injured thing, the prætor subsequently extended it in the shape of an actio utilis, to cases where the damage was merely the indirect result of the act of the defendant, and in certain cases, he even granted an actio in factum after the pattern of the lex aquilia in cases where there was not, strictly speaking, any damage to the thing, but where the owner was deprived of it in such a manner as to make it tantamount to a destruction of the thing.

By this law, if the slave or animal were wrongfully killed, the owner could recover from the slayer, not the actual value of the property at the time of the death, but the greatest value that it had possessed during the previous year, and when the damage consisted of any other injury to corporeal things, he was obliged to pay the highest value of such property within the month immediately preceding. If the wrongdoer denied his liability and judgment was against him, he was obliged to pay double damages. This law also provided for an action against adstipulators who abused their formal rights, but this portion of it fell into disuse because the recognition by the civil law of the obligation by mandatum enabled the injured party to sue the fraudulent adstipulator by the actio mandati directa for full damages. See Sohm, Rom. L. 326; Morey, Rom. L. 381.

LEX ATILIA. (B. C. before 186.) The law which conferred upon the magistrate the right of appointing guardians. It applied only to the city of Rome; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 400.

LEX ATINIA. (B. C. 198.) It provided that things stolen or seized by violence could not be acquired by use, although they have been possessed bona fide during the length of time prescribed by usucapion (q. v.). Inst. 2. 6. 3.

LEX BREHONIA. The Brehon law, which see.

LEX BRETOISE. The law of the Ancient Britons or Marches of Wales. Cowell.

LEX CALPURNIA. (B. C. about 234.) The law which extended the scope of the action allowed by the lex Silia, q. v., to all obligations for any certain definite thing.

LEX CANULEIA. (A. D. 434.) The law which conferred upon the plebeians the connubium, or the right of intermarriage with Roman citizens. Morey, Rom. L. 48.

LEX CINCIA. (B. C. 204.) The law which prohibited certain kinds of gifts and all gifts exceeding a certain amount.

LEX CLAUDIA. (A. D. 47.) The law abolishing agnatic guardianship over women of free birth.

LEX COMMISSORIA. The law which provided that the debtor and creditor might agree that if the debtor did not pay at the day, the pledge should become the absolute property of the creditor. This law was abolished by the Emperor Constantine as unjust and oppressive, and having a growing asperity in practice. 2 Kent 583.

LEX CORNELIA DE ÆDICTIS. The law forbidding a prætor to depart during his term of office from the edict he had promulgated at its commencement. Sohm, Rom. L. 51. See PRÆTOR.

LEX CORNELIA DE FALSIS. (B. C. 81.) The law which provided that the same penalty should attach to the forgery of a testament of a person dying in captivity as to that of a testament made by a person dying in his own country. Inst. 2. 12. 5.

LEX CORNELIA DE INJURIIS. (B. C. about 63.) The law providing a civil action for the recovery of a penalty in certain cases of bodily injury. Sohm, R. L. 329.

LEX CORNELIA DE SICARIIS. (B. C. 81.) The law respecting assassins and poisoners, and containing provisions against other deeds of violence. It made the killing of the slave of another person punishable by death or exile, and the provisions of this law were extended by the Emperor Antoninus Pius to the case of a master killing his own slave. Inst. 1. 8.

LEX CORNELIA DE SPONSU. (B. C. 81.) A law prohibiting one from binding himself for the same debtor to the same creditor in the same year for more than a specified amount. Inst. 2. 20.

LEX DE RESPONSIS PRUDENTUM. The law of citations (q. v.).

LEX DOMICILII. See DOMICIL; LEX LOCI.

LEX ET CONSUETUDO REGNI NOSTRI. In the 14th century this phrase was well established as meaning the common law. It was bad pleading to apply the term to law made by a statute. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 250.

LEX FABIA DE PLAGIARIIS. The law providing for the infliction of capital punishment in certain cases. Inst. 4. 18. 10.

LEX FALCIDIA. See FALCIDIAN LAW.

LEX FORI (Lat. the law of the forum). The law of the country to the tribunal of which appeal is made. 5 Cl. & F. 1.

The local or territorial law of the country to which a court, wherein an action is brought, or other legal proceeding is taken, belongs. Dicey, Confl. Laws 66.

The forms of remedies, modes of procedure; Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452, 5 Sup. Ct. 221, 28 L. Ed. 751; and execution of judgments are regulated solely and exclusively by the laws of the place where the action is instituted; 8 Cl. & F. 121; 11 M. & W. 877; Henry v. Sargeant, 13 N. H. 321, 40 Am. Dec. 146; Harker v. Brink, 24 N. J. L. 333; Speed v. May, 17 Pa. 91, 55 Am. Dec. 540; Wilson v. Clark, 11 Ind. 385; Nichols v. Scott, 12 Vt. 48; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. Ed. 245; Downer v. Chesebrough, 36 Conn. 39, 4 Am. Rep. 29; Kirby v. Vantrece, 26 Ark. 368; Mineral Point R. Co. v. Barron, 83 Ill. 365; Williams v. Haines, 27 Ia. 251, 1 Am. Rep. 268; Ivey v. Lalland, 42 Miss. 444, 97 Am. Dec. 475, 2 Am. Rep. 606; Stoneman v. R. Co., 52 N. Y. 429; Willard v. Wood, 135 U. S. 309, 10 Sup. Ct. 831, 34 L. Ed. 210; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 83 Ala. 462, 3 South. 852, 3 Am. St. Rep. 755; Rorer, Int. St. Law 69. See PARTIES.

A cause of action arising in one state, under the common law as there understood, may be enforced in another state where it would not constitute a cause of action, if the variance in these laws does not amount to a fundamental difference of policy; Walsh v. R. Co., 160 Mass. 571, 36 N. E. 584, 39 Am. St. Rep. 514.

The lex fori is to decide who are proper parties to a suit; Meshmeier v. State, 11 Ind. 485; Kirkland v. Lowe, 33 Miss. 423, 69 Am. Dec. 355; Westl. Priv. Int. Law 409.

The lex fori governs as to the nature, extent, and character of the remedy; Wood v. Watkinson, 17 Conn. 500, 44 Am. Dec. 562; Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86; as, in case of instruments considered sealed where made, but not in the country where sued upon; Warren v. Lynch, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 239; 1 B. & P. 360; Woodbridge v. Wright, 3 Conn. 523; Williams v. Haines, 27 Ia. 251, 1 Am. Rep. 268; Scudder v. Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. Ed. 245; Broadhead v. Noyes, 9 Mo. 56; Dorsey v. Hardesty, 9 Mo. 157.

Arrest and imprisonment may be allowed by the lex fori, though they are not by the lex loci contractus; 5 Cl. & F. 1; Peck v. Hozier, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 346; Bartlett v. Willis, 3 Mass. 88; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 253.

For the law of interest as affected by the lex fori, see CONFLICT OF LAWS. For the law in relation to damages, see DAMAGES.

The forms of judgment and execution are to be determined by the lex fori; Bartlett v. Willis, 3 Mass. 88; Atwater's Adm'r v. Townsend, 4 Conn. 47, 10 Am. Dec. 97; Suydam v. Broadnax, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 67, 10 L. Ed. 357.

The lex fori decides as to deprivation of remedy in that jurisdiction.

Where a debt is discharged by the law of the place of payment, such discharge will, it is said, amount to a discharge everywhere; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 360, 6 L. Ed. 606; 1 W. Bla. 258; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 106; Johnson v. Hunt, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; Boggs v. Teackle, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 332; see LEX LOCI; unless such discharge is held by courts of another jurisdiction to contravene natural justice; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 6, 7 Am. Dec. 106; Vanuxem v. Hazlehursts, 4 N. J. L. 192, 7 Am. Dec. 582. It must be a discharge from the debt, and not an exemption from the effect of particular means of enforcing the remedy; Peck v. Hozier, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 346; 8 B. & C. 479; Judd v. Porter, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 337; Tappan v. Poor, 15 Mass. 419.

The insolvent laws of the various states which purport to discharge the debt are, at most, allowed that effect only as against their own citizens; as between their own citizens and strangers, where the claims of the latter have not been proved, they only work a destruction of the remedy in the state of the insolvency jurisdiction; Atwater's Adm'r v. Townsend, 4 Conn. 47, 10 Am. Dec. 97; Braynard v. Marshall, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 194; Collins & Co. v. Rodolph, 3 G. Greene (Ia.) 299; McClure v. Campbell, 71 Wis. 350, 37 N. W. 343, 5 Am. St. Rep. 220; Woodward v. Brooks, 128 Ill. 222, 20 N. E. 685, 3 L. R. A. 702, 15 Am. St. Rep. 104; at least, if there be no provision in the contract requiring performance in the state where the discharge is obtained; Norton v. Cook, 9 Conn. 314, 23 Am. Dec. 342; Bradford v. Farrand, 13 Mass. 18; Walsh v. Farrand, 13 Mass. 20; Hicks v. Hotchkiss, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 297, 11 Am. Dec. 472; Frey v. Kirk, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 509, 23 Am. Dec. 581. In the federal and some state courts, the discharge of a citizen of the state, covering a discharge from an obligation, is not a bar against a citizen of another state, although the contract creating the obligation was to be performed in the state granting the discharge; Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 223, 17 L. Ed. 531; Poe v. Duck, 5 Md. 1; Anderson v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 603; Felch v. Bugbee, 48 Me. 9, 77 Am. Dec. 203; but see Scribner v. Fisher, 2 Gray (Mass.) 43. If claims are proved, the submission to the jurisdiction may work a discharge; McMenomy v. Murray, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 435; Clay v. Smith, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 411, 7 L. Ed. 723; Norris v. Breed, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 45, 54 Am. Dec. 700; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 394. See INSOLVENCY.

Statutes of limitation affect the remedy only; and hence the lex fori will be the governing law; Bulger v. Roche, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 36, 22 Am. Dec. 359; State v. Swope, 7 Ind. 91; Nicolls v. Rodgers, 2 Paine, 437, Fed. Cas. No. 10,260; Thibodeau v. Levassuer, 36 Me. 362; Mineral Point R. Co. v. Barron, 83 Ill. 365; Munos v. Southern Pac. Co., 51 Fed. 188, 2 C. C. A. 163; Krogg v. R. Co., 77 Ga. 202, 4 Am. St. Rep. 77; Walsh v. Mayer, 111 U. S. 31, 4 Sup. Ct. 260, 28 L. Ed. 338; L. R. 4 Q. B. 653; Carrigan v. Semple, 72 Tex. 306, 12 S. W. 178. But these statutes restrict the remedy for citizens and strangers alike; 5 Cl. & F. 1; Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 475; Broh v. Jenkins, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 526, 13 Am. Dec. 320. For the effect of a discharge by statutes of limitation, where they are so drawn as to effect a discharge, in a foreign state, see Story, Confl. Laws § 582; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 361, 6 L. Ed. 495; 2 Bingh. N. C. 202; Newby's Adm'rs v. Blakey, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 57. The restriction applies to a suit on a foreign judgment; 5 Cl. & F. 1; Andrews v. Herriot, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 528; Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. (U. S.) 407, 13 L. Ed. 194. If a statute in force in the place where the cause of action arose extinguishes the obligation, and does not merely bar the remedy, no action can be maintained in another jurisdiction after it has taken effect; Sea Grove Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stockton, 148 Pa. 146, 23 Atl. 1063; Rathbone v. Coe, 6 Dak. 91, 50 N. W. 620. In some states, by statute, where suit is brought on a contract made in another state, the statute of limitations in the jurisdiction where the cause of action arose is made to apply.

The right of set-off is to be determined by the lex fori; Gibbs v. Howard, 2 N. H. 296; Mineral Point R. Co. v. Barron, 83 Ill. 365; Ruggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 263, 3 Am. Dec. 482. Liens, implied hypothecations, and priorities of claims, generally, are matters of remedy; McGregor v. Barker, 12 La. Ann. 289; but only, it would seem, where the property affected is within the jurisdiction of the courts of the forum; Whart. Confl. L. § 317; Harrison v. Sterry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 289, 3 L. Ed. 104. See L. R. 3 Ch. App. 484. A prescriptive title to personal property, acquired in a former domicil, will be respected by the lex fori; 17 Ves. 88; 3 Hen. & M. 57; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 361, 6 L. Ed. 495; Waller v. Logan's Heirs, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 521; Edgerly v. Bush, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 80.

Questions of the admissibility and effect of evidence are to be determined by the lex fori; Martin v. Hill, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 631; Kanaga v. Taylor, 7 Ohio St. 134, 70 Am. Dec. 62; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 27 L. Ed. 104; Hoadley v. Transp. Co., 115 Mass. 304, 15 Am. Rep. 106; also questions of costs; Security Co. of Hartford v. Eyer, 36 Neb. 507, 54 N. W. 838, 38 Am. St. Rep. 735. Exemption laws are ordinarily governed by the lex fori; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 31 Kan. 180, 1 Pac. 622, 47 Am. Rep. 497; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Smith, 70 Miss. 344, 12 South. 461, 19 L. R. A. 577, 35 Am. St. Rep. 651.

The administration of a deceased person's movables is governed wholly by the law of the country where the administrator acts and from which he derives his authority to collect them (lex fori); and without regard to the domicil of the deceased; but the distribution of the distributable residue is governed by the lex domicilii; Dicey, Confl. Laws 674, 677; 28 Ch. D. 175; Jones v. Drewry, 72 Ala. 311; Hoskins v. Sheddon, 70 Ga. 528; Welch v. Adams, 152 Mass. 74, 25 N. E. 34, 9 L. R. A. 244; White v. Tennant, 31 W. Va. 790, 8 S. E. 596, 13 Am. St. Rep. 896; Cooper v. Beers, 143 Ill. 25, 33 N. E. 61. Usually the distributable residue is remitted to the administration of the domicil for distribution; Appeal of Barry, 88 Pa. 131; but it is in the discretion of the court of the ancillary administration to distribute such residue; Welch v. Adams, 152 Mass. 74, 25 N E. 34, 9 L. R. A. 244; Graveley v. Graveley, 25 S. C. 1, 60 Am. Rep. 478; In re Welles' Estate, 161 Pa. 218, 28 Atl. 1116, 1117. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

An action in tort for an act done in a foreign country will not lie in England unless the act was a tort both in such foreign country and in England; Dicey, Confl. Laws 660. So in the United States; De Harn v. R. Co., 86 Tex. 68, 23 S. W. 381; Wooden v. R. Co., 126 N. Y. 10, 26 N. E. 1050, 13 L. R. A. 458, 22 Am. St. Rep. 803; Carter v. Goode, 50 Ark. 155, 6 S. W. 719; Ash v. R. Co., 72 Md. 144, 19 Atl. 643, 20 Am. St. Rep. 461. But it is ordinarily assumed that the laws of the two countries are the same; Walsh v. R. Co., 160 Mass. 571, 36 N. E. 584, 39 Am. St. Rep. 514.

In cases governed by the common law, the courts are, in general, freely open to all persons, as well in actions between foreigners as where one party is a citizen; Simpson Fruit Co. v. R. Co., 245 Ill. 596, 92 N. E. 524; Johnston v. Ins. Co., 132 Mass. 432; McDonald v. MacArthur Bros. Co., 154

N. C. 122, 69 S. E. 832. Even the special provisions by which poor persons are given favors, as, for instance, where they are allowed to sue in forma pauperis, are extended as freely to foreigners as to citizens of the state; Lisenbee v. Holt, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 42. It is only in New York that any limitation has been seriously suggested, and there the limitation applies generally only in the case of foreign corporations; Collard v. Beach, 93 App. Div. 339, 87 N. Y. Supp. 884. See an article by Prof. Beale, 26 Harv. L. Rev. 193, 283.

Whether an act constitutes an actionable wrong in England which is tortious by the law of England, and not strictly justifiable under the law of the country where it was done, though not actionable there, is doubtful; Dicey, Confl. Laws 661; 10 Q. B. D. (C. A.) 521; 1 H. & C. 219. An action lies in one state on a wrong done in another state, which is actionable there, although it would not be actionable in the state where suit is brought unless it be contrary to its own public policy; Evey v. Ry. Co., 81 Fed. 294, 26 C. C. A. 407, 38 L. R. A. 387.

The damages recoverable from an employer for the death of his employé, caused by the negligence of the former, are controlled by the law of the place where the contract of employment was made and the accident occurred, though the death took place and the action was brought in another state; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 14 Sup. Ct. 978, 38 L. Ed. 958. The statutes of one state giving an action for wrongful death may be enforced in the federal courts of another state, if not inconsistent with the statutes and policy thereof; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 12 Sup. Ct. 905, 36 L. Ed. 829. An action of tort will lie in England to be tried under the rules of the maritime law, in case of a collision on the high seas, between two foreign ships; 10 Q. B. D. (C. A.) 521. See, also, the Merchants' Shipping Act, 1894. In the United States, in case of a collision on the high seas between ships of different nationalities, the general maritime law governs, as administered in the courts of the country in which the action is brought, except that if the maritime law, as administered by both nations to which the respective ships belong, be the same in both in respect to any matter of liability or obligation, such law, if shown to the court, should be followed, although different from the maritime law of the country of the forum; The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, 5 Sup. Ct. 860, 29 L. Ed. 152. See also The Scotia, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 170, 20 L. Ed. 822; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. Ed. 1001; The Titanic, 233 U. S. 718, 34 Sup. Ct. 754, 58 L. Ed. —.

The law of the forum as to the validity of a bequest will be applied to a gift by will to a foreign corporation, especially when this carries out and does not frustrate the testator's intention, although the law of the state which created the corporation may be different; Congregational Church Bldg. Soc. v. Everett, 85 Md. 79, 36 Atl. 654, 35 L. R. A. 693, 60 Am. St. Rep. 308.

As to the proof of foreign law, see FOREIGN LAW.

LEX FUFIA CANINIA. The law which fixed the limit of testamentary manumissions within certain limits. It was repealed by Justinian, as invidiously placing obstacles in the way of liberty. Sohm, Rom. L. 114; Inst. 7.

LEX FURIA DE SPONSU. The law limiting the liability of sponsors and fide-promissors to two years, and providing that as between several co-sponsors or co-fide-promissors, the debt should be, ipso jure, divided according to the number of the sureties without taking the solvency of individual sureties into account. It applied only to Italy. Sohm, Rom. L. 299, n.; Inst. 3. 20.

LEX FURIA TESTAMENTARIA. A law enacting that a testator might not bequeath as a legacy more than one thousand asses.

LEX GABINIA. A law introducing the ballot in elections.

LEX GENUCIA. A law declaring interest illegal. Inst. 3. 13.

LEX HORATIA VALERIA. A law which assured to the tribal assembly its privilege of independent existence.

LEX HORTENSIA. The law giving the plebeians a full share in the jus publicum and the jus sacrum. Sand. Just. Introd. § 9.

LEX JULIA. See LEGES JULIÆ.

LEX JUNIA NORBANA. The law conferring legal freedom on all such freedmen as were tuitione prætoris. See LATINI JUNIANI. Lex Junia Velleja conferred the same right on posthumous children born in the lifetime of the testator, but after the execution of the will, as were enjoyed by those born after the death of the testator. Sohm, Rom. L. 463.

LEX JUNIA VELLEJA. A law providing that descendants who became sui heredes of the testator otherwise than by birth, as by the death of their father, must be disinherited or instituted heirs in the same way as posthumous children. Campbell, Rom. L. 77.

LEX KANTIÆ. The body of customs prevailing in Kent during the time of Edward I. A written statement of these customs was sanctioned by the king's justices in eyre. They were mainly concerned with the maintenance of a form of land tenure known as gavelkind (q. v.). 1 Poll. & Maitl. 166.

LEX LANGOBARDORUM (Lat.). The name of an ancient code in force among the Lombards. It contains many evident traces of feudal policy. It survived the destruction of the ancient government of Lombardy by Charlemagne, and is said to be still partially in force in some districts of Italy.

LEX LOCI (Lat.). The law of the place. This may be either lex loci contractus (the law of the place of making a contract); lex loci rei sitæ or lex situs (the law of the place where a thing is situated); lex loci actus, or lex actus (the law of the place where a legal transaction takes place); lex loci celebrationis (the law of the place where a contract is made); lex loci solutionis (the law of the place where a contract is to be performed); lex loci delicti commissi (the law of the place where a tort is committed).

In general, however, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus. As will appear below, lex loci contractus is used in a double sense in many of the cases. It is used sometimes, to denote the law of the place where the contract was made, and at other times to denote the law by which the contract is to be governed, which may or may not be the same as that of the place where it was made. The earlier cases do not regard the distinction, and are to be read with this fact in mind. See below, where the distinction is made clear by Dicey, Confl. of Laws.

CONTRACTS. In the older cases it is held that it is a general principle applying to contracts made, rights acquired, or acts done relative to personal property, that the law of the place of making the contract, or doing the act, is to govern it and determine its validity or invalidity, as well as the rights of parties under it, in all matters touching the modes of execution and authentication of the form or instruments of contract; and also in relation to the use and meaning of the language in which it is expressed, the construction and interpretation of it, the legal duties and obligations imposed by it and the legal rights and immunities acquired under it; 8 Cl. & F. 121; Houghton v. Page, 2 N. H. 42, 9 Am. Dec. 30; Pickering v. Fisk, 6 Vt. 102; May v. Breed, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 30, 54 Am. Dec. 700; Speed v. May, 17 Pa. 91, 55 Am. Dec. 540; Houghtaling v. Ball, 19 Mo. 84, 59 Am. Dec. 331; Hayward v. Le Baron, 4 Fla. 404; Glenn v. Thistle, 23 Miss. 42; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. Ed. 245; Dacosta v. Davis, 24 N. J. L. 319; Downer v. Chesebrough, 36 Conn. 39, 4 Am. Rep. 29; Hildreth v. Shepard, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 265. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The validity or invalidity of a contract as affected by the lex loci may depend upon the capacity of the parties or the legality of the act to be done.

The capacity of the parties as affected by questions of minority or majority, incapacities incident to coverture, guardianship, emancipation, and other personal qualities or disabilities, is, it has been said, to be decided by the law of the place of making the contract; Story, Confl. Laws § 103; Appeal of Huey, 1 Grant (Pa.) 51. See infra.

The question of disability to make a contract on account of infancy is to be decided by the lex loci; Appeal of Huey, 1 Grant 51; 2 Kent 233. So, also, as to contracts made by married women; Garnier v. Poydras, 13 La. 177.

Personal disqualifications not arising from the law of nature, but from positive law, and especially such as are penal, are strictly territorial, and are not to be enforced in any country other than that where they originate; Story, Confl. Laws §§ 91, 104, 620; 2 Kent 459. See Whart. Confl. L. § 101; Price v. Wilson, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

Natural disabilities, such as insanity, imbecility, etc., are everywhere recognized, so that the question whether they are controlled by the lex loci or lex domicilii seems to be theoretic rather than practical. On principle there seems to be no good reason why they should come under a different rule from the positive disabilities.

A contract legal by the lex loci will be so everywhere; Miller v. Wilson, 146 Ill. 523, 34 N. E. 1111, 37 Am. St. Rep. 186; unless—

It is injurious to public rights or morals; 1 B. & P. 340; Greenwood v. Curtis, 6 Mass. 379, 4 Am. Dec. 145; De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 193, 3 Am. Dec. 535; or contravenes the policy; Castleman v. Jeffries, 60 Ala. 380; King v. Johnson, 5 Harring. (Del.) 31; 2 Sim. Ch. 194; see Armstrong v. Best, 112 N. C. 59, 17 S. E. 14, 25 L. R. A. 188, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473; or violates a positive law of the lex fori; or, in England, violates any English rule of procedure; Dicey, Confl. Laws 542. The application of the lex loci is a matter of comity; and that law must, in all cases, yield to the positive law of the place of seeking the remedy; Martin v. Hill, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 631; Mahorner v. Hooe, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 247, 48 Am. Dec. 706.

It is held generally that the claims of citizens are to be preferred to those of foreigners. Assignments, under the insolvent laws of a foreign state, are often held inoperative as against claims of a citizen of the state, in regard to personal property in the jurisdiction of the lex fori; King v. Johnson, 5 Harring. (Del.) 31; Beer v. Hooper, 32 Miss. 246; Tyler v. Strang, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 198; but see Wilson v. Carson, 12 Md. 54. But there appears to be a distinction. This rule is well settled in all cases where the assignment of the property of an insolvent is made, in invitum, by a court in a foreign jurisdiction, to a receiver, assignee, etc.; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7338; Catlin v. Silver-Plate Co., 123 Ind. 477, 24 N. E. 250, 8 L. R. A. 62, 18 Am. St. Rep. 338; Humphreys v. Hopkins, 81 Cal. 551, 22 Pac. 892, 6 L. R. A. 792, 15 Am. St. Rep. 76. But where a vol- untary assignment is made, if good where made and made in conformity with the law where the property is situated, it is valid in the latter state, ex proprio vigore; Appeal of Smith, 117 Pa. 30, 11 Atl. 394; First Nat. Bank of Attleboro v. Hughes, 10 Mo. App. 7; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7347; Story, Confl. L. § 411.

In an action in Pennsylvania on a promissory note governed as to the contract by the law of New Jersey, the question of whether parol evidence will be admitted to vary the contract must depend upon the law of New Jersey, and not upon the lex fori. It was said that the right to introduce proof dehors the instrument for the purpose of showing what, in fact, the contract was, is an essential part of the contract itself, and not a mere incident to the remedy; Cooke v. Addicks, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 115, citing Tenant v. Tenant, 110 Pa. 478, 1 Atl. 532; Sea Grove Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stockton, 148 Pa. 146, 23 Atl. 1063; and Baxter Nat. Bank v. Talbot, 154 Mass. 213, 28 N. E. 163, 13 L. R. A. 52.

The interpretation of contracts is to be governed by the law of the country where the contract was made; 10 B. & C. 903; Bank of U. S. v. Donnally, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 361, 8 L. Ed. 974; McDougald's Adm'r v. Rutherford, 30 Ala. 253; Mathuson v. Crawford, 4 McLean 540, Fed. Cas. No. 9,279; 2 Bla. Com. 141; Story, Confl. Laws § 270.

The lex loci governs as to the formalities and authentication requisite to the valid execution of contracts; Story, Confl. Laws §§ 123, 260; Tickner v. Roberts, 11 La. 14, 30 Am. Dec. 706; Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 227; Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86. But in proving the existence of, and seeking remedies for, the breach, as well as in all questions relating to the competency of witnesses, course of procedure, etc., the lex fori must govern; Speed v. May, 17 Pa. 91, 55 Am. Dec. 540; Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 248; Mathuson v. Crawford, 4 McLean 540, Fed. Cas. No. 9,279; Alexandria Canal Co. v. Swann, 5 How. (U. S.) 83, 12 L. Ed. 60; McKissick v. McKissick, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 75; Broadhead v. Noyes, 9 Mo. 56; Dorsey v. Hardesty, 9 Mo. 157; Sherman v. Gassett, 4 Gilm. (Ill.) 521; Caujolle v. Ferrie, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 177; Story, Confl. Laws §§ 567, 634. See LEX FORI.

The lex loci governs as to the obligation and construction of contracts; Bryant v. Edson, 8 Vt. 325, 30 Am. Dec. 472; Bank of Orange County v. Colby, 12 N. H. 520; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; 1 B. & P. 138; Aymar v. Sheldon, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 439, 27 Am. Dec. 137; Brown v. Richardson, 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 202; Young v. Harris, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 556, 61 Am. Dec. 170; Carroll v. Renich, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 798; unless, from their tenor, it must be presumed they were entered into with a view to the laws of some other state; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 106; Hochstadter v. Hays, 11 Colo. 118, 17 Pac. 289. This presumption arises where the place of performance is different from the place of making; 31 E. L. & Eq. 433; Fanning v. Consequa, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 511, 8 Am. Dec. 442; Percy v. Percy, 9 La. Ann. 185; Prentiss v. Savage, 13 Mass. 23; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. Ed. 245.

It has been held that a lien or privilege affecting personal estate, created by the lex loci, will generally be enforced wherever the property may be found; Ohio Ins. Co. v. Edmondson, 5 La. 295; Story, Confl. Laws § 402; but not necessarily in preference to claims arising under the lex fori, when the property is within the jurisdiction of the court of the forum; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 361, 6 L. Ed. 606; Whart. Confl. L. § 324. It is said that the former rule that the assignment of a movable is invalid unless it be made in accordance with the lex domicilii, is now rejected by the English courts, which now hold that a transfer of goods in accordance with the lex situs gives a good title in England; Dicey, Confl. Laws 532. But it is held in this country that a transfer of movables made in the place of the owner's domicil and in accordance with its laws will be enforced by the courts of the place where the movables are situated, although the method of transfer be different from that prescribed by the latter country; but not when the statutes of the place where they are situate or the policy of its laws prescribe a different rule; Moore's note to Dicey, Confl. Laws 538; Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 139, 19 L. Ed. 109; Barnett v. Kinney, 147 U. S. 476, 13 Sup. Ct. 403, 37 L. Ed. 247. See supra.

A discharge from the performance of a contract under the lex loci is a discharge everywhere; Baker v. Wheaton, 5 Mass. 509, 4 Am. Dec. 71; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 394; 2 Kent 394.

A distinction is to be taken between discharging a contract and taking away the remedy for a breach; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 347, 6 L. Ed. 606; Braynard v. Marshall, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 194; Norton v. Cook, 9 Conn. 314, 23 Am. Dec. 342; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 394.

As to the effect of a discharge from an obligation by a state insolvent law upon a debt due a citizen of another state, see LEX FORI; INSOLVENT LAWS.

Statutes of limitations ordinarily apply to the remedy, but do not discharge the debt; Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. (U. S.) 407, 13 L. Ed. 194; Whitney v. Goddard, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 310, 32 Am. Dec. 216; Nicolls v. Rodgers, 2 Paine 437, Fed. Cas. No. 10,260; Sissons v. Bicknell, 6 N. H. 557; Dunning v. Chamberlin, 6 Vt. 127; Goodman v. Munks, 8 Port. (Ala.) 84. See LIMITATIONS; LEX FORI.

If the contract is to be performed partly in one state and partly in another, it will be affected by the law of both states; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. Ed. 245; Young v. Harris, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 556, 61 Am. Dec. 170; Pomeroy v. Ainsworth, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 118. But see Morgan v. R. Co., 2 Woods 244, Fed. Cas. No. 9,804; McDaniel v. R. Co., 24 Ia. 412. A contract of affreightment made in one country between citizens or residents thereof, and the performance of which begins there, must be governed by the law of that country, unless the parties, when entering into the contract, clearly manifested a mutual intention that it should be governed by the laws of some other country; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788.

In cases of indorsement of negotiable paper, every indorsement is a new contract, and the place of each indorsement is in its locus contractus; 2 Kent 460; 9 B. & C. 208; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 106; Everett v. Vendryes, 19 N. Y. 436; Bailey v. Heald, 17 Tex. 102.

The place of payment is the locus contractus, however, as between indorsee and drawer. See Everett v. Vendryes, 19 N. Y. 436; Drake v. Mining Co., 53 Fed. 474, 9 C. C. A. 261.

The place of acceptance of a draft is regarded as the locus contractus; 1 Q. B. 43; Boyce v. Edwards, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 111, 7 L. Ed. 799; Davis v. Clemson, 6 McLean 622, Fed. Cas. No. 3,630; Barney v. Newcomb, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 46; Bowen v. Newell, 13 N. Y. 290, 64 Am. Dec. 550; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 12 Sup. Ct. 154, 35 L. Ed. 956.

A note made in one state and payable in another, is not subject to the usury laws of the latter state, if it was valid in that respect in the state where it was made; Sturdivant v. Bank, 60 Fed. 730, 9 C. C. A. 256.

Where a contract was made in New York by a New Jersey corporation, and the New York statutes prohibited the defence of usury to a corporation, it was held that the New York statute would debar the corporation from setting up such defence in New Jersey; Watson v. Lane, 52 N. J. L. 550, 20 Atl. 894, 10 L. R. A. 784. The same act was held not to govern a corporation of North Carolina, sued in North Carolina, where the contract was considered as a North Carolina contract; Com'rs of Craven v. R. Co., 77 N. C. 289.

A note executed in one state and payable in another is governed, as to defences against an indorsee, by the law of the latter state, though sued on in the state where made; id. As to what is presumed to be lex loci, see FOREIGN LAWS; LEX FORI.

Dicey's view as to formal and essential validity.—Dicey (Conflict of Laws) defines lex loci contractus merely as the law of the place where the contract is entered into, and uses it only in that sense. To designate the law by which the contract is governed, he uses the phrase, "the proper law of the contract," which may be, and usually is, the lex loci contractus, or may be, by the express will of the parties, or by inference, the law of some other place. He maintains that the capacity to contract is governed by the law of the domicil (except, probably, in the case of ordinary mercantile contracts which are governed by the law of the place where the contract is made; and except, of course, contracts relating to land). The formal validity of the contract is governed by the law of the place where it is made, except contracts relating to land and contracts made in one country in accordance with the local form in respect of a movable situated in another country, which, he thinks, may possibly be invalid if they do not comply with the special formalities (if any) required by the law of the country where the movable is situated at the time of the making of the contract, and except, possibly, a contract made in one country, but intended to operate wholly in, and to be subject to the law of, another country, even though not made according to the local form, if made in accordance with the form required, or allowed by the law of the country where the contract is to operate. This last exception is not, however, in his opinion, supported by adequate authority.

The essential validity of a contract is governed by what he terms the "proper law of the contract," which he defines as the law, or laws, by which the parties to a contract intended, or may fairly be presumed to have intended, the contract to be governed. This may be the law of the place where the contract was made, or it may be the place of performance. But there are, he says, wide exceptions to this rule. The contract must not be opposed to English interests, or the policy of English law, or to the moral rules upheld by English law. The contract must not be unlawful by the law of the country where it is made; and its performance must not be unlawful by the law of the country where it is to be performed; and it must not form part of a transaction which is unlawful by the law of the country where the transaction is to take place, though this probably does not apply to contracts in violation of the revenue laws of a foreign country.

The interpretation of a contract and the rights and obligations under it of the parties thereto, are to be determined by the "proper law of the contract." This law may be designated by the express words of the contract, indicating the intention of the parties, which, in general, governs; or their intention may be inferred from the terms and nature of the contract, and from the general circumstances of the case. In the absence of counteracting considerations, the proper law of the contract is, prima facie, presumed to be the law of the country where the contract is made; especially when the contract is to be performed there, or may be performed anywhere, but it may apply to a contract partly, or even wholly, to be performed in another country. Where the contract is to be performed wholly or partly in another country, the proper law of the contract, especially as to the mode of performance, may be presumed to be the law of the country where the performance is to take place. These presumptions are said to be grounded on the probable intention of the parties.

The validity of the discharge of a contract (otherwise than by bankruptcy) depends upon the proper law of the contract, that is, the law to which the parties, when contracting, intended to submit themselves. But this writer says there is a lack of decided authority on this point.

The same writer after saying that the reports and text books of authority reiterate the rule that a contract is governed by the law of the place where it is made, points out that when English courts first began to deal with the conflict of laws, they referred everything, except matters of procedure, to the lex loci contractus, by which they meant the law of the place where the contract was actually entered into. When they subsequently found it necessary to give effect to other laws than those of the place where the contract was made, and especially to the laws of the place of performance, the change of doctrine was combined with a verbal adherence to an old formula not really consistent with the new theory. They retained the expression lex loci contractus, but reinterpreted it to mean the law of the country with a view to the law whereof the contract was made. This might be the law of the country where the contract was made, or it might be the law of some other country, and was frequently the law of the country where the contract was to be performed. The same result was sometimes attained by another method of reasoning. It was laid down that a person must be assumed to have contracted at the place where his contract was to be performed. By either method of interpretation an actual reference to the law contemplated by the parties was masked under a nominal reference to the law of the place of the contract. This adherence to the term lex loci contractus has produced two effects. It has until recent years concealed from English lawyers the principle that the interpretation, as contrasted with the formal validity, of a contract is governed by the law (of whatever country) contemplated by the parties, and that this law is constantly the law of the place of performance, and it has led English judges to give a preference to the lex loci contractus, upon which the English courts fall back in doubtful cases. But English judges, as well as foreign courts and writers, both adopt the principle that the interpretation of a contract and the obligation arising under it are, in so far as they depend on the will of the parties, to be determined in accordance with the law contemplated by the parties; Dicey, Confl. Laws 726.

In the English courts it has finally been held that the "proper law of the contract" is the law or laws by which the parties to a contract intended, or may fairly be presumed to have intended, the contract to be governed; [1894] A. C. 202.

The phrase lex loci contractus is used in a double sense, to mean, sometimes the law of a place where a contract is entered into; sometimes that of the place of its performance. And when it is employed to designate the law of the seat of the obligation, it is, on that account, confusing. The law we are in search of, which is to decide upon the nature, interpretation, and validity of the engagement in question, is that which the parties have either expressly or presumptively incorporated into their contract, as constituting their obligations; Pritchard v Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 27 L. Ed. 104. "In every forum a contract is governed by the law with a view to which it was made;" Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 253.

It is said by an able writer that the cases often fail to distinguish between formal validity and essential validity, or between the making and the performance of the contracts; and not infrequently it is held, in respect of matters of essential validity, that the validity of a contract is to be determined by the law of the place where the contract is made; J. B. Moore's note to Dicey, Confl. Laws 580, citing as instances Baxter Nat. Bank v. Talbot, 154 Mass. 213, 28 N. E. 163, 13 L. R. A. 52; In re Kahn, 55 Minn. 509, 57 N. W. 154.

A policy of life insurance which was delivered, and the first premium thereon paid in the state in which the assured resided, is governed by the laws of that state; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Winning, 58 Fed. 541, 7 C. C. A. 359; though the policy contained a clause that it was to be a contract under the laws of the domicil of the insurer, such clause being invalid when it sought to avoid the force of statutes of the state in which the insurance was taken; Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Robison, 54 Fed. 580; and though signed by the insurer at the company's office in its home state; Knights Templar & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Berry, 50 Fed. 511, 1 C. C. A. 561; and a policy issued by a New York company upon an application signed in Missouri, where the first premium was paid, is subject to the Missouri statutes which cannot be waived by any stipulation of the contract; Equitable Life Society v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 11 Sup. Ct. 822, 35 L. Ed. 497. A domiciled Englishman effected three policies of insurance on his life in a New York Company in favor of his wife and children. It was held that the intention of the parties must determine the law applicable, and that it was clearly intended here that the interests of the beneficiaries should be decided by the law of the domicil of the party insuring; 73 L. T. R. 60.

The validity of a contract cannot be secured by apparently subjecting it to a law by which it is not properly governed; American Freehold Land & Mtg. Co. v. Jefferson, 69 Miss. 770, 12 South. 464, 30 Am. St. Rep. 587; Arbuckle v. Reaume, 96 Mich. 243, 55 N. W. 808.

Where a New York statute provided for notice as a condition of the forfeiture of a policy for nonpayment of premium by any life insurance company doing business in the state, and the application for a policy recited that it was subject to the charter of the company and the laws of New York, the policy issued on such application, which was delivered in Montana, was held not subject to the provisions of the New York act; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Cohen, 179 U. S. 262, 21 Sup. Ct. 106, 45 L. Ed. 181; the court holding it to be a Montana contract and that the language of the statute was such as to make it applicable only to business done in New York; to the same effect; Griesemer v. Ins. Co., 10 Wash. 202, 38 Pac. 1031.

A contract executed in England, whereby an English corporation agrees to transport a citizen of the United States to this country, is to be construed according to English law; The Majestic, 60 Fed. 624, 9 C. C. A. 161, 23 L. R. A. 746.

A federal court assuming jurisdiction of a controversy between the master and the seamen of a foreign vessel, under a foreign flag, growing out of a contract made in their own country, will administer relief, by comity, in accordance with the law of the flag of the vessel; Wilson v. The John Ritson, 35 Fed. 663. The question concerning the ultimate responsibility of the owner for the master's acts and engagements, arising out of sea damages, as one of the incidents of the voyage in the prosecution of foreign commerce, is to be determined by the law of the ship's home; Force v. Ins. Co. id. 767. See FLAG, LAW OF.

It is said that the failure to comply with local requirement as to form, not affecting the obligation of the agreement, will not invalidate the contract; Whart. Confl. L. § 685.

A contract valid by the laws of the place where made, although not in writing, will not be enforced in the courts of a country where the Statute of Frauds prevails. But where the law of the forum and that of the place of the execution of the contract coincide, it will be enforced, although required to be in writing by the law of the place of performance, because the form of the contract is regulated by the law of the place of its celebration, and the evidence of it by that of the forum; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 135, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 27 L. Ed. 104.

The general rule is that a defence or discharge, good by the law of the place where the contract is made or is to be performed, is to be held of equal validity in every place where the question may come to be litigated; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 132, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 27 L. Ed. 104, citing Story, Confl. L. § 331.

TORTS. Damages for the commission of a tortious act are to be measured by the law of the place where the act is done; 1 P. Wms. 395; Consequa v. Willings, 1 Pet. C. C. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 3,128; Story, Confl. Laws, § 307.

An action for a tort committed in a foreign country will lie only when it is based upon an act which will be considered as tortious both in the place where committed and in the locus fori; in such case the law of the place where the tort was committed governs; L. R. 1 P. D. 107; L. R. 6 Q. B. 1; L. R. 2 P. C. 193. See 1 H. & C. 219; Whart. Confl. L. § 478; Dewitt v. Buchanan, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 31; LEX FORI.

LEX PUBLILIA. The law providing that the plebiscita should bind the whole people. Inst. 1. 2. The lex Publilia de sponsu allowed sponsores, unless reimbursed within six months, to recover from their principal by a special actio what they had paid.

LEX REGIA. The law of the emperor. That which he ordains by rescript, or decides in adjudging a cause, or lays down by edict, is law. Inst. 1. 2. 6.

LEX REI SITÆ (Lat.). The law of the country where a thing is situate. Dicey, Confl. Laws 66. It is said to be an inexact mode of expression; lex situs, or lex loci rei sitæ are better. 29 L. Q. R. 2 (H. Gondy).

It is the universal rule of the common law that any title or interest in land, or in other real estate, can only be acquired or lost agreeably to the law of the place where the same is situated; Blake v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 286, 17 Am. Dec. 372; Hosford v. Nichols, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 220; Wills v. Cowper, 2 Ohio, 124; 5 B. & C. 438; McCormick v. Sullivant, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 192, 6 L. Ed. 299; and the law is the same in this respect in regard to all methods whatever of transfer, and every restraint upon alienation; 12 E. I. & Eq. 206. The lex rei sitæ governs as to the capacity of the parties to any alienation, whether testamentary or inter vivos, or to make a contract with regard to a movable, or to acquire or succeed to a movable as affected by questions of minority or majority; Saul v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 569, 16 Am. Dec. 212; of rights arising from the relation of husband and wife; Story, Confl. Laws § 454; 9 Bligh 127; Le Breton v. Miles, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. S.) 151, 3 L. Ed. 687; McCormick v. Sullivant, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 192, 6 L. Ed. 300; Eyre v. Storer, 37 N. H. 114.

So as to the forms and solemnities of alienation, and the restrictions, if any, imposed upon such alienation, the lex rei sitæ must be complied with, whether it be a transfer by devise; 2 P. Wms. 291; McCormick v. Sullivant, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 192, 6 L. Ed. 300; Wills v. Cowper, 2 Ohio 124; Eyre v. Storer, 37 N. H. 114; Bowen v. Johnson, 5 R. I. 112, 73 Am. Dec. 49; Drake v. Clark, 20 Fla. 849 (but in Maine, under statutes, an attestation made in conformity with the law of the place where the will was executed, was held valid; Lyon v. Ogden, 85 Me. 374, 27 Atl. 258); or by conveyance inter vivos; 2 Dowl. & C. 349; Cutter v. Davenport, 1

Pick. (Mass.) 81, 11 Am. Dec. 149; Hosford v. Nichols, 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 220; Frazier v. Moore's Adm'r, 11 Tex. 755; Donaldson v. Phillips, 18 Pa. 170, 55 Am. Dec. 614. So as to the amount of property or extent of interest which can be acquired, held, or transferred; 3 Russ. Ch. 328; 2 Dow. & C. 393; and the question of what is real property; 1 W. Bla. 234; Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 630, 31 Am. Dec. 264. The law of a country where a thing is situate determines whether the thing itself, or any right, obligation, or document connected with the thing is to be considered an immovable (land), or a movable; Dicey, Confl. Laws 513.

And, generally, the lex rei sitæ governs as to the validity of any such transfer; Glenn v. Thistle, 23 Miss. 42; Depas v. Mayo, 11 Mo. 314, 49 Am. Dec. 88; Bloomer v. Bloomer, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 339; Post v. Bank, 138 Ill. 559, 28 N. E. 978. As to the disposition of the proceeds, see 12 E. L. & Eq. 206.

The validity, construction, and effect of wills of movables depend upon the lex rei sitæ; Penfield v. Tower, 1 N. D. 216, 46 N. W. 413; Ware v. Wisner, 50 Fed. 310; Moody v. Johnson, 112 N. C. 798, 17 S. E. 578; but the law of the state where the will was made may be considered by the court of the situs in determining the meaning of certain words in it; Guerard v. Guerard, 73 Ga. 506. The validity of a charitable devise; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174, 2 Sup. Ct. 336, 27 L. Ed. 401; and a direction for accumulation; Riggs v. American Tract Soc., 95 N. Y. 508; depend upon the lex rei sitæ, and so does the execution of a power of appointment of lands under a will; Sewall v. Wilmer, 132 Mass. 131; and the devolution of land, whether in case of intestacy or under a will; Dicey, Confl. Laws 519.

The acquisition of a title to land by lapse of time (prescription) must be determined by the same law, except so far as the limitation to an action to recover land depends on the lex fori; id. 525; and see Whart. Confl. Laws § 378.

As to whether mere contracts with regard to immovables or land are determined by the lex rei sitæ, as to their material validity, or by the "proper law of the contract," is said to be doubtful; Dicey, Confl. Laws 769; but the capacity of the parties thereto and the formalities necessary to the validity of such a contract are, almost certainly, governed by the law of the situs; id. As to the "proper law of the contract," see LEX LOCI; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

A contract for the conveyance of land, valid by the lex fori, will be enforced in equity by a decree in personam for a conveyance valid under the lex rei sitæ; 1 Ves. 144; Mitchell v. Bunch, 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 606, 22 Am. Dec. 669; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 148, 3 L. Ed. 181; Wythe 135; An executory foreign contract for the conveyance of lands not repugnant to the lex rei sitæ will be enforced in the courts of the latter country by personal process; 8 Paige, Ch. 201; 23 E. L. & Eq. 288.

Courts of the situs may refuse to enforce foreign assignments for creditors as against domestic creditors; May v. Bank, 122 Ill. 551, 13 N. E. 806; Warner v. Jaffray, 96 N. Y. 248, 48 Am. Rep. 616; but see supra, for contrary decisions.

All simple contract debts are assets at the domicil of the testator; Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654, 3 Sup. Ct. 417, 27 L. Ed. 1068; but a bond is said to be assets for the purpose of administration at the place where it is found; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292. A ship at sea is presumed to be situated in the state where it is registered; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 430. As to the English rules relating to the situs of movables, see Dicey, Confl. Laws 318. See GENERAL AVERAGE.

LEX RHODIA DE JACTU. A law providing that when the goods of an owner are thrown overboard for the safety of the ship or of the property of other owners, he becomes entitled to a ratable contribution. It has been adopted into the law of all civilized nations. Campbell, Rom. L. 137.

LEX ROMANA. See CIVIL LAW; ROMAN LAW.

LEX SALICA. See SALIC LAW.

LEX SCRIBONIA. (B. C. 34.) The law abolishing the usucapio servitutis. Sohm, Rom. L. 265.

LEX SCRIPTA. Written or statute law. See JUS EX NON SCRIPTA.

LEX SEMPRONIA. (B. C. 123.) The law forbidding senators from being judges and allowing the office to the knights. Sand. Just. Introd. § 12.

LEX SILIA. (B. C. about 244.) A law concerning personal actions. Sohm, Rom. L. 155.

LEX SITUS. See LEX REI SITÆ.

LEX TALIONIS (Lat.). The law of retaliation: an example of which is given in the law of Moses, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, etc.

Amicable retaliation includes those acts of retaliation which correspond to the acts of the other nation under similar circumstances.

Jurists and writers on international law are divided as to the right of one nation punishing with death, by way of retaliation, the citizens or subjects of another nation. In the United States no example of such barbarity has ever been witnessed; but prisoners have been kept in close confinement in retaliation for the same conduct towards American prisoners. See Rutherforth, Inst. b. 2, c. 9; Martens, Law of Nat. b. 8, c. 1, s.

8, note; 1 Kent 93; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 4, c. 1, § 1.

Vindictive retaliation includes those acts which amounts to war. See RETORSION.

LEX TERRÆ (Lat.). The law of the land. It means "the procedure of the old popular law." Thayer, Evid. 201, quoting Brunner, Schw. 254, and Fortesq. de Laud. c. 26 (Selden's notes). See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

LEX VOCONIA. (B. C. 169.) A plebiscitum forbidding a legatee to receive more than each heir had. Inst. 2. 22.

LEY (Old French; a corruption of loi). Law. For example, Termes de la Ley. Terms of the Law. In another, and an old technical, sense, ley signifies an oath, or the oath with compurgators; as, il tend sa ley aiu pleyntiffe. Britton, c. 27.

LEY GAGER. Wager of law. An offer to make an oath denying the cause of action of the plaintiff, confirmed by compurgators (q. v.), which oath was allowed in certain cases. When it was accomplished, it was called the "doing of the law," "fesans de ley." Termes de la Ley; 2 B. & C. 538; 3 B. & P. 297.

LEYES DE ESTILLO. In Spanish Law. Laws of the age. A book of explanations of the Fuero Real, to the number of 250 formed under the authority of Alonzo X. and his son Sancho, and of Fernando el Emplazado, and published at the end of the 13th century or beginning of the 14th; some of them are inserted in the New Recopilacion. 1 New Recop. 354.

LIABILITY. Responsibility; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. McElfresh v. Kirkendall, 36 Ia. 226; Wood v. Currey, 57 Cal. 209; Joslin v. Car Spring Co., 36 N. J. L. 145. This liability may arise from contracts either express or implied, or in consequence of torts committed.

The state of being bound or obliged in law or justice. Joslin v. Car Spring Co., 36 N. J. L. 145; McElfresh v. Kirkendall, 36 Ia. 226.

LIBEL (Lat. liber, a book). In Practice. The plaintiff's written statement of his cause of action and of the relief which he seeks, made and exhibited in a judicial process, with some solemnity of law.

A written statement by a plaintiff of his cause of action, and of the relief he seeks to obtain in a suit. Ayliffe, Par. 346; Shelf. Marr. & D. 506; Dunl. Adm. Pr. 111. It performs substantially the same office in the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts as the bill does in equity proceedings and the declaration in common-law practice; Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 572. In the United States the practice of the ecclesiastical courts has been continued in the use of the terms libel and libellant in divorce proceedings.

The libel should be a narrative, specific, clear, direct, certain, not general nor alternative; Dunl. Adm. Pr. 113.

The form of a libel is either simple or articulate. The simple form is when the cause of action is stated in a continuous narration, when it can be briefly set forth. The articulate form is when the cause of action is stated in distinct allegations or articles; Hall, Adm. Pr. 123; The Hoppet v. U. S., 7 Cra. (U. S.) 394, 3 L. Ed. 380. The material facts should be stated in distinct articles, with as much exactness and attention to times and circumstances as in a declaration at common law; Orne v. Townsend, 4 Mas. 541, Fed. Cas. No. 10,583.

Although there is no fixed formula for libels, and the courts will receive such an instrument from the party in such form as, his own skill or that of his counsel may enable him to give it, yet long usage has sanctioned forms, which it may be most prudent to adopt. The parts and arrangement of libels commonly employed are:

First, the address to the court.

Second, the names and descriptions of the parties. Persons competent to sue at common law may be parties libellants. The same regulations obtain in the admiralty courts and the common-law courts respecting those disqualified from suing in their own right or name. Married women prosecute by or with their husbands, or by prochein ami, when the husband has an adverse interest to hers; minors, by guardians, tutors, or prochein ami; lunatics and persons non compos mentis, by tutor, guardian ad litem, or committee; the rights of deceased persons are prosecuted by executors or administrators; and corporations are represented and proceeded against as at common law.

Third, the averments or allegations setting forth the cause of action. These should be conformable to the truth, and so framed as to correspond with the evidence. Every fact requisite to establish the libellant's right should be clearly stated, so that it may be directly met by the opposing party by admission, denial, or avoidance: this is the more necessary, because no proof can be given, or decree rendered, not covered by and conformable to the allegations; Dunl. Adm. Pr. 113; The Hoppet v. U. S., 7 Cra. (U. S.) 394, 3 L. Ed. 380. But the requirements upon these points are not so strict as in cases of declarations at common law; The Hoppet v. U. S., 7 Cra. (U. S.) 389, 3 L. Ed. 380; The Emily, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 386, 6 L. Ed. 116; The Merino, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 401, 6 L. Ed. 118. In no case is it necessary to assert anything which is matter of defence; U. S. v. Hayward, 2 Gall. 485, Fed. Cas. No. 15,336.

Fourth, the conclusion, or prayer for relief and process: the prayer should be for the specific relief desired; for general relief, as is usual in bills in chancery; the conclusion should also pray for general or particular process; Jenks v. Lewis, 3 Mas. 503, Fed. Cas. No. 7,279.

Interrogatories are sometimes annexed to the libel; when this is the case, there is usually a special prayer that the defendant may be required to answer the libel, and the interrogatories annexed and propounded. This, however, is a dangerous practice, because it renders the answers of the defendant evidence, which must be disproved by two witnesses, or by one witness corroborated by very strong circumstances.

The libel is the first proceeding in a suit in admiralty in the courts of the United States; Jenks v. Lewis, 3 Mas. 504, Fed. Cas. No. 7,279.

No mesne process can issue in the United States admiralty courts until a libel is filed; 1st Rule in Admiralty. The 22d and 23d rules require certain statements to be contained in the libel; and to those, and the forms in 2 Conkling, Adm. Pract., the reader is referred. And see Parsons, Marit. Law; Dunl. Adm. Pr.; Hall, Adm. Pr.; Ben. Adm.

In Torts. That which is written or printed, and published, calculated to injure the reputation of another by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt. 15 M. & W. 344.

Everything, written or printed, which reflects on the character of another and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been. 15 M. & W. 435.

A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, and tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Bac. Abr. tit. Libel; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, § 1; Com. v. Clap, 4 Mass. 168, 3 Am. Dec. 212; 9 B. & C. 172; 4 M. & R. 127; Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Crudup, 85 Ala. 519, 5 South. 332; McGinnis v. Knapp & Co., 109 Mo. 131, 18 S. W. 1134; Stewart v. Specific Co., 76 Ga. 280, 2 Am. St. Rep. 40; Buckstaff v. Viall, 84 Wis. 129, 54 N. W. 111; Stafford v. Morning Journal Ass'n, 68 Hun 467, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1008; 2 Kent 13; Poll. Torts § 286.

A censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign, made with a malicious or mischievous intent towards government, magistrates, or individuals. Steele v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 215; McCorkle v. Binns, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 340, 6 Am. Dec. 420; Tillson v. Robbins, 68 Me. 295, 28 Am. Rep. 50.

A written statement published without lawful justification or excuse, calculated to convey to those to whom it is published an imputation on the plaintiff, injurious to his trade, or holding him up to hatred, contempt, or ridicule. 7 App. Cas. 741.

Published words imputing to another any act which tends to disgrace him or deprive him of the confidence and good will of society, or lessen its esteem for him. Culmer v. Canby, 101 Fed. 195, 41 C. C. A. 302; Martin v. Press Pub. Co., 93 App. Div. 531, 87 N. Y. Supp. 859.

There is a well-settled distinction between verbal slander and written, printed, or pictured libel; and this not only in reference to the consequences, as subjecting the party to an indictment, but also as to the character of the accusations or imputations essential to sustain a civil action to recover damages. To write and publish maliciously anything of another, which either makes him ridiculous or holds him out as an unworthy man, is held to be actionable, or punishable criminally, when the speaking of the same words would not be so; 1 Saund., 6th ed. 247 a; 4 Taunt. 355; McClurg v. Ross, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 219; Heard, Lib. & S. § 74; Miller v. Butler, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 71, 52 Am. Dec. 768; Van Ness v. Hamilton, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 349; Colby v. Reynolds, 6 Vt. 489, 27 Am. Dec. 574.

The reasons for this distinction between libel and slander are thus stated: (1) a libel is permanent and may circulate through many hands; (2) it shows greater malignity on the part of its author than a slander; (3) it is more likely to lead to a breach of the peace; Brett, Com. 453.

The presumption that words are defamatory arises much more readily in cases of libel than in cases of slander; Collins v. Dispatch Pub. Co., 152 Pa. 187, 25 Atl. 546, 34 Am. St. Rep. 636.

The reduction of the defamatory matter to writing or printing is the most usual mode of conveying it. The writing may be on any substance and made with any instrument. The exhibition of a libellous picture is equally criminal; 2 Campb. 512; 5 Co. 125 b; Com. v. Sharpless, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 91, 7 Am. Dec. 632; Odg. L. & Sl. 6, 20, 22. Fixing a gallows at a man's door, burning him in effigy, or exhibiting him in any ignominious manner, is a libel; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 2; 11 East 226; Johnson v. Com. (Pa.) 14 Atl. 425. So a libel may be published by speaking or singing it in the presence of others; 7 Ad. & E. 233; or by a caricature, a chalk mark on a wall, or a statue; Brett, Com. 452.

The probate of a will containing libellous matter is in the nature of a libel; Gallagher's Estate, 10 Pa. Dist. R. 733.

The publication of a libel subjects the person who is legally responsible for it to both civil and criminal liability.

Publication. It must be shown that there was a writing and that it was published; 7 App. Cas. 741. The plaintiff must prove the publication; 4 B. & Ald. 143. To constitute a publication the writer must communicate the matter complained of to at least one third person; [1891] 1 Q. B. 527; and a communication to a wife containing reflections on her husband is a publication; 13 C. B. 836; but not where the communication is from her husband; 20 Q. B. Div. 635. To read a libellous letter to another is a publication; Miller v. Donovan, 16 Misc. 453, 39 N. Y. Supp. 820; or to dictate it to a stenographer who gives it to another clerk to be copied; [1891] 1 Q. B. 524; (contra, Owen v. Pub. Co., 32 App. Div. 465, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1033); or to a stenographer who typewrites and mails it; Gambrill v. Schooley, 93 Md. 48, 48 Atl. 730, 52 L. R. A. 87, 86 Am. St. Rep. 414; but sending a writing in an unsealed envelope is not a publication, if not shown to have been read by others; Fry v. McCord, 95 Tenn. 678, 33 S. W. 568; nor is sending a defamatory cablegram, though in a cypher which could be easily interpreted; 23 T. L. R. 234.

The communication of libellous matter to another, requesting or intending that the latter should publish it, renders one liable as the publisher of a libel; 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 16; and a client who communicates defamatory facts to his attorney is responsible; Wimbish v. Hamilton, 47 La. Ann. 246, 16 South. 856. So where a husband and wife read together a libellous letter to the wife; Kramer v. Perkins, 102 Minn. 455, 113 N. W. 1062, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1141; and where a letter to a wife reflecting on her husband is read by her; 13 C. B. 836.

Where the defendant kept a pamphlet shop and the libel was sold by the defendant's servant in her absence and without her knowledge of its contents, it was held that the defendant was guilty of publishing a libel; 1 Barnardiston, K. B. 306; 2 Sess. Cas. 33; see also 5 Burr. 2686, where Mansfield, C. J., said in a like case that proof of such facts was prima facie evidence of publication, but liable to be contradicted.

Where a circulating library circulates a book knowing it to contain a libel, it is publication.

Where the action was against news venders for publishing libel by selling a copy of a newspaper containing it, and the jury found that the defendant did not know that it contained any libel and were not negligent in failing to have such knowledge, it was held that they were not liable; 16 L. R. Q. B. Div. 354; Street v. Johnson, 80 Wis. 455, 50 N. W. 395, 14 L. R. A. 203, 27 Am. St. Rep. 42; so of a porter who delivers parcels containing libellous handbills in ignorance of the contents of the parcel and in performance of his ordinary occupation; 2 M. & R. 54.

It is well settled that the sale of a newspaper is, prima facie, the publication of a libel contained in it, but not if it is shown that the vendor did not know that the paper contained a libel, and that his ignorance was not due to any negligence on his part, that he had no ground for supposing that the paper was likely to contain libellous matter; Street v. Johnson, 80 Wis. 455, 50 N. W. 395, 14 L. R. A. 203, 27 Am. St. Rep. 42. An action against the seller of a newspaper containing a libel is not maintainable without proof that some one read the libel; Prescott v. Tousey, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 12.

Every repetition of defamatory words is a new publication and constitutes a new cause of action. In publishing a libel one is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act; Wynne v. Parsons, 57 Conn. 73, 17 Atl. 362. It is not the law of the place where libellous articles are printed, but where they are published, which makes the words actionable; Haskell v. Bailey, 63 Fed. 873, 11 C. C. A. 476, 25 U. S. App. 99. If a sovereign of a foreign state be the subject of a libel, he is entitled to the same redress in the municipal courts of the country of the libeller as any subject of that country; but he cannot complain if the judgment, after a fair trial according to the laws of the country, be adverse to him; 2 Phill. Int. L. 135.

Evidence of publication, in order to sustain an indictment upon a libel, must be to the same effect as in case of a civil action brought thereon. The publication of the libel, in order to warrant either civil action or indictment must be malicious; evidence of the malice may be either express or implied. Express proof is not necessary; for where a man publishes a writing which on the face of it is libellous, the law presumes he does so with that malicious intention which constitutes the offence, and it is unnecessary, on the part of the prosecution, to prove any circumstance from which malice may be inferred; 4 B. & C. 247; Hagan v. Hendry, 18 Md. 177; White v. Nicholls, 3 How. (U. S.) 266, 11 L. Ed. 591; Mix v. Woodward, 12 Conn. 262. Malice need not be shown, and absence of it will only go in mitigation of damages; Schuyler v. Busbey, 68 Hun 474, 23 N. Y. Supp. 102.

What Constitutes a Libel. One is not liable for words not in their nature defamatory, though special damage result from their publication; Reid v. Journal Co., 20 R. I. 120, 37 Atl. 637; Fanning v. Chace, 17 R. I. 388, 22 Atl. 275, 13 L. R. A. 134, 33 Am. St. Rep. 878; Prosser v. Callis, 117 Ind. 105, 19 N. E. 735. The words must be defamatory in their nature and must in fact disparage the character; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 57, 72 Am. Dec. 420; and if they do not, no action will lie, no matter what the author intended; Mosier v. Stoll, 119 Ind. 244, 20 N. E. 752; see Petsch v. Printing Co., 40 Minn. 291, 41 N. W. 1034. If the matter is understood as scandalous, and is calculated to excite ridicule and abhorrence against the party intended, it is libellous, however it may be expressed; Com. v. Chapman, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 68; Com. v. Sweney, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 173; Croasdale v. Bright, 6 Houst. (Del.) 52; Stokes v. Stokes, 76 Hun 314, 28 N. Y. Supp. 165; but wherever the words are susceptible of two meanings, it is a question for the jury to decide what meaning was in fact conveyed to the readers; 7 App. Cas. 741; Hanchett v. Chiatovich, 101 Fed. 742, 41 C. C. A. 648.

When suit is brought on words not in themselves actionable, an allegation must be made that they contain a libellous meaning; 7 App. Cas. 748.

Any publication which has a tendency to disturb the public peace or good order of society is indictable as a libel. "This crime is committed," says Professor Greenleaf, "by the publication of writings blaspheming the Supreme Being, or turning the doctrines of the Christian religion into contempt and ridicule; or tending by their immodesty to corrupt the mind and to destroy the sense of decency, morality, and good order; or wantonly to defame or indecorously to calumniate the economy, order, and constitution of things which make up the general system of law and government of the country; to degrade the administration of government or of justice; or to cause animosities between our own and any foreign government, by personal abuse of its sovereign, its ambassadors, or other public ministers; and by malicious defamations expressed in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is living, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. This descriptive catalogue embraces all the several species of this offence which are indictable at common law; all of which it is believed are indictable in the United States, either at common law or by virtue of particular statutes." 3 Greenl. Ev. § 164. See Com. v. Clap, 4 Mass. 163, 3 Am. Dec. 212; Steele v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 214; White v. Nicholls, 3 How. (U. S.) 266, 11 L. Ed. 591; 5 Co. 125; 4 Term 126; Allen v. Pub. Co., 81 Wis. 120, 50 N. W. 1093; Walker v. Wickens, 49 Kan. 42, 30 Pac. 181.

Libels have been classified according to their objects: (1) Libels which impute to a person the commission of a crime; (2) libels which have a tendency to injure him in his office, profession, calling, or trade; (3) libels which hold him up to scorn and ridicule and to feelings of contempt or execration, impair him in the enjoyment of general society, and injure those imperfect rights of friendly intercourse and mutual benevolence which man has with respect to man. Newell, Slan. & L. 67.

In the following cases the publications have been held to be actionable: to write to a person soliciting relief from a charitable society, that she presents unworthy claims, which it is hoped the members will reject forever, and that she has squandered away money, already obtained by her from the benevolent, in printing circulars abusive of the secretary of the society; 12 Q. B. 624; to publish of a Protestant archbishop that he endeavors to convert Roman Catholic priests by promises of money and preferment; 5 Bingh. 17; to charge that persons have confederated to mismanage the affairs of a company, so as to destroy the value of its stock and injure the other shareholders; Wallis v. Walker, 73 Tex. 8, 11 S. W. 123; to publish a ludicrous story of an individual in a newspaper, it if tend to render him the subject of public ridicule, although he had previously told the same story of himself; 6 Bingh. 409; to publish in a newspaper that a certain man is dead; Cohen v. New York Times Co., 74 Misc. 618, 132 N. Y. Supp. 1; to publish of a candidate for congress that he is a "pettifogging shyster"; Bailey v. Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251; to write and publish of any man that he is "thought no more of than a horse thief and a counterfeiter"; Nelson v. Musgrave, 10 Mo. 648; or that he is slippery; Peterson v. Tel. Co., 65 Minn. 18, 67 N. W. 646, 33 L. R. A. 302; or that he is a dangerous, able, and seditious agitator; Wilkes v. Shields, 62 Minn. 426, 64 N. W. 921; to publish of a member of congress, "He is a fawning sycophant, a misrepresentative in congress, and a grovelling office seeker;" Thomas v. Croswell, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 264, 5 Am. Dec. 269; to charge one with joining the Mormons; Witcher v. Jones, 17 N. Y. Supp. 491; in a newspaper article to call a person named Buskstaff, Bucksniff, because of its similitude to "Pecksniff"; Buckstaff v. Viall, 84 Wis. 129, 54 N. W. 111; for a notary public falsely and maliciously to protest for non-payment the acceptance of a manufacturer and then send the draft with such protest to the source from whence it came; May v. Jones, 88 Ga. 308, 14 S. E. 552, 15 L. R. A. 637, 30 Am. St. Rep. 154; but see Hirshfield v. Bank, 83 Tex. 452, 18 S. W. 743, 15 L. R. A. 639, 29 Am. St. Rep. 660; of a publication that one was arrested and put in jail charged with theft; Belo v. Fuller, 84 Tex. 450, 19 S. W. 616, 31 Am. St. Rep. 75; of words imputing want of chastity; Collins v. Pub. Co., 152 Pa. 187, 25 Atl. 546, 34 Am. St. Rep. 636; Indianapolis Journal Newspaper Co. v. Pugh, 6 Ind. App. 510, 33 N. E. 991.

A declaration which alleges that the defendant charged the plaintiff, an attorney, with being guilty of "sharp practice," which is averred to mean disreputable practice, charges a libelous imputation; 4 M. & W. 440.

An advertisement describing a horse as stolen and naming the supposed thief is libellous; Simmons v. Holster, 13 Minn. 249 (Gil.

232); so of a newspaper article setting forth that the plaintiff was living in extreme poverty and destitution; Moffatt v. Cauldwell, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 26; and of words which tend to impeach the honesty and integrity of jurors in their office; Byers v. Martin, 2 Colo. 605, 25 Am. Rep. 755; the publication of false and malicious statements about a church member, accusing him of disturbing the peace of the church and censuring him therefor, is actionable in itself; Over v. Hildebrand, 92 Ind. 19; and the publication of the suicide of a man falsely charging that it was induced by the actions of his wife; Bradley v. Cramer, 59 Wis. 309, 18 N. W. 268, 48 Am. Rep. 511.

A publication in a newspaper of symptoms of a patient who had taken a certain patent medicine, such article being used as an advertisement, is libellous where it tended to hold the person up to contempt and ridicule; Stewart v. Specific Co., 76 Ga. 280, 2 Am. St. Rep. 40; a letter from the publisher of a newspaper, or an article published in a newspaper in the form of a letter from the publisher to the proprietor of a medicine, saying: "Your advertisement will not be received in the columns of the L. although you offer us big pay. We have repeatedly advised our readers that by the manufacture and sale of such medicines the public are swindled out of their money," was held libellous per se; Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Wernich, 95 Wis. 164, 70 N. W. 160.

A publication stating that a man has been arrested on account of his criminal evidence in a certain case is libellous; Godshalk v. Metzgar, 23 W. N. C. (Pa.) 541; or that he would be an anarchist if he thought it would pay; Lewis v. Daily News Co., 81 Md. 466, 32 Atl. 246, 29 L. R. A. 59; and a publication charging that a breach of promise suit was about to be brought against a person is libellous, the plaintiff having been at the time and a number of years before a married man with a family; Morey v. Morning Journal Ass'n, 123 N. Y. 207, 25 N. E. 161, 9 L. R. A. 621, 20 Am. St. Rep. 730.

The following have also been held libellous: Falsely charging that the plaintiff was of unsound mind; Totten v. Pub. Ass'n, 109 Fed. 289; falsely charging that another is guilty of a crime; Palmer v. Mahin, 120 Fed. 737, 57 C. C. A. 41; Abraham v. Baldwin, 52 Fla. 151, 42 South. 591, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1051, 10 Ann. Cas. 1148 (also ground for a criminal prosecution; State v. Haskins, 109 Ia. 656, 80 N. W. 1063, 47 L. R. A. 223, 77 Am. St. Rep. 560); charging that a person has been bribed to testify as a witness; Atlanta News Pub. Co. v. Medlock, 123 Ga. 714, 51 S. E. 756, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139; charging that a school director lets contracts and furnishes supplies where there is a statute forbidding school directors to be interested in the erection of schoolhouses; Woolley v. Publishing Co., 47 Or. 619, 84 Pac. 473, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498; charging a person with graft; State v. Sheridan, 14 Idaho 222, 93 Pac. 656, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497; charging one as a habitual drunkard in a petition for appointment of a guardian, if made without probable cause; Thompson v. Rake, 140 Ia. 232, 118 N. W. 279, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921; charging one with betraying his trust as a delegate of a fraternal order, in favor of a rival branch; Doherty v. Lynett, 155 Fed. 681; charging that a woman was the mistress of the plaintiff; Dempster v. Mann, 157 Fed. 319; using plaintiff's photograph to illustrate an account of an Italian bandit; De Sando v. Herald Co., 88 App. Div. 492, 85 N. Y. Supp. 111; falsely charging that plaintiff's husband had instituted divorce proceedings against plaintiff; O'Neill v. Star Co., 121 App. Div. 849, 106 N. Y. Supp. 973; representing an author as a literary freak and ridiculing his private life; Triggs v. Pub. Ass'n, 179 N. Y. 144, 71 N. E. 739, 66 L. R. A. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 841, 1 Ann. Cas. 326; a newspaper article regarding a suicide fiend, although the name used is not that of the plaintiff; Wandt v. Hearst's Chicago American, 129 Wis. 419, 109 N. W. 70, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 919, 116 Am. St. Rep. 959, 9 Ann. Cas. 864; referring in a newspaper to a woman as a negress; Express Pub. Co. v. Orsborn (Tex.) 151 S. W. 574; charging the sale of adulterated food as pure food; Dabold v. Pub. Co., 107 Wis. 357, 83 N. W. 639; Witte v. Weinstein, 115 Ia. 247, 88 N. W. 349.

Words of praise and congratulations may be actionable if used in an ironical sense; Martin v. The Picayune, 115 La. 979, 40 South. 376, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861.

An editor copying a libellous article from another paper, giving his authority but expressing his disbelief of some of the charges, although neither affirming nor denying the libellous charges, may be guilty of libel, whether malice be shown or not; Hotchkiss v. Oliphant, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 510. The headlines of a publication are important in determining the question of a libel, and they cannot be disregarded, for they often render a publication libellous on its face, which without them would not necessarily be so; Landon v. Watkins, 61 Minn. 137, 63 N. W. 615.

What is Not a Libel Per Se. An advertisement containing the portrait of a woman, with the statement that she is a nurse and personally used and recommended a certain brand of whisky as a tonic; Peck v. Tribune Co., 154 Fed. 330, 83 C. C. A. 202; a newspaper article charging a candidate for office with impoliteness and lack of party principles; Duffy v. Evening Post Co., 109 App. Div. 471, 96 N. Y. Supp. 629; an intimation that a candidate at an election of a voluntary association is in debt; Nichols v. Daily

Reporter Co., 30 Utah 74, 83 Pac. 573, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 339, 116 Am. St. Rep. 796, 8 Ann. Cas. 841; an article referring generally to concerns engaged in the trading stamp business without being specific; Watson v. Detroit Journal Co., 143 Mich. 430, 107 N. W. 81, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 8 Ann. Cas. 131; a fair comment upon a literary work which is the expression of an honest opinion; [1903] 2 K. B. 100; a document published in England, calculated to disturb the government of some foreign country; 70 J. P. 4; statements in circulars which merely disparage and express an unfavorable opinion of the goods of another or of a business rival; Nonpareil Cork Mfg. Co. v. Keasbey & Mattison Co., 108 Fed. 721; Victor Safe & Lock Co. v. Deright, 147 Fed. 211, 77 C. C. A. 437, 8 Ann. Cas. 809; a newspaper article charging the complainant with taking part in a revolt in Brazil; Crashley v. Pub. Co., 179 N. Y. 27, 71 N. E. 258, 1 Ann. Cas. 196; accusing one of being a member of a labor union and an agitator; Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 162 Ind. 102, 69 N. E. 1003, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091; imputing adultery to a woman (prior to the English act of 1891); 18 L. Q. R. 255; describing a character in a novel as a gross eater and calling him by plaintiff's name; Dailey v. Bobb's-Merrill Co., 136 N. Y. Supp. 570.

Words are often considered actionable when spoken of clergymen which would not be so if spoken of others; Newell, Defamation (2d ed.) 186; Potter v. Publishing Co., 68 App. Div. 95, 74 N. Y. Supp. 317. The statements must be such as, if true, would unfit him to continue his calling, and, if so, they are actionable per se; Porter v. Publishing Co., 20 R. I. 88, 37 Atl. 535; Piper v. Woolman, 43 Neb. 280, 61 N. W. 588; Cole v. Millspaugh, 111 Minn. 159, 126 N. W. 626, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152, 137 Am. St. Rep. 546, 20 Ann. Cas. 717; Shurtleff v. Parker, 130 Mass. 293, 39 Am. Rep. 454; Ritchie v. Widdemer, 59 N. J. L. 290, 35 Atl. 825.

Libel or slander against a patent right is actionable; Palmer v. Travers, 20 Fed. 501; Bell v. Mfg. Co., 65 Ga. 452; Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 484; and a public denial of a patent right, if malicious, is also actionable; Big. Lead. Cas. Torts 42; but not unless special damage is caused; 5 Q. B. 624; L. R. 9 Ex. 218. A public denial that the patentee or his assignor was a true inventor is actionable if it be malicious and cause special damage to the owner of the patent; L. R. 15 Ch. Div. 514; Emack v. Kane, 34 Fed. 46. But an assertion of title in such cases by way of warning or defence, if made in good faith, is not actionable; Webb's Pollock, Torts 389.

A patentee may warn the public not to buy patented articles except from him; Hovey v. Pencil Co., 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 523; Croft v. Richardson, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 356; and it is not a libel to issue a circular in good faith forbidding persons to buy articles claimed to be an infringement; L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 1. There must be malice or that want of good faith which is, by legal intendment, equivalent thereto; 19 Ch. Div. 386; L. R. 4 Q. B. 730, in which it was termed "an action of a new kind." But see L. R. 9 Ex. 218, in which a declaration was held good where the disparagement was a statement that the goods were inferior, and alleging special damage. In that case Bramwell, B., said that the gist of the action which makes it maintainable is the publication of an untrue statement productive of special damage. The nature of the action was thus characterized in [1892] 2 Q. B. 527: "Such an action is not one of libel or slander, but an action on the case for damage wilfully and intentionally done without just occasion or excuse, analogous to an action for slander of title." The latter, it is said, having been formerly confined to real estate, has been extended "to the protection of title to chattels and of exclusive interests analogous to property, though not property in the strict sense, like patent-rights and copyright." Webb's Pollock, Torts 389. The suggestion that these rights are not property in any sense is liable to provoke criticism in this country, and it may be suggested that it is their full recognition as property which affords the basis of their protection by right of action at law in such cases.

But not alone are patents within the protection of this principle. It is a general rule that for false and malicious statements respecting his personal property the owner may have an action if he show (1) that statements were made (2) which were untrue (3) to the special damage of the plaintiff; 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 130; L. R. 9 Ex. 218; Boynton v. Stocking Co., 146 Mass. 219, 15 N. E. 507; Tobias v. Harland, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 537; Paull v. Halferty, 63 Pa. 46, 3 Am. Rep. 518; 4 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 24; Newell, Defamation 216.

The rule has been applied in case of disparaging statements as to a public dinner served at a hotel; Dooling v. Pub. Co., 144 Mass. 258, 10 N. E. 809, 59 Am. Rep. 83; the "Cardiff Giant"; Gott v. Pulsifer, 122 Mass. 235, 23 Am. Rep. 322; a race-horse; Wilson v. Dubois, 35 Minn. 471, 29 N. W. 68, 59 Am. Rep. 335; milk sold by plaintiff; Brooks v. Harison, 91 N. Y. 83; copyrighted books; Swan v. Tappan, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 104.

Actions by and against Corporations. A corporation cannot be the subject of criminal libel; Com. v. Cochran, 16 Pa. Dist. R. 313; contra, State v. Boogher, 3 Mo. App. 442. A corporation may sue for a libel or slander upon it in the way of its business or trade; Gross Coal Co. v. Rose, 126 Wis. 24, 105 N. W. 225, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 110 Am. St. Rep. 894, 5 Ann. Cas. 549; a corporation is liable civilly for a libel in a letter written by its manager upon its letter head, although the libellous statement was not known to or assented to by it; Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Mach. Co., 96 S. W. 551, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 861, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023; and knowingly publishing a libel is ratification of such agent's act; id. A telegraph company is not liable for the transmission of a libellous message over its wires, where such message was handled as a matter of routine business by its agents; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Cashman, 149 Fed. 367, 81 C. C. A. 5, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140, 9 Ann. Cas. 693.

Libel of a Class. Ordinarily an action for libel will not lie by one of a class for a libel on the whole class; e. g. a libel on Catholic clergymen; People v. Eastman, 188 N. Y. 478, 81 N. E. 459, 11 Ann. Cas. 302; or on all persons engaged in the trading stamp business; Watson v. Detroit Journal Co., 143 Mich. 430, 107 N. W. 81, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 8 Ann. Cas. 131. It is doubtful whether a soldier in the Civil War could sue for a libel on the whole army; Palmer v. City of Concord, 48 N. H. 211, 97 Am. Dec. 605.

But where the class is small, it is held otherwise. An officer of a regiment may sue for a libel on the entire regiment; 1 Murray (Scot.) 196; a member of a jury for a libel on the whole jury; Byers v. Martin, 2 Colo. 605, 25 Am. Rep. 755; a member of a board of trustees for a libel which charged them with a corrupt combination; Schomberg v. Walker, 132 Cal. 224, 64 Pac. 290. If the libel is against a part of a group, it must be shown that it concerned the plaintiff; Caruth v. Richeson, 96 Mo. 186, 9 S. W. 633; Hardy v. Williamson, 86 Ga. 551, 12 S. E. 874, 22 Am. St. Rep. 479. An osteopath having an office in a building may recover for a publication by physicians and dentists occupying offices in the building objecting to renting its offices to osteopaths, criminal practitioners, quacks, etc.; Lathrop v. Sundberg, 55 Wash. 144, 104 Pac. 176, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 381; a member of a vestry for a libel on the vestry as a whole; Goldsborough v. Orem & Johnson, 103 Md. 671, 64 Atl. 36; so a member of the W. C. T. U. for a libel on the whole membership in a certain city; Street v. Johnson, 80 Wis. 455, 50 N. W. 395, 14 L. R. A. 203, 27 Am. St. Rep. 42. One who libels a whole family must take the risk of libelling each member of it: Fenstermaker v. Pub. Co., 13 Utah 532, 45 Pac. 1097, 35 L. R. A. 611.

Actions by Third Parties. A publication which alleges that plaintiff's sister has been arrested for larceny gives plaintiff a cause of action; Merrill v. Pub. Co., 197 Mass. 185, 83 N. E. 419. Where one published libellous words against another's wife, and the mental anguish resulted in her physical illness, it was held that he could recover for the loss of services; Garrison v. Pub. Ass'n, 150 App. Div. 689, 135 N. Y. Supp. 721.

A corporation may recover for an article which charges one of its officers as being an ex-criminal; New York Bureau of Information v. Ridgway-Thayer Co., 119 App. Div. 339, 104 N. Y. Supp. 202; and it may recover for a libel upon it, as distinct from that upon its individual members; Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Machine Co., 96 S. W. 551, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 861, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023; but charging a business corporation with being composed of fraudulent and criminal persons is not ground for an action for slander; Hapgoods v. Crawford, 125 App. Div. 856, 110 N. Y. Supp. 122.

Evidence. Evidence is admissible in a suit for libel to rebut the defense of fair comment and prove malice; [1906] 2 K. B. 627; also of plaintiff's social and business standing; Morning Journal Ass'n v. Duke, 128 Fed. 657, 63 C. C. A. 459; or of his family relations; Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637, 106 N. W. 547; Enos v. Enos, 135 N. Y. 609, 32 N. E. 123; but the grief felt by the plaintiff's wife or the influence thereof on the plaintiff's mind are not elements of damages; Dennison v. Pub. Co., 82 Neb. 675, 118 N. W. 568, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362. The defendant may testify to his lack of malice and that his feelings toward plaintiff were friendly; Dorn v. Cooper, 139 Ia. 742, 117 N. W. 1, 118 N. W. 35, 16 Ann. Cas. 744; particularly on the question of punitive damages; Henn v. Horn, 56 Ohio St. 442, 47 N. E. 248. Where the language is unambiguous, defendant may not testify as to what he meant; State v. Heacock, 106 Ia. 191, 76 N. W. 654; nor that he did not intend to charge the commission of a crime; Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296, 48 N. W. 507; contra, Faxon v. Jones, 176 Mass. 206, 57 N. E. 359.

Defences. When publication is proved, the defendant may show either that the words complained of are true or that they are not malicious. These two defences are known as justification and privilege.

Justification in Criminal Cases. In prosecutions the common-law rule was that the person charged may not justify by pleading the truth in evidence; 11 Mod. 99; because, if the publication is malicious, it is equally to the public interest to punish the publisher of it, whether it was true or not.

By Lord Campbell's Act (1843) it is provided that in an indictment for libel, the truth may be inquired into, but shall not amount to a defence unless it is for the public benefit that the matters charged should be published. This statute does not apply to blasphemous, obscene, or seditious publications; 2 Cox, C. C. 45; 12 L. R. Ir. 29; and where the statute does not apply, truth is no defence; 10 Cox, C. C. 356; 5 Q. B. D. 1; 4 F. & F. 1089. In this country it has been held that on an indictment for libel the truth is a justification and may be given in evidence; King v. Root, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 114, 21 Am. Dec. 102; Lanning v. Christy, 30 Ohio St. 115, 27 Am. Rep. 431; and that though ordinarily not a defence, it may be given to negative malice where justifiable purpose is shown; Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 304, 15 Am. Dec. 214; but the law in Massachusetts was subsequently changed by statute so that the truth, with good motives and for justifiable ends, is a complete justification. As to statutes in other states, see infra.

In a criminal prosecution, it is sufficient publication if the libel has been shown to the prosecutor and to no other person, as such a publication tends to a breach of the peace; 1 Stark. 471; 7 Cox, C. C. 25.

Ordinarily malice is to be implied from mere publication; justification or extenuation must proceed from the defendant; but where the communication is privileged, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove malice; Nalle v. Oyster, 230 U. S. 165, 33 Sup. Ct. 1043, 57 L. Ed. 1439.

Justification—In Civil Actions. The defendant may justify by pleading the truth in evidence; Perry v. Man, 1 R. I. 263; Fry v. Bennett, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 54; Hall v. Dairy Co., 15 Wash. 542, 46 Pac. 1049; but the truth must be as broad as the defamatory accusation in order to constitute a complete defence; Thompson v. Pioneer-Press Co., 37 Minn. 285, 33 N. W. 856. It is not sufficient merely to allege that the charge is true; Atteberry v. Powell, 29 Mo. 429, 77 Am. Dec. 579; Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 158, 31 Am. Rep. 757; and the plea of justification is that the whole statement is substantially true; 3 B. & Ald. 673; gross exaggeration destroys the plea; 6 Bing. 266. The existence of a rumor to the same effect as a libel is not admissible as evidence on a plea of justification; 8 Q. B. D. 491.

To prove justification for imputing a crime, the evidence must be sufficient to overcome the legal presumption of innocence, but this need not go to the extent of convincing the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the truth; Abraham v. Baldwin, 52 Fla. 151, 42 South. 591, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1051, 10 Ann. Cas. 1148. A criticism which ridicules an author's private life cannot be justified on the ground that it was a mere jest; Triggs v. Pub. Ass'n, 179 N. Y. 144, 71 N. E. 739, 66 L. R. A. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 841, 1 Ann. Cas. 326.

It has been held that if the defendant fails to plead a complete justification, he will not be allowed to prove his defence; Orvis v. Dana, 1 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 268; although the rule is generally established that a defendant may justify part of a libel containing several distinct charges; 2 Bing. N. C. 664.

Either party is entitled to a bill of particulars of any charge not set forth with sufficient detail in the pleadings to enable the party to meet it; Tilton v. Beecher, 59 N. Y. 176, 17 Am. Rep. 337; Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 321; McDonald v. People, 126 Ill. 150, 18 N. E. 817, 9 Am. St. Rep. 547; Williams v. Com., 91 Pa. 493; but see Orvis v. Dana, 1 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 268, where it was held that the proper practice to obtain particulars of a justification is by motion to make the answer more definite.

A plea of justification is no evidence of malice; 7 Q. B. 68; 14 L. J. Q. B. 196. In an action for libel, under plea of not guilty, evidence is admissible in mitigation of damages that there was a general suspicion and belief of the truth of the charge, and under the plea of privileged publication such evidence is admissible as pertinent to the question of express malice; Montgomery v. Knox, 23 Fla. 595, 3 South. 211.

Privilege. Publications considered privileged in actions for libel are divided into those which are absolutely privileged and those which are conditionally or qualifiedly privileged; Coogler v. Rhodes, 38 Fla. 240, 21 South. 109, 56 Am. St. Rep. 170 (but slanderous words spoken to a former pastor of a church are not privileged; Carpenter v. Willey, 65 Vt. 168, 26 Atl. 488). A plea that an accusation against a clergyman (otherwise libellous per se) is a good plea of qualified privilege when it asserts that it was preferred according to the usage and discipline of the church; Piper v. Woolman, 43 Neb. 280, 61 N. W. 588; and the collecting of evidence against a school principal and sending a copy of charges against her to the board of education and to her, is privileged; Galligan v. Kelly, 31 N. Y. Supp. 561. Pleadings filed in a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission are privileged; Duncan v. R. Co., 72 Fed. 808, 19 C. C. A. 202. Communications between a stockholder and the managing agent of a corporation concerning an employé are privileged; Scullin v. Harper, 78 Fed. 460, 24 C. C. A. 169. A commercial agency which makes it its business to pry into the affairs of another to give information thereof to others must see to it that it communicates nothing that is false, and if it does, it will be liable in damages to the party injured; Johnson v. Bradstreet Co., 77 Ga. 172, 4 Am. St. Rep. 77; publications of such agencies issued to their subscribers generally are not privileged communications; Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 9 S. W. 753, 2 L. R. A. 405, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768.

Communications made in good faith by a commercial agency at the request of a subscriber, when defamatory of another, are not privileged; [1908] A. C. 390. See that title.

A false publication that a business house is insolvent is libellous per se; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 22 S. W. 358, 724, 20 L. R. A. 138, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592. The publication of a railroad company in a monthly circular to their servants of the name of a former employé and the reason of his dismissal was held to be privileged; [1891] 2 Q. B. 189. No allegation, however false and malicious, contained in answers to interrogatories in affidavits duly made, or any other proceedings in courts of justice, or petitions to the legislature, are indictable; 4 Co. 14 b; 1 Saund. 131, n. 1; Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 23; Wilson v. Sullivan, 81 Ga. 238, 7 S. E. 274; Hawk v. Evans, 76 Ia. 593, 41 N. W. 368, 14 Am. St. Rep. 247; Runge v. Franklin, 72 Tex. 585, 10 S. W. 721, 3 L. R. A. 417, 13 Am. St. Rep. 833; Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. v. Ryan, 46 Ill. App. 313.

A petition charging one as an habitual drunkard in a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian, if made without probable cause, was held not privileged; Thompson v. Rake, 140 Ia. 232, 118 N. W. 279, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921.

In all cases of libels published confidentially, and other privileged communications, express malice must be shown, or inferred from circumstances, and this is always a question for a jury; 8 B. & C. 578; Lancey v. Bryant, 30 Me. 466; Bodwell v. Osgood, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 379, 15 Am. Dec. 228; Erwin v. Sumrow, 8 N. C. 472; Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 385, 30 Am. Rep. 367.

Libels in Special Cases. The public acts of public men may be lawfully made the subject of comment and criticism, not only by the press but also by the public; but while criticism, if in good faith, is privileged, however severe, false allegations of fact are not privileged, and if the charges are false, good faith and probable cause are no defence, though they may mitigate the damages; Post Pub. Co. v. Hallam, 59 Fed. 530, 8 C. C. A. 201, 16 U. S. App. 613; Com. v. Clap, 4 Mass. 169, 3 Am. Dec. 212; Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 116. A newspaper article reflecting on the official conduct and character of a state officer who is a candidate for re-election, written in good faith, is privileged; Coleman v. MacLennan, 78 Kan. 711, 98 Pac. 281, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361, 130 Am. St. Rep. 390.

The freedom of criticism upon public men is confined to fair comment on their official acts and does not permit an assault on their private character; Hallam v. Pub. Co., 55 Fed. 456. The imputation of base, unworthy, or corrupt motives is not privileged; for the falseness of the charge is prima facie evidence of malice, and malice will render even the truth actionable; Post Pub. Co. v. Moloney, 50 Ohio St. 71, 33 N. E. 921; nor does the right of criticism embrace any right to make a false statement of his acts, involving his integrity or faithfulness in the discharge of his duties; Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296, 48 N. W. 507. Memorials or petitions addressed to those in authority praying for the removal of inferior officers, or the redress of fancied grievances, are prima facie privileged, and express malice must be shown before that privilege can be taken away; 6 C. & P. 548; White v. Nicholls, 3 How. (U. S.) 266, 11 L. Ed. 591; Van Wyck v. Aspinwall, 17 N. Y. 190; Kent v. Bongartz, 15 R. I. 72, 22 Atl. 1023, 2 Am. St. Rep. 876; if presented to the wrong party under a bona fide mistake, it will still be privileged; 5 B. & Ald. 642; 13 U. C. Q. B. 534; contra, 10 Q. B. 899; but if malice be shown, the mere fact that it is vented through a petition will not make the publication privileged; Howard v. Thompson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 319, 34 Am. Dec. 238; Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 23. Malice may be inferred when it is printed and circulated but never presented before the legislature; State v. Burnham, 9 N. H. 34, 31 Am. Dec. 217; the publication of falsehood and calumny against public officers or candidates for public office is an offence most dangerous to the people and deserves punishment, because the people may be deceived and reject the best citizens to their great injury; Sillars v. Collier, 151 Mass. 50, 23 N. E. 723, 6 L. R. A. 680; Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 79 Mich. 266, 44 N. W. 783, 7 L. R. A. 309; Cotulla v. Kerr, 74 Tex. 89, 11 S. W. 1058, 15 Am. St. Rep. 819; Field v. Colson, 93 Ky. 347, 20 S. W. 264.

With regard to candidates for public office, a somewhat broader license is allowed, as it is claimed that the very fact of candidacy puts the character of the candidate in issue, so far as his qualifications and fitness for the office are concerned, and that the public have a right to be informed as to the character of those who seek their votes; Com. v. Clap, 4 Mass. 163, 3 Am. Dec. 212. In some cases it is held that where there is an honest belief in the truth of the charges made, and the publication is in good faith, one is not responsible, even for publishing an untruth; Bays v. Hunt, 60 Ia. 251, 14 N. W. 785; Express Printing Co. v. Copeland, 64 Tex. 354; Briggs v. Garrett, 111 Pa. 404, 2 Atl. 513, 56 Am. Rep. 274; but the weight of authority tends to uphold the principle that false allegations are not privileged, and good faith and probable cause constitute no defence; Post Pub. Co. v. Hallam, 59 Fed. 530, 8 C. C. A. 201; 8 C. & P. 222; Jones v. Townsend's Adm'x, 21 Fla. 431, 58 Am. Rep. 676; Com. v. Wardwell, 136 Mass. 164; Geo. Knapp & Co. v. Campbell, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 199, 36 S. W. 765; Wheaton v. Beecher, 66 Mich. 307, 33 N. W. 503; Mattice v. Wilcox, 147 N. Y. 624, 42 N. E. 270. See JUDGE. Charging a candidate for office with having violated the laws and taken unlawful fees is libellous per se. Although the charge was made on a proper occasion and from a proper motive, the defendant is liable when he not only fails to show the truth of the statement, but also that it was based on probable cause. It is not enough to show that the defendant had information which led him to believe it to be true; the circumstances leading to that belief must be shown in order that it may appear whether or not his belief was well founded; Coates v. Wallace, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 253.

In criticising a publication one may make use of ridicule however poignant, as every man who publishes a book commits himself to the judgment of the public; 1 Campb. 355; Dowling v. Livingstone, 108 Mich. 321, 66 N. W. 225, 32 L. R. A. 104, 62 Am. St. Rep. 702; but a critic may not attack the private character of the author; 7 C. & P. 621; 2 Moo. & R. 3.

If the author's writings are ridiculous he may be ridiculed; if they show him to be vicious his reviewer may say so; Cooper v. Stone, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 434; but to accuse one of writing and disseminating works calculated to debauch and demoralize the public mind is libellous; Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Ecclesine, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 9; and it is a question for the jury, whether a criticism of a dramatic work is such as might be pronounced by any fair man, however prejudiced and however obstinate his views; L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 275; and so where the criticism concerns an artistic production, it is held that any man may express his opinion, however mistaken that opinion may be, and however unfavorable to the merits of the artist or architect, if fairly, reasonably and temperately expressed, even though through the medium of ridicule; 1 Moo. & M. 741, 187.

International law forbids a libel on a state for the same reason that municipal law forbids a libel on an individual. This right of the state is not invaded by a free discussion of, and criticism upon, the external acts of the state. A state has no complaint if it has the same protection as the individual. And courts of justice are open in both cases for the vindication of the offended party; 2 Phill. Int. L. 48.

Extent of the Liability of Newspapers for Libellous Articles. The proprietor of a newspaper is responsible for a libel therein, although inserted without his knowledge by the editor; Bruce v. Reed, 104 Pa. 408, 49 Am. Rep. 586; and where the proprietor is also the editor he is liable for a libel inserted by his assistant editor; Hunt v. Bennett, 19 N. Y. 175; the mere fact that he was absent, although he had left instructions not to insert libellous matter, will not exonerate him; Dunn v. Hall, 1 Ind. 345; see Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 23 N. E. 1127, 8 L. R. A. 214, 18 Am. St. Rep. 810. The general principal is well established that the publisher is civilly liable for all that appears in his paper, whether with or without his knowledge; Storey v. Wallace, 60 Ill. 51; Meeker v. Post Ptg. Co., 55 Colo. 355, 135 Pac. 457; Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371, 24 Am. Rep. 575; Buckley v. Knapp, 48 Mo. 152; even where it is the result of mistake; L. R. 10 C. P. 502; but not where the mistake was caused innocently by the compositor in setting up illegible copy; Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408, 9 N. W. 451, 41 Am. Rep. 166.

The editor in chief of a newspaper is not liable for the publication of a libel by a subordinate which was published during his absence without his knowledge; Folwell v. Miller, 145 Fed. 495, 75 C. C. A. 489, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 455; contra, Crane v. Bennett, 177 N. Y. 106, 69 N. E. 274, 101 Am. St. Rep. 722.

The secretary and treasurer of a public corporation who is also one of the stockholders is not personally liable for a publication in the absence of anything to show that he knew of or consented to it; Mecabe v. Jones, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 222. This liability is not affected by the fact that he does not know of the publication of the article, for it is his business to know, and mere want of knowledge is no defence; Smith v. Utley, 92 Wis. 133, 65 N. W. 744, 35 L. R. A. 620; one of the partners is liable for what is done by the others in publishing libellous matter; McDonald v. Woodruff, 2 Dill. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 8,770; and the malicious intent of one partner renders his co-partner liable; Lothrop v. Adams, 133 Mass. 471, 43 Am. Rep. 528. Where the libellous matter is inserted by a reporter without the knowledge of the proprietor, the latter is liable only to the extent of compensatory damages and he will be visited with punitive damages only upon proof by which his approval of his employé's conduct can be legally inferred; Haines v. Schultz, 50 N. J. L. 481, 14 Atl. 488.

When the truth of the publication is established there must be shown, in order to render the proprietor liable, that he, in a legal sense, actually participated in or authorized the publication with an actual malicious intent; Com. v. Damon, 136 Mass. 441.

There has been a tendency towards legislation mitigating the rigor of the common-law liability for libel on the part of publishers of newspapers, and the agitation on this subject has resulted in the passage of statutes in several states having this purpose in view.

It is for the jury to say what the defendant charged against the plaintiff, and what the reading public might reasonably suppose he intended to charge; Post Pub. Co. v. Hallam, 59 Fed. 530, 8 C. C. A. 201. Where the purport of the publication is plain and not ambiguous, the question in a civil action whether it is libel or not is a question for the court; Morgan v. Halberstadt, 60 Fed. 592, 9 C. C. A. 147.

On a plea of justification, evidence is admissible to prove that the character of the plaintiff is bad; Henry v. Norwood, 4 Watts (Pa.) 347; this testimony is admissible for the purpose of establishing a measure of justice between the parties, because the extent of the injury, if any, which the plaintiff sustains, depends in some degree at least upon the goodness or badness of his general character before the publication of the libel, and the amount of compensation ought to be commensurate with, and bear some proportion to, the extent of the injury; Smith v. Publishing Co., 178 Pa. 481, 36 Atl. 296, 35 L. R. A. 819; but evidence as to reputation upon the question of damages must be confined to the reputation for that particular trait of character which is involved in the libellous charge; Post Pub. Co. v. Hallam, 59 Fed. 530, 8 C. C. A. 201, 16 U. S. App. 613.

A publisher cannot be charged with the personal malice of his employé; 2 Moo. & R. 101; and he is not liable for exemplary damages for the actual malice of his subordinate unless he participated in or ratified the act; Eviston v. Cramer, 57 Wis. 570, 15 N. W. 760. Express malice in libel cases may be shown not only in the existence of animosity against the plaintiff, but also by a reckless and wanton carelessness,—a wanton neglect to ascertain the truth of the publication. In a newspaper the means of ascertaining are readily attainable, and in such cases punitive damages may be awarded; Press Pub. Co. v. McDonald, 63 Fed. 238, 11 C. C. A. 155, 26 U. S. App. 167, 26 L. R. A. 53. Evidence that plaintiff had recovered judgment against another newspaper for the publication of the same libel is immaterial and inadmissible; Bennett v. Salisbury, 78 Fed. 769, 24 C. C. A. 329, citing Smith v. Pub. Co., 55 Fed. 240, 5 C. C. A. 91, 14 U. S. App. 173.

An offer to publish an interview with or a letter from the plaintiff is not a retraction; Evening Post Pub. Co. v. Voight, 72 Fed. 885, 19 C. C. A. 224, 38 U. S. App. 394.

Injunction to Restrain Libels. The power to restrain by injunction, or even by interlocutory injunction, the publication of an alleged libel, on the ground of injury to reputation, was a jurisdiction considered unknown to the law of England. Recently, however, it has been held that jurisdiction was conferred by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, to prevent by injunction the publication of "atrocious" libels. This alleged jurisdiction has shared with the use of the equitable remedy in connection with labor troubles the credit of giving rise to the phrase "government by injunction." Under the English decisions, it is said to be conceded that the power exists, and that prior to 1882, except in cases where there was injury to property alleged, no such power was ever claimed or exercised; 22 Law Mag. & Rev., 4th ser. 67; Folkh. Lib. & Sl. 579; 3 Va. Law Reg. 629; 13 L. Q. Rev. 361. The only case in which an injunction had been granted to restrain the publication of a libel as such was that by Chief Justice Scroggs, in 1680, in a decision which was one of the grounds of his impeachment. See 8 How. St. Tr. 198. In 2 Campb. 511, a dictum of Lord Ellenborough states that an injunction would have been granted against the exhibition of a libellous picture, but it was expressly disapproved in 20 How. St. Tr. 799.

The nearest later approach to it was in L. R. 6 Eq. 551, and 7 id. 488, so much discussed in connection with labor troubles (see STRIKE), and which were distinctly overruled by the court of appeal as in conflict with settled equity practice, in L. R. 10 Ch. App. 142.

It was five years after this that Jessel, M. R., gave expression to his opinion that the Procedure Act gave jurisdiction to the common-law courts to enjoin the publication of libels, an opinion which in that case has been characterized as a dictum, but later the court of appeal held that the power did exist, and the same judge, then sitting, said that an interlocutory injunction might be granted against the publication of a libel however atrocious it might be, and for injuring only character and reputation. The reasoning by which this conclusion was supported was that the Procedure Act, 1854, and the Judicature Act, 1873, transferred all the jurisdiction of the separate courts to the high court and authorized an interlocutory injunction in any case in which it should appear to the court "just or convenient." This he considered gave "unlimited power to grant an injunction in any case where it would be right or just to do so, according to settled legal reasons, or on any legal, settled principle." 20 Ch. Div. 501. The court of appeal again declared in favor of the jurisdiction, but said that it was such "as to require exceptional caution in its use"; [1891] 2 Ch. 269. And this expression was emphasized not only by the refusal of the injunction but also by a quotation from Lord Esher, M. R., that "the jurisdiction is of a delicate nature and should only be exercised in the clearest cases, where, if the jury did not find the matter libellous, the court would set aside the verdict as unreasonable." 3 T. L. R. 846; see, also, 37 Ch. Div. 170.

These cases are examined and the doctrine admitted to have been declared in them severely criticised by Folkhard, who concludes: That the jurisdiction introduces an undesirable and inconvenient degree of uncertainty into the practice and procedure of the courts; that the cautious language with which the courts have dealt with the subject is sufficient of itself to raise doubt; that the injunction is inappropriate and unconstitutional because it would deprive a defendant of a right secured by Fox's libel act to move in arrest of judgment when tried or convicted of libel. The opinion is further expressed that the manner in which the courts have dealt with the subject indicates a caution which is likely to result in making the new jurisdiction a dead letter; 22 Law Mag. & Rev., 4th ser. 63. This view is thought by him to be justified by the refusal of an injunction in a recent case where he thinks the exercise of the new jurisdiction would have seemed proper if it ever could be so, as after a verdict for heavy damages and judgment against him for libel, the defendant persisted in repetitions of it; [1891] 2 Ch. 294. But in that case the decision was that an interlocutory injunction will not be granted to restrain the publication of a libel unless the court is of the opinion that injury will be caused to the plaintiff's person or property by a continuance of the publication, and hence when the libel, though unjustifiable, is of such a character that no one would attach the slightest weight to it, the injunction would be refused. In another case an action of libel was brought in the Chancery Division and an interlocutory injunction refused; [1891] W. N. 64. And it is said that, with the exception of a case of trade libel, the court will not grant an injunction to restrain a libel before the case has been submitted to a jury; 67 Law T. N. S. 263.

An interlocutory injunction was granted to restrain the continuance of the publication of a poster headed "A Black List," which gave the names of non-union men employed by A, it being considered that the motive was to inflict a continuous injury from day to day upon A and his men, and the order was affirmed by court of appeal; 72 L. T. 342. In this case it was held that the trade union having done more than was necessary for their own protection, the injunction was properly granted.

Equity will grant an injunction to restrain a libel; [1894] 1 Q. B. 671; Marlin Fire Arms Co. v. Shields, 68 App. Div. 88, 74 N. Y. Supp. 84. But where there is no remedy at law because of inability to prove special damages, an injunction will be refused; id., 171 N. Y. 384, 64 N. E. 163, 59 L. R. A. 310. It is held that the right to speak and publish is privileged against interference therewith by injunction. Its exercise for the purpose of boycotting the business of individuals cannot be restrained, though the privilege is abused; Marx & Haas Jeans Clothing Co. v. Watson, 168 Mo. 133, 67 S. W. 391, 56 L. R. A. 951, 90 Am. St. Rep. 440.

In this country the subject has been dealt with as it originally stood in England before it was complicated by the question of statutory construction and the resulting decisions. The question in the United States is more or less affected by considerations growing out of the constitutional guaranty of liberty of the press. See infra. There is no authority to support the doctrine that a libel may be enjoined except in cases where some right of property is involved, and a large majority of the cases have arisen in connection with statements made or circulars issued concerning patent rights.

It has been held by authorities of great weight that equity will not enjoin the publication of a libel on a patent right; Baltimore Car-Wheel Co. v. Bemis, 29 Fed. 95; Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. 773. This latter case was an ancillary bill to enjoin the defendant in pending proceedings on certain patent rights from uttering libellous or slanderous statements concerning the business of the plaintiff, or the validity of their letters patent or their title thereto. It was filed during the trial of the principal suit, which was brought to restrain the infringement of the patents. Bradley, J., in denying the injunction, said that the application was a novel one. The following cases were cited by him as ruling against it; Boston Diatite Co. v. Mfg. Co., 114 Mass. 69, 19 Am. Rep. 310; Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 484; New York Juvenile Guardian Soc. v. Roosevelt, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 188; Brandreth v. Lance, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 24, 34 Am. Dec. 368; Mauger v. Dick, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 132; Life Ass'n of America v. Boogher, 3 Mo. App. 173. He did not consider the contrary decision in Croft v. Richardson, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 356, as a sufficient authority to counteract these cases. He further said that the English authorities (L. R. 7 Eq. 488; 14 Ch. Div. 763, 864; 26 Ch. Div. 306) were based upon statutes and not upon general principles of equity jurisprudence. He cites the case in 10 Ch. App. 142, Cairns, L. C., as in line with the American cases referred to by him. As to the English cases, see supra.

This decision by Bradley, J., went so far as to hold expressly that even if malice were shown an injunction would not be granted against the wrong threatened.

This case was undoubtedly in accord with the view prevailing at the time it was decided, and there are later cases which hold that an injunction will not be granted to restrain a publication which is a libel on the plaintiff's business; Pre-Digested Food Co. v. McNeal, 1 Ohio N. P. 266; or to restrain one who believes that he is the owner of a patent, and that no other person has title thereto, from stating his claim as a mere belief; Everett Piano Co. v. Bent, 60 Ill. App. 372; or to restrain slander of title to property on the mere allegation of defendant's insolvency; Reyes v. Middleton, 36 Fla. 99, 17 South. 937, 29 L. R. A. 66, 51 Am. St. Rep. 17. So an interlocutory injunction restraining the publication of a libel until the trial of the action was refused where there were conflicting affidavits as to whether the plaintiff had or had not consented to the publication; [1894] 1 Q. B. 671, where it is considered under what circumstances an interlocutory injunction will be granted in cases of libel.

It was held that an injunction will not be granted against the circulation of a slander or libel, even where it appeared that it might tend to injure the business or employment of the person affected; Mayer v. Stonecutters' Ass'n, 47 N. J. Eq. 519, 20 Atl. 492; Flint v. Smoke-Burner Co., 110 Mo. 492, 19 S. W. 804, 16 L. R. A. 243, 33 Am. St. Rep. 476; nor even interlocutory until trial; id. The power to grant injunctions has also been denied in cases of libel or trade-mark; Mauger v. Dick, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 132; Wolfe v. Burke, 56 N. Y. 115; 19 Ch. Div. 386.

But the doctrine upon which these decisions rest, that in no case would an injunction issue to restrain such publication, has not been uniformly followed, and an instructive note in which many cases are collected concludes that "the weight of authority as shown by the later cases is to the effect that such an injunction may be granted if the threats to prosecute for infringement are not made in good faith, and only in such cases;" Flint v. Smoke Burner Co., 110 Mo. 492, 19 S. W. 804, 16 L. R. A. 243, 33 Am. St. Rep. 476; Croft v. Richardson, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 356; Hovey v. Pencil Co., 57 N. Y. 119, 15 Am. Rep. 470; Snow v. Judson, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 210; Andrew v. Deshler, 45 N. J. L. 167. Where false circulars were issued for the purpose of intimidation, threatening suits for infringement, and a collusive decree was obtained purporting to be an adjudication on the merits, an injunction was granted against the use or publication of such decree; Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. School Furniture Co., 92 Mich. 558, 52 N. W. 1009, 16 L. R. A. 721, 31 Am. St. Rep. 311; but equity will not restrain the plaintiff in a patent case from publishing a notice that the defendant therein had been enjoined; Westinghouse Air-Brake Co. v. Carpenter, 32 Fed. 545.

And where the defendant issued circulars threatening to bring suits for infringement against persons dealing in plaintiff's patented article, and the charges of infringement were not made in good faith, but with malicious intent to injure plaintiff's business, the court distinguished the case from that in Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. 773, supra, because the defendant appeared to have threatened suits which he did not intend to bring, and an injunction was granted; Emack v. Kane, 34 Fed. 46, per Blodgett, J.

Mr. Justice Brown thus states the limits within which equity will permit the use of an injunction:

"It is sufficient to say that, even if it be conceded that a court of equity has power upon petition of a defendant to enjoin the plaintiff from publishing libellous statements concerning his business, there would seem to be no good reason why a patentee may not notify persons using his device of his claim, and call attention to the fact that, by selling or using it, they are making themselves liable to a prosecution. There is undoubtedly authority for holding that, if the language of such letters or circulars be false, malicious, offensive, or opprobrious, or used for the wilful purpose of inflicting an injury, the party is entitled to his remedy by injunction; and this is the extent to which the authorities go. Upon the other hand, it would seem to be an act of prudence, if not of kindness, upon the part of the patentee, to notify the public of his invention, and to warn persons dealing in the article of the consequence of purchasing from others, and in such cases an injunction has been uniformly denied." Kelley v. Dress-Stay Mfg. Co., 44 Fed. 19, 10 L. R. A. 686; see, also, Lewin v. Light Co., 81 Fed. 904.

As to whether an injunction against a publication is an interference with the constitutional guaranty of the freedom of speech and of the press, the decisions, although apparently conflicting, support the doctrine that where property rights are involved, this provision is no bar to equitable interference, where the question of libel has been determined in an action at law; New York Juvenile Guardian Soc. v. Roosevelt, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 188; Brandreth v. Lance, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 24, 34 Am. Dec. 368; Flint v. Smoke Burner Co., 110 Mo. 492, 19 S. W. 804, 16 L. R. A. 243, 33 Am. St. Rep. 476, where an injunction was refused, although the statements were injurious to a patent right, and it was held "that courts of justice can do nothing by way of judicial sentence which the general assembly has no power to sanction," and as the general assembly can pass no law abridging the liberty of speech or of the press, that the right to speak, write, or print cannot be suspended by the court. In Shoemaker v. Spark Arrester Co., 135 Ind. 471, 35 N. E. 280, 22 L. R. A. 332, it was expressly decided that the constitutional guaranty of freedom of the press and of speech is not a protection against equitable interference with the publication of false and injurious statements, accompanied by threats.

Where a publication is in violation of a contract, it will be enjoined, and the liberty of the press will not protect the wrongdoer; Beal v. Chase, 31 Mich. 490; Cowan v. Fairbrother, 118 N. C. 406, 24 S. E. 212, 32 L. R. A. 829, 54 Am. St. Rep. 733. See 32 L. R. A. 829, n. See LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

For the history of the controversy upon the right of the jury to determine both law and fact in criminal cases, and American and English authorities, see JURY.

Lord Mansfield, in 5 Burr. 2661, and in 20 How. St. Tr. 892, and Mr. Justice Buller, in the Dean of St. Asaph's case, 21 How. St. Tr. 847, charged the jury that the only questions for them were whether the defendants had printed and published the paper in question, and whether the innuendoes therein were truly intended as avowed in the indictment, and that it was for the court alone to say whether the paper was a libel or not. This was denied to be the true state of the law, and accordingly an act known as "Fox's Libel Act" was passed in 1792, declaring that the jury may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty in all such cases upon the whole matter put at issue, and shall not be required to find defendant guilty on mere proof of publication, and of the sense ascribed to the same in the indictment.

In the trial in New York in 1735 of John Peter Zenger for a seditious libel, Andrew Hamilton, a great Philadelphia lawyer, insisted that the truth of the alleged libel should be received in evidence and that the jury must decide whether or not it was libellous. Zenger was acquitted notwithstanding the charge of the court against both contentions. "In the history of the freedom of the press" Hamilton's name "is beside the great names of Erskine and Fox." Fiske, Dutch and Quaker Colonies, II, 290. See Zenger Trial, Boston, 1738; S. G. Fisher, Men, Women and Manners, II, 109.

This statute is now generally conceded to be declaratory of the common law. The judge should instruct the jury as to what a libel is, and then leave it to them to say whether the facts necessary to constitute the offence have been proved to their satisfaction; Pittock v. O'Niell, 63 Pa. 253, 3 Am. Rep. 544; St. Martin v. Desnoyer, 1 Minn. 156 (Gil. 131), 61 Am. Dec. 494; State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14, 54 Am. Dec. 90; 2 Campb. 478; Com. v. Abbott, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 120; Taylor v. Robinson, 29 Me. 323; 21 How. St. Tr. 922; see Ewing v. Ainger, 96 Mich. 587, 55 N. W. 996.

By the English Act, 1888, § 8, the permission of a judge has to be obtained previously to the institution of criminal proceedings against a libellor, and such permission is only given when, from the circumstances of the case, a remedy by civil action will not be sufficient; [1892] 1 Q. B. 86; 17 Cox, C. C. 464. See 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 185; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

In France any person named or referred to by a newspaper has the right of free insertion in the same newspaper of a reply twice as long as the original article, which must be printed in the same type and placed in the same position as the original article; Act of July 29, 1881, art. 13.

A statute does not deprive one of his constitutional rights by providing that he must give notice before beginning an action for libel and limiting his recovery to actual damages in case the libel is retracted; Comer v. Pub. Co., 151 Ala. 613, 44 South. 673, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525.

LIBEL OF ACCUSATION. In Scotch Law. The instrument which contains the charge against a person accused of a crime. Libels are of two kinds, namely, indictments and criminal letters.

LIBELLANT. The party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical, divorce, or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions in the common-law courts.

LIBELLEE. A party against whom a libel has been filed in proceedings in an ecclesiastical court or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in a common-law suit.

LIBELLUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A little book. Libellus supplex, a petition, especially to the emperor; all petitions to whom must be in writing. L. 15. D. in jus voc. Libellum rescribere, to mark on such petition the answer to it. L. 2, § 2, Dig. de jur. fisc. Libellum agere, to assist or counsel the emperor in regard to such petitions, L. 12 D. de distr. pign.; and one whose duty it is to do so is called magister libellorum. There were also promagistri. L. 1, D. de offic præf. pract. Libellus accusatorius, an information and accusation of a crime. L. 17, § 1, & L. 29, § 8, D. ad leg. Jul. de adult. Libellus divortii, a writing of divorcement. L. 7, D. de divort. et repud. Libellus rerum, an inventory. Calv. Lex. Libellus or oratio consultoria, a message by which emperors laid matters before the senate. Calvinus, Lex.; Suet. Cæs. 56.

A writing in which are contained the names of the plaintiff (actor) and defendant (reus), the thing sought, the right relied upon, and name of the tribunal before which the action is brought. Calvinus, Lex.

In English Law (sometimes called libellus conventionalis). A bill. Bracton, fol. 112.

LIBELLUS FAMOSUS (Lat.). A libel; a defamatory writing. L. 15, D. de pœn; Vocab. Jur. Utr. sub "famosus." It may be without writing: as, by signs, pictures, etc. 5 Rep. de famosis libellis.

LIBER (Lat.). In Civil Law. A book, whatever the material of which it is made; a principal subdivision of a literary work: thus, the Pandects, or Digest of the Civil Law, is divided into fifty books. L. 52. D. de legat.

In Civil and Old English Law. Free: e. g. a free (liber) bull. Jacobs. Exempt from service or jurisdiction of another. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.: e. g. a free (liber) man. L. 3, D. de statu hominum.

LIBER ASSISARUM (Lat.). The book of assigns or pleas of the crown; being the fifth part of the Year-Books; it contains cases in all years of Edward III. See YEAR BOOKS.

LIBER AUTHENTICORUM. The authentic collection of the novels of Justinian, so called to distinguish them from the Epitome Juliani. Sohm. Rom. L. 14.

LIBER ET LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.). A free and lawful man. One worthy of being a juryman; he must neither be infamous nor a bondman. 3 Bla. Com. 340, 362; Bract. fol. 14 b; Fleta, l. 6, c. 25, § 4; l. 4, c. 5, § 4. See LIBER HOMO.

LIBER FEUDORUM (Lat.). A code of the feudal law, which was compiled by direction of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and published in Milan, in 1170. It was called the Liber Feudorum, and was divided into five books, of which the first, second, and some fragments of the others still exist, and are printed at the end of all the modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis. Giannone, b. 13, c. 3; Cruise, Dig. prel. diss. c. 1, § 31.

LIBER HOMO (Lat.). A free man; a freeman lawfully competent to act as juror. Ld. Raym. 417: Kebl. 563.

In London, a man can be a liber homo either—1, by service, as having served his apprenticeship; or, 2, by birthright, being a son of a liber homo; or, 3, by redemption, i. e. allowance of mayor and aldermen. 8 Rep., Case of City of London. There was no intermediate state between villein and liber homo. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, § 22. But a liber homo could be vassal of another. Bract. fol. 25.

In Old European Law. An allodial proprietor, as opposed to a feudatory. Calvinus, Lex. Alode.

LIBER JUDICIARUM (Lat.). The book of judgment, or doom-book. The Saxon Domboc. Conjectured to be a book of statutes of ancient Saxon kings. See Jacob, Domboc; 1 Bla. Com. 64.

LIBERA. A delivery of so much corn or grass to a customary tenant, who cut down or prepared the said grass or corn and received some portion of it as a reward or gratuity. Cowell.

LIBERAL (Lat. liberalis, of or belonging to a freeman—from liber, free). Free in giving; generous; not mean or narrow-minded; not literal or strict.

Where a jury was instructed that in the award of compensation "it should be liberal," an exception to the remark was overruled; no request had been made for a different instruction, and the expression objected to was preceded by a caution to the jury against crediting any extravagant statement of the injuries. And as if to qualify this caution, it was added that it should be liberal; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 659, 25 L. Ed. 487.

By liberal interpretation is meant not that the words should be forced out of their natural meaning, but simply that they should receive a fair and reasonable interpretation with respect to the objects and purposes of the instrument; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. (U. S.) 426, 11 L. Ed. 326.

An offer of a liberal reward for information leading to the apprehension of a fugitive and a specified sum for his apprehension entitles the party giving information leading to the arrest to the liberal reward, but not to the sum named where the arrest was not in fact made by him or by his agent; Shuey v. U. S., 92 U. S. 73, 23 L. Ed. 697.

LIBERATE (Lat.). In English Practice. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute staple, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent and in the sheriff's return thereto. See Com. Dig. Statute Staple (D 6).

LIBERATION. In Civil Law. The extinguishment of a contract, by which he who was bound becomes free or liberated. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 749. Synonymous with payment. Dig. 50. 16. 47.

LIBERTI, LIBERTINI. In Roman Law. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. 1 Brown, Civ. Law 99.

There is some distinction between these words. By libertus was understood the freedman when considered in relation to his patron, who had bestowed liberty upon him; and he was called libertinus when considered in relation to the state he occupied in society subsequent to his manumission. Lec. El. Dr. Rom. § 93. See Morey, Rom. L. 236.

LIBERTIES. In colonial times this term was used as meaning laws or legal rights resting upon them. The early colonial ordinances in Massachusetts were termed laws and liberties, and the code of 1641 the "Body of Liberties"; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 70.

The term is also used in the expression, rights, liberties, and franchises, as a word of the same general class and meaning with those words and privileges. This use of the term is said to have been strictly conformable to its sense as used in Magna Charta and in English declarations of rights, statutes, grants, etc.; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 70.

It was intended to secure to corporations as well as to individuals the rights enumerated in the bill of rights; Den v. Foy, 5 N. C. 58, 3 Am. Dec. 672.

Political subdivisions of Philadelphia were formerly called "liberties"; as Northern Liberties.

See NON OMITTAS.

LIBERTY (Lat. liber, free; libertas, freedom, liberty). Freedom from restraint. The faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed, without influence from without.

A privilege held by grant or prescription, by which some men enjoy greater privileges than ordinary subjects.

The place within which certain privileges or immunities are enjoyed, or jurisdiction is exercised, as the liberties of a city. See FREEDOM OF THE CITY.

Liberty, "on its positive side, denotes the fullness of individual existence; on its negative side it denotes the necessary restraint on all, which is needed to promote the greatest possible amount of liberty for each." Amos, Science of Law p. 90.

Civil liberty is the greatest amount of absolute liberty which can in the nature of things be equally possessed by every citizen in a state.

The right to do everything permitted by the laws. Ordr. Const. Leg. 37.

The term is frequently used to denote the amount of absolute liberty which is actually enjoyed by the various citizens under the government and laws of the state as administered. 1 Bla. Com. 125.

The fullest political liberty furnishes the best possible guarantee for civil liberty.

Lieber defines civil liberty as guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection, including Blackstone's divisions of civil and political under this head.

Under the Roman law, civil liberty was the affirmance of a general restraint, while in our law it is the negation of a general restraint; Ordr. Const. Leg.

Natural liberty is the right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consistent with their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. Burlam. c. 3, § 15; 1 Bla. Com. 125. It is called by Lieber social liberty, and is defined as the protection or unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of.

Personal liberty consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, of removing one's person to whatever place one's inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint unless by due course of law. 1 Bla. Com. 134; Hare, Const. L. 777.

Political liberty is an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws. Lieber, Civ. Lib.

Liberty, in its widest sense, means the faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed without influence from without. It means self-determination, unrestrainedness of action. Thus defined, one being only can be absolutely free,—namely, God. So soon as we apply the word liberty to spheres of human action, the term receives a relative meaning, because the power of man is limited; he is subject to constant influences from without. If the idea of unrestrainedness of action is applied to the social state of man, it receives a limitation still greater, since the equal claims of unrestrained action of all necessarily involves the idea of protection against interference by others. We thus come to the definition, that liberty of social man consists in the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of, or in the most efficient protection of his rights, claims, interests, as man or citizen, or of his humanity, manifested as a social being. (See RIGHT.) The word liberty, applied to men in their political state, may be viewed with reference to the state as a whole, and in this case means the independence of the state, of other states (see AUTONOMY); or it may have reference to the relation of the citizen to the government, in which case it is called political or civil liberty; or it may have reference to the status of a man as a political being, contradistinguished from him who is not considered master over his own body, will, or labor—the slave. This is called personal liberty, which, as a matter of course, includes freedom from prison.

For purposes of convenience and justice alike, in all well governed communities, the natural right of citizens are held in abeyance and subject to conditional limitations as having lost some portion of their absolute character. This is but an affirmance of the doctrine that every individual in order to live peacefully in society must submit to some abridgment of his natural right; for any acknowledgment of government, says Brownson, implies that the citizen consents to submit his will to that of a governing will located in the administration of the state; Am. Republic; Ord. Const. Leg.

Constitutional guarantees are the last and best fruits of civil liberty. The bulwarks of civil liberty consist of public acts passed for the purpose of defining and regulating the exercise of the sovereign powers of the state. It is only in this way that the personal rights of the citizen can be secured against invasion by the supreme authority. These acts are the guarantees of the good faith of the citizens towards each other and towards the common sovereignty under which they are united. They consist of grants of power together with limitations upon its exercise. Part of these rules being unwritten form the common law of the land, and part consist of positive laws known as constitutional provisions which may be enforced in competent tribunals; Ord. Const. Leg. 168.

Liberties are nothing until they have become rights—positive rights formally recognized and consecrated. Rights, even when recognized, are nothing so long as they are not entrenched within guarantees. And guarantees are nothing so long as they are not maintained by forces independent of them in the limit of their right. Convert liberties into rights—surround rights by guarantees—entrust the keeping these guarantees to forces capable of maintaining them. Such are the successive steps in the progress of free government. 1 Guizot, Rep. Gov. Lect. 6.

"As soon as any part of a person's conduct affects prejudicially the interests of others, society has jurisdiction over it." Mill, Liberty, c. 4.

Lieber, in his work on Civil Liberty, calls that system which was evolved in England, and forms the basis of liberty in the countries settled by English people, Anglican liberty. The principal guarantees, according to him, are:

1. National independence. There must be no foreign interference. The country must have the right and power of establishing the government it thinks best.

2. Individual liberty, and, as belonging to it, personal liberty, or the great habeas corpus principle, and the prohibition of general warrants of arrest. The right of bail belongs also to this head.

3. A well-secured penal trial, of which the most important is trial for high treason.

4. The freedom of communion, locomotion, and emigration.

5. Liberty of conscience. The United States constitution and the constitutions of all the states have provisions prohibiting any interference in matters of religion.

6. Protection of individual property, which requires unrestrained action in producing and exchanging, the prohibition of unfair monopolies, commercial freedom, and the guarantee that no property shall be taken except in the course of law, the principle that taxation shall only be with the consent of the tax-payer, and shall be levied for short periods only, and the exclusion of confiscation.

7. Supremacy of the law. The law must not, however, violate any superior law or civil principle, nor must it be an ex post facto law. The executive must not possess the power of declaring martial law, which is merely a suspension of all law. In extreme cases, parliament in England and congress in the United States can pass an act suspending the privilege of habeas corpus.

8. Every officer must be responsible to the person affected for the legality of his act; and no act must be done for which some one is not responsible.

9. It has been deemed necessary in the Bill of Rights and the American constitution specially to refer to the quartering of soldiers as a dangerous weapon in the hands of the executive.

10. The military force must be strictly submitted to the law, and the citizen should have the right to bear arms.

11. The right of petitioning, and the right of meeting and considering public matters, and of organizing into associations for any lawful purposes, are important guarantees of civil liberty.

The following guarantees relate more especially to the government of a free country and the character of its polity:

12. Publicity of public business in all its branches, whether legislative, judicial, written, or oral.

13. The supremacy of the law, or the protection against the absolutism of one, of several, or of the majority, requires other guarantees. It is necessary that the public funds be under close and efficient popular control; they should therefore be chiefly in the hands of the popular branch of the legislature, never of the executive. Appropriations should also be for distinct purposes and short times.

14. It is further necessary that the power of making war reside with the people, and not with the executive. A declaration of war in the United States is an act of congress.

15. The supremacy of the law requires, also, not only the protection of the minority, but the protection of the majority against the rule of a factious minority or cabal.

16. The majority, and through it the people, are protected by the principle that the administration is founded on party principles.

17. A very important guarantee of liberty is the division of government into three distinct functions,—legislative, administrative, and judicial. The union of these is absolutism or despotism on the one hand, and slavery on the other.

18. As a general rule, the principle prevails in Anglican liberty that the executive may do what is positively allowed by fundamental or other law, and not all that which is not prohibited.

19. The supremacy of the law requires that, where enacted constitutions form the fundamental law, there be some authority which can pronounce whether the legislature itself has or has not transgressed it. This power must be vested in courts of law.

20. There is no guarantee of liberty more important and more peculiarly Anglican than the representative government. See Lieber, Civ. Lib. p. 168.

In connection with this, a very important question is, whether there should be direct elections by the people, or whether there should be double elections. The Anglican principle favors simple elections; and double elections have often been resorted to as the very means of avoiding the object of a representative government.

The management of the elections should also be in the hands of the voters, and government especially should not be allowed to interfere.

Representative bodies must be free. They must be freely chosen, and, when chosen, act under no threat or violence of the executive or any portion of the people. They must be protected as representative bodies; and a wise parliamentary law and usage should secure the rights of each member and the elaboration of the law.

A peculiar protection is afforded to members of the legislature in England and the United States by their freedom from arrest, except for certain specified crimes.

Every member must possess the right to propose any measure or resolution.

Not only must the legislature be the judge of the right each member has to his seat, but the whole internal management belongs to itself. It is indispensable that it possess the power and privileges to protect its own dignity.

The principle of two houses, or the bicameral system, is an equally efficient guarantee of liberty, by excluding impassioned legislation and embodying in the law the collective mind of the legislature.

21. The independence of the law, of which the independence of the judiciary forms a part, is one of the main stays of civil liberty. It requires "a living common law, a clear division of the judiciary from other powers, the public accusatorial process, the independence of the judge, the trial by jury, and an independent position of the advocate." See Lieber, Civil Liberty and Self-Government 208-250.

22. Another constituent of our liberty is local and institutional self-government. It arises out of a willingness of the people to attend to their own affairs, and an unwillingness to permit of the interference of the executive, and administration with them beyond what it necessarily must do, or which cannot or ought not to be done by self-action. A pervading self-government, in the Anglican sense, is organic; it consists in organs of combined self-action, in institutions, and in a systematic connection of these institutions. It is, therefore, equally opposed to a disintegration of society and to despotism.

American liberty belongs to the great division of Anglican liberty, and is founded upon the checks, guarantees, and self-government of the Anglican race. The following features are, however, peculiar to American liberty: Republican federalism, strict separation of the state from the church, greater equality and acknowledgment of abstract rights in the citizen, and a more popular or democratic cast of the whole polity. With reference to the last two may be added these further characteristics:

We have everywhere established voting by ballot. The executive has never possessed the power of dissolving or proroguing the legislature. The list of states has not been closed. We admit foreigners to the rights of citizenship, and we do not believe in inalienable allegiance.

There is no attainder of blood. We allow no ex post facto laws. American liberty possesses, also, as a characteristic, the enacted constitution,—distinguishing it from the English polity, with its accumulative constitution. Our legislatures are, therefore, not omnipotent, as the British parliament theoretically is; but the laws enacted by them may be declared by the courts to conflict with the constitution.

The liberty sought for by the French, as a peculiar system, was founded chiefly, in theory, on the idea of equality and the abstract rights of man. Rousseau's Social Contract. See FREEDOM; PERSONAL LIBERTY, and titles here following.

The four great charters of Anglo-Saxon liberty are: Magna Carta (1215); Petition of Right (1627); Bill of Rights (1689); Act of Settlement (1700).

LIBERTY OF CONTRACT. Liberty of contract consists in having the ability at will, to make or abstain from making, a binding obligation enforced by the sanctions at the law. Judson, Liberty of Contract, Rep. Am. Bar Ass'n (1891) 233. Whilst closely allied with property and essential to its use and enjoyment, liberty of contract is really broader in its scope. Ownership of property is a right residing in a person, and property is any right of a person over a thing (in rem) indefinite in point of user. It is through the abridgment of the right of free contract by denying or restraining the use of property that so-called property rights are invaded in the exercise of the police power; id. 232.

Rules which say a given contract is void as against public policy are not to be arbitrarily extended, because if there is one thing which more than another public policy requires it is that men of full age and competent understanding shall have the utmost liberty of contracting, and that their contracts when entered into freely and voluntarily shall be held sacred and shall be enforced by courts of justice; L. R. 19 Eq. 462, per Jessel, M. R.

The term "liberty" is used in the fourteenth amendment of the constitution to comprehend in one the right of freedom from physical restraint, and also the right in one to pursue any livelihood or calling, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832; Shaver v. Pennsylvania, 71 Fed. 931; and to have their contracts enforced; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 22 S. W. 350, 21 L. R. A. 789.

The privilege of contract is both a liberty and a property right of which one cannot be deprived without due process of law; Williams v. Evans, 154 Ill. 98, 39 N. E. 698; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 83 N. E. 236, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321.

There is no absolute freedom of contract. The government may regulate or forbid any contract reasonably calculated to affect injuriously public interest; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 31 Sup. Ct. 164, 55 L. Ed. 167, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 7.

The constitutional guaranty of liberty of the individual to contract does not prevent congress from legislating upon the subject of contracts in interstate or foreign commerce; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136; Howard v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 463, 28 Sup. Ct. 141, 52 L. Ed. 297.

And the right of individuals to contract cannot be limited by arbitrary legislation which rests on no reason on which it can be defended, since this would subvert the right to enjoy liberty; Leep v. Ry. Co., 58 Ark. 407, 25 S. W. 75, 23 L. R. A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109; but whenever a statute can be seen to be in the substantial interest of public health, safety, and morals, it may legitimately be upheld even though it incidentally interfere with liberty of contract; State v. Holden, 14 Utah 71, 46 Pac. 756, 37 L. R. A. 103.

Among the statutes which, although interfering with the right to contract, have been held constitutional either under the police power of a state or under the power vested in the legislature for the public welfare, are: fixing the maximum of charges for the storage of grain; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 22 N. E. 670, 682, 5 L. R. A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460; giving a city power to regulate the price of bread; Mayor and Aldermen of Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 140, 36 Am. Dec. 441; prohibiting the manufacture and sale of any article in imitation of the substance of butter; People v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 123, 11 N. E. 277, 59 Am. Rep. 483; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253; or of oleomargarine colored to imitate butter; Waterbury v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 534, 14 Atl. 604; or of oleomargarine unless stamped; Pierce v. State, 63 Md. 596; or of any article designed to take the place of butter or cheese; State v. Addington, 12 Mo. App. 214; prohibiting the sale of cotton in the seed between the hours of sunset and sunrise; Davis v. State, 68 Ala. 58, 44 Am. Rep. 128; Mangan v. State, 76 Ala. 60; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714, 10 S. E. 143, 17 Am. St. Rep. 696; forbidding the sale of baking powder containing alum without a label so stating; Stolz v. Thompson, 44 Minn. 271, 46 N. W. 410; making it unlawful for the vendor of personal property, sold on condition that the title should remain in him until payment in full had been made, to take possession of such property without tendering or refunding to the purchaser the sums already paid by him, after deducting a reasonable compensation for the use; Weil v. State, 46 Ohio St. 450, 21 N. E. 643; forbidding the sale of stamped and registered bottles without the consent of the person whose stamp is thereon; People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759, 36 Am. St. Rep. 668; forbidding any one not authorized by law to issue a note, check, or ticket to circulate as money; State v. James, 63 Mo. 570; reducing the rate of interest on judgments; Morley v. Ry. Co., 146 U. S. 162, 13 Sup. Ct. 54, 36 L. Ed. 925 (Harlan, Field, and Brewer, JJ., dissenting); giving priority to a mechanic's lien over a mortgage of an earlier date; Seibel v. Simeon, 62 Mo. 255; limiting the amount of property which incorporated colleges might take by devise, grant, etc.; Cornell University v. Fiske, 136 U. S. 152, 10 Sup. Ct. 775, 34 L. Ed. 427, affirming In re McGraw, 111 N. Y. 66, 19 N. E. 233, 2 L. R. A. 387; forbidding the importation of foreign labor; U. S. v. Craig, 28 Fed. 795; U. S. v. Rector of Church of Holy Trinity, 36 Fed. 303; or the employment of Chinese labor; Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 24 Pac. 737, 9 L. R. A. 482, 20 Am. St. Rep. 226; providing that a failure to perform any condition of an insurance policy shall not be a valid defence of an action unless such condition is printed in type as large as or larger than that known as long primer, or is written with pen and ink in or on the policy; Dupuy v. Ins. Co., 63 Fed. 680; restricting insurance business to corporations; Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 30 Atl. 217, 25 L. R. A. 250, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603; prohibiting foreign insurance companies from carrying on business within its limits; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297; but see Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832, where a provision in a statute forbidding the insurance of property within the state in a foreign insurance company which has not complied with the laws of such state was held a violation of the right of the individual to contract; the contract having been made in another state; prohibiting citizens from selling intoxicating liquors; State v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 222, 20 S. E. 221, 26 L. R. A. 345; or forbidding the selling or giving of intoxicating liquors to Indians; People v. Bray, 105 Cal. 344, 38 Pac. 731, 27 L. R. A. 158; or a prohibition act; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; or the prohibition against options to buy or sell grain or other commodities at a future time; Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425, 22 Sup. Ct. 425, 46 L. Ed. 623; or compelling railroads crossing each other to put in switch connections; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194; or contracts which operate directly and substantially to restrain interstate commerce; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679; or prohibiting a contract from being made in advance, waiving the right to payment in what the law provides shall be the medium of payment; Hancock v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 366, 23 N. E. 253, 6 L. R. A. 576, 16 Am. St. Rep. 396; or regulating the practice of pharmacy and the sale of drugs; State v. Kumpfert, 115 La. 950, 40 South. 365; or restricting the power of corporations to contract within certain limits; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Searles, 85 Miss. 520, 37 South. 939, 68 L. R. A. 750; or providing that a conveyance securing a usurious debt shall be invalid; Adler & Sons Clothing Co. v. Corl, 155 Mo. 149, 55 S. W. 1017; or requiring specified corporations to appoint the state auditor as attorney to accept service of process and notice; State v. Petroleum Co., 58 W. Va. 108, 51 S. E. 865, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558, 112 Am. St. Rep. 951, 6 Ann. Cas. 38; or making it a criminal offence for a secondhand dealer to buy or receive stolen materials belonging to railroads, telephone and electric light companies without diligent inquiry; Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 260, 33 Sup. Ct. 27, 57 L. Ed. 212; or requiring railroads to sell passenger tickets of a connecting carrier at a rate prescribed by the railroad commission; Stephens v. R. Co., 138 Ga. 625, 75 S. E. 1041, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 541, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 609; or abolishing the fellow servant rule and those of assumption of risk and contributory negligence; Sutton v. Workmeister, 164 Ill. App. 105.

Making it a misdemeanor for an attorney to receive more than a specified amount for prosecuting a claim for a pension is valid, as a pension is a bounty over which congress has control; Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. Ed. 657.

Contracts of employment. Much of the legislation which has been questioned as interfering with the liberty of contract secured under the fourteenth amendment, is in relation to the acts passed which aim to benefit the laborer in his relations to his employer. Although lacking the powers vested in the courts in this country to declare an act unconstitutional, yet the principle on which much of this class of legislation on the liberty of contract rests in the United States is clearly stated by an English court: "When two classes of persons are dealing together and one class is, generally speaking, weaker than the other, and liable to oppression either from natural or incidental causes, the law should as far as possible redress the inequality by protecting the weak against the strong." 2 B. & S. 66. Obviously, the intention of the legislature in passing this class of acts was to protect the employés against fraud and oppression on the part of employers, but the objection to statutes prescribing a limitation upon hours of labor and regulating the mode of payment for it are (1) that they interfere with the right secured to every citizen of acquiring and possessing property or with the right to pursue happiness; (2) they are in conflict with that clause of the bill of rights which declares that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; 27 Am. L. Rev. 857.

Congress does not have power to make it a criminal offence for a carrier engaged in interstate commerce, or an agent or officer thereof, to discharge an employee simply because of his membership in a labor organization; and the provisions to that effect in section 10 of the act of June 1, 1898, concerning interstate carriers, is an invasion of personal liberty, as well as the right of property guaranteed by the fifth amendment to the constitution of the United States, and is therefore unenforceable as repugnant to the declaration of the fourteenth amendment that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law; Adair v. U. S., 208 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764.

In many cases the restriction by statute of contracts between employers and employés is held unconstitutional; Leep v. Ry. Co., 58 Ark. 407, 25 S. W. 75, 23 L. R. A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109; Globe Pub. Co. v. Bank, 41 Neb. 187, 59 N. W. 683, 27 L. R. A. 854; Wheeling Bridge & T. R. Co. v. Gilmore, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 658; In re Eight-Hour Law Bill, 21 Colo. 29, 39 Pac. 328; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 22 S. W. 350, 21 L. R. A. 789; Waters v. Wolf, 162 Pa. 153, 29 Atl. 646, 42 Am. St. Rep. 815; and the liberty to enter into contracts by which labor may be employed in such way as the laborer may deem most beneficial and to others to employ such labor is held to be necessarily included in the constitutional guaranty of the right to property; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, where an act prescribed that wages be paid weekly. But in Massachusetts a statute requiring manufacturers to pay the wages of their employés weekly is held within the power of the legislature, as the constitution of that state extends legislative power to "all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances," and does not, in terms, make any provisions as to liberty of contract; Opinion of the Justices, 163 Mass. 589, 40 N. E. 713, 28 L. R. A. 344; so in Rhode Island a weekly payment law; State v. Mfg. Co., 18 R. I. 16, 25 Atl. 246, 17 L. R. A. 856; and in Indiana a bi-weekly payment law, were held constitutional; Hancock v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 366, 23 N. E. 253, 6 L. R. A. 576, 16 Am. St. Rep. 396.

In New York a law forbidding city contractors to accept more than eight hours for a day's work except in cases of necessity is held not to abridge the privileges or rights of any citizens; People v. Beck, 10 Misc. 77, 30 N. Y. Supp. 473; so with a law limiting hours of service on railroads; People v. Phyfe, 136 N. Y. 554, 32 N. E. 978, 19 L. R. A. 441; and one forbidding the employment of women and children for more than ten hours a day; Com. v. Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 383; and an act providing that ten hours in twelve consecutive hours shall be a day's labor for railroad laborers and that an employé shall receive proportionate compensation for extra time was held constitutional where the rate of wages was not prescribed by the act and contracts other than by the day were not prohibited by it; People v. Phyfe, 20 N. Y. Supp. 461. But an act prescribing a limit of ten hours for a day's work has been held unconstitutional; Wheeling Bridge & T. R. Co. v. Gilmore, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 658; In re Eight-Hour Law Bill, 21 Colo. 29, 39 Pac. 328; as is an ordinance prescribing eight hours; Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 24 Pac. 737, 9 L. R. A. 482, 20 Am. St. Rep. 226 (where the act limited the restriction of hours to women); and an act forbidding the execution of a contract between a corporation and an employé whereby the latter agrees in consideration of certain benefits from the company, that if he elect to accept benefits when injured he will not look to the company for damages; Cox v. Ry. Co., 1 Ohio N. P. 213.

The limitation of employment in bakeries to 60 hours a week and 10 hours a day, attempted by New York law (1897), is an arbitrary interference with the freedom to contract under the constitution, and cannot be sustained as a valid exercise of the police power; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133, reversing People v. Lochner, 177 N. Y. 145, 69 N. E. 373, 101 Am. St. Rep. 773.

The Utah statute forbidding the employment of workingmen for more than eight hours a day in mines, and in the smelting, reduction, or refining of ores or metals, is not unconstitutional; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; the Iowa Code, providing that railroads shall be liable for damages sustained by employés or others because of the negligence of the employés, and that no contract which restricts such liability shall be legal or binding, is within the legislative power to enact, and is not an unconstitutional interference with the liberty of contract; Munford v. C., R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 128 Ia. 685, 104 N. W. 1135. The Penal Code, providing that any person or corporation who, having a contract with the state or a municipal corporation, shall require more than eight hours' work for a day's labor, is guilty of a misdemeanor, is constitutional; People v. Const. Co., 175 N. Y. 84, 67 N. E. 129, 65 L. R. A. 33.

A Texas act (1909), making it unlawful to act as a railroad conductor without certain previous experience, held not unconstitutional as an unreasonable interference with the right to contract for employment; Smith v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 900. Congress, possessing the power exercised in Employers' Liability Act (1908) to regulate the relations of interstate railway carriers and their employés engaged in interstate commerce, made no unwarranted interference with the constitutional liberty of contract; Mondou v. R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44. The federal Hours of Service Act (1907), which makes it unlawful for any interstate carrier to permit an employé to remain on duty for a longer period than those prescribed, is not unconstitutional as interfering with the liberty of contract; U. S. v. Ry. Co., 189 Fed. 954. An act providing that railroads doing business within the state shall issue mileage books good for the members of the family of the purchaser is unconstitutional as depriving the railroad company of the right to contract; State v.

A state statute providing that no person or corporation shall discharge an employé because he is a member of any labor organization is void for imposing a restraint on individual freedom; State v. Kreutzberg, 114 Wis. 530, 90 N. W. 1098, 58 L. R. A. 748, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934; Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry, 69 Kan. 297, 76 Pac. 848, 66 L. R. A. 185, 1 Ann. Cas. 936; a statute making it unlawful to require or permit any employee to work on street railways more than ten hours a day is constitutional; In re Ten-Hour Law for Street Ry. Corp., 24 R. I. 603; an act prohibiting any female from being employed, permitted or suffered to work in any factory in the state before 6 o'clock in the morning or after 9 o'clock in the evening on any day, etc., was an infringement on the female's liberty to contract; People v. Williams, 116 App. Div. 379, 100 N. Y. Supp. 337, 101 N. Y. Supp. 562.

A statute providing that corporations engaged in manufacturing or in operating a railroad should pay the wages of their employés in legal tender money of the United States, was held valid on the ground that such legislation was necessarily incident to the power of the legislature to amend or alter the corporate charter; Shaffer v. Mining Co., 55 Md. 74; and a similar statute regarding payment of wages otherwise than by paper redeemable in lawful money, and prescribing a method of weighing coal at the mouth of the mine, was upheld on the ground that the business of the defendants was one over which the state had supervision, and that the state had power to protect laborers against fraud on the part of employers in the payment of wages and in the mode of ascertaining the amount of the wages earned; State v. Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 802, 15 S. E. 1000, 17 L. R. A. 385; contra as to the last point In re House Bill No. 203, 21 Colo. 27, 39 Pac. 431; on the ground that the act attempted to deprive persons of the right to fix by contract the manner of ascertaining compensation, and contra as to the payment of wages by any order or script not negotiable and redeemable in lawful money of the United States; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 22 S. W. 350, 21 L. R. A. 789; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 10 S. E. 285, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. Rep. 863; State v. Coal & Coke Co., 33 W. Va. 188, 10 S. E. 288, 6 L. R. A. 359, 25 Am. St. Rep. 891; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206. A statute forbidding the waiving of payment of money in contracts between employer and employé was held constitutional on the ground that it protected and maintained the medium of payment established by the sovereign power of the United States; Board of Com'rs of Gibson County v. Steel Co., 123 Ind. 365, 24 N. E. 115.

For numerous cases of unreasonable interference with liberty of contract, see Mr. Frank Hagerman's Brief in House v. Mayes, 219 U. S. 270, 272, 31 Sup. Ct. 234, 55 L. Ed. 213.

As to the constitutionality of acts forbidding an employer to discharge his employé on account of his membership in a labor union, see LABOR UNION.

See, generally, 32 L. R. A. 789, note; 29 Am. L. Rev. 236; 27 id. 857; Rep. Am. Bar Ass'n (1891) 231; 32 Am. L. Reg. 816; EIGHT HOUR LAWS; EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS; LABOR; LABOR UNION; STORE ORDERS; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; POLICE POWER.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH. The right to speak facts and express opinions. Whart. Dict.

The liberty of speech which both the federal and state constitutions protect is (1) Liberty of speech of legislators in public assemblies, and while engaged in discussing public matters, or in writing reports, or in the exercise of the functions of their office. This is an official privilege: 4 Mass. 1. (2) Liberty of speech of counsel in judicial proceedings, and while confining himself to matters that are strictly pertinent to the issue. This is also an official privilege; Hoar v. Wood, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 194.

In the discharge of his professional duty, counsel may use strong epithets, however derogatory to other persons they may be, if pertinent to the cause, and stated in his instructions, whether the thing were true or false. But if he were maliciously to travel out of his case for the purpose of slandering another, he would be liable to an action, and amenable to a just, and often more efficacious, punishment, inflicted by public opinion; 3 Chitty, Pr. 887.

No action will lie against a witness at the suit of a party aggrieved by his false testimony, even though malice be charged; Marsh v. Ellsworth, 50 N. Y. 309; Terry v. Fellows, 21 La. Ann. 375; Smith v. Howard, 28 Ia. 51.

An act forbidding the use of profane language is not an undue interference with free speech; State v. Warren, 113 N. C. 683, 18 S. E. 498; Harman v. U. S., 50 Fed. 921; U. S. v. Bennett, 16 Blatch. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 14,571; or an ordinance prohibiting a public address upon any of the public grounds of a city; Com. v. Davis, 162 Mass. 510, 39 N. E. 113, 26 L. R. A. 712, 44 Am. St. Rep. 389; but an act which makes it unlawful for certain specified officers to participate in politics by making political speeches or participate in political meetings is unconstitutional; Louthan v. Com., 79 Va. 196, 52 Am. Rep. 626.

Maliciously enticing employés of a receiver to leave his employ in pursuance of a combination to prevent the operation of the road is not protected by the constitutional guaranty of free speech; Thomas v. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. 803. Congress has no power to punish individuals for disturbing the assemblies of peaceful citizens. That is a police power belonging to the state alone; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588.

A statute requiring a report of a civic league upon a candidate for public office to state in full all the facts on which it is founded, together with the names and addresses of the persons furnishing it, violates a constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech; Ex parte Harrison, 212 Mo. 88, 110 S. W. 709, 126 Am. St. Rep. 557, 15 Ann. Cas. 1. An act forbidding improper mail matter does not abridge freedom of speech; Warren v. U. S., 183 Fed. 718, 106 C. C. A. 156, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800. In Wallace v. Ry. Co., 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579, an act requiring certain corporations to give to their discharged employés the causes of their discharge was held unconstitutional on the ground that, as liberty of speech and of writing is secured by the constitution, incident thereto is the correlative liberty of silence, and that statements or communications, oral or written, required for private information cannot be coerced by legislative mandate at the will of one of the parties against the will of the other.

The constitutional guaranty of free speech does not authorize members of a labor union by threats, intimidation, etc., to induce prospective patrons of a business to refrain from patronizing the same; Jordahl v. Hayda, 1 Cal. App. 696, 82 Pac. 1079; a city ordinance, declaring it unlawful to hold public meetings in the street without the consent of the municipal authorities, is valid; Fitts v. City of Atlanta, 121 Ga. 567, 49 S. E. 793, 67 L. R. A. 803, 104 Am. St. Rep. 167; a municipal regulation, which provides that no members of the police department shall be allowed to solicit money or any aid on any pretence for any political purpose whatever, is not unconstitutional, as invading their rights to express their political opinions; McAuliffe v. Mayor, etc., of New Bedford, 155 Mass. 216, 29 N. E. 517; an act prohibiting creditors from threatening to injure the credit or reputation of a debtor, by publishing his name as a bad debtor unless the debt is paid, is not invalid as limiting the freedom of speech; State v. McCabe, 135 Mo. 450, 37 S. W. 123, 34 L. R. A. 127, 58 Am. St. Rep. 589; that defendant was restrained, in a suit for the partial alienation of a wife's affections, from conversing with or writing to her in any way, is not inconsistent with freedom of speech or of press; Ex parte Warfield, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 413, 50 S. W. 933, 76 Am. St. Rep. 724.

See 32 L. R. A. 829, n.; Cooley, Const. Lim.; Ord. Const. Leg.; LABOR UNION; MALICE; SLANDER; LIBEL; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

LIBERTY OF THE PERSON. See PERSONAL LIBERTY.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS. The right to print and publish the truth, from good motives and for justifiable ends. People v. Croswell, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 394.

The right in the publisher of a newspaper to print whatever he chooses without any previous license, but subject to be held responsible therefor to exactly the same extent that any one else would be responsible. Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 182, 31 Am. Rep. 757.

The right to print without any previous license, subject to the consequences of the law. 3 Term 431.

The right to publish in the first instance as the publisher pleases, and without control; but for proceeding to unwarrantable lengths he is answerable both to the community and to the individual. Respublica v. Dennie, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 267, 2 Am. Dec. 402. Liberty of the press means not only liberty to publish, but complete immunity from legal censure and punishment for the publication, so long as it is not harmful in its character, when tested by such standards as the law affords; Cooley, Const. Lim. [422]. See Story, Const. §§ 1870, 1888, 1891. It is said to consist in this "that neither courts of justice nor any judges whatever are authorized to take notice of writings intended for the press, but are confined to those which are actually printed." De Lome, Const. 254.

At common law liberty of the press was neither well protected nor well defined, and not until after many struggles was it so far recognized in England as to permit the publication of current news without the permission of government censors. May, Const. Hist. c. 7, 9, 19. The general publication of parliamentary debates dates only from the American revolution, and even then was considered a technical breach of privilege; Cooley, Const. Lim. [418]. A fair publication of a debate is now held to be privileged, and comments on public legislative proceedings are not actionable, so long as a jury shall think them honest and made in a fair spirit, and such as are justified by the circumstances; L. R. 4 Q. B. 73.

In the colonial period the English practice was followed in this country. In 1649 the general laws were published for the first time in Massachusetts under protest by the magistrates, and in Virginia and New York printing was specially prohibited. The constitutional convention of 1787 sat with closed doors, as did the senate until 1793. By the constitution liberty of the press is secured against restraint in the United States, but he who uses it is responsible for its abuse. Like the right to keep firearms, it will not protect the user from annoyance and destruction caused by him; Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 313, 15 Am. Dec. 214. The Sedition Act, July 14, 1798, attempted a restriction upon the freedom of the press, but by its terms it was self-limited; its constitutionality was always doubted by a large party, and its impolicy was beyond question. See Whart. St. Tr. 333, 659, 688; 2 Rand. Life of Jefferson 417; 5 Hildr. Hist. U. S. 247; Ord. Const. Leg.

Liberty of the press is allowed in publishing (1) naked and impartial statements of judicial proceedings involving a trial and not a mere ex parte examination; and when the nature of the case does not render it improper that the same should be published, or constitute such a publication an offence at law; Stanley v. Webb, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 21; Huff v. Bennett, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 120; Cincinnati Gazette Co. v. Timberlake, 10 Ohio St. 548, 78 Am. Dec. 285; King v. Root, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 138, 21 Am. Dec. 102; (2) in publishing news; Ord. Const. Leg. 239. Acts which have been held not in conflict with the constitutional guaranty of liberty of the press are:—An act making the publication of a grossly false and inaccurate report of the proceedings of any court a criminal offence and a contempt; State v. Faulds, 17 Mont. 140, 42 Pac. 285; an act taxing the selling of Sunday papers; Thompson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 253; an act forbidding the use of the mails for obscene matter; U. S. v. Harmon, 45 Fed. 414; or for printed matter deemed by the government to be injurious to the people; In re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 12 Sup. Ct. 374, 36 L. Ed. 93; Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. Ed. 877; or for sending threatening letters; State v. McCabe, 135 Mo. 450, 37 S. W. 123, 34 L. R. A. 127, 58 Am. St. Rep. 589 (see LIBEL); an act forbidding the publication and sale of a newspaper devoted to the publication of scandal and immorality; State v. Van Wye, 136 Mo. 227, 37 S. W. 938, 58 Am. St. Rep. 627; an act directed against blasphemy; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206; and a by-law of the Associated Press of New York, prohibiting a member from receiving or publishing the regular news despatches of any other news organization covering a like territory; Matthews v. Associated Press, 136 N. Y. 333, 32 N. E. 981, 32 Am. St. Rep. 741.

A city cannot pass an ordinance declaring a certain named newspaper a public nuisance and forbidding its sale; Ex parte Neill, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 275, 22 S. W. 923, 40 Am. St. Rep. 776; nor can the advertisement of a dramatic production be prevented where the play is based upon the facts of a pending trial, as disclosed at a preliminary hearing and the coroner's inquest; Dailey v. Superior Court, 112 Cal. 94, 44 Pac. 458, 32 L. R. A. 273, 53 Am. St. Rep. 160; and the constitutional guaranty of liberty of the press will not protect one who breaks a contract with a purchaser not to publish or be connected with another paper in the same locality; Cowan v. Fairbrother, 118 N. C. 406, 24 S. E. 212, 32 L. R. A. 829, 54 Am. St. Rep. 733.

The constitutional freedom of speech or liberty of the press, when applied to newspapers, consists of the right to publish freely whatever one pleases, and to be protected against any responsibility therefor, except so far as the publication is blasphemous, obscene, seditious or scandalous. It is the right to speak the truth, but does not include the right to scandalize courts, or to libel private citizens or public officers; State v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 205, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624.

An ordinance making it unlawful to distribute handbills, dodgers or circulars in the public streets or sidewalks does not violate the freedom of speech or the press; In re Anderson, 69 Neb. 686, 96 N. W. 149, 5 Ann. Cas. 421; while any citizen has a right to comment on the proceedings of a court, to discuss its correctness or the fitness or unfitness of the judges for their positions, he has no right, by libelous publications, to degrade the tribunal, for that is an abuse of the liberty of the press; Burdett v. Com., 103 Va. 838, 48 S. E. 878, 68 L. R. A. 251, 106 Am. St. Rep. 916. The publication of one's picture, without his consent, as a part of an advertisement, is in no sense an exercise of the liberty of speech or of the press; Pavesich v. Ins. Co., 122 Ga. 190, 50 S. E. 68, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561.

The phrase "liberty of the press" means that any citizen may write or publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible only for the abuse of that right; Williams Printing Co. v. Saunders, 113 Va. 156, 73 S. E. 472, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 693.

The publication and circulation of a newspaper cannot be enjoined merely because it contains the "unfair" list of a labor union; but when it appeared that there was a conspiracy against the complainant in a pending cause and the newspaper was publishing the complainant's business and product in the "unfair" or "we-don't-patronize" list in furtherance of a boycott, it was enjoined, the court saying that, as soon as the conspiracy ended, the newspaper would have the right to comment upon the relation of the complainant with its employés; American Federation of Labor v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 33 App. D. C. 83, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748.

The liberty of the press is no greater or no less than the liberty of every subject of the queen. Lord Russell, C. J., in L. R. 2 Q. B. D. 40.

The requirements of the act of 1912 that certain information be given to the postmaster general and that all paid for newspaper matter be marked advertisement, under penalty of exclusion, does not abridge the freedom of the press; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Morgan, 229 U. S. 288, 33 Sup. Ct. 867, 57 L. Ed. 1190.

As to whether an injunction may be issued to restrain the publication of an alleged libel, see LIBEL.

LIBERUM MARITAGIUM (Lat.). In Old English Law. Frank-marriage (q. v.). 2 Bla. Com. 115; Littleton § 17.

LIBERUM SERVITIUM. Free service. Service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called servitium liberum ar- morum. Somner, Gavelk. p. 56; Jacob, Law Dict.; 4 Co. 9.

Service not unbecoming the character of a freeman and a soldier to perform: as, to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bla. Com. 60. The tenure of free service does not make a villein a free man, unless homage or manumission precede, any more than a tenure by villein services makes a freeman a villein. Bract. fol. 24.

LIBERUM TENEMENTUM. Freehold. Frank-tenement. 1 Washb. R. P. 46.

In Pleading. A plea in justification by the defendant in an action of trespass, by which he claims that he is the owner of the close described in the declaration, or that it is the freehold of some third person by whose command he entered. 2 Salk. 453; 7 Term 355; 1 Wms. Saund. 299 b.

It has the effect of compelling the plaintiff to a new assignment, setting out the abuttals where he has set forth the locus in quo only generally in his declaration; 11 East 51, 72; 16 id. 343; 1 B. & C. 489; or to set forth tenancy in case he claims as tenant of the defendant, or the person ordering the trespass; 1 Saund. 299 b. It admits possession by the plaintiff, and the fact of the commission of a trespass as charged; Caruth v. Allen, 2 McCord (S. C.) 226; McKel. Pl. 2033; see Greenl. Ev. § 626.

LIBLAC. Witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philters. Leg. Athel. 6; Wharton.

LIBRA PENSA. A pound of money by weight.

LIBRARIES, PUBLIC. A public library has been held to be "an association or institution of learning"; Philadelphia Library Co. v. Donohugh, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 284, affirmed in Appeal of Donohugh, 86 Pa. 306; to be "pre-eminently an educational institution"; Crerar v. Williams, 44 Ill. App. 497; to serve "an educational purpose"; Jones v. Habersham, 3 Woods 443, Fed. Cas. No. 7,465, affirmed in 107 U. S. 174, 2 Sup. Ct. 336, 27 L. Ed. 401; to be "within the proper range" of school apparatus; Maynard v. Woodard, 36 Mich. 423.

A school tax cannot be appropriated to maintain a library which is open to the pupils only as a part of the general public; Board of Education of Covington v. Board of Trustees, 113 Ky. 234, 68 S. W. 10; but the legislature may provide for the organization and maintenance of public libraries, as "a part of the educational system of the state"; School City of Marion v. Forrest, 168 Ind. 94, 78 N. E. 187; and it has been held that the legislature may authorize the city council to pay over to the boards of trustees of public libraries three per cent. of the amount levied for public school purposes and half the fines and costs collected in the police courts; Board of Trustees of Public Library of Covington v. Beitzer, 118 Ky. 738, 82 S. W. 421. It has been held that a tax to maintain a public library is not a tax for education; Ramsey v. City of Shelbyville 119 Ky. 180, 83 S. W. 116, 1136, 68 L. R. A. 300.

A law establishing library boards has been upheld under a constitutional power "to provide suitable means for the encouragement of intellectual improvement"; School City of Marion v. Forrest, 168 Ind. 94, 78 N. E. 187.

A library has been held to be a public charity; Philadelphia Library Co. v. Donohugh, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 284, affirmed in Appeal of Donohugh, 86 Pa. 306; People v. Com'rs of Taxes, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 505; Cleveland Library Ass'n v. Pelton, 36 Ohio St. 253; Mercantile Library Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 139, affirmed in 161 Pa. 155, 28 Atl. 1068; Delaware County Institute of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 163, though it was there held not to be a purely public charity where the benefits of the library and museum were restricted to members, except upon conditions prescribed by the managers. In Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 556, it was held that a library is a public charity; see also Crerar v. Williams, 44 Ill. App. 497; Maynard v. Woodard, 36 Mich. 423; Dascomb v. Marston, 80 Me. 223, 13 Atl. 888; Duggan v. Slocum, 83 Fed. 244; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174, 2 Sup. Ct. 336, 27 L. Ed. 401.

A library building, even as to parts leased to others, is exempt from taxation under an exemption of its stocks and real and personal property; State v. Leester, 29 N. J. L. 541; see State v. Krollman, 38 N. J. L. 574; in other cases exemption was not extended to parts of the building leased to others; Mercantile Library Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 161 Pa. 155, 28 Atl. 1068; Cleveland Library Ass'n v. Pelton, 36 Ohio St. 253; Detroit Young Men's Soc. v. Mayor, etc., of Detroit, 3 Mich. 172. See generally 43 Am. L. Rev. 536.

Acceptance of a Carnegie foundation does not violate a general requirement that money appropriated must first be placed in a village treasury to the credit of the fund; Smith v. Evans, 74 Ohio St. 17, 77 N. E. 280; but it contravenes a requirement that the indebtedness in any year shall not exceed the income thereof; Ramsey v. City of Shelbyville, 119 Ky. 180, 83 S. W. 116, 1136, 68 L. R. A. 300.

LIBRIPENS. In Civil Law. A neutral person or balance holder, who was present at a conveyance of real property. He held in his hand the symbolic balance, which was struck by the purchaser with a piece of bronze as a sign of the completion of the conveyance. The bronze was then transferred to the seller as a sign of the purchase money. Morey, Rom. L. 21, 80.

LICENCIADO. In Spanish Law. A lawyer or advocate.

LICENSE (Lat. licere, to permit).

In Real Property Law. A permission. A right, given by some competent authority to do an act, which without such authority would be illegal, or a tort or trespass.

A permission to do some act or series of acts on the land of the licensor, without having any permanent interest in it; it is founded on personal confidence, and not assignable. It may be given in writing or by parol; it may be with or without consideration, but in either case it is usually subject to revocation, though constituting a protection to the party acting under it until the revocation takes place. Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 282, 9 Am. Rep. 124; Sewart v. Ry. Co., 89 Mich. 315, 50 N. W. 852, 17 L. R. A. 539; Metcalf v. Hart, 3 Wyo. 513, 27 Pac. 900, 31 Pac. 407, 31 Am. St. Rep. 122.

An authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land without possessing any estate therein. Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. 533; Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 72; Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702, 15 Atl. 358; 1 Washb. R. P. *398.

The written evidence of the grant of such right.

An executed license exists when the licensed act has been done.

An executory license exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

An express license is one which is granted in direct terms.

An implied license is one which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

It may be granted by the owner, or, in many cases, by a servant; Cro. Eliz. 246; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 427.

The distinction between an easement and a license is often so metaphysical, subtle, and shadowy as to elude analysis. The adjudications upon this subject are so numerous and discordant that taken in the aggregate they cannot be reconciled. But there are certain fundamental principles underlying most cases which enable courts to distinguish an easement from a license when construed in the light of surrounding circumstances; East Jersey Iron Co. v. Wright, 32 N. J. Eq. 254; Nunnelly v. Iron Co., 94 Tenn. 397, 29 S. W. 361, 28 L. R. A. 421. An easement implies an interest in land which can only be created in writing or constructively its equivalent—prescription; 1 Washb. R. P. 629. A license may be created by parol; 13 M. & W. 838; Dolittle v. Eddy, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 74; Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Jarrell, 60 Tex. 267; by specialty; Pars. Con. 222; or by implication of circumstances; Hob. 62; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 427.

Licenses are of two kinds, simple or revocable, and coupled with a grant or irrevocable. Simple licenses are revocable at the will of the grantor; Cook v. Stearnes, 11 Mass. 533; Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 380, 30 Am. Dec. 60; Fluker v. Banking Co., 81 Ga. 461, 8 S. E. 529, 2 L. R. A. 843, 12 Am. St. Rep. 328; Wheeler v. West, 78 Cal. 95, 20 Pac. 45; Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364, 57 Am. Dec. 287; they are revoked ipso facto by the licensor's conveying the land to another; 4 M. & W. 538; Northern P. R. v. Paine, 119 U. S. 561, 7 Sup. Ct. 323, 30 L. Ed. 513; or by his doing any other act preventing the user; 13 M. & W. 838; although the licensee has incurred expense; Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. 378, 27 Am. Dec. 675; Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364, 57 Am. Dec. 287. Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray (Mass.) 302; Wilson v. R. Co., 41 Minn. 56, 42 N. W. 600, 4 L. R. A. 378; Pitzman v. Boyce, 111 Mo. 387, 19 S. W. 1104, 33 Am. St. Rep. 536; contra, Rerick v. Kern, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497; and it is not so with a license closely coupled with a transfer of title to personal property; Nettleton v. Sikes, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 34; Parsons v. Camp, 11 Conn. 525.

A license is irrevocable when it is coupled with a grant or when the licensee has on the faith of the license spent money in executing works of a permanent character on the land; 2 B. & Ald. 724; 11 A. & E. 34; Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 600, 73 Am. Dec. 439; Woodbury v. Parshley, 7 N. H. 237, 26 Am. Dec. 739; 13 M. & W. 838 (but see comments on this case in 4 Del. Ch. 195, note); and in some states even parol licenses without consideration are held irrevocable when executed, on the ground of equitable estoppel; Lacy v. Arnett, 33 Pa. 169; Russell v. Hubbard, 59 Ill. 337; Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702, 15 Atl. 358.

The nature of the interest in the land of another which might be created by a parol license is thus stated by Bates, Ch., in Jackson & Sharp Co. v. P. W. & B. R. Co., 4 Del. Ch. 180: "It must be admitted that a license or permission to exercise some privilege upon the land of the licensor can create no estate or interest in the land, such as binds the land and is transmissible from the licensee, the utmost effect of a license being to confer a personal privilege, which is not assignable or transmissible, and is revocable at the licensor's pleasure. Nor does it matter whether the license be oral or in writing, so long as it remains a mere license, not converted into a conveyance, grant, or contract, nor rendered irrevocable by estoppel, as under some circumstances . . . it may be in equity though not at law. Few points have undergone more discussion, and have at length come to be better settled, than the insufficiency of a license at law to create or transfer an interest in land." It was also said that "at law a license can under no circumstances become irrevocable by estoppel when the effect would be to create an interest in land," there not having been "such conduct as would render the assertion of the legal right a fraud." See note to this case, 4 Del. Ch. 195–198. See also Nunnelly v. Southern R. Co., 94 Tenn. 397, 29 S. W. 361, 28 L. R. A. 421; where it was held that the privilege to discharge water from an ore wash into a stream, given without words of grant by a lower proprietor to an iron company, with an agreement to accept a certain sum as the full amount of damages done by such water, is a license, not an easement, and does not extend to the grantees of the iron company.

The revocation of a license will not be permitted where such a revocation will amount to a fraud upon the licensee; Baldwin v. Taylor, 166 Pa. 507, 31 Atl. 250; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Bullard, 67 Vt. 272, 31 Atl. 286; Garrett v. Bishop, 27 Or. 349, 41 Pac. 10; but revocation may be presumed from a long period of non-user; Tatum v. City of St. Louis, 125 Mo. 647, 28 S. W. 1002. Courts of equity will interfere to restrain the exercise of a legal right to revoke a license on the ground of preventing fraud; Jackson v. Sharp Co. v. R. Co., 4 Del. Ch. 180; and will do so on no other ground; id.; but in such case they will construe the license as an agreement to give the right and compel specific performance by deed; Veghte v. Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 153; Williamston & T. R. Co. v. Battle, 66 N. C. 546; but this does not give the licensee an unqualified right to treat the license as unrevoked; 1 H. & C. 593; 23 Ex. 87. An occupancy of land under a contract void as against public policy, cannot be treated as a possession under a license for the purpose of obtaining relief in equity; Carley v. Gitchell, 105 Mich. 38, 62 N. W. 1003, 55 Am. St. Rep. 428. An executed license which destroys an easement enjoyed by the licensor in the licensee's land cannot be created without deed; 5 B. & C. 221; and the rule that an executed license cannot be revoked; Addison v. Hack, 2 Gill (Md.) 221, 41 Am. Dec. 421; 7 Bingh. 682; Saucer v. Keller, 129 Ind. 475, 28 N. E. 1117; is not applicable to licenses which, if given by deed, would create an easement, but to those which, if so given, would extinguish or modify an easement; Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray (Mass.) 302. A license must be established by proof and is not to be inferred by equivocal declarations of a land owner; Pennsylvania, P. & B. R. Co. v. Trimmer (N. J.) 31 Atl. 310.

The effect of an executed license, although revoked, is to excuse the licensee from liability for acts done properly in pursuance thereof and their consequences; Syron v. Blakeman, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 336; Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray (Mass.) 302; Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. 378, 27 Am. Dec. 675; Sampson v. Burnside, 13 N. H. 264; 7 Taunt. 374; 5 B. & C. 221.

In Contracts. A permission to do some act which, if lawful, would otherwise be a trespass or tort; the evidence of such permission when it is in writing.

A covenant not within the statute of frauds may be released or discharged wholly or in part by a parol license; 10 Ad. & E. 65; 2 Add. Cont. [1218].

A license by a debtor to a creditor to seize and sell a specific chattel in discharge of a debt not paid at maturity is what is termed in civil law imperfect hypothecation. Such license is confined to the parties and is terminated when rights of third parties intervene; and it is not assignable. It gives no title to the chattel until executed, but possession taken under the license clothes the creditor with the ownership. It is annulled by bankruptcy; 2 Add. Cont., 8th Am. ed. [637]. See HYPOTHECATION.

Where a lease gave a license to the lessor to enter and eject the lessee, he was authorized as between themselves to eject the tenant by main force, and the license was a good plea in bar of an action of trespass; 7 Man. & G. 316; 7 Sc. N. R. 1025.

In International Law. Permission granted by a belligerent state to its own subjects, or to the subjects of the enemy, or to neutrals to carry on a trade interdicted by war. 2 Halleck, Int. Law 343.

Licenses operate as a dispensation of the rules of war, so far as their provisions extend. They are stricti juris, but are not to be construed with pedantic accuracy. 2 Halleck, Int. Law 343; 1 Kent 163, n.; 4 C. Rob. 8. They can be granted only by the sovereign authority, or by those delegated for the purpose by special commission; 1 Dods. 226; Stew. Adm. 367; 8 Term 548; 1 C. Rob. 196; and they must be granted or assented to by both belligerents; Snow. Int. L. xxxi. The Act of Congress of July 13, 1861, authorizing the president to license certain commercial intercourse with the states in rebellion, did not contemplate the exercise of that authority by subordinate officers of the executive department without the express order of the president; The Sea Lion, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 630, 18 L. Ed. 618.

While licenses do not protect the holder from the capture and confiscation of his property by the other belligerent, as regards the state granting them they protect the licensee, who, even though an alien, may sue and be sued in respect thereto as a naturalized subject.

In Pleading. A plea of justification to an action of trespass, that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the freehold to commit the trespass complained of.

A license must be specially pleaded to an action of trespass; 2 Term 166; but may be given in evidence in an action on the case; 8 East 308. See JUSTIFICATION.

In Governmental Regulation. Authority to do some act or carry on some trade or business, in its nature lawful but prohibited by statute, except with the permission of the civil authority or which would otherwise be unlawful.

A license to carry on a business or trade is an official permit to carry on the same or perform other acts forbidden by law except to persons obtaining such permit. Hoefling v. City of San Antonio, 85 Tex. 228, 20 S. W. 85, 16 L. R. A. 608.

A license of this sort is a personal privilege, and one issued to a partner individually does not extend to his co-partner or to the firm; Long v. State, 27 Ala. 32. It has been held that even the servant of the licensee is not protected by his master's license; Gibson v. Kauffield, 63 Pa. 168; Stokes v. Prescott's Adm'r, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 37; its terms cannot be varied or extended by the licensee, although he may do every thing that is necessary and proper for his enjoyment of it; Bell v. Watson, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 328; Williams v. Garigues, 30 La. Ann. 1094; Henderson v. Com., 78 Va. 488.

In some cases it is held that where a license is for the protection of the public and to prevent improper persons from engaging in a particular business, and the license is for revenue merely, a contract made by an unlicensed person in violation of an act is void; Bowdre v. Carter, 64 Miss. 221, 1 South. 162; 4 C. B. N. S. 405; Johnson v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 501, 49 Am. Rep. 131; Hustis v. Pickands, 27 Ill. App. 270. An innkeeper who fails to secure a license cannot establish a lien upon the goods of his guest; Stanwood v. Woodward, 38 Me. 192; an attorney cannot recover for his services; Tedrick v. Hiner, 61 Ill. 189; or a surgeon; 37 Eng. L. & Eq. 475; or a physician; Gardner v. Tatum, 81 Cal. 370, 22 Pac. 880 (where a statute made the failure to procure a license a misdemeanor); Puckett v. Alexander, 102 N. C. 95, 8 S. E. 767, 3 L. R. A. 43; L. R. 10 Q. B. 66. But the contracts of unlicensed persons have, in some cases, been held valid; Shepler v. Scott, 85 Pa. 329; Brett v. Marston, 45 Me. 402.

A license fee is a tax; Parish of Morehouse v. Brigham, 41 La. Ann. 665, 6 South. 257; which a state may impose upon all citizens within its borders; Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 47; but it cannot discriminate between residents and nonresidents of the state; Corson v. State, 57 Md. 251; or of a city or county; Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642; Graffty v. City of Rushville, 107 Ind. 502, 8 N. E. 609, 57 Am. Rep. 128. Subject to this restriction, a license tax may be imposed upon particular classes of business men; County of Galveston v. Gorham, 49 Tex. 279; Ex parte Robinson, 12 Nev. 263, 28 Am. Rep. 794; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 97 Ga. 114, 25 S. E. 249, 35 L. R. A. 497; but a fixed and definite license fee must be named, which all persons engaged in the business specified shall pay; Bills v. City of Goshen, 117 Ind. 221, 20 N. E. 115, 3 L. R. A. 261. An occupation tax must be levied only as a means of regulation not of revenue; Littlefield v. State, 42 Neb. 223, 60 N. W. 724, 28 L. R. A. 588, 47 Am. St. Rep. 697.

Where an act authorizes the granting of licenses, but provides that they may be revoked at the pleasure of the authority granting them, a license granted under the act is not such a contract between the state and the individual that a revocation of it deprives the licensee of any property, immunity, or privilege within the meaning of the constitution; Com. v. Kinsley, 133 Mass. 579; but in some cases it has been held that a license cannot be revoked without refunding the fee for the unexpired time; Adams v. Hackett, 27 N. H. 289, 59 Am. Dec. 376.

The repeal of the act under which the license was granted does not thereby revoke the license; Boyd v. State, 46 Ala. 329; Hirn v. State, 1 Ohio St. 15; but an act prohibiting the business operates at once to revoke the license; Calder v. Kurby, 5 Gray (Mass.) 597.

When the power is exercised by municipal corporations, a license is the requirement, by the municipality, of the payment of a certain sum by a person for the privilege of pursuing his profession or calling, whether harmful or innocent, for the general purpose of producing a reliable source of revenue; Tied. Lim. Pol. Pow. 271.

If the occupation is harmful, the sum paid for its prosecution may be said to be a license fee; but if innocent, it is a license tax; City of St. Paul v. Traeger, 25 Minn. 248, 33 Am. Rep. 462; Chilvers v. People, 11 Mich. 49. See Mayor, etc., of City of N. Y. v. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 261; Kip v. Mayor and Aldermen of City of Paterson, 26 N. J. L. 298; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 445. Mere taxation of an unlawful business does not legalize it; Palmer v. State, 88 Tenn. 553, 13 S. W. 233, 8 L. R. A. 280. Where the occupation is not dangerous to the public, either directly or incidentally, it cannot be subjected to any police regulation which does not fall within the power of taxation; Tied. Lim. Pol. Pow. 273. In the regulation of occupations harmful to the public, it is constitutional to require those who apply for a license to pay a reasonable sum to defray the expense of issuing the license and maintaining the proper supervision. What is a reasonable sum must be determined by the facts of each case; but where it is a plain case of police regulation, the courts are not compelled to be too exact in determining the expense of regulation and supervision, so long as the sum demanded is not altogether unreasonable; Tied. Lim. Pol. Pow. 274; City of Boston v. Schaffer, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 415; Welch v. Hotchkiss, 39 Conn. 140, 12 Am.

Rep. 383; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 445; Ash v. People, 11 Mich. 347, 83 Am. Dec. 740; City of Burlington v. Ins. Co., 31 Ia. 102.

A police regulation is not necessarily invalid because in its incidental operations the receipts of the municipality are augmented; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 445; an ordinance which does not fix a definite fee for the pursuit of any occupation, and permit all persons to engage therein, upon payment of such fee, is invalid; Bills v. Goshen, 117 Ind. 221, 20 N. E. 115, 3 L. R. A. 261.

The fact that the income derived from a license is not directly applied to payment of the municipal expenses of regulation and supervision of the business, does not affect the validity of the license, if the amount is not disproportionate to the cost of issuing the license and regulating the business; Littlefield v. State, 42 Neb. 223, 60 N. W. 724, 28 L. R. A. 588, 47 Am. St. Rep. 697.

Revenue derived from licensing a harmful occupation with a view to its partial suppression, in excess of that required to maintain proper supervision of it, is not a tax, since its primary object is to restrict an occupation and not to raise revenue; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 406, 20 Am. Rep. 654; Tenney v. Lenz, 16 Wis. 566.

The cases are said by Tiedeman, Lim. Police Power, to be not harmonious as to the grounds justifying a license for all kinds of employment; yet the right to impose a license is generally recognized; City of Boston v. Schaffer, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 415; City of Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591; State v. Long Branch Com'rs, 42 N. J. L. 364, 36 Am. Dec. 518; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 445; Home Ins. Co. of New York v. City Council of Augusta, 50 Ga. 530; State v. Herod, 29 Ia. 123; City of Cairo v. Bross, 101 Ill. 475. The same author cites the following cases: licensing of hucksters has been held unreasonable; State v. Long Branch Com'rs, 42 N. J. L. 364, 36 Am. Dec. 518; Barling v. West, 29 Wis. 307, 9 Am. Rep. 576; City of St. Paul v. Traeger, 25 Minn. 248, 33 Am. Rep. 462; and a license tax upon lawyers and physicians is held to be reasonable; Ex parte Williams, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 262, 20 S. W. 580, 21 L. R. A. 783; Simmons v. State, 12 Mo. 268, 49 Am. Dec. 131; State v. Gazlay, 5 Ohio, 21; Mayor, etc., of Savannah v. Charlton, 36 Ga. 460; Young v. Thomas, 17 Fla. 169, 35 Am. Rep. 93; on bakers; Mayor and Aldermen of Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 137, 36 Am. Dec. 441; on places of public amusement; Charity Hospital of New Orleans v. Stickney, 2 La. Ann. 550; Germania v. State, 7 Md. 1; on hacks and draymen; City of Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591; City of St. Louis v. Green, 70 Mo. 562; Com. v. Matthews, 122 Mass. 60; on peddlers; City of Huntington v. Cheesbro, 57 Ind. 74; Ex parte Ah Toy, 57 Cal. 92; Temple v. Sumner, 51 Miss. 13, 24 Am. Rep. 615; on the sale of milk; People v. Mulholland, 82 N. Y. 324, 37 Am. Rep. 568; City of Chicago v. Bartee, 100 Ill. 57; on auctioneers; Wiggins v. City of Chicago, 68 Ill. 372; Town of Decorah v. Dunstan Bros., 38 Ia. 96; on selling liquor; State v. Cassidy, 22 Minn. 312, 21 Am. Rep. 765; Bancroft v. Dumas, 21 Vt. 456; Burckholter v. Village of McConnelsville, 20 Ohio St. 308; State v. Hudson, 78 Mo. 302; Gunnarssohn v. City of Sterling, 92 Ill. 569; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 406, 20 Am. Rep. 654; on street railway cars; Johnson v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 445; and on book canvassers; 31 Cent. L. J. 3.

A city ordinance imposing a pole and wire tax upon a telegraph company doing interstate business, in excess of the reasonable expense to the city in the supervision and regulation thereof, is void; City of Philadelphia v. Tel. Co., 82 Fed. 797; but an ordinance compelling a telegraph company to pay five dollars per annum "for the privilege of using the streets, alleys and public places," was upheld in St. Louis v. Tel. Co., 148 U. S. 92, 13 Sup. Ct. 485, 37 L. Ed. 380. See Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Baltimore, 156 U. S. 210, 15 Sup. Ct. 356, 39 L. Ed. 399.

A license tax upon an agent of a railroad company doing interstate business is unlawful; McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 10 Sup. Ct. 881, 34 L. Ed. 391, dissenting Fuller, C. J., Gray and Brewer, JJ.; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 10 Sup. Ct. 958, 34 L. Ed. 394; and so is one upon drummers soliciting orders for firms in another state; Robbins v. Shelby Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 30 L. Ed. 694; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 9 Sup. Ct. 1, 32 L. Ed. 368; Simrall v. City of Covington, 90 Ky. 444, 14 S. W. 369, 9 L. R. A. 556, 29 Am. St. Rep. 398; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 9 Sup. Ct. 256, 32 L. Ed. 637; and upon a telegraph company doing interstate business; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311. A license can be imposed upon peddlers if there is no discrimination as to residents or products of the state and other states; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 39 L. Ed. 430, where the subject of licenses is fully discussed (by Gray, J.). An office license tax upon a foreign corporation is not a tax upon the business or property of the corporation and is constitutional; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com., 114 Pa. 256, 6 Atl. 45; and licensing transient, non-resident merchants is not a discrimination against them merely because there may be no resident merchants who are compelled to pay the license; City of Ottumwa v. Zekind, 95 Ia. 622, 64 N. W. 646, 29 L. R. A. 734, 58 Am. St. Rep. 447.

LICENTIA CONCORDANDI (Lat. leave to agree). One of the formal steps in the levying a fine. When an action is brought for the purpose of levying a fine, the defendant, knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of accommodation to the plaintiff, who accepts them, but, having given pledges to prosecute his suit, applies to the court, upon the return of the writ of covenant, for leave to make the matter up: this, which is readily granted, is called the licentia concordandi. 5 Co. 39; Cruise, Dig. tit. 35, c. 2, 22.

LICENTIA LOQUENDI. Imparlance.

LICENTIA SURGENDI. In Old English Law. Liberty of rising. A liberty or space of time given by the court to a tenant, who is essoined, de malo lecti, in a real action, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default. Bract. lib. 5; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10. See ESSOIN.

LICENTIA TRANSFRETANDI. A writ or warrant directed to the keeper of the port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let the person who has this license of the king pass over sea. Reg. Orig. 93.

LICENTIOUSNESS. The doing what one pleases, without regard to the rights of others.

It differs from liberty in this, that the latter is restrained by natural or positive law, and consists in doing whatever we please not inconsistent with the rights of others, whereas the former does not respect those rights. Wolff, Inst. § 84.

Lewdness. Holton v. State, 28 Fla. 303, 9 South. 716. See LEWDNESS; LASCIVIOUSNESS.

LICET (Lat.). It is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Id omne licitum est quod non est legibus prohibitum, quamobrem, quod, lege permittente, fit, pœnam non meretur. Licere dicimus quod legibus, moribus, institutisque conceditur. Cic. Philip. 13.

Although. Calvinus, Lex. An averment that, "although such a thing is done or not done," is not implicative of the doing or not doing, but a direct averment of it. Plowd. 127.

LICET SÆPIUS REQUISITUS (although often requested). In Pleading. A formal allegation in a declaration that the defendant has been often requested to perform the acts the non-performance of which is complained of.

It is usually alleged in the declaration that the defendant, licet sæpius requisitus, etc., did not perform the contract the violation of which is the foundation of the action. This allegation is generally sufficient when a request is not parcel of the contract. Indeed, in such cases it is unnecessary even to lay a general request; for the bringing of the suit is itself a sufficient request; 1 Saund. 33, n. 2; 2 id. 118, note 3; 2 H. Bla. 131; Leffingwell & Pierpoint v. White, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 99, 1 Am. Dec. 97; Ernst v. Bartle, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 319; 3 M. & S. 150. See DEMAND.

LICITACION. In Spanish Law. The sale made at public auction by co-proprietors, or co-heirs, of their joint property which is not susceptible of being advantageously divided in kind.

LIDFORD LAW. See LYNCH LAW.

LIE. See LAY.

LIEGE. In Feudal Law. Bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior.

The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. So lieges are the king's subjects. Stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 10; 14 Hen. VIII. c 2. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict. But in ancient times private persons, as lords of manors, had their lieges. 1 Bla. Com. 367.

Liege, or ligius, was used in old records for full, pure, or perfect: e. g. ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal. Paroch. Antiq. 280. So in Scotland. See LIEGE POUSTIE.

LIEN. A hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge.

The right which one person possesses, in certain cases, of detaining property placed in his possession belonging to another, until some demand which the former has be satisfied. 2 East 235.

A qualified right which, in certain cases, may be exercised over the property of another. 6 East 25, n.

A right to hold. 2 Campb. 579.

A right, in regard to personal property, to detain the property till some claim or charge is satisfied. Metc. Yelv. 67, n.

The right of retaining or continuing possession till the price is paid. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 144.

A lien is defined by statute in California, Utah, New Mexico, and the Dakotas, to be a charge imposed upon specific property by which it is made security for the performance of an act.

In its most extensive signification, the term lien includes every case in which real or personal property is charged with the payment of a debt or duty; every such charge being denominated a lien on the property. It differs from an estate in or title to the property, as it may be discharged at any time by payment of the sum for which the lien attaches. It differs from a mortgage in the fact that a mortgage is made and the property delivered, or otherwise, for the express purpose of security; while the lien attaches as incidental to the main purpose of the bailment, or, as in case of the lien of a judgment, by mere act of the law, without any act of the party. In this general sense the word is commonly used by English and American law writers to include those preferred or privileged claims given by statute or by admiralty law, and which seem to have been adopted, from the civil law, as well as the security existing at common law, to which the term more exactly applies. In its more limited as well as commoner sense, the word lien indicates a mere right to hold the property of another as security until some claim is satisfied.

The civil law embraces, under the head of mortgage and privilege, the peculiar securities which, in common and maritime law, and equity, are termed liens. See MORTGAGE; PRIVILEGE; HYPOTHECATION.

In Scotch law what corresponds to the common law lien is included under the rights termed hypothec and retention, though certain rights of retention are also called liens; Ersk. Prin. 374. See RETENTION; HYPOTHECATION.

Common Law Lien. As distinguished from the other classes, a lien at common law consists in a mere right to retain possession until the debt or charge is paid. Jordan v. James, 5 Ohio 88; Taylor v. Baldwin, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 626; Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Bremond, 66 Tex. 159, 18 S. W. 448.

In the case of a factor an apparent exception exists, as he is allowed a lien on the proceeds of goods sold, as well as on the goods themselves. But this seems to result from the relation of the parties and the purposes of the bailment; to effectuate which, and at the same time give a security to the factor, the law considers the possession, or right to possession, of the proceeds, the same thing as the possession of the goods themselves; Bank of Mutual Redemption v. Sturgis, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 660; Story, Ag. § 111.

A particular lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property.

A general lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of a general balance due from the owner. 3 B. & P. 494.

Of course, where a general lien exists, a particular lien is included.

Particular liens constitute the oldest class of liens, and the one most favored by the common law; 4 Burr. 2221; 3 B. & P. 126. But courts ceased to originate liens at an early period; 9 East 426; while general liens have been looked upon with jealousy, being considered encroachments upon the common law and founded solely in the usage of and for the benefit of trade; 3 B. & P. 42, 26, 494.

Liens either exist by law, arise from usage, or are created by express agreement.

Liens which exist by the common law generally arise in cases of bailment. Thus, a particular lien exists when goods are delivered to a handicraftsman of any sort for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon them; see infra; or where a person is, from the nature of his occupation, under a legal obligation to receive and be at trouble or expense about the personal property of another; 3 B. & P. 42; Cummings v. Harris, 3 Vt. 245, 23 Am. Dec. 206; 5 B. & Ald. 350.

A lien sometimes arises where there is no bailment, as the maritime liens such as salvage, and a finder's lien for a reward, as to both of which, see infra. But this principle does not apply, generally, it is said, to the preservation of things found upon land, where no reward is offered; 2 W. Bl. 1107; Baker v. Hoag, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 113; Etter v. Edwards, 4 Watts (Pa.) 63; Amory v. Flyn, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 102, 6 Am. Dec. 316; Story, Bailm. § 621.

Liens which arise by usage are usually general liens, and the usage is said to be either the general usage of trade, or the particular usage of the parties; 3 B. & P. 119; 4 Burr. 2222.

The usage must be so general that the party delivering the goods may be presumed to have known it, and to have made the right of lien a part of the contract; 4 C. & P. 152; 3 B. & P. 50. And it is said that the lien must be for a general balance arising from similar transactions between the parties, and the debt must have accrued in the business of the party claiming the lien; 1 W. Bla. 651; and it seems that more decisive proof of general usage is required in those occupations in which the workmen are required to receive their employment when offered them, such as carriers; 6 Term 14; 6 East 519. But where a general lien has been once established, the courts will not allow it to be disturbed; 1 Esp. 109.

A general lien from particular usage between the parties is presumed from proof of their having before dealt upon that basis; 6 Term 19. If a debtor, who has already pledged property to secure a loan, borrow a further sum, the lien is for the whole debt; 2 Vern. 691.

Liens, general or particular, may be created by express agreement of parties; Cro. Car. 271; 6 Term 14; as when property is delivered under such agreement for repair or the execution of any purpose upon it or in case of pawns; 2 Kent 637. And an agreement among tradesmen to require such lien, if known to the bailor, will bind him as by a lien of this kind. A tradesman obliged to accept employment from all comers cannot by mere notice create such lien by implication; express assent must be proved; 3 B. & P. 42; 5 B. & Ald. 350.

LIENS EXISTING BY THE COMMON LAW, IN THE ABSENCE OF ANY SPECIAL AGREEMENT. Every bailee for hire who has, by his labor or skill, conferred value on specific chattels bailed to him for that purpose has a particular lien upon them; 6 Term 14; Hensel v.

Noble, 95 Pa. 345, 40 Am. Rep. 659; Miller v. Pickens, 26 Miss. 182; Moore v. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 292; White v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 105, 43 Am. Rep. 347; so also have wharfingers; 7 B. & C. 212; Brookman v. Hamill, 43 N. Y. 554, 3 Am. Rep. 731; warehousemen; Low v. Martin, 18 Ill. 286; Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. 437; 34 E. L. & Eq. 116; who are entitled to a lien on goods remaining in the warehouse for a general balance of storage due on all goods stored under a single contract; Devereux v. Fleming, 53 Fed. 401; dyers and tailors; Cro. Car. 271; 4 Burr. 2214; but a tailor making cloth into clothing as a sub-contractor, under a contract with one who received the cloth from the owner, has no lien on the clothing for his services; Meyers v. Bratespiece, 174 Pa. 119, 34 Atl. 551; the finder of lost property for which a reward is offered; Wilson v. Guyton, 8 Gill (Md.) 213; Baker v. Hoag, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 113; Cummings v. Gann, 52 Pa. 484; a vendor of goods, for the price, so long as he retains possession; 8 H. L. Cas. 338; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hynes, 83 Wis. 388, 53 N. W. 684; Curtin v. Isaacsen, 36 W. Va. 391, 15 S. E. 171; Benj. Sales, § 796; pawnees, from the very nature of their contract; Ferguson v. Furnace Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 345; Vest v. Green, 3 Mo. 219; Woodman v. Chesley, 39 Me. 45; but only where the pawner has authority to make such pledge; 2 Campb. 336, n. A pledge, even where the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner, unless the pawner has authority to make the pledge; 1 M. & S. 140; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. (U. S.) 343, 15 L. Ed. 934; Fisher v. Fisher, 98 Mass. 303; Bealle v. Bank, 57 Ga. 274; see, as to stock, Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115; Thompson v. Toland, 48 Cal. 99. The pawnee does not have a general lien; Allen v. Megguire, 15 Mass. 490; Van Blarcom v. Bank, 37 N. Y. 540; and he does not lose his particular lien by a re-delivery for a special and limited purpose; Cooper v. Ray, 47 Ill. 53; 18 C. B. N. S. 315; Way v. Davidson, 12 Gray (Mass.) 465, 74 Am. Dec. 604. Other liens recognized with respect to the particular property which is the subject matter of the dealings between the parties are as follows:

Common carriers, for transportation of goods; 6 East 519; Schneider v. Evans, 25 Wis. 241, 3 Am. Rep. 56; Dufolt v. Gorman, 1 Minn. 301 (Gil. 234), 66 Am. Dec. 543; Long v. R. Co., 51 Ala. 512; The Davis, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 15, 19 L. Ed. 875; Richardson v. Rich, 104 Mass. 156, 6 Am. Rep. 210; but not if the goods are taken tortiously from the owner's possession, where the carrier is innocent; Robinson v. Baker, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 137, 51 Am. Dec. 54; King v. Richards, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 418, 37 Am. Dec. 420; 1 B. & Ad. 450; nor if the carrier transport them for a mere hire; Gilson v. Gwinn, 107 Mass. 126, 9 Am. Rep. 13. Part of the goods may be detained for the whole freight of goods belonging to the same person; 6 East 622. A carrier has a lien on baggage for the fare of the passenger, which includes the transportation of both; Sto. Bailm. § 604; Hutch. Car. § 719; 2 Campb. 631; Roberts v. Koehler, 30 Fed. 94, where it was held by Deady, J., that this lien extended so far as to warrant the detention of the baggage to enforce the payment of an additional fare for the last part of the journey, covered by the ticket, charged by the conductor after the passenger had stopped over without permission; but this decision is challenged by Professor Ewell, in a note which collects and reviews cases considered as bearing upon the question; 26 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 293. If property is damaged while in charge of a common carrier to a greater amount than the bill for freight, his lien is extinguished; Miami Powder Co. v. Ry. Co., 38 S. C. 78, 16 S. E. 339, 21 L. R. A. 123. The lien of a carrier and warehouseman for keeping property is superior to that of a pledgee who has secured the property to be transported and stored; Cooley v. Ry. Co., 53 Minn. 327, 55 N. W. 141, 39 Am. St. Rep. 609. Where a company refuses to deliver freight to the proper owner or consignee, on the ground that it has a lien thereon for freight charges and storage, and the owner resorts to a suit to recover possession of the property, it cannot claim judgment on the ground that it has a lien for storage, where it has been decided that it had no lien for freight charges; Sicard v. Ry. Co., 15 Blatchf. 525, Fed. Cas. No. 12,831.

The carriers' common law lien did not include any right of sale; 6 East 21; Saltus v. Everett, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 32 Am. Dec. 541; but the right to the lien is recognized and a power of sale given by statute in most states. In some states this right of sale is given to other bailees, as innkeepers, factors, etc. For the statutes on this subject see 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. §§ 4353–6.

Innkeepers may detain a horse for his keep; though, perhaps, not if the person leaving him be not a guest; Taylor v. Downey, 104 Mich. 532, 62 N. W. 716, 29 L. R. A. 92, 53 Am. St. Rep. 472; Fox v. McGregor, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 41; but not sell him; Bacon, Abridg. Inns (D); except by custom of London and Exeter; F. Moo. 876; but see supra; and cannot retake the horse or any other goods on which he has a lien, after giving them up; L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 484. They may detain the goods of a traveller, but not of a boarder; Alvord v. Davenport, 43 Vt. 30; Manning v. Hollenbeck, 27 Wis. 202; L. R. 7 Q. B. 711; Pollock v. Landis, 36 Ia. 651; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 52 Minn. 516, 55 N. W. 56, 21 L. R. A. 229, 38 Am. St. Rep. 568. See 1 Smith, L. Cas. 253, 259; Beale, Innkeep. The innkeeper's common law lien is now generally regulated by statutes, many of which also confer on boarding-house keepers all the privileges of innkeepers; Cross v. Wilkins, 43 N. H. 332; Nichols v. Halliday, 27 Wis. 406; Mills v. Shirley, 110 Mass. 158. For reference to these statutes see 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 4393. An innkeeper's lien is a particular lien; 9 East 433; Cro. Car. 271; Langworthy v. R. Co., 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 195; it attaches to goods in the possession of his guest, though they belong to a stranger, provided the innkeeper has no notice of such fact; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 52 Minn. 516, 55 N. W. 56, 21 L. R. A. 229, 38 Am. St. Rep. 568; Cook v. Kane, 13 Or. 482, 11 Pac. 226, 57 Am. Rep. 28; but if he owes the guest for labor more than she does for board, he has no lien; Hanlin v. Walters, 3 Colo. App. 519, 34 Pac. 686. Where a husband and wife were guests at a hotel, although credit was given to the husband who made payments on account, yet the wife's luggage which was her separate property was subject to a lien for the balance of the hotel bill; 25 Q. B. Div. 491. See a full note on the innkeeper's lien; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 52 Minn. 516, 55 N. W. 56, 21 L. R. A. 229, 38 Am. St. Rep. 568. In holding that an innkeeper has a lien on goods which a traveller brings to the inn as luggage, the English court of appeal said that it would not disturb a well-known and very large business carried on in England for centuries, by holding otherwise; [1895] 2 Q. B. 501.

Agistors of cattle and livery-stable keepers have no lien; Cro. Car. 271; Goodrich v. Willard, 7 Gray (Mass.) 183; Miller v. Marston, 35 Me. 153, 56 Am. Dec. 694; Lewis v. Tyler, 23 Cal. 364; Mauney v. Ingram, 78 N. C. 96; Wills v. Barrister, 36 Vt. 220; except by statute; Ingalls v. Green, 62 Vt. 436, 20 Atl. 196.

But a liveryman, who is also an innkeeper, has a lien for his charges to the guest's horse; Lewis v. Tyler, 23 Cal. 364.

An agistor's lien cannot be based upon a breach of the contract of agistment; Powers v. Botts, 58 Mo. App. 1; and when the owner of stock allows it to remain in the hands of the agistor longer than the contract time, the latter may claim a lien for their keeping during such term; id. One who boards a horse under contract with a person not the owner thereof has no right to a lien unless it is shown that such person had authority to act for the owner; Elliott v. Martin, 105 Mich. 506, 63 N. W. 525, 55 Am. St. Rep. 461. Persons who have been held entitled to a lien for keeping animals are: ranchmen; Vose v. Whitney, 7 Mont. 385, 16 Pac. 846; stable keeper; Lynde v. Parker, 155 Mass. 481, 30 N. E. 74; State v. Shevlin, 23 Mo. App. 598; but not a groom merely employed to take charge of the horse; Skinner v. Caughey, 64 Minn. 375, 67 N. W. 203. Such lien accrues only to one in possession; Fishell v. Morris, 57 Conn. 547, 18 Atl. 717, 6 L. R. A. 82; Seebaum v. Handy, 46 Ohio St. 560, 22 N. E. 869; Hooker v. McAllister, 12 Wash. 46, 49 Pac. 617; Ferriss v. Schreiner, 43 Minn. 148, 44 N. W. 1083; Wright v. Waddell, 89 Ia. 350, 56 N. W. 650; Cox v. McGuire, 26 Ill. App. 315; contra, see Heaps v. Jones, 23 Mo. App. 617. One wrongfully converting an animal to his own use has no lien; Howard v. Burns, 44 Kan. 543, 24 Pac. 981; nor one receiving from a bailee with notice; Sherwood v. Neal, 41 Mo. App. 416. A liveryman's lien, under the Pennsylvania act, 1807, for boarding a horse does not extend to a carriage and harness kept with it; 14 Lanc. L. Rev. Pa. 255.

See AGISTOR.

Factors, brokers, and commission agents, on goods and papers; 3 Term 119; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 437, n.; Spring v. Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 268, 5 L. Ed. 614; Davis v. Bradley, 28 Vt. 118, 65 Am. Dec. 226; Sewall v. Nicholls, 34 Me. 582; Harrison v. Mora, 150 Pa. 481, 24 Atl. 705; Barnes Safe & Lock Co. v. Bloch Bros. Tobacco Co., 38 W. Va. 158, 18 S. E. 482, 22 L. R. A. 850, 45 Am. St. Rep. 846; on part of the goods for the whole claim; 6 East 622; or on the proceeds of sale of the goods; 5 B. & Ald. 27; Kelser v. Topping, 72 Ill. 226; Jarvis v. Rogers, 15 Mass. 389; but only for such goods as come to them as factors; 11 E. L. & Eq. 528; but not such as are delivered directly by the owner to the purchaser and do not come into possession of the factor; Warren v. First Nat. Bank, 149 Ill. 9, 38 N. E. 122, 25 L. R. A. 746. If a factor disobey instructions he loses his lien upon money deposited with him as security; Larminie v. Carley, 114 Ill. 196, 29 N. E. 382.

Garage. The keeper of a garage has a lien on the car if in his possession; Cuneo v. Freeman, 137 N. Y. Supp. 885; but it is lost if he parts with possession; Greene v. Fankhauser, 137 App. Div. 124, 121 N. Y. Supp. 1004.

Bankers, on all securities left with them by their customers; 5 Term 488; Bank of the Metropolis v. Bank, 1 How. (U. S.) 234, 11 L. Ed. 115; Russell v. Hadduck, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 233, 44 Am. Dec. 693; but see West Branch Bank v. Chester, 11 Pa. 291, 51 Am. Dec. 547; but not on securities collateral to a specific loan; L. R. 4 App. Cas. 413; Lane v. Bailey, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 395; Brown v. Institution for Savings, 137 Mass. 262; or for debts not due; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Proctor, 98 Ill. 558; Jordan v. Bank, 74 N. Y. 467, 30 Am. Rep. 319; or on the account of a firm for the debt of a partner; Lawrence v. Bank, 35 N. Y. 320; 11 Beav. 540.

A banker has a lien on a deposit to pay a matured note; Pursifull v. Banking Co., 97 Ky. 154, 30 S. W. 203, 53 Am. St. Rep. 409; McDowell v. Bank, 1 Har. (Del.) 369;

Commercial Nat. Bank v. Henninger, 105 Pa. 496; contra, Second Nat. Bank of Lafayette v. Hill, 76 Ind. 223, 40 Am. Rep. 239; Voss v. Bank, 83 Ill. 599, 25 Am. Rep. 415. An agreement that a deposit should remain in a bank until a certain note is paid gives the bank a lien on the deposit; Thompson v. Trust Co., 234 Pa. 452, 83 Atl. 284.

In Wynn v. Bank, 168 Ala. 469, 53 South. 228, it is said that the lien or claim of a bank on a deposit cannot be enforced in equity against the depositor, though in a proper sense it may be declared or recognized; and that "lien" is inaptly applied to a general deposit which is the property of the bank itself.

That a bank has a lien to secure payment of its depositors' indebtedness, though not when the account is a trustee's account, see Wagner v. Bank, 122 Tenn. 164, 122 S. W. 245, 135 Am. St. Rep. 869, 19 Ann. Cas. 483.

The Negotiable Instruments Act does not preclude setting off against an accommodation note held by an insolvent bank a sum deposited to the credit of the accommodation payee; Building & Engineering Co. v. Bank, 206 N. Y. 400, 99 N. E. 1044.

The lien of mechanics and material men upon a building or improvement in the construction of which labor or material is used, exists only by virtue of the statutes creating it; White Lake Lumber Co. v. Russell, 22 Neb. 126, 34 N. W. 104, 3 Am. St. Rep. 262. See mechanics' lien, infra.

As to the lien of attorneys and other court officers for fees, see attorneys' lien, infra.

As to liens on the assets of insolvent persons or corporations for wages of labor or service, which are purely statutory, having no relation to the common law idea of lien, see LABORER.

REQUISITES. There must have been a delivery of the property into the possession of the party claiming the lien, or his agent; 3 Term 119; 6 East 25, n.

Where a person, in pursuance of the authority and directions of the owner of property, delivers it to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon it, the tradesman will not have a general lien against the owner for a balance due from the person delivering it, if he knew that the one delivering was not the real owner; 2 Campb. 218. Thus, a carrier, who, by the usage of trade, is to be paid by the consignor, has no lien for a general balance against the consignee; 5 B. & P. 64. Nor can a claim against the consignee destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu; 3 B. & P. 42. But a particular lien may undoubtedly be derived through the acts of agents acting within the scope of their employment; 3 B. & P. 119. And the same would be true of a general lien against the owner for a balance due from him.

No lien exists where the party claiming it acquires possession by a wrong; 2 Term 485; or by misrepresentation; 1 Campb. 12; or by his unauthorized and voluntary act; 2 H. Bla. 254; 3 W. Bla. 1117 (but see 4 Burr. 2218).

Or where the act of the servant or agent delivering the property is totally unauthorized, and the pledge of it is tortious against the owner, whether delivered as a pledge or for the execution of the purposes of a trade thereupon; 5 Ves. 111.

A delivery by a debtor for the purpose of preferring a creditor will not be allowed to operate as a delivery sufficient for a lien to attach; 4 Burr. 2239; 3 Ves. 85; 2 Campb. 579.

A mere creditor happening to have in his possession specific articles belonging to his debtor, has no lien upon them; Allen v. Megguire, 15 Mass. 490; nor is a lien created by advancing money to enable a purchaser of land to complete his purchase; McKay v. Green, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 56; Collinson v. Owens, 6 G. & J. (Md.) 4; nor by an advancement of money to an administrator to pay debts of the intestate; Lieby v. Ludlow's Heirs, 4 Ohio, 469; the owner of land has no lien on property cast upon it by drift; Forster v. Bridge Co., 16 Pa. 393, 55 Am. Dec. 506. A lien cannot be created upon a mere right of action for a personal tort; Hammons v. Ry. Co., 53 Minn. 249, 54 N. W. 1108. No lien upon a particular fund is acquired by a creditor by reason of a promise to pay a debt out of it; Rogers v. Hosack's Ex'rs, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 319; nor upon land by the promise to pay out of the proceeds of its sale; Hamilton v. Downer, 46 Ill. App. 541. Nor can parties contract to extend the area of property to be covered by a lien; Sheffield Furnace Co. v. Witherow, 149 U. S. 574, 13 Sup. Ct. 936, 37 L. Ed. 853. A mere loan or advancement of money to pay the debt of another creates no lien; Kline v. Ragland, 47 Ark. 111, 14 S. W. 474; Wood v. Wood, 124 Ind. 545, 24 N. E. 751, 9 L. R. A. 173. See 9 L. R. A. 173, note; SUBROGATION. At common law a corporation has no lien upon the stock of one of its members for an indebtedness due to it by him; Clise Inv. Co. v. Bank, 18 Wash. 8, 50 Pac. 575; Budd v. Ry. Co., 15 Or. 413, 15 Pac. 659, 3 Am. St. Rep. 169; but see Petersburg Sav. & Ins. Co. v. Lumsden, 75 Va. 327; Bohmer & Osterloh v. Bank, 77 Va. 445; in which cases such lien seems to have been enforced under general statutes. By-laws creating such lien are common and are valid; Young v. Vough, 23 N. J. Eq. 325; Bank of Holly Springs v. Pinson, 58 Miss. 421, 38 Am. Rep. 330; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Lineville v. Wasson, 48 Ia. 339, 30 Am. Rep. 398; Lockwood v. Bank, 9 R. I. 308; not, however, against innocent purchasers; Bullard v. Bank, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 589, 21 L. Ed. 923; Driscoll v. Mfg. Co., 59 N. Y. 96; Merchants' Bank of Easton v. Shouse, 102 Pa. 488; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Bank, 63 Cal. 359;

Carroll v. Bank, 8 Mo. App. 249; Pitot v. Johnson, 33 La. Ann. 1286. A statutory lien of a corporation on its stock for debts due by a stockholder is good against all the world. A sale of the stock to an innocent third party does not discharge it; Dorr v. Clearing Co., 71 Minn. 38, 73 N. W. 635, 70 Am. St. Rep. 309; George H. Hammond & Co. v. Hastings, 134 U. S. 401, 10 Sup. Ct. 727, 33 L. Ed. 960. Such is declared to be "the weight of authority"; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 1032.

WAIVER. Possession is a necessary element of common-law liens; and if the creditor once knowingly parts with it after the lien attaches, the lien is gone; Jordan v. James, 5 Ohio 88; 6 East 25, n.; Clemson v. Davidson, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 398; Bigelow v. Heaton, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 498; Danforth v. Pratt, 42 Me. 50; King v. Canal Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 231; Elliot v. Bradley, 23 Vt. 217; Egan v. A Cargo of Spruce Lath, 43 Fed. 480; Benj. Sales § 799; the abandonment of his privilege by a vendor need not be in absolute terms, but it is enough if it can be inferred from the acts of the parties; Succession of Osborn, 40 La. Ann. 615, 4 South. 580. Parting with possession, if consistent with the contract, the course of business, and the intention of the parties, will not discharge a lien created by a contract; Spaulding v. Adams, 32 Me. 211. There may be a special agreement extending the lien, though not to affect third persons; McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 467. Delivery may be constructive; Ambl. 252; and so may possession; Kollock v. Jackson, 5 Ga. 153. A lien cannot be transferred; Holly v. Huggeford, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 73, 19 Am. Dec. 303; but property subject to it may be delivered to a third person, as to the creditor's servant, with notice, so as to preserve the lien of the original creditor; 2 East 529. But it must not be delivered to the owner or his agent; 2 East 529; Urquhart v. M'Iver, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 103. But if the property be of a perishable nature, possession may be given to the owner under proper agreements, 8 Term 199. Generally a delivery of part of goods sold is not equivalent to a delivery of the whole, so as to destroy the vendor's lien, but the lien will remain on the part retained for the price of the whole, if the intention to separate the goods delivered from the rest is manifest; Benj. Sales § 805. A grantor's lien on the premises conveyed for the purchase price is a personal privilege not assignable with the debt, nor can the creditor of the grantor be subrogated to the same; First Nat. Bank v. Salem Flour Mills Co., 39 Fed. 89; Carhart v. Reviere, 78 Ga. 173, 1 S. E. 222; Gruhn v. Richardson, 128 Ill. 178, 21 N. E. 18.

Neglect to insist upon a lien, in giving reasons for a refusal to deliver property on demand, has been held a waiver; 1 Campb. 410, n.; Hanna v. Phelps, 7 Ind. 21, 63 Am. Dec. 410; Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. 437.

Where there is a special agreement made, or act done, inconsistent with the existence of the lien, such as an agreement to give credit, or where a distinct security is taken, or the possession of the property is acquired for another distinct purpose, and for that only, or where the property is attached by the creditor, no lien arises; 5 M. & S. 180; Stoddard Woolen Manufactory v. Huntley, 8 N. H. 441, 31 Am. Dec. 198; Legg v. Willard, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 140, 28 Am. Dec. 282; Pinney v. Wells, 10 Conn. 104. But such agreement must be clearly inconsistent with the lien; Spaulding v. Adams, 32 Me. 211.

The only remedy or use of the lien at common law is to allow the creditor to retain possession of the goods; Sullivan v. Park, 33 Me. 438; Meany v. Head, 1 Mas. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 9,379. And he may do this against assignees of the debtor; 1 Burr. 489.

A waiver of exemption by a debtor as to any lien will enure to the benefit of all prior liens, on the principle that a debtor cannot alter the precedence settled by law; Hallman v. Hallman, 124 Pa. 347, 16 Atl. 871.

ATTORNEY'S LIEN. This, under English law, was a lien for costs taxed in the cause. In the early cases the attorney or solicitor was put upon the same footing as other court officers, such as clerks who had a lien on papers; 2 Ves. 25; Beames, Costs 311. The doctrine of attorney's lien as originally held was that it was confined to costs, and the plaintiff might settle the case in the absence of notice from the attorney; 4 Term 124; 13 Ves., Sumn. ed. 59, n.; that is, before judgment; Wright v. Cobleigh, 21 N. H. 339; Horton v. Champlin, 12 R. I. 557, 34 Am. Rep. 722; Boogren v. Ry. Co., 97 Minn. 51, 106 N. W. 104, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379, 114 Am. St. Rep. 691; he acquires no lien until after judgment; Hanna v. Island Coal Co., 5 Ind. App. 163; the client may, before judgment, settle his case without consulting his attorney; Simmons v. Aliny, 103 Mass. 33; Connor v. Boyd, 73 Ala. 385; Coughlin v. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 443, 27 Am. Rep. 75; Kusterer v. City of Beaver Dam, 56 Wis. 471, 14 N. W. 617, 43 Am. Rep. 725. There was also a lien on papers; 6 Madd. 66; but none on the fund; 4 id. 391. There were two classes of liens recognized, active and passive, the former being on the fund for costs, and the latter a right to retain papers; 4 Myl. & Cr. 354. The attorney was not dominus litis; 12 M. & W. 440; and his lien would not prevail over a garnishment; 1 H. & M. 171. Many cases sustain the lien upon the fruits of the judgment for fees; Jackson v. Clopton, 66 Ala. 29; McCain v. Portis, 42 Ark. 402; Cooke v. Thresher, 51 Conn. 105; McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 89; Williams v. Hersey, 17 Kan. 20; Gill v. Truelsen, 39 Minn. 373, 40 N. W. 254; Renick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 378; Chappell v. Cady, 10 Wis. 112. Some cases sustain the lien for a fee agreed upon as being within the principle of the common law lien for costs; Wright v. Wright, 70 N. Y. 98; but the lien is waived by consent to a payment to the client; Goodrich v. McDonald, 112 N. Y. 157, 19 N. E. 649. Others recognize a retaining lien on papers; Sanders v. Seelye, 128 Ill. 631, 21 N. E. 601; In re Paschal, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 483, 19 L. Ed. 992; and as between solicitor and client for reasonable compensation on money collected; Trustees of Internal Improv. Fund v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. Ed. 1157; but none in either of these cases, upon a judgment, or unliquidated damages; Wood v. Anders, 5 Bush (Ky.) 601; or in an action of tort; Averrill v. Longfellow, 66 Me. 237.

In some states the cases sustain a statutory lien for fees; Fillmore v. Wells, 10 Col. 228, 15 Pac. 343, 3 Am. St. Rep. 567; paramount to set off; Puett v. Beard, 86 Ind. 172, 44 Am. Rep. 280; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 10 Neb. 574, 7 N. W. 322; Martin v. Hawks, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 406; Scharlock v. Oland, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 207; Wells v. Elsam, 40 Mich. 218; the lien binds money or papers in possession of the attorney for all professional services, but for them only; Robinson v. Hawes, 56 Mich. 135, 22 N. W. 222.

In others, statutory liens are held to apply only to taxable fees; Peirce v. Bent, 69 Me. 381; Baker v. Cook, 11 Mass. 238; and only after final judgment and execution issued; Simmons v. Almy, 103 Mass. 33. So in New York prior to the code, the common-law lien was confined to taxed costs; 1 Paine & Duer, Prac. 190; and did not affect damages recovered until they came into his hands; St. John v. Diefendorf, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 261.

Some cases sustain a lien on papers for a general balance; Dennett v. Cutts, 11 N. H. 163; and on the recovery in the cause, but not those due in other causes; Shapley v. Bellows, 4 N. H. 347; Massachusetts & Southern Const. Co. v. Township of Gill's Creek, 48 Fed. 145; others, for costs, but subordinate to set-off; Walker v. Sargeant, 14 Vt. 247; and ineffective as against an assignment; Beech v. Town of Canaan, 14 Vt. 485.

In [1909] 1 Ch. D. 96, it was held that a solicitor, in winding-up proceedings, had a lien in all documents that had come into his lands before the proceedings, but not after.

Liens may be defeated by settlement; Hawkins v. Loyless, 39 Ga. 5; Ellwood v. Wilson, 21 Ia. 523; if there is no collusion; Henchey v. City of Chicago, 41 Ill. 136.

It is said to be not a lien, but a right of set-off; Appeal of McKelvey, 108 Pa. 615.

The lien is denied absolutely in some states; Marshall v. Cooper, 43 Md. 46; Levy v. Steinbach, 43 Md. 212; Stewart v. Flowers, 44 Miss. 530, 7 Am. Rep. 707; Frissell v. Haile, 18 Mo. 18; Olds v. Tucker, 35 Ohio St. 581; Irwin v. Workman, 3 Watts (Pa.) 357; though some cases, denying the lien hold that fees may be deducted from money in hand; Balsbaugh v. Frazer, 19 Pa. 95; Casey v. March, 30 Tex. 180; see 12 Op. Atty. Gen. 216; but in another case it was said that in the absence of an express agreement, an attorney's lien is not acquired upon a judgment rendered in a suit prosecuted by him, nor upon the money recovered by means of his legal services; Dougherty v. Hughes, 165 Ill. 384, 46 N. E. 229.

It has been said that an attorney has no lien, even upon a judgment recovered by him, unless given by statute; Lamont v. R. Co., 2 Mackey (D. C.) 502, 47 Am. Rep. 268; and that his only right is to be protected by the court in the control of the judgment and its incidental processes against his client and the opposite party colluding with him, and in matters of equitable set-off; Horton v. Champlin, 12 R. I. 550, 34 Am. Rep. 722. In Humphrey v. Browning, 46 Ill. 476, 95 Am. Dec. 446, where many cases were cited, it was held that an attorney has no lien upon land recovered by him in ejectment.

An attorney has a lien on land for sums expended for his client's benefit in obtaining full title; Hodges v. Ory, 48 La. Ann. 54, 18 South. 899; but not for fees in maintaining title; Weill v. Levi, 40 La. Ann. 135, 3 South. 559; also on a judgment in favor of defendant for costs; In re Lazelle, 16 Misc. 515, 40 N. Y. Supp. 343; and the attorney of a stockholder in a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the officers of the corporation, has a lien for his fees on the property recovered; Grant v. Mountain Co., 93 Tenn. 691, 28 South. 90, 27 L. R. A. 98; also on money collected for his client until paid the general balance due him for his services; Scott v. Darling, 66 Vt. 510, 29 Atl. 993. An attorney for plaintiff in an action by an administrator to recover damages for the death of his intestate has a lien on the amount recovered; Lee v. Van Voorhis, 78 Hun 575, 29 N. Y. Supp. 571; but one retained by a legatee to procure the establishment of a will has none, for his services, on the legacy to his client; Fuller v. Cason, 26 Fla. 476, 7 South. 870. In proceedings to compel an attorney to deliver up property where his claim is indefinite, a reference is properly ordered to ascertain the amount, giving plaintiff the option of making a deposit sufficient to secure whatever amount may be established on the reference, and he is not deprived of his lien simply because his claim is indefinite; In re Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Higgins, 137 N. Y. 605, 33 N. E. 744. An equitable lien is acquired by an attorney where, by an agreement with the owner of property condemned for a city street, he procures an increase in the amount of damages awarded; Gates v. De La Mare, 66 Hun 626, 20 N. Y. Supp. 837. He has a lien upon the cause of action for agreed compensation, which attaches to the judgment and the proceeds thereof, superior to the rights of a receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings; Steenburgh v. Miller, 11 App. Div. 286, 42 N. Y. Supp. 333.

It has been held that an attorney has no lien, at common law, on his client's cause of action; Sherry v. Nav. Co., 72 Fed. 565; or, independently of a statute, for services; Ward v. Sherbondy, 96 Ia. 477, 65 N. W. 413; or in a proceeding by a guardian for the removal of funds of his ward to a foreign state, for fees incurred in the proceeding; Manson v. Stacker (Tenn.) 36 S. W. 188. The lien cannot be asserted against money appropriated by a legislative act, while it is in the hands of the state treasurer; State v. Moore, 40 Neb. 854, 59 N. W. 755, 25 L. R. A. 774. The attorney employed by a pledgee of notes, impounded in an equity suit, to sue on them at law, has no lien upon the fund realized, as against the other parties to the equity suit; Gregory v. Pike, 67 Fed. 837, 15 C. C. A. 33. An agreement on the settlement of certain cases that the fees of an attorney should be included in the fees to be paid in another case, if a judgment be recovered, does not create a lien on the judgment for fees on the cases settled; Foster v. Danforth, 59 Fed. 750. Where an attorney received money for bail, to be returned on final disposition of the charge, it was held that an attorney's lien did not exist on the money, his agreement being to return it on receiving it back from the magistrate; State v. Lucas, 24 Or. 168, 33 Pac. 538.

An attorney's lien for services in procuring a judgment is limited to the attorney of record and does not extend to attorneys employed to assist him; Foster v. Danforth, 59 Fed. 750; nor does it extend to prospective services; Massachusetts & Southern Const. Co. v. Gill's Creek Tp., 48 Fed. 145.

An attorney whose services are employed merely in defending the title to land has no lien upon the land for his services; Greer v. Ferguson, 56 Ark. 324, 19 S. W. 966; nor is there a lien on land recovered; Hogg v. Dower, 36 W. Va. 200, 14 S. E. 995. The attorney for defendant is not entitled to any lien so as to prevent a settlement by defendant, where the answer simply sets up a defence and not a counterclaim; White v. Sumner, 16 App. Div. 70, 44 N. Y. Supp. 692. And the right of an attorney to a lien on his client's papers is lost by the substitution of another attorney in his place on his refusal to go on with the case without the payment of fees which he claims to have already earned; Halbert v. Gibbs, 16 App. Div. 126, 45 N. Y. Supp. 113. No lien can accrue in favor of the attorney for plaintiff where the action is settled by plaintiff before defendant has notice of the attorney's claim for a lien; Cobbey v. Dorland, 50 Neb. 373, 69 N. W. 951. But acceptance of a client's note for his fee is not a waiver of his statutory lien; Davis v. Jackson, 86 Ga. 138, 12 S. E. 299.

Where an attorney having a lien on a judgment takes an assignment thereof to himself, and claims the absolute ownership of the judgment, he relinquishes whatever rights he might have been entitled to by virtue of his lien; Whitehead v. Jessup, 7 Colo. App. 460, 43 Pac. 1042; and taking an independent security to secure payment of his fee waives his lien, even though the security proves unvailable; Fulton v. Harrington, 7 Houst. (Del.) 182, 30 Atl. 856.

It has been held that, where a judgment requires the claim of an intervening creditor of the plaintiff to be first paid out of the amount for which the plaintiff has judgment, the right of the creditor is superior to the lien of an attorney; Ward v. Sherbondy, 96 Ia. 477, 65 N. W. 413. An attorney's lien is subordinate to the right of the adverse party to any proper set-off, or other available defences; Field v. Maxwell, 44 Neb. 900, 63 N. W. 62; Hroch v. Aultman & Taylor Co., 3 S. D. 477, 54 N. W. 269.

In a contract for a one-half contingent fee, the attorney has a lien on the judgment therein, and this operates as an assignment to the extent of the lien, but there would be no lien before judgment; Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co. v. Circuit Judge, 161 Mich. 181, 126 N. W. 56, 137 Am. St. Rep. 495.

See, generally, Weeks, Attys.; Beames, Costs; Cross, Liens; 26 Alb. L. J. 271; 31 Am. Dec. 755–9; 20 Am. L. Rev. 727, 821; 21 id. 70; 10 Am. L. Rec. 200; 19 Centr. L. J. 394; 27 id. 194.

Equitable Liens are such as exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance.

A court of equity will raise equitable liens for the purpose of justice, and if a lien could not be created otherwise, could even make a company execute a conveyance for that purpose; Skiddy v. R. Co., 3 Hughes 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,922.

A lien is neither a jus in re nor a jus ad rem; it is not property in the thing, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing. In regard to these liens, it may be generally stated that they arise from constructive trusts. They are, therefore, wholly independent of the possession of the thing to which they are attached as an incumbrance; and they can be enforced only in courts of equity: Story, Eq. Jur. § 1215.

An equitable lien on a sale of realty is very different from a lien at law; for it operates after the possession has been changed, and is available by way of charge instead of detainer. Ad. Eq. 127.

Every express executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property, real or personal, or fund therein identified, a security for a debt or other obligation, or whereby the party promises to convey, assign, or transfer the property as security, creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated which is enforceable against the property; Knott v. Mfg. Co., 30 W. Va. 790, 5 S. E. 266.

VENDOR'S LIEN. First in importance among equitable liens is the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money. The principle upon which it rests is that where a conveyance is made prematurely before payment of the price, the purchase money is a charge on the estate in the hands of the vendee; 4 Kent 151; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1217; Bisph. Eq. 353; 1 Bro. C. C. 420, 424, n. There has been some discussion as to its exact nature and whether it is to be classed in any sense as an implied trust, but the more reasonable view seems to be that it is not, at least in such sense as to carry with it the idea of any title, but that it is strictly a mere charge, the true nature of which perhaps cannot be better expressed than by the use of the term equitable lien. "The principle upon which such a lien rests has been held to be that one who gets the estate of another ought not, in conscience, to be allowed to keep it without paying the consideration." Fisher v. Shropshire, 147 U. S. 133, 13 Sup. Ct. 201, 37 L. Ed. 109. As to the nature and origin of the lien see also 1 Bisph. Eq. 354; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1219; 2 Sugd. Vend. & P. 376; 1 Pingr. Mort. 319; 1 Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. 366; 22 Am. St. Rep. 279, note.

"No other single topic belonging to the equity jurisprudence has occasioned such a diversity and even discord of opinion among the American courts as this of the grantor's lien. Upon nearly every question that has arisen as to its operation, its waiver or discharge, the parties against whom it avails, and the parties in whose favor it exists, the decisions in the different states and even sometimes in the same state, are directly conflicting." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1251.

Unless waived the lien remains till the whole purchase money is paid; 15 Ves. 329.

In order to create a vendor's lien there must be a fixed amount of unpaid purchase money due to the vendor. A vendee's obligation to a vendor on a collateral covenant made at the time of a purchase will not give rise to a vendor's lien, unless the vendor expressly reserves such a lien in his deed; Barlow v. Delany, 36 Fed. 577.

A grantor's lien on the premises conveyed for the purchase price, is a personal privilege not assignable with the debt; nor can the creditor of the grantor be subrogated to the same; First Nat. Bank of Salem v. Flour-Mills Co., 39 Fed. 89; Gruhn v. Richardson, 128 Ill. 178, 21 N. E. 18; but see Hamblen v. Folts, 70 Tex. 132, 7 S. W. 834; Cate v. Cate, 87 Tenn. 41, 9 S. W. 231. The lien exists against all the world except bona fide purchasers without notice; Amory v. Reilly, 9 Ind. 490; Kent v. Gerhard, 12 R. I. 92, 34 Am. Rep. 612; it is good against the land in the hands of heirs or subsequent purchasers with notice; 3 Russ. 488; 1 Sch. & L. 135; against assignees in bankruptcy; 2 B. R. 183; 1 Bro. C. C. 420; and whether the estate is actually conveyed or only contracted to be conveyed; 2 Dick. Ch. 730; 12 Ad. & E. 632. But as a general rule the lien does not prevail against the creditors of the purchaser; Bayley v. Greenleaf, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 46, 5 L. Ed. 393; Taylor v. Baldwin, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 626; 2 Sudg. Vend. & P. [681]; but whether it will do so it is said "depends upon the relative equities and rights of the disputants in comparison with one another." 1 Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. 374; and see 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1228. See as to assignability, 25 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 393, where the cases are collected by states. The question is involved in too much confusion for any successful effort to state a general rule.

The doctrine of vendor's lien, firmly settled in England, has been received with varying degrees of favor in the United States, some of them refusing to accept it. This would be in accord with the disfavor shown in this country to secret liens which has naturally resulted from the universal habit of requiring title papers and charges on real estate to be matters of record. In a general way the American cases may be grouped as follows: (1) Those which follow the English doctrine of Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329, sustaining the lien as already defined. In this class are included a majority of the states, though it is to be noted that in the classification of states frequently made with reference to this subject, there is a failure to note an important distinction between those states where the lien is recognized before a conveyance, and those in which the English doctrine is carried to its fullest extent and a grantor's lien sustained. A careful examination of the cases would probably leave the states which go to this extent in a considerable minority, as the lien is frequently recognized in favor of a vendor who has only executed a contract of sale and put the vendee in possession; Birdsall v. Cropsey, 29 Neb. 672, 44 N. W. 857; Winborn v. Gorrell, 38 N. C. 117, 40 Am. Dec. 456; while the lien is not recognized after a deed; Womble v. Battle, 38 N. C. 182. So in a state usually included among those recognizing the lien; Gee v. McMillan, 14 Or. 268, 12 Pac. 417, 58 Am. Rep. 315; it has been recently held that "where real estate is granted by absolute deed, followed by delivery of possession to the grantee, no implied equitable lien for the unpaid purchase money remains in the grantor;" Frame v. Sliter, 29 Or. 121, 45 Pac. 290, 34 L. R. A. 690, 54 Am. St. Rep. 781. (2) The implied vendor's lien is abolished by statute in Vermont, Iowa, Virginia, West Virginia, and Georgia. It is recognized and process provided for it in Tennessee, California, the Dakotas, Louisiana, and Arizona. And in Arkansas and Alabama the lien passes to an assignee of the note or bond for purchase money; 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 1950. (3)

The doctrine has been expressly disavowed in several states; Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410; Smith v. Rowland, 13 Kan. 245; Heist v. Baker, 49 Pa. 9; Wragg's Representatives v. Comptroller-General, 2 Desaus. (S. C.) 509; Perry v. Grant, 10 R. I. 334; Ahrend v. Odiorne, 118 Mass. 261, 19 Am. Rep. 449; Arlin v. Brown, 44 N. H. 102; Atwood v. Vincent, 17 Conn. 575. In Delaware the question remains without direct decision but with judicial expressions strongly adverse; Godwin v. Collins, 3 Del. Ch. 189; Rice v. Rice, 36 Fed. 860. (4) The federal courts recognize and enforce the lien "if in harmony with the jurisprudence of the state in which the case is brought;" Fisher v. Shropshire, 147 U. S. 133, 13 Sup. Ct. 201, 37 L. Ed. 109. Classifications of cases in the state courts on this subject may be found in Bisph. Eq. § 353, notes; 1 Pingr. Mortg. 318, notes; Tiedem. R. P. 292, notes; 25 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 393.

In a rather unusual case, it was held that where a vendee, as a consideration, assumes debts of the vendor and settles them at a compromise, the vendor has a lien for the amount of the rebate; Koch v. Roth, 150 Ill. 212, 37 N. E. 317.

Waiver. The lien may be waived by agreement; but postponement of the day of payment is not a waiver, not being inconsistent with the nature of the lien; nor taking personal security; Ad. Eq. 128; Garson v. Green, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 308; Campbell v. Baldwin, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 248; Tiernan v. Beam, 2 Ohio 383, 15 Am. Dec. 557; Mims v. R. Co., 3 Ga. 333; 1 Ball & B. 514. An acknowledgment of the payment of the purchase-money in the body of the deed, or by a receipt, will not operate as a waiver or discharge of the vendor's lien if the purchase-money has not in fact been paid; Ogden v. Thornton, 30 N. J. Eq. 569; Simpson v. McAllister, 56 Ala. 228; Holman v. Patterson's Heirs, 29 Ark. 357. Taking the note or other personal security of the vendee payable at a future day is generally held merely a means of payment, and not a security destroying the lien; 1 Sch. & L. 135; 2 V. & B. 306; Hanrick v. Walker, 50 Ala. 34; Corlies v. Howland, 26 N. J. Eq. 311; Davis v. Pearson, 44 Miss. 508; Garson v. Green, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 308. And if it be the note of a third party, or an independent security on real estate, it would generally be a waiver; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1226, n.; 4 Kent 151; Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 290, 4 L. Ed. 564; Stevens v. Rainwater, 4 Mo. App. 292; Kirkham v. Boston, 67 Ill. 599; Perry v. Grant, 10 R. I. 334; Faver v. Robinson, 46 Tex. 204; McGonigal v. Plummer, 30 Md. 422; Griffin v. Blanchar, 17 Cal. 70; Sears v. Smith, 2 Mich. 243; Vail v. Vail, 4 N. Y. 312; Anderson v. Griffith, 66 Mo. 44. And, generally, the question of relinquishment will turn upon the facts of each case; 3 Russ. Ch. 488; 3 Sugd. Vend. c. 18; Clark v. Hunt, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 553.

OTHER EQUITABLE LIENS. In a case analogous to the vendor's lien, where money has been paid prematurely before conveyance made, the purchaser and his representatives have a lien; 3 Y. & J. 264; 11 Price 58; 1 P. Wms. 278.

So where the purchase money has been deposited in the hands of a third person, to cover incumbrances; 1 T. & R. 469; 1 Ves. 478. Yet a lien will not be created for a third party, who was to receive an annuity under a covenant as a part of the consideration for the conveyance; 1 M. & K. 297; 2 Keen 81.

The deposit of the title-deeds of an estate gives an equitable lien on the estate; 4 Bro. C. C. 269; s. c. 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 931; L. R. 3 P. C. C. 299; Bisph. Eq. 357; without any express agreement either by parol or in writing. But not when the circumstances of the deposit were such as to show that no such lien was intended; 36 Beav. 27. This equitable lien has been recognized in Rockwell v. Hobby, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 9; Mowry v. Wood, 12 Wis. 413; Williams v. Stratton, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 418; but denied in 2 Disn. 9; Rickert v. Madeira, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 325. This lien is not favored, and is confined strictly to an actual, immediate, and bona fide deposit of the title-deeds with the creditor, as a security, in order to create the lien; 12 Ves. 197; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1020; 4 Kent 150. It would not be valid under the recording acts as against a bona fide purchaser from the owner of the title, without notice.

One who has a lien for the same debt on two funds, on one only of which another person has a lien, may be compelled in equity by the latter to resort first to the other fund for satisfaction; 8 Ves. 388; Cheesebrough v. Millard, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 409, 7 Am. Dec. 494; 1 Story, Eq. § 633; but not where there are prior liens on both funds; Jennings v. Loeffler, 184 Pa. 318, 39 Atl. 214.

When a single lien covers several parcels of land, such of them as still belong to the real debtor will be primarily charged, to the exoneration of lands transferred to third parties; and if the purchasers are called upon to pay, they will be charged successively in the reverse order of time of transfers to them; Clowes v. Dickenson, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 235; In re Cowden's Estate, 1 Pa. 275; but see contra, 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1233.

One joint tenant has, in many cases, a lien on the common estate for repairs put on by himself above his share of the liability; 1 Ball & B. 199; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1236; Sugd. Vend. 611.

And equity applies this principle even to cases where a tenant for life makes permanent improvements in good faith; 1 Sim. &

S. 552. So where a party has made improvements under a defective title; 6 Madd. 2.

An agreement between two legatees whereby one purchases the interest of the other and agrees that the executor shall hold his own interest in the estate as security for the payment of the consideration, and shall pay to the vendor any sum due under the will to the vendee, creates an equitable lien on the personal property or its proceeds, to which the vendee is entitled under the will, but not on the real estate; Carroll v. Kelly, 111 Ala. 661, 20 South. 456.

So, too, there is a lien where property is conveyed inter vivos, or is bequeathed or devised by last will and testament, subject to a charge for the payment of debts; or to other charges in favor of third persons; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1244. A distinction must be kept in mind between a devise in trust to pay certain sums, and a devise subject to charges.

An equitable lien may be given by express contract upon future property; Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 413, 50 Pac. 546; but it is not created by a mere promise to pay a debt from a particular fund if it should ever come into existence; Burdon Cent. Sugar Refining Co. v. Mfg. Co., 78 Fed. 417.

An acknowledgment in a deed to a firm that a judgment in favor of the grantor against a member of the firm is to stand against a fractional portion of the property conveyed, creates a lien by deed; In re Fair Hope North Savage Fire Brick Co.'s Assigned Estate, 183 Pa. 96, 38 Atl. 519.

A covenant to convey and settle lands does not give the covenantee a lien; but was held to do so in case of a covenant to settle lands in lieu of dower; 3 Bro. Ch. 489; 1 Ves. 451.

A court of equity cannot create a lien upon lands to secure a party for a breach of contract, whether under seal or not, when there is no agreement for a lien between the parties; Richards v. Lumber Co., 74 Mich. 57, 41 N. W. 860.

A bargain and sale of personal property, accompanied by delivery, divests the vendor of any lien for payment, unless such lien is secured by chattel mortgage or by agreement between the parties; Segrist v. Crabtree, 131 U. S. 287, 9 Sup. Ct. 687, 33 L. Ed. 125.

An equitable lien upon real estate does not result from the sale of personal property, even though it is used in the erection of buildings thereon; Slack v. Collins, 145 Ind. 569, 42 N. E. 910.

Where the owner of an equity of redemption in mortgaged lands agreed to charge a certain lot with the payment of two mortgages held upon other property, and agreed to execute proper mortgages on said land, or to pay off the mortgage already given, the agreement created an equitable charge in favor of the mortgagees named in the instrument; 26 Can. S. C. R. 41.

The holder of a mere equitable lien cannot compel the owner of the legal estate to account for the rents and profits received by him while occupying the premises; Whitehouse v. Cargill, 88 Me. 479, 34 Atl. 276.

The holder of the legal title to land cannot, by private sale to a corporation having the right of eminent domain, defeat inchoate liens which would otherwise attach as the result of legal proceedings; Farrow v. Ry., 109 Ala. 448, 20 South. 303.

Maritime Liens. Maritime liens do not include or require possession. The word lien is used in maritime law, not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession; 22 E. L. & Eq. 62. See Ben. Adm. § 271. A distinction is made in the United States between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession; Cutler v. Rae, 7 How. (U. S.) 729, 12 L. Ed. 890; 21 Am. Law. Reg. 1. The sole essentials of admiralty jurisdiction in a suit in rem for breach of contract are that the contract is maritime and that the property proceeded against is within the lawful custody of the court. The existence of a maritime lien is not jurisdictional, but is a matter going to the merits; The Resolute, 168 U. S. 437, 18 Sup. Ct. 112, 42 L. Ed. 533. To sustain a maritime lien there must be, either in fact or by presumption of law, a credit of the ship; Empire Warehouse Co. v. The Advance, 60 Fed. 766.

The shipper of goods has a lien upon the ship, for the value of the goods sent, which can be enforced in admiralty; Howland v. Greenway, 22 How. (U. S.) 491, 16 L. Ed. 391; Vose v. Allen, 3 Blatchf. 289, Fed. Cas. No. 17,006; and, generally, every act of the master binds the vessel, if it be done within the scope of his authority; 1 W. Rob. 392; The Freeman v. Buckingham, 18 How. (U. S.) 182, 15 L. Ed. 341; where the possession of the master is not tortious, but under a color of right; Jackson v. Julia Smith, 6 McLean 484, Fed. Cas. No. 7,136. This does not apply to contracts of material men with the master of a domestic ship; 1 Conkl. Adm. 73; and the act must have been within the scope of the master's employment; The Freeman v. Buckingham, 18 How. (U. S.) 182, 15 L. Ed. 341. See 1 C. Rob. 84. This lien follows the ship even in the hands of a purchaser, without notice, before the creditor has had a reasonable opportunity to enforce his lien; The Rebecca, 1 Ware 188, Fed. Cas. No. 11,619. If the master borrow money for the ship's necessity, the lender has a lien on the ship for the amount; Descadillas v. Harris, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 298; The Menominie, 36 Fed. 197. A sale of the vessel by the master through necessity cuts out the lien of the shipper of the cargo in the vessel; The Amelie, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 18, 18 L. Ed. 800.

The owner of a ship has a lien on the cargo carried for the freight earned, whether reserved by a bill of lading or not; 4 B. & Ald. 630; Pickman v. Woods, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 248; Holmes v. Pavenstedt, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 97; Gracie v. Palmer, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 605, 5 L. Ed. 699.

Where freight has been earned for the transportation of goods before the United States declares them forfeited for a fraudulent custom house entry, and sells them, the freight has a lien on the proceeds, if the vessel owners were innocent; Six Hundred Tons of Iron Ore, 9 Fed. 595.

This lien is, at most, only a qualified maritime lien; see 1 Pars. Mar. Law 174, n. The lien exists in case of a chartered ship; Clarkson v. Edes, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 470; 4 B. & Ald. 630; Gracie v. Palmer, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 605, 5 L. Ed. 699; to the extent of the freight due under the bill of lading; 1 B. & Ald. 711; The Volunteer, 1 Sumn. 551, Fed. Cas. No. 16,991. But if the charterer takes possession and management of the ship, he has the lien; Pickman v. Woods, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 248; Clarkson v. Edes, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 470; 4 M. & G. 502. No lien for freight attaches before the ship has broken ground; 1 B. & P. 634; Bailey v. Damon, 3 Gray (Mass.) 92. But see, as to the damages for removing goods from the ship before she sails, 2 C. & P. 334; Bailey v. Damon, 3 Gray (Mass.) 92.

No lien exists for dead freight; 3 M. & S. 205. The lien attaches only for freight earned; 3 M. & S. 205; Drinkwater v. The Spartan, 1 Ware 149, Fed. Cas. No. 4,085. The lien is lost by a delivery of the goods; Gring v. A Cargo of Lumber, 38 Fed. 528; The Giulio, 34 Fed. 909; but not if the delivery be involuntary or procured by fraud; id. So it is by stipulations inconsistent with its exercise; Pinney v. Wells, 10 Conn. 104; 4 B. & Ald. 50; as, by an agreement to receive the freight at a day subsequent to the entire delivery of the goods,—a distinction being, however, taken between the unloading or arrival of the ship, and the delivery of the goods; 14 M. & W. 794; Certain Logs of Mahogany, 2 Sumn. 589, Fed. Cas. No. 2,559; Wallis v. Cook, 10 Mass. 510.

A third person cannot take advantage of the existence of such lien; 3 East 85. A vendor, before exercising the right of stoppage in transitu, must discharge this lien by payment of freight; Newhall v. Vargas, 15 Me. 314, 33 Am. Dec. 617; 3 B. & P. 42.

Master's lien. In England, the master had no lien, at common law, on the ship for wages, nor disbursements; 1 B. & Ald. 575; Reliance Marine Ins. Co. v. S. S. Co., 77 Fed. 817, 23 C. C. A. 183; but by the act of 1854 he has the same lien for his wages as a seaman; and this may be enforced in the admiralty courts of the United States; The Maggie Hammond, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 435, 19 L. Ed. 772; Covert v. The Wexford, 3 Fed. 577; The Pride of the Ocean, 7 Fed. 247; The Wexford, 7 Fed. 674. The district court may, but is not bound to exercise jurisdiction in favor of a British subject against a British ship; 22 Bost. L. Rep. 150. Its enforcement is only a question of comity; The Maggie Hammond, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 435, 19 L. Ed. 772.

In the United States, he has no lien for his wages; Hopkins v. Forsyth, 14 Pa. 34, 53 Am. Dec. 513; Richardson v. Whiting, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 530; The Wyoming, 36 Fed. 493. This does not apply to one not master in fact; L'Arina v. The Exchange, Bee 198, Fed. Cas. No. 8,088. As to lien for disbursements, see The Larch, 2 Curt. C. C. 427, Fed. Cas. No. 8,085; Hopkins v. Forsyth, 14 Pa. 34, 53 Am. Dec. 513. He may be substituted if he discharge a lien; Bulgin v. Rainbow, Bee 116, Fed. Cas. No. 2,116; The Packet, 3 Mas. 255, Fed. Cas. No. 10,654. But he has a lien on the freight for disbursements; Lane v. Penniman, 4 Mass. 91; Van Bokkelin v. Ingersoll, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 315; for wages in a peculiar case; Drinkwater v. The Spartan, 1 Ware 149, Fed. Cas. No. 4,085; and on the cargo, where it belongs to the shipowners; Newhall v. Dunlap, 14 Me. 180, 31 Am. Dec. 41. He may, therefore detain goods against the shipper or consignee, even after payment to owner, if the master give reasonable notice; Lewis v. Hancock, 11 Mass. 72; Van Bokkelin v. Ingersoll, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 315. But see 5 D. & R. 552. The master may retain goods till a contribution bond is signed; Newhall v. Dunlap, 14 Me. 180, 31 Am. Dec. 41.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel in rem by a master for his wages, where that lien is given by a state statute; The William H. Hoag, 168 U. S. 443, 18 Sup. Ct. 114, 42 L. Ed. 537.

The seamen's lien for wages attaches to the ship and freight, and the proceeds of both, and follows them into whosoever hands they come; Brown v. Lull, 2 Sumn. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 2,018; and lies against a part, or the whole, of the fund; Pitman v. Hooper, 3 Sumn. 50, Fed. Cas. No. 11,185; id. 3 Sumn. 286, Fed. Cas. No. 11,186; but not the cargo; Sheppard v. Taylor, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 675, 8 L. Ed. 269. It applies to proceeds of a vessel sold, under attachment in a state court; Gallatin v. Pilot, 2 Wall. Jr. 592, Fed. Cas. No. 5,199; overruling Foster v. Pilot No. 2, 1 Newb. 215, Fed. Cas. No. 4,980; and to a vessel while in the hands of a receiver of a state court, for wages accruing during the receivership; The Resolute, 168 U. S. 437, 18 Sup. Ct. 112, 42 L. Ed. 533.

Seamen discharged by the breaking up of a voyage are entitled to no lien for services not performed, when they could have obtained other employment of like character and at as good or better wages; The Augustine Kobbe, 37 Fed. 696.

This lien of a seaman is of the nature of the privilegium of the civil law, does not depend upon possession, and takes precedence of a bottomry bond or hypothecation; 2 Pars. Mar. Law 62, and cases cited; Poland v. Spartan, 1 Ware 134, Fed. Cas. No. 11,246; or over subsequent collision liens; The Amos D. Carver, 35 Fed. 665. Taking the master's order does not destroy the lien; The Eastern Star, 1 Ware 185, Fed. Cas. No. 4,254. And see 2 Hagg. Adm. 136. For services for bringing a vessel into port, moving her about, drying her sails, etc., there is a lien; The Hattie Thomas, 59 Fed. 299; but not for services of a watchman in the home port; The Sirius, 65 Fed. 236; nor for men hired to watch the cargo of a vessel, by a contractor; The Seguranca, 58 Fed. 908. Generally, all persons serving in a way directly and materially useful to the navigation of the vessel have a lien for their services; Wilson v. Ohio, Gilp. 505, Fed. Cas. No. 17,825; 3 Hagg. Adm. 376; Turner's Case, Ware 83, Fed. Cas. No. 14,248; Sheridan v. Furbur, 1 Blatchf. & H. 423, Fed. Cas. No. 12,761; Macomber v. Thompson, 1 Sumn. 384, Fed. Cas. No. 8,919. A woman has a lien if she performs seaman's service; 1 Hagg. Adm. 187; Sageman v. Brandywine, 1 Newb. 5, Fed. Cas. No. 12,216. Men hired for service on a barge without sails, masts, or rudder, with no duties upon land except in loading and unloading, have a lien on the vessel; Disbrow v. The Walsh Bros., 36 Fed. 607. The lien exists against ships owned by private persons, but not against government ships employed in the public service; The St. Jago de Cuba, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 409, 6 L. Ed. 122; U. S. v. Wilder, 3 Sumn. 308, Fed. Cas. No. 16,694. See as to lien for seamen's wages, 4 Can. L. T. 153, 213.

Under the law of England no maritime lien is recognized for personal injuries received by a seaman on board ship; The Egyptian Monarch, 36 Fed. 773. The question is unsettled in America, as to whether admiralty has jurisdiction over actions for personal injuries, either in rem or even against the owner; Bened. Adm. § 309 a. See The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 7 Sup. Ct. 140, 30 L. Ed. 358.

A ship broker, who obtains a crew, has been held to have a lien for his services and advances for their wages; The Gustavia, 1 Blatchf. & H. 189, Fed. Cas. No. 5,876. One who performs towage service on the navigable waters of the United States acquires a lien, which may be enforced by proceedings in rem, and cannot be destroyed by the sale of the vessel under a state law; The John Cuttrell, 9 Fed. 777.

"A stevedore is a workman or contractor who loads or discharges a ship and properly stows her cargo.

"A contract for such services is maritime, and gives a lien certainly on foreign vessels, certainly on domestic vessels where a state statute gives it, and probably on domestic vessels even in the absence of a state statute.

"A large number of cases have held that although the service of a stevedore is maritime he has a remedy in rem only against a foreign ship or against a domestic ship under a state statute. The cases holding that a stevedore has no lien upon a domestic vessel compare his work and character to that of a material man and follow the analogies prevailing before the act of congress of June 23, 1910. [See infra.] But most of these cases when examined seem to be cases of foreign vessels where the qualification was put in by the court not as a decision but as a cautious reservation. The better opinion seems to be that a stevedore is more like a sailor than a material man, and it has been decided by Judge Brown in The Seguranca, 58 Fed. 908, that a stevedore should have a lien even in the home port, as a sailor would have." 1 Hughes, Admiralty 113, etc.

Benedict, Admiralty, sec. 285, is of opinion that the tendency of the authorities is to favor a stevedore's lien, but Judge Butler in The John Shay, 81 Fed. 216, after full consideration of authorities, held that in the home port stevedores have no lien.

Material men. By the civil law those who build, repair, or supply a ship have a lien upon the ship for the debt thus contracted. The subject of maritime liens on vessels, both foreign and domestic, for repairs, supplies or necessaries (including use of dock or marine railways) is now regulated by the act of congress of June 23, 1910, which expressly confers such a lien. The general principles as theretofore existing were summarized by Mr. Justice Bradley in The Roanoke, 189 U. S. 193, 23 Sup. Ct. 491, 47 L. Ed. 770:

"In this connection the following propositions may be considered as settled:

"1. That by the maritime law, as administered in England and in this country, a lien is given for necessaries furnished a foreign vessel upon the credit of such vessel; The General Smith, 4 Wheat. 438, 4 L. Ed. 609; The Grapeshot, 9 Wall. 129, 19 L. Ed. 651; general admiralty rule 12; and that in this particular the several states of this Union are treated as foreign to each other; The General Smith, 4 Wheat. 438, 4 L. Ed. 609; The Kalorama, 10 Wall. 204, 212, 19 L. Ed. 941.

"2. That no such lien is given for necessaries furnished in the home port of the vessel, or in the port in which the vessel is owned, registered, enrolled, or licensed, and the remedy in such case, though enforceable in the admiralty, is in personam only. The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 558, 22 L. Ed. 654;

The Edith, 94 U. S. 518, 24 L. Ed. 167. This is a distinct departure from the continental system, which makes no account of the domicile of the vessel, and is a relic of the prohibitions of Westminster Hall against the court of admiralty, to the principle of which this court has steadily adhered.

"3. That it is competent for the states to create liens for necessaries furnished to domestic vessels, and that such liens will be enforced by the courts of admiralty under their general jurisdiction over the subject of necessaries. The General Smith, 4 Wheat. 438, 4 L. Ed. 609; Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. 324, 8 L. Ed. 700; The St. Lawrence, 1 Black 522, 17 L. Ed. 180; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 558, 22 L. Ed. 654; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624; The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 12, 13 Sup. Ct. 498, 37 L. Ed. 345. The right to extend these liens to foreign vessels in any case is open to grave doubt. The Chusan, 2 Story 455, Fed. Cas. No. 2,717; The Lyndhurst, 48 Fed. 839."

That act of congress was designed to remove the confusion existing in this important branch of admiralty jurisdiction by substituting a single federal statute for conflicting state statutes without changing the general principles of maritime liens. It provides for a maritime lien on vessels, foreign or domestic, for repairs, supplies or necessaries, use of any dock or marine railway. The lien is enforced by a proceeding in rem; it need not be alleged or proved that credit was given to the vessel. The authority of the managing owner, ship's husband, master, or any person intrusted with the management at the port to order the repairs, etc., is presumed. This includes officers and agents appointed by a charterer, by an owner pro hac vice, or by an agreed purchaser in possession of the vessel; but if the person furnishing the repairs, etc., knew, or could by reasonable diligence have ascertained, that the person ordering repairs, etc., had no authority, there is no lien. The act expressly supersedes state statutes, so far as they created rights of action to be enforced in rem against the vessel.

The act was held to cover wharfage charges where the vessel lay during repairs; The Geisha, 200 Fed. 869; that the intention to lien the vessel need not be alleged, etc., see The City of Milford, 199 Fed. 956.

It is held by the Circuit Court of Appeals that a court of admiralty may entertain jurisdiction in rem against a vessel for the death of a passenger caused by a maritime collision; The Willamette, 70 Fed. 874, 18 C. C. A. 366, 31 L. R. A. 715. This right is based on a state statute giving not only a right of action for death, but a lien and preference over other demands in favor of such cause of action. This statutory provision distinguishes the case from The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 12 Sup. Ct. 949, 36 L. Ed. 727, where the right to a libel in rem in such case is denied, although the local law gave a right of action for death, but did not expressly create any lien on the vessel. See Baizley v. Odorilla, 121 Pa. 231, 15 Atl. 521, 1 L. R. A. 505.

As to the order of precedence of these liens, see Sewall v. Hull of a New Ship, 1 Ware 565, Fed. Cas. No. 12,682; The Kiersage, 2 Curt. C. C. 421, Fed. Cas. No. 7,762; The Frank G. Fowler, 8 Fed. 331; The Graf Klot Trautvetter, 8 Fed. 833. In the distribution of funds to pay liens, wages claims will rank first; claims for materials and supplies next; and claims under contracts of affreightment thereafter; The Wyoming, 36 Fed. 493. Maritime liens for necessary advances made or supplies furnished to keep a vessel fit for sea, take precedence of all prior claims upon her, unless for seaman's wages or salvage; The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 498, 37 L. Ed. 345. They take priority over a mortgage on the vessel, although it has been duly recorded; Clyde v. Transp. Co., 36 Fed. 501, 1 L. R. A. 794. Liens for damages arising from collision take precedence of the lien for a seaman's wages accruing prior to the collision; The John G. Stevens, 40 Fed. 331; The Nettie Woodward, 50 Fed. 224. Among the holders of liens equal in dignity, the one who first instituted proceedings to enforce his claim is preferred; The Wm. Gates, 48 Fed. 835.

Giving credit will not be a waiver of a lien on a foreign ship, unless so given as to be inconsistent with the right to a lien; Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324, 8 L. Ed. 700; The Nestor, 1 Sumn. 73, Fed. Cas. No. 10,126; Phillips v. Wright, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 342. A delay of nine months after midsummer repairs before proceeding to enforce a lien therefor, is not laches, but a year's delay is; The Amos D. Carver, 35 Fed. 665; see The Lyndhurst, 48 Fed. 839. A lien for repairs is in the nature of a proprietary right and is not lost by merely delivering the vessel to the owner before payment; The Lime Rock, 49 Fed. 383. A note does not extinguish the lien of the claim for which it is given, unless such is the understanding of the parties at the time; The Gen. Meade, 20 Fed. 923; The Alfred J. Murray, 60 Fed. 926; The John C. Fisher, 50 Fed. 703, 1 C. C. A. 624, 3 U. S. App. 109.

Builders' liens may be placed on the common-law ground that a workman employing skill and labor on an article has a lien upon it; 2 Rose 91; 4 B. & Ald. 341; Nicholson v. May, Wright (Ohio) 660; The General Smith, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 438, 4 L. Ed. 609; The Marion, 1 Sto. 68, Fed. Cas. No. 9,087; also a lien for the purpose of finishing the ship, where payments are made by instalments; 5 B. & Ald. 942.

Collision. In case of collision the injured vessel has a lien upon the one in fault for the damage done; 22 E. L. & Eq. 62; Edwards v. Stockton, Crabb 580, Fed. Cas. No.

4,297; and the lien lasts a reasonable time; 1 Pars. Sh. & Ad. 531.

A salvage lien exists when a ship or goods come into the possession of a person who preserves them from peril at sea, to be reimbursed his expenses and compensated; Williams v. Box of Bullion, Sprague 57, Fed. Cas. No. 17,717; Edw. Adm. 175.

A salvage service carries with it a maritime lien on the things saved, whether the vessel is foreign or domestic; Chapman v. Engines of the Greenpoint, 38 Fed. 671.

A part-owner, merely as such, has no lien whatever, but acquires such a lien when any of the elements of partnership or agency, with bailment upon which his lien may rest, enter into his relation with the other part-owners; 1 Pars. Sh. & Ad. 115. See The Daniel Kaine, 35 Fed. 785.

A part-owner who has advanced more than his share towards building a vessel has no lien on her for such surplus; Merrill v. Bartlett, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 46; and none, it is said, for advances on account of a voyage; Braden v. Gardner, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 456; 7 Bingh. 709. The relation of partners must exist to give the lien; 8 B. & C. 612; Thorndike v. De Wolf, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 120. And part-owners of a ship may become partners for a particular venture; 1 Ves. Sr. 497; Macy v. De Wolf, 3 W. & M. 193, Fed. Cas. No. 8,938; Hinton v. Law, 10 Mo. 701; Gardner v. Cleveland, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 334. But see Hopkins v. Forsyth, 14 Pa. 34, 53 Am. Dec. 513.

The ship's husband, if a partner, has a partner's lien; if not, he may have a lien on the proceeds of the voyage; 8 B. & C. 612; Gould v. Stanton, 16 Conn. 12, 23; Macy v. De Wolf, 3 W. & M. 193, Fed. Cas. No. 8,933; or of the ship herself, if sold, or on her documents, if any of these have come into his actual possession. And the lien applies to all disbursements and liabilities for the ship. But it is doubtful if his mere office gives him a lien; The Larch, 2 Curt. C. C. 427, Fed. Cas. No. 8,085; 2 V. & B. 242.

Under the general maritime law, there is no lien on a vessel for marine insurance premiums due from her owner; The Hope, 49 Fed. 279; but there is for wharfage for a foreign vessel; The Allianca, 56 Fed. 609.

Deposit of a bill of lading gives a lien for the amount advanced on the strength of the security; 5 Taunt. 558; Walter v. Ross, 2 Wash. C. C. 283, Fed. Cas. No. 17,122.

These liens of part-owners and by deposit of a bill of lading are not maritime liens, however, and could not be enforced in admiralty.

Statutory Liens. Under this head it is convenient to consider some of those liens which subsist at common law, but have been extensively modified by statutory regulations, as well as those which subsist entirely by force of statutory regulations.

The principal liens of this class are judgment liens, and liens of material men and builders, but there have also been provided by legislation in recent years in many states, liens specially designed for the protection of leading local business interests, such as logging liens, and various agricultural liens intended to facilitate the obtaining of money or credit on the faith of crops unmatured.

JUDGMENT LIEN. At common law, a judgment is merely a general security and not a specific lien on land; 2 Sugd. Vend. *517; but by stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, it is made a charge upon all lands, tenements, etc., of which the debtor is owner or in which he is in any way interested, and it binds all persons claiming under him after such judgment, including his issue, and other persons whom he could bar; id. *523. By stat. 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, judgments are not liens upon lands until such lands have been actually delivered in execution.

The act of congress of August 1, 1888, provides that judgments and decrees in the circuit and district court within any state shall be liens on property within such state to the same extent, etc., as if rendered by a "court of general jurisdiction" of said state, provided, that when a state law requires a state court judgment or decree to be registered, docketed, etc., in a particular manner or in a particular office or county, before a lien shall attach, this act shall be applicable therein only when the state law shall authorize the judgments and decrees of such federal courts to be registered, etc., in conformity with the requirements relating to judgments and decrees of state courts; in sec. 3 it is provided that nothing in the act is to require docketing of a judgment of the federal court in any state office in the county within which the judgment was rendered, in order that such judgment may be a lien in such county. Sec. 3 was repealed by act of August 17, 1912. The restriction of the lien of a judgment of a federal court sought to be imposed by a state statute was held ineffectual before the above act of August 1, 1888, but operative thereafter; Blair v. Ostrander, 109 Ia. 204, 80 N. W. 330, 77 Am. St. Rep. 532, 47 L. R. A. 469, with note giving the cases relating to the lien of judgments in the federal courts.

In New Jersey a judgment of the supreme court is a lien throughout the state. In a few of the states the lien attaches immediately when the judgment is recovered. In others it is necessary, in order to make a judgment a lien in any county, that a transcript of the judgment be recorded.

In many states, it requires an execution to create a lien by judgment, which, in some states, must issue within a specific period after judgment, e. g. one year in Virginia, and two years in West Virginia, while in Delaware the common-law rule that an execution must issue within a year and a day is enforced by the systematic entry on the judgment docket by the prothonotary of the issue of an execution vice comes (q. v.), which is, in fact, never issued and is a fiction in all respects except as to the prothonotary's fee.

Judgments in the federal courts have the same lien as those in the respective state courts wherein they are held, except that they extend to all lands of defendant in the district. Judgments in the circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania have been decided to be liens against land in both the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania.

The time during which a judgment lien continues in force varies in the several states from one year to twenty. Judgments are no lien in Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Arizona and Indian Territory. A verdict is a lien in Pennsylvania.

MECHANICS' LIENS. The lien of mechanics and material men on buildings and for work done and materials furnished is unknown either at common law or in equity; Davis v. Farr, 13 Pa. 167; Canal Co. v. Gordon, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 561, 18 L. Ed. 894; but it exists in all of the United States by statute, to a greater or less extent. Each state has its own mechanic's lien law, differing often in minor particulars, but alike in the general provisions. These statutes are remedial and should be liberally construed; Hays v. Mercier, 22 Neb. 656, 35 N. W. 894. In most of the states, this lien is equal to that of a judgment or mortgage, and can be assigned and enforced in a similar manner; Goodman v. White, 26 Conn. 317. The lien affects only real estate, and attaches to the materials only when they become real estate by being erected into a building and attached to the land; Coddington v. Beebe, 31 N. J. L. 477; but should the building be removed or destroyed, the lien does not remain upon the land; Presbyterian Church v. Stettler, 26 Pa. 246; nor upon any portion of the materials of which the building was composed; Appeal of Wigton, 28 Pa. 161.

In many cases a single lien is allowed upon separate buildings; Quimby v. Durgin, 148 Mass. 104, 19 N. E. 14, 1 L. R. A. 514; Maryland Brick Co. v. Spilman, 76 Md. 337, 25 Atl. 297, 17 L. R. A. 599, 35 Am. St. Rep. 431; Walden v. Robertson, 120 Mo. 38, 25 S. W. 349; Lamont v. Le Fevre, 96 Mich. 175, 55 N. W. 687; Phillips v. Gilbert, 101 U. S. 721, 25 L. Ed. 833; contra, Wilcox v. Woodruff, 61 Conn. 578, 24 Atl. 521, 1056, 17 L. R. A. 314, 29 Am. St. Rep. 222; Roat v. Frear, 167 Pa. 614, 31 Atl. 861; but see Linden Steel Co. v. Mfg. Co., 158 Pa. 238, 27 Atl. 895. Two owners of contiguous lots may by their acts connect them so as to constitute one lot and make them subject to lien for work or material; Menzel v. Tubbs, 51 Minn. 364, 53 N. W. 653, 1017, 17 L. R. A. 815. See note on this subject 17 L. R. A. 314.

The benefits of the statute apply only to the class of persons named therein. The contractor seems to be universally secured by the lien, and in most of the states the sub-contractor and material man are also protected by a lien. In some states these provisions extend to workmen, but generally they do not; Phill. Mech. Liens, 53. A contractor's lien is not defeated by the fact that the work was only partly performed, where such part performance has been accepted; Bell v. Teague, 85 Ala. 211, 3 South. 861; Charnley v. Honig, 74 Wis. 163, 42 N. W. 220. A contract by which a contractor agrees that he will not suffer or permit to be filed any mechanics' lien or liens against a building waives the right to file a lien in his own favor; Scheid v. Rapp, 121 Pa. 593, 15 Atl. 652.

Mechanics' lien laws extend to non-residents as well as residents; Greenwood v. Agricultural School, 2 Swan. (Tenn.) 130; Atkins v. Little, 17 Minn. 343 (Gil. 320).

A New York statute giving a lien to "any person" who has furnished materials for a building in the state is available under a contract made and payable in another state; Campbell v. Coon, 149 N. Y. 556, 44 N. E. 300, 38 L. R. A. 410.

Where the statute was silent on the subject of assigning a mechanic's lien, it was held that an assignee could not prosecute in his own name and avail himself of its privileges; Caldwell v. Lawrence, 10 Wis. 331; Pearsons v. Tincker, 36 Me. 384; but in other states it has been held that the lien may be assigned precisely as any other chose in action, the assignee taking subject to the equities of the parties; Iaege v. Bossieux, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 83, 76 Am. Dec. 189; Johns v. Bolton, 12 Pa. 339; Busfield v. Wheeler, 14 Allen (Mass.) 139. The right of lien survives to an executor or administrator; Tuttle v. Howe, 14 Minn. 145 (Gil. 113), 100 Am. Dec. 205.

A mechanic's lien is not released by taking a note on account of it, to be credited when paid, even if the note be discounted; Wisconsin Trust Co. v. Cary Co., 68 Fed. 778, 15 C. C. A. 668, 32 U. S. App. 435; but taking a note which will mature after the expiration of the statutory period for enforcing a lien, operates as a waiver of it even under a statute providing that the taking of a note shall not discharge the lien; Flenniken v. Liscoe, 64 Minn. 269, 66 N. W. 979. Taking a note as security has been held in many cases to affect the right to a lien; McPherson v. Walton, 42 N. J. Eq. 282, 11 Atl. 21; Ford v. Wilson & Co., 85 Ga. 109, 11 S. E. 559; Kendall Mfg. Co. v. Rundle, 78 Wis. 150, 47 N. W. 364; Paddock v.

Stout, 121 Ill. 571, 13 N. E. 182; 21 Can. S. C. 406; Joslyn v. Smith, 2 N. Dak. 53, 49 N. W. 382; Blakeley v. Moshier, 94 Mich. 299, 54 N. W. 54; in others it has been held that the lien is not affected; Balkcom v. Lumber Co., 91 Ga. 651, 17 S. E. 1020, 44 Am. St. Rep. 58; Hill v. Building Co., 6 S. Dak. 160, 60 N. W. 752, 55 Am. St. Rep. 819; Jones v. Moores, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 109, 22 N. Y. Supp. 53; Davis v. Parsons, 157 Mass. 584, 32 N. E. 1117.

A lien cannot be acquired against certain classes of property which are exempted on the ground of public policy. Thus public school-houses; Board of Education of Salt Lake City v. Brick Co., 13 Utah 211, 44 Pac. 709; Portland Lumbering & Mfg. Co. v. School Dist. No. 1, 13 Or. 283, 10 Pac. 350; Mayrhofer v. Board, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451; court-houses, public offices, or jails, are exempt; Wilson v. Huntington County Com'rs, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 197; Hall's Safe & Lock Co. v. Scites, 38 W. Va. 691, 18 S. E. 895; Bell v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 105 N. Y. 139, 11 S. E. 495; Nunnally v. Dorand, 110 Ala. 539, 18 South. 5; City of Dallas v. Loonie, 83 Tex. 291, 18 S. W. 726; in Kansas a lien can be obtained against public property; Board of Com'rs of Jewell County v. Mfg. Co., 52 Kan. 253, 34 Pac. 741; but in Oklahoma the court refused to follow the Kansas decisions, though the statute was adopted from that state, on the ground that Kansas stands almost alone in so holding; Hutchinson v. Krueger, 34 Okl. 23, 124 Pac. 591, which see for an exhaustive discussion of decisions of nearly all the states. See, also, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315, and note; a church has been held the subject of a mechanic's lien; Harrisburg Lumber Co. v. Washburn, 29 Or. 150, 44 Pac. 390. A lien cannot extend to the valves constituting part of the water works of a corporation organized to furnish a city with water; Chapman Valve Mfg. Co. v. Water Co., 89 Wis. 264, 60 N. W. 1004, 46 Am. St. Rep. 830; Guest v. Water Co., 142 Pa. 610, 21 Atl. 1001, 12 L. R. A. 324; or to the plant of such corporation; Chapman Valve Mfg. Co. v. Water Co., 89 Wis. 264, 60 N. W. 1004, 46 Am. St. Rep. 830; or a street railway; Pacific Rolling Mills Co. v. Const. Co., 68 Fed. 966, 16 C. C. A. 68; 29 U. S. App. 698; Front Street Cable Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 2 Wash. 112, 25 Pac. 1084, 11 L. R. A. 693; or a power house connected with the same; Pacific Rolling Mills Co. v. Const. Co., 68 Fed. 966, 16 C. C. A. 68; 29 U. S. App. 698; Oberholtzer v. Ry. Co., 16 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 13; or to the property of an electric light company having a franchise to occupy streets; Badger Lumber Co. v. Power Co., 48 Kan. 187, 30 Pac. 117, 30 Am. St. Rep. 306; Forbes v. Electric Co., 19 Or. 61, 23 Pac. 670, 20 Am. St. Rep. 793.

The exemption from liability was held to extend to a quasi public corporation necessary in operating a system of water works by which it furnished water to a school house; Foster v. Fowler, 60 Pa. 27. And see Taylor Lumber Co. v. Carnegie Institute, 225 Pa. 486, 74 Atl. 357, where the building erected on the land was not for a purely public purpose, and an act permitting mechanic's liens to be filed against such a building without reference to the land was held unconstitutional.

Some question has arisen whether mechanics' lien laws apply to railroads. When the statute gives a lien on "buildings" they are said not to be covered; 2 Jones, Liens § 1618; otherwise if the word used is "structure," "erection," "improvement"; id. § 1624; and a lien has been upheld against ties used in construction; Neilson v. R. Co., 44 Ia. 71.

The same doctrine of public policy which forbids mechanics' liens on public buildings, etc., has been said to apply to railroads, so far that such a lien, if given by statute, is generally held to attach only to the entire line and not to a section of it; 2 Jones, Liens § 1619; but Deady, J., challenges this statement; Giant-Powder Co. v. R. Co., 42 Fed. 470, 8 L. R. A. 700, where will be found a collection of cases by states on mechanics' liens on railroads; see also Brooks v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 443, 25 L. Ed. 1057. Railroad depots are not exempt; Hill v. R. Co., 11 Wis. 214; Boston, C. & M. R. R. v. Gilmore, 37 N. H. 410, 72 Am. Dec. 336.

As to mechanic's lien on vessels under state statutes see subtitle Maritime Liens, supra.

In some cases it is held that the equitable title of a purchaser of land, who has not fully acquired the title, may be subject to a statutory lien; Weaver v. Sheeler, 118 Pa. 634, 12 Atl. 558; Getto v. Friend, 46 Kan. 24, 26 Pac. 473; Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Brown, 46 Kan. 543, 26 Pac. 1019; Pinkerton v. Le Beau, 3 S. D. 440, 54 N. W. 97; contra, Saunders v. Bennett, 160 Mass. 48, 35 N. E. 111, 39 Am. St. Rep. 456; Dalrymple v. Ramsey, 45 N. J. Eq. 494, 18 Atl. 105; Robbins v. Arendt, 148 N. Y. 673, 43 N. E. 165. In such case the lien has been held to be subordinate to the right of the vendor for unpaid purchase money; Fuller v. Pauley, 48 Neb. 138, 66 N. W. 1115. A mechanic's lien in such case attaches only to the interest of the purchaser; Getto v. Friend, 46 Kan. 24, 26 Pac. 473. That the lien attaches on the completion of the contract of sale was held in Brown v. Jones, 52 Minn. 484, 55 N. W. 54.

On the foreclosure of a mortgage, the fund raised takes the place of the land and is subject to a lien; Mathews v. Duryee, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 256; so also is a balance in court on the sale of a lessee's interest in land and buildings; Appeal of Robson, 62 Pa. 405.

The remedy is by scire facias in some states; Merrick v. Avery, 14 Ark. 370; Pratt

v. Tudor, 14 Tex. 37; Clark v. Brown, 22 Mo. 140; Donahoo v. Scott, 12 Pa. 45; by petition, in others; Simpson v. Dalrymple, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 308; Dobbs v. Enearl, 4 Wis. 451; McLagan v. Brown, 11 Ill. 519. When the proceeding is by scire facias, it can have no more effect than belongs to that writ, which is substantially a proceeding in rem.

Questions constantly arise under the statutes giving liens to mechanics and material men as to the respective priority of their liens over those of mortgagees. Questions as to the respective priority, as between such liens and mortgage liens, must be considered with reference to the statutes. Such liens have been held entitled to priority over a previous mortgage so far as a building is concerned; Carriger v. Mackey, 15 Ind. App. 392, 44 N. E. 266; Bristol-Goodson Electric Light & Power Co. v. Power Co., 99 Tenn. 371, 42 S. W. 19; and also where the labor and materials were furnished upon the mortgagee's agreement that his lien should be subordinated; Cummings v. Emslie, 49 Neb. 485, 68 N. W. 621; but the mere fact that the mortgagee told the contractor to go ahead with the work of building upon the mortgaged premises is not a waiver of priority; Security Mortgage & Trust Co. v. Caruthers, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 430, 32 S. W. 837. As between mortgages and subsequently filed mechanics' liens, the mortgage was held superior in Bartlett v. Bilger, 92 Ia. 732, 61 N. W. 233; Wimberly v. Mayberry, 94 Ala. 240, 10 South. 157, 14 L. R. A. 305; Central Trust Co. v. Continental Iron Works, 51 N. J. Eq. 605, 28 Atl. 595, 40 Am. St. Rep. 539; Munger v. Curtis, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 465; and the mechanic's lien was held superior in Lookout Lumber Co. v. Ry. Co., 109 N. C. 658, 14 S. E. 35; Allen v. Oxnard, 152 Pa. 621, 25 Atl. 568; Carew v. Stubbs, 155 Mass. 549, 30 N. E. 219; Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 224, 39 Pac. 758; Erdman v. Moore, 58 N. J. L. 445, 33 Atl. 958. For a collection of cases upon this question of priority see Wimberley v. Mayberry, 94 Ala. 240, 10 South. 157, 14 L. R. A. 305.

Logging Liens. In some states, persons employed in logging have a lien for services. It exists in favor of a cook and his assistant at a logging camp; Breault v. Archambault, 64 Minn. 420, 67 N. W. 348, 58 Am. St. Rep. 545; a blacksmith employed in shoeing horses and mending tools at the camp; id.; persons contracting to cut, skid, and haul logs and to peel bark to be paid for by the thousand; Hoffa v. Person, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 367; one who blasts rocks to make a passage for logs; Duggan v. Logging Co., 10 Wash. 84, 38 Pac. 856; one who furnishes supplies; Stacy v. Bryant, 73 Wis. 14, 40 N. W. 632; a rafter of logs; Haughton v. Busch, 101 Mich. 267, 59 N. W. 621; a mill owner; Patterson v. Graham, 164 Pa. 234, 30 Atl. 247. But mere contractors have not a lien; Kieldsen v. Wilson, 77 Mich. 45, 43 N. W. 1054; or one who furnishes a horse, harness, and sleds at a specified price per month; Richardson v. Hoxie, 90 Me. 227, 38 Atl. 142; or one who employs men to do the work but does not directly labor himself; Campbell v. Mfg. Co., 11 Wash. 204, 39 Pac. 451; or one cutting without right; Gates v. Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309, 38 N. W. 245; or the owner of an ox hired to haul the logs; Lohman v. Peterson, 87 Wis. 227, 58 N. W. 407. Such liens have been held to include not only manual labor of the lienor, but also that performed by his teams and servants, under a contract for a gross sum per month for both; Breault v. Archambault, 64 Minn. 420, 67 N. W. 348, 58 Am. St. Rep. 545.

The amount of the lien is a question for the jury; Menery v. Backus, 107 Mich. 329, 65 N. W. 235; and so is the question whether a levy under such lien is excessive; Backus v. Barber, 107 Mich. 468, 65 N. W. 379; and the lien is not vitiated by an excessive levy; id.

The lien of a boom company attaches to part of a single bailment for charges on logs previously delivered, but it is confined to logs of the same mark and not a general lien upon all logs of the same owner; Akeley v. Boom Co., 64 Minn. 108, 67 N. W. 208; recording is not required to bind an innocent purchaser, possession being equivalent to notice; id. It may be waived either by contract or a course of dealing inconsistent with its existence, or by an extension of time for payment of charges; id.

One who cuts and rafts logs under a contract which, by reasonable construction, entitles him to retain possession until paid for his services, has a common-law lien thereon; Haughton v. Busch, 101 Mich. 267, 59 N. W. 621; but one with whom the owner of timber contracts for its cutting and delivery in his mill-pond has not; Fitzgerald v. Elliott, 162 Pa. 118, 29 Atl. 346, 42 Am. St. Rep. 812.

The execution and performance of a contract for the sale of standing timber at so much per acre, to be cut and hauled by the purchaser who owns a sawmill, is held under the Georgia Civil Code, not to give the seller a lien on the sawmill and products; Giles v. Gano, 102 Ga. 593, 27 S. E. 730.

Agricultural Liens. Among these are, a lien of laborers upon crops for their wages, which is held superior to the lien of a mortgage of the crop, executed prior to the laborer's lien; Watson v. May, 62 Ark. 435, 35 S. W. 1108; Irwin v. Miller, 72 Miss. 174, 16 South. 678; such a lien applies in favor of the overseer of a farm; Weise v. Rutland, 71 Miss. 933, 15 South. 38. Of a similar character is a statutory lien, given in some states, to persons furnishing agricultural supplies; such liens are held to be superior to a conveyance of the property in payment of debt; Hewitt v. Williams, 47 La. Ann. 742, 17

South. 269; or to the claim of a mortgage; Carr v. Dail, 114 N. C. 284, 19 S. E. 235; or a chattel mortgage on the crop previously executed; McMahan v. Lundin, 57 Minn. 84, 58 N. W. 827.

A statutory lien on crops for advances to a farmer may be secured by agreement recorded, in Florida, Virginia, North Carolina, and Alabama; it has priority in the first named state against all except laborers' liens, and in the two last named on all except a landlord's claim for rent, and in Alabama advances by landlord. An agreement merely in writing is sufficient in Tennessee, South Carolina, and Georgia; 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 1954.

The order of liens on crops in Louisiana is as follows: (1) labor; (2) lessor; (3) overseer; (4) pledges, in the order of record; (5) furnisher of supplies or money, and physician; Laws, 1887, § 89. In Washington, farm laborers have a lien on crops superior to the landlord, who also has a lien on crops for rent; Laws, 1886, 115.

In North Dakota a person furnishing grain for seed, or potatoes for planting, has a lien on the crop.

Liens are not affected by the bankrupt act, if given and accepted in good faith and for a present consideration. Their extent and validity are local questions and the decisions of the courts of the state are binding upon the federal courts; Hiscock v. Bank, 206 U. S. 28, 27 Sup. Ct. 681, 51 L. Ed. 945.

As to the landlord's lien for rent, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, and for special statutory provisions, see 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. §§ 2034–39.

For various special liens created by statute, see 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. art. 464.

See MORTGAGE; JUDGMENT; RECOGNIZANCE; IN REM; INNKEEPER; BAILMENT; BAILEE; PRIVILEGE.

LIEU LANDS. A term used to indicate public lands within the indemnity limits granted in lieu of those lost within place limits. See Weyerhaeuser v. Hoyt, 219 U. S. 380, 31 Sup. Ct. 300, 55 L. Ed. 258.

LIEUTENANT. This word has now a narrower meaning than it formerly had: its true meaning is a deputy, a substitute, from the French lieu (place or post) and tenant (holder). Among civil officers we have lieutenant-governors, who in certain cases perform the duties of governors, lieutenants of police, etc. Among military men, lieutenant-general was formerly the title of a commanding general, but now it signifies the degree above major-general. Lieutenant-colonel is the officer between the colonel and the major. Lieutenant, simply, signifies the officer next below a captain. In the navy, a lieutenant is the second officer, next in command to the captain of a ship.

LIFE. "The sum of the forces by which death is resisted." Bichat.

A state in which energy of function is ever resisting decay and dissolution.

It commences, for many legal purposes, at the period of quickening, when the first motion of the fœtus in utero is perceived by the mother; 1 Bla. Com. 129; Co. 3d Inst. 50. It ceases at death. See DEATH.

But physiology pronounces life as existing from the period of conception, because fœtuses in utero do die prior to quickening, and then all the signs of death are found to be perfect; Dean, Med. Jur. 129, 130.

For many important purposes, however, the law concedes to physiology the fact that life commences at conception, en ventre sa mère. See FŒTUS. Thus, it may receive a legacy, have a guardian assigned to it, and an estate limited to its use; 1 Bla. Com. 130. It is thus considered as alive for all beneficial purposes; 1 P. Wms. 329.

But for the transfer of civil rights the child must be born alive. The ascertainment of this, as a fact, depends upon certain signs which are always attendant upon life; the most important of these is crying. As to conditions of live birth, see BIRTH; INFANTICIDE; LIABILITY.

Life is presumed to continue for one hundred years; Sassman v. Aime, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 257. As to the presumption of survivorship in case of the death of two persons at or about the same time, see DEATH.

LIFE-ANNUITY. See ANNUITY.

LIFE-ASSURANCE. See INSURANCE; POLICY; LOSS.

LIFE-ESTATE. See ESTATE FOR LIFE; TENANT FOR LIFE.

LIFE-PEERAGE. See PEERS.

LIFE TABLES. Statistical tables exhibiting the probable proportion of persons who will live to reach different ages. Cent. Dict.

Such tables are used for many purposes, such as the computation of the present value of annuities, dower rights, etc.; and for the computation of damages resulting from injuries which destroy the earning capacity of a person, or those resulting from the death of a person to those who are dependent upon him.

There are a number of mortality tables in ordinary use, among which those most frequently referred to, are the Carlisle, Northampton and Farr Tables, all made from general statistics, and the Combined Experience, American Experience and Thirty Offices Experience Tables, which are the result of life insurance statistics.

Courts can take judicial notice of the Carlisle Tables, and can use them in estimating the probable length of life, whether they were introduced in evidence or not; Lincoln v. Power, 151 U. S. 436, 14 Sup. Ct. 387, 38 L. Ed. 224. Standard life and annuity tables showing probable duration of life and present value of a life annuity are competent evidence; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly's Adm'x, 100 Ky. 421, 38 S. W. 852, 40 S. W. 452; City of Friend v. Burleigh, 53 Neb. 674, 74 N. W. 50; Sweet v. R. Co., 20 R. I. 785, 40 Atl. 237; or as bearing on the question of compensation for permanent injury, or in case of death to show the deceased's expectation of life at the time of accident; Sauter v. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 50, 23 Am. Rep. 18; Coates v. R. Co., 62 Ia. 487, 17 N. W. 760. Other cases hold that it must first be shown that the individual is within the class of selected lives tabulated; Ward v. Dampskibsselskabet Kjoebenhavn, 144 Fed. 524; Vicksburg Railroad, Power & Mfg. Co. v. White, 82 Miss. 468, 34 South. 331.

The condition of the person's health must be taken into account; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Williams, 61 N. J. L. 646, 40 Atl. 634; but they have been admitted although the person was diseased; Smiser v. State, 17 Ind. App. 519, 47 N. E. 229; and although the person was engaged in a peculiarly hazardous business; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Tisdale, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 174, 81 S. W. 347; and although he was not an insurable risk in life insurance practice; Southern Kansas R. Co. of Texas v. Sage (Tex.) 80 S. W. 1038.

Some cases merely hold that they are evidence for the jury in determining the expectation of life; Kerrigan v. R. Co., 194 Pa. 98, 44 Atl. 1069; Western & A. R. Co. v. Cox, 115 Ga. 715, 42 S. E. 74; but in permitting their use the trial judge should instruct the jury that their value depends very much upon plaintiff's state of health, habits of life, liability to contract disease, social condition, etc.; Campbell v. City of York, 172 Pa. 205, 33 Atl. 879; and the circumstances affecting the life in question; Newingham v. Blair Co., 232 Pa. 518, 81 Atl. 556. While they are competent evidence, they are not "absolute guides" to the jury; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Putnam, 118 U. S. 545, 7 Sup. Ct. 1, 30 L. Ed. 257, citing with approval Brett and Cotton, L. JJ., in 49 L. J. Q. B. 237, who "strongly deprecated undertaking to bind a jury by precise mathematical rules in deciding a question involving so many contingencies incapable of exact estimate or proof."

It is held that it is sufficient if the age in the tables is approximate to the individual's age; Pearl v. R. Co., 115 Ia. 539, 88 N. W. 1078.

They are applicable to the life expectancy of a woman although the tables show no distinction of sex; Croft v. Ry. Co., 134 Ia. 411, 109 N. W. 723.

On an issue as to the value of a life estate, they are admissible without showing that the person was in sound health; Cusick v. Boyne, 1 Cal. App. 643, 82 Pac. 985.

They are admissible to show the expectation of a life tenant; Henderson v. Harness, 184 Ill. 520, 56 N. W. 786. Where in assessing an internal revenue inheritance tax the life tenant had died, it was held error to use the tables; Kahn v. Herold, 147 Fed. 575.

Life tables printed in a law book are not authority unless their authenticity is established; Notto v. R. Co., 75 N. J. L. 826, 69 Atl. 968, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1138, 127 Am. St. Rep. 835. Tables made for the use of a single company, but in general use among insurance companies, are admissible; San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Morgan (Tex.) 46 S. W. 672. See an interesting opinion by Sulzberger, J., in Wolf v. Brewing Co., 21 Pa. Dist. Rep. 164.

The American Table of Mortality cannot be taken as a basis from which to determine the length of a sentence to be imposed in a criminal case; People v. Burns, 138 Cal. 159, 69 Pac. 16, 70 Pac. 1087, 60 L. R. A. 270.

LIGAN, LAGAN. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners. When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the names of jetsam, flotsam, and ligan. 5 Co. 108; Hargr. St. Tr. 48; 1 Bla. Com. 292. See Murphy v. Dunham, 38 Fed. 509.

LIGEANCE. The true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. It signifies, also, the territory of a sovereign. See ALLEGIANCE.

LIGHT AND AIR. See ANCIENT LIGHTS; AIR.

LIGHT MONEY. Port dues imposed upon vessels entering a port, applicable to lighthouse charges. See TONNAGE TAX.

LIGHTERMAN. The owner or manager of a lighter. A lighterman is considered a common carrier. See LIGHTERS.

LIGHTERS. Small vessels employed in loading and unloading larger vessels.

Boats plying for hire and carrying passengers or goods. 3 E. & B. 889.

The owners of lighters are liable like other common carriers for hire. It is a term of the contract on the part of the carrier or lighterman, implied by law, that his vessel is tight and fit for the purpose or employments for which he offers and holds it forth to the public; it is the immediate foundation of the contract that it is so; the law presumes a promise to that effect on the part of the carrier, without actual proof; and every principle of sound policy and public convenience requires it should be so; 5 East 428; Bened. Adm. § 284.

If a vessel, to earn greater freight gets the shipper to furnish, at a deeper anchorage, cargo in addition to that furnished at the agreed place, the cost of lightering must be borne by the vessel. Delivery to the lighter is delivery to the vessel; Nordaas v. Hubbard, 48 Fed. 921. See LAUNCH; VESSEL.

LIGHTHOUSE. An act authorizing the secretary of the treasury to acquire lands for a lighthouse by condemnation is constitutional; Chappell v. U. S., 160 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 397, 40 L. Ed. 510. See NAVIGATION RULES; EMINENT DOMAIN.

LIGHTNING. A sudden discharge of electricity from a cloud to the earth or from the earth to a cloud or from one cloud to another, or from a body positively charged to one negatively charged. Spensley v. Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 433, 11 N. W. 894.

Any sudden and violent discharge of electricity occurring in nature. Id.

A stroke of lightning is an act of God; Parker v. Flagg, 26 Me. 181, 45 Am. Dec. 101; Jackson v. Telephone Co., 88 Wis. 243, 60 N. W. 430, 26 L. R. A. 101; but one cannot be excused on that ground from the consequences of his own negligence in causing lightning to be conveyed to a building by a wire; Jackson v. Telephone Co., 88 Wis. 243, 60 N. W. 430, 26 L. R. A. 101. See WIRES.

In a policy of insurance against loss by lightning, it is the province of the jury, not reviewable on appeal, to decide how much damage is caused by lightning and how much by other forces; Beakes v. Assur. Co., 65 Hun, 621, 20 N. Y. Supp. 37; Spensley v. Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 433, 11 N. W. 894. Where the insurance was against loss by fire and lightning, damages caused by wind accompanying the storm were held not within it; 15 Ins. L. J. 478; nor was damage caused by lightning without combustion covered by a clause against fire by lightning; Babcock v. Ins. Co., 4 N. Y. 326. See Andrews v. Ins. Co., 37 Me. 256. Where the damage was caused by an explosion of powder resulting from a stroke of lightning, the loss was held to be protected by a fire insurance policy which covered damage by lightning but stipulated against loss by explosion; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Roost, 55 Ohio St. 581, 45 N. E. 1097, 36 L. R. A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711. See INSURANCE; FIRE.

LIGHTS. Those openings in a wall which are made rather for the admission of light than to look out of. 6 J. B. Moore 47; 9 Bingh. 305. See ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Lamps carried on board vessels, under statutory regulations or otherwise, for the purpose of preventing collisions at night.

Lamps or lights placed in lighthouses, or other conspicuous positions, as aids to navigation at night. See NAVIGATION RULES.

LIGNAGIUM (from the Lat. lignor, to get fuel). The right which a person has to cut or gather fuel out of the woods; sometimes it is said to signify a pecuniary payment due for the same. Cowell.

LIKE. Equal in quantity, quality, or degree, exactly corresponding. Badger v. Daniel, 79 N. C. 387. Like does not necessarily mean the same in all parts; Houghton v. Field, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 145. Like offence. Sameness in all the essential parts. Com. v. Fontain, 127 Mass. 452.

LIKEWISE. In like manner; also; moreover; too. State Bank v. Ewing, 17 Ind. 71. When used at the beginning of a sentence in a will the word sometimes denotes a severance of what follows from a contingency previously expressed, but the context of the will may rebut this presumption; 1 Jarm. Wills 832. See 5 De G., M. & G. 122; 24 Beav. 105.

LIMIT. A bound, a restraint, a circumscription, a boundary. Casler v. Ins. Co., 22 N. Y. 429. See 11 C. B. N. S. 637. In a deed the words limit and appoint may operate as words of grant so as to pass a reversion; 5 Term 124.

LIMITATION IN LAW. A limitation in law, or an estate limited, is an estate to be holden only during the continuance of the condition under which it was granted, upon the determination of which the estate vests immediately in expectancy. 2 Bla. Com. 155.

LIMITATIONS. Of Civil Remedies. In general, by the theory and early practice of the common law, a party who had any legal ground of complaint against another might call the latter to answer in court at such time as suited his convenience; 13 East 449. This privilege, however, it was soon found, might be productive of great inconvenience, and not unfrequently of great injustice. Parties might, and often did, wait till witnesses were dead or papers destroyed, and then proceeded to enforce claims to which at an earlier date a successful defence might have been made. Titles were thus rendered uncertain, the tenure of property insecure, and litigation fostered. To prevent these evils, statutes were passed limiting the time within which a party having a cause of action should appeal to the courts for redress,—hence called statutes of limitation. The doctrine of fines, of very great antiquity in the history of the common law, the purpose of which was to put an end to controversies, grew out of the efforts to obviate these evils, and frequent attempts, prior to the accession of James I., by statutes of restricted application, were made to the same end. But till the reign of that prince no general enactment applicable alike to personal and real actions had been passed.

In 1623, however, by stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 16, entitled "An Act for Limitation of Actions, and for Avoiding of Suits in Law," known and celebrated ever since as the Statute of Limitations, the law upon this subject was comprehensively declared substantially as it exists at the present day in England, whence our ancestors brought it with them to this country; and it has passed, with some modifications, into the statute-books of every state in the Union except Louisiana, whose laws of limitation are essentially the prescriptions of the civil law, drawn from the Partidas, or Spanish Code.

In 1 Bla. 287, Wilmot, J., declared it to be a "noble beneficial act," which should be construed liberally; quoted in Ward v. Hallam, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 331.

The similarity between the statutes of the several states and those of England is such that the decisions of the British courts and those of this country are for the most part illustrative of all, and will be cited indiscriminately in this brief summary of the law as it now stands. One preliminary question, however, has arisen in this country, growing out of the provision of the national constitution prohibiting states from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, for which there is no English precedent. Upon this point the settled doctrine is that unless the law bars a right of action already accrued without giving a reasonable time within which to bring an action, it pertains to the remedy merely, and is valid; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Eckstein v. Shoemaker, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 15; Battles v. Fobes, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 578, note. Subject to this qualification, a law may extend or reduce the time already limited. But a cause of action already barred by pre-existing statutes will not be revived by a statute extending the time; Robb v. Harlan, 7 Pa. 292; Wires v. Farr, 25 Vt. 41; Battles v. Fobes, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 532; Sprecker v. Wakley, 11 Wis. 432; Baldro v. Tolmie, 1 Oreg. 176; though if it be not already barred, a statute extending the time will apply; Chandler v. Chandler, 21 Ark. 95; Royce v. Hurd, 24 Vt. 620. The fact that a statute continues in force a previous period of limitation for past contracts, and provides a different period for future contracts, does not render it invalid, as lacking a uniform operation, or as being in the nature of special legislation; McKean v. Archer, 52 Fed. 791.

The essential attribute of a statute of limitations is that it limits a reasonable time within which an action may be brought. A statute which allows no time, but absolutely bars the cause of action, is not a statute of limitations; Keyser v. Lowell, 117 Fed. 400, 54 C. C. A. 574.

A statute extending the period within which claims against a railroad company for damage due to change of grade may be prosecuted is constitutional, and under it claims previously barred can be prosecuted; Dunbar v. R. Corp., 181 Mass. 383, 63 N. E. 916; but in Slover v. Union Bank, 115 Tenn. 347, 89 S. W. 399, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, it was held that a statute limiting actions for usury to two years will not affect rights which accrued prior to its passage.

Whatever may have been the disposition in the past, the courts are now inclined to construe these statutes liberally, so as to effectuate their intent; they are little inclined to fritter away their effect by refinements and subtleties; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 360, 7 L. Ed. 174; Ang. Lim. § 23. The statute of limitations is a statute of repose and does not rest merely on presumption of payment; Shepherd v. Thompson, 122 U. S. 231, 7 Sup. Ct. 1229, 30 L. Ed. 1156.

Courts of equity, though not within the terms of the statute, have nevertheless uniformly conformed to its spirit, and have, as a general rule, been governed by its provisions, unless special circumstances of fraud or the like require, in the interests of justice, that they should be disregarded; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 242; Dean v. Dean, 9 N. J. Eq. 425; Harris v. Mills, 28 Ill. 44, 81 Am. Dec. 259; Scheftel v. Hays, 58 Fed. 457, 7 C. C. A. 308; Barnes v. Born, 133 Ind. 169, 30 N. E. 509, 32 N. E. 833; 17 Ves. 96; Parker v. Dacres, 130 U. S. 43, 9 Sup. Ct. 433, 32 L. Ed. 848; Switzer v. Noffsinger, 82 Va. 518; Butler v. Johnson, 111 N. Y. 214, 18 N. E. 643. Courts of equity will apply the statute by analogy; Willard v. Wood, 1 App. D. C. 44; Norris v. Haggin, 136 U. S. 386, 10 Sup. Ct. 942, 34 L. Ed. 424; and in cases of concurrent jurisdiction, they are bound by the statute which governs actions at law; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Despatch Co., 149 U. S. 436, 13 Sup. Ct. 944, 37 L. Ed. 799; Baker v. Cummings, 169 U. S. 189, 18 Sup. Ct. 367, 42 L. Ed. 711. Some claims, not barred by the statute, a court of equity will not enforce because of public policy, and the difficulty of doing full justice when the transaction is obscured by lapse of time and loss of evidence. This is termed the doctrine of laches (q. v.); Sullivan v. R. Co., 94 U. S. 806, 24 L. Ed. 324; Bisph. Eq. § 260.

But in a proper case where there are no laches and where there is fraud undiscovered till the statute has become a bar, or it is the fault and wrong of the defendant that the plaintiff did not enforce his legal rights within the limited time, courts of equity will not hesitate to interfere in the interest of justice, and entertain suits long since barred at law; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 503, 11 L. Ed. 1076; 11 Cl. & F. 714; Bisph. Eq. § 203; L. R. 8 Ch. App. 398; Meader v. Norton, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 443, 20 L. Ed. 184. But here, again, courts of equity will proceed with great caution; Stearns v. Page, 7 How. (U. S.) 819, 12 L. Ed. 928; and hold the complainant to allegation and proof of his ignorance of the fraud and when and how it was discovered; Carr v. Hilton, 1 Curt. 390, Fed. Cas. No. 2,437; Pennock v. Freeman, 1 Watts (Pa.) 401; and the statute cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer even though the face of the bill shows a cause of action which is barred; Hubble v. Poff, 98 Va. 646, 37 S. E. 277.

And courts of admiralty are governed by substantially the same rules as courts of equity; Willard v. Dorr, 3 Mas. 91, Fed. Cas.

No. 17,679; 3 Salk. 227; Southard v. Brady, 36 Fed. 560; Bailey v. Sundberg, 49 Fed. 583, 1 C. C. A. 387, 1 U. S. App. 101; The Southwark, 128 Fed. 149. And, although the statute does not apply in terms to probate courts, there seems to be no reason why it should not be applied according to the principles of equity; Paff v. Kinney, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 1. It is so applied in Pennsylvania by the orphans' court.

As to Personal Actions. Generally personal actions must be brought within a certain specified time—usually six years or less—from the time when the cause of action accrues, and not after; Hall's Lessee v. Vandegrift, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 374; Stewart v. Durrett, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 113; and hereupon, the question at once arises when the cause of action in each particular case accrues.

Cause of action accrues when. The rule, that the cause of action accrues when and so soon as there is a right to apply to the court for relief, by no means solves the difficulty. When does the right itself so to apply accrue? Upon this point the decisions are so numerous and so conflicting, or, perhaps more accurately speaking, so controlled by particular circumstances, that no inflexible rule can be extracted therefrom. In general, it may be said that in actions of contract the cause of action accrues when there is a breach of the contract. It is also said that whenever there is a plaintiff who can sue and a defendant who can be sued, the statute begins to run; Lyles v. Roach, 30 S. C. 291, 9 S. E. 334; and a tribunal for such suit; Collier v. Goessling, 160 Fed. 604, 87 C. C. A. 506.

When a note is payable on demand, the statute begins to run from its date; 2 M. & W. 467; Little v. Blunt, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 488; Caldwell v. Rodman, 50 N. C. 139; Young v. Weston, 39 Me. 492; Hill v. Henry, 17 Ohio 9; Laidley v. Smith, 32 W. Va. 387, 9 S. E. 209, 25 Am. St. Rep. 825; Mills v. Davis, 113 N. Y. 243, 21 N. E. 68, 3 L. R. A. 394; Darby v. Darby, 120 La. 848, 45 South. 747, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1208, 14 Ann. Cas. 805. If payable immediately or when requested or called for, it commences to run immediately; Sanford v. Lancaster, 81 Me. 434, 17 Atl. 402. The deposit of securities as collateral to demand notes does not prevent the running of the statute from the date of maturity of such notes; Hartranft's Estate, 153 Pa. 530, 26 Atl. 104, 34 Am. St. Rep. 717. The rule is the same if the note is payable "at any time within six years;" Young v. Weston, 39 Me. 492; or borrowed money is to be paid "when called on;" Darnall's Ex'rs v. Magruder, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 439. But this is not true of a premium note payable in such portions and at such times as may be necessary to cover losses. There the statute only runs from the time of loss, and the assessment thereof; Howland v. Cuykendall, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 320; and the statute runs in the case of an ordinary bank note only from demand and refusal; F. & M. Bank of Memphis v. White, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 482, 64 Am. Dec. 772. Until a demand is made for funds deposited in a bank the statute does not begin to run; Starr v. Stiles, 2 Ariz. 436, 19 Pac. 225; and so a demand must first be made by the owner of bank stock for dividends; Bank of Louisville v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565, 2 S. W. 168. If a note be payable in certain days after demand, sight, or notice, the statute begins to run from the demand, sight, or notice; Wenman v. Ins. Co., 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 28 Am. Dec. 464; 8 Dowl. & Ry. 374; Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487, 24 Am. Rep. 605; demand of a note payable on demand should be made within the time limited for bringing the action on the note; else a note limited to six years might be kept open indefinitely by a failure to make a demand; Codman v. Rogers, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 120. Demand of a bill payable "after sight" or "after notice" should be within a reasonable time; Wallace v. Agry, 4 Mas. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 17,096; 9 M. & W. 506. And when the note is on interest, this does not become barred by the statute till the principal, or some distinct portion of it, becomes barred; Ferry v. Ferry, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 92. Demand upon a note or due bill, payable on demand, is not a condition precedent to a right of action; Appeal of Andress, 11 W. N. C. (Pa.) 294. The rule, that a promissory note payable on demand with interest, is a continuing security, does not apply between holder and maker; Herrick v. Woolverton, 41 N. Y. 581, 1 Am. Rep. 461. If the note be entitled to grace, the statute runs from the last day of grace; Pickard v. Valentine, 13 Me. 412; Kimball v. Fuller, 13 La. Ann. 602. The indorsement of a promissory note past due, for a valuable consideration, is a new contract, and the statute begins to run in favor of the indorser only from the date of the indorsement; Graham v. Roberson, 79 Ga. 72, 3 S. E. 611. The statute begins to run in favor of the drawer of a check at latest after the lapse of a reasonable time for the presentment of the check; Scroggin v. McClelland, 37 Neb. 644, 56 N. W. 208, 22 L. R. A. 110, 40 Am. St. Rep. 520. Where money is deposited with a person for safe custody, a right of action does not accrue until demand is made therefor: [1893] 3 Ch. 154.

Where money is payable in instalments the statute runs as to each instalment from the time of the failure to pay it; Burnham v. Brown, 23 Me. 400; Bush v. Stowell, 71 Pa. 208, 10 Am. Rep. 694. But if the contract provides that on failure to pay one instalment the whole amount shall fall due, the statute runs as to the whole from such failure; 3 G. & D. 402; so also where money is paid by mistake, the statute begins to run from the time of payment; Clarke v. Dutcher, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 674; or from the time the mistake should, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have been found out; West v. Fry, 134 Ia. 675, 112 N. W. 184, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191; Snyder v. Miller, 71 Kan. 410, 80 Pac. 970, 69 L. R. A. 250, 114 Am. St. Rep. 489; also in case of usury; Davis v. Converse, 35 Vt. 503; Pritchard v. Meekins, 98 N. C. 244, 3 S. E. 484 (but a shorter time is frequently limited by statute); and where money is paid for another as surety; Bennett v. Cook, 45 N. Y. 268. Where money is paid by a bank on a forged check, the right of action to recover the same accrued immediately upon such payment; Leather Mfrs.' Bank v. Bank, 128 U. S. 26, 9 Sup. Ct. 3, 32 L. Ed. 342. An action to recover overpayments made on a contract to deliver logs accrues when the amount delivered was ascertained, rather than at the date of payment; Busch v. Jones, 94 Mich. 223, 53 N. W. 1051.

The limitation of a right of action for compensation for trespass in removing coal from the mine of another by an adjoining land owner, does not begin to run until the trespass is discovered or its discovery is reasonably possible; Lewey v. Coke Co., 166 Pa. 536, 31 Atl. 261, 28 L. R. A. 283, 45 Am. St. Rep. 684.

Where a contract takes effect upon some condition or contingency, or the happening of some event, the statute runs from the performance of the condition; Gardner v. Webber, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 407; Ang. Lim. § 113; or the happening of the contingency or event; Morgan v. Plumb, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 287; Louisiana v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 284; and not from the date of the contract. On an agreement to devise, the statute runs from the death of the promissor; Bash v. Bash, 9 Pa. 260. When money is paid, and there is afterwards a failure of consideration, the statute runs from the failure; Eames v. Savage, 14 Mass. 425; 9 Bing. 748.

Where continuous services are rendered, as by an attorney in the conduct of a suit, or by a mechanic in doing a job; Lichty v. Hugus, 55 Pa. 434; Adams v. Bank, 36 N. Y. 255; 1 B. & Ad. 15; the statute begins to run from the completion of the service. On a promise of indemnity, when the promissee pays money or is damnified, the statute begins to run; 8 M. & W. 680; Jones v. Trimble, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 381; Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 113, 8 L. Ed. 626.

As to torts quasi ex contractu, the rule is that in cases of negligence, carelessness, unskilfulness, and the like, the statute runs from the time when these happen respectively, and not from the time when damages accrue therefrom; Wilcox v. Plummer, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 172, 7 L. Ed. 821; Thruston v. Blackiston, 36 Md. 501; Northrop v. Hill, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 136; Pennsylvania Co. v. Ry. Co., 44 Ill. App. 132. Thus, where an attorney negligently invests money in a poor security, the statute runs from the investment; 2 Brod. & B. 73; so, where a party neglected to remove goods from a warehouse, whereby the plaintiff was obliged to pay damages, the statute runs from the neglect, and not from the payment of damages; McKerras v. Gardner, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 137; so, where the defendant agreed to go into another state and collect some money, and on his return to pay off a certain judgment, the statute was held to run from the return and demand upon him; Baines v. Williams, 25 N. C. 481. A cause of action for an act which is in itself lawful, as to the person who bases thereon an action for injury subsequently accruing, from and consequent upon the act, does not accrue until the injury is sustained; Houston Water Works v. Kennedy, 70 Tex. 233, 8 S. W. 36.

The breach of a contract is the gist of the action, and not the damages resulting therefrom; 5 B. & C. 259; Argall v. Bryant, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 98; 3 B. & Ald. 288. Thus, where the defendant had contracted to sell the plaintiff a quantity of salt, but was unable, by reason of the destruction of the salt, to deliver on demand, and prolonged negotiations for settlement till the statutory limitation had expired, and then refused, the statute was held to run from the demand, the non-delivery being a breach of the contract; 1 E. L. & Eq. 44. So, where a notary public neglects to give seasonable notice of non-payment of a note, and the bank employing him was held responsible for the failure, upon suit brought by the bank against the notary to recover the damages it had been obliged to pay, the action was held to be barred, it not being within six years of the notary's default, though within six years of the time when the bank was required to pay damages; President, etc., of Bank of Utica v. Childs, 6 Cow. 238.

So, where an attorney makes a mistake in a writ, whereupon, after prolonged litigation, non-suit follows, but not till an action against the indorser on the note originally sued has become barred, the mistake is held to set the statute in motion; Wilcox v. Plummer, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 172, 7 L. Ed. 821; Mardis' Adm'rs v. Shackleford, 4 Ala. 495. Where he collects money for a client and uses no fraud or falsehood in regard to its receipt, the statute runs from the time of its collection; Douglas v. Corry, 46 Ohio St. 349, 21 N. E. 440, 15 Am. St. Rep. 604. When the attorney dies before the legal proceedings are terminated the statute runs from his death; Johnston v. McCain, 145 Pa. 531, 22 Atl. 979. The statute does not begin to run against an attorney's claim for services until the termination of the action in which they are rendered; Wells v. Town of Salina, 71 Hun 559, 25 N. Y. Supp. 134.

A captain who barratrously loses his vessel is freed from his liability to the underwriter in six years after the last act in the barratrous proceeding; 1 Campb. 539. Di- rectors of a bank liable by statute for mismanagement are discharged in six years after the insolvency of the bank is made known; Hinsdale v. Larned, 16 Mass. 68.

In some states a distinction has been taken in cases where a public officer has neglected duties imposed on him by law, and the statute is in such cases said to run only from the time when the injury is developed; Bank of Hartford County v. Waterman, 26 Conn. 324; but see Betts v. Norris, 21 Me. 314, 38 Am. Dec. 264; Owen v. Western Sav. Fund, 97 Pa. 47, 39 Am. Rep. 794; and it has been held that if a sheriff make an insufficient return, and there is in consequence a reversal of judgment, the statute runs from the return, and not from the reversal of judgment; Miller v. Adams, 16 Mass. 456. So where a sheriff collects money and makes due return but fails to pay over, the statute runs from the return; Governor v. Stonum, 11 Ala. 679; or from the demand by the creditor; Weston v. Ames, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 244. If he suffers an escape, it runs from the escape; 2 Mod. 212; if he takes insufficient bail, from the return of non est inventus upon execution against the principal debtor; Mather v. Green, 17 Mass. 60; Harriman v. Wilkins, 20 Me. 93; if he receive money on a scire facias, from its reception; Thompson v. Bank, 9 Ga. 413; if he neglects to attach sufficient property, on the return of the writ, and not from the time when the insufficiency of the property is ascertained; Garlin v. Strickland, 27 Me. 443. The statute runs on a cause of action for wrongful attachment from the time thereof; McCusker v. Walker, 77 Cal. 208, 19 Pac. 382; Garrett v. Bicklin, 78 Ia. 115, 42 N. W. 621. An action by a sheriff upon the bond of his deputy for a default accrues when the sheriff has paid the debt occasioned by the default; Adkins v. Fry, 38 W. Va. 549, 18 S. E. 737; Adkins v. Stephens, 38 W. Va. 557, 18 S. E. 740.

The same principle applies in cases of torts pure and simple; Rogers v. Stoever, 24 Pa. 186; Lathrop v. Snellbaker, 6 Ohio St. 276.

An action against a recorder of deeds for damages caused by a false certificate of search against incumbrances on real property, must be brought within six years from the date of the search, and not from the date of the discovery of the lien overlooked, or of the loss suffered by the plaintiff; Owen v. Saving Fund, 97 Pa. 47, 39 Am. Rep. 794; Russell & Co. v. Abstract Co., 87 Ia. 233, 54 N. W. 212, 43 Am. St. Rep. 381.

A covenant against encumbrances is not broken until eviction or the actual suffering of damage, and no right of action accrues until such time and not until then does the statute begin to run; In re Hanlin's Estate, 133 Wis. 140, 113 N. W. 411, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189, 126 Am. St. Rep. 938; Seibert v. Bergman, 91 Tex. 411, 44 S. W. 63; and so on a warranty deed; Brooks v. Mohl, 104 Minn. 404, 116 N. W. 931, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195, 124 Am. St. Rep. 629.

The statute only begins to run as against a surety claiming contribution when his own liability is ascertained; [1893] 2 Ch. 514.

In cases of nuisance, the statute begins to run from the injury to the right, without reference to the question of the amount of the damage, the law holding the violation of a right as some damage; 8 East 4; Bolivar Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 241; Pastorius v. Fisher, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 27; Lyles v. Ry. Co., 73 Tex. 95, 11 S. W. 782. And so when a party having a right to use land for a specific purpose puts it to other uses, or wrongfully disposes of property rightfully in possession, the statute begins to run from the perversion; Rogers v. Stoever, 24 Pa. 186. In trover, the statute runs from the conversion; Melville v. Brown, 15 Mass. 82; 5 B. & C. 149; in replevin, from the unlawful taking or detention. The limitation, in the statute of James, of actions for slander to two years next after the words spoken, applies only to cases where the words are actionable in themselves, and not when they become actionable by reason of special damage arising from the speaking thereof; 1 Salk. 206; Pearl v. Koch, 32 Wkly. Law Bul. 52. The limitation extends neither to slander of title; Cro. Car. 140; nor to libel; Arch. Pl. 29. In cases of trespass, crim. con., etc., the statute runs from the time the injury was committed; Sanborn v. Neilson, 5 N. H. 314.

Adverse possession of personal property gives title at the expiration of the statutory period after the possession becomes adverse; Stevens v. Whitcomb, 16 Vt. 124; Mercein v. Burton, 17 Tex. 206. But one who holds by consent of the true owner is not entitled to have the statute run in his favor until denial of the true owner's claim; Lucas v. Daniels, 34 Ala. 188; Ang. Lim. 304, n.; Baker v. Chase, 55 N. H. 61. But different adverse possessions cannot be linked together to give title; Moffatt v. Buchanan, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 369, 54 Am. Dec. 41. The statute acts upon the title to property, and, when the bar is perfect, transfers it to the adverse possessor; but in contracts for payment of money there is no such thing as adverse possession, the statute simply affects the remedy, and not the debt; Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 248.

Computation of time. In computing the time limited, much discussion has been had in the courts whether the day when the statute begins to run is to be included or excluded, but without any satisfactory result. It is most generally held that when the computation is from an act done, the day upon which the act is done is to be included, and when it is from the date simply, then if a present interest is to commence from the date, the day of the date is included; but if merely used as a terminus from which to compute time, then the day of the date is excluded; Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; 3 Term 623; Barber v. Chandler, 17 Pa. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 533; Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193; Ex parte Dean, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 605, 14 Am. Dec. 521. This rule, however, of including the day upon which an act is done, is subject to so many exceptions and qualifications that it can hardly be said to be a rule, and many of the cases are wholly irreconcilable with it. It has been well said that whether the day upon which an act is done or an event happens is to be included or excluded, depends upon the circumstances and reasons of the thing, so that the intention of the parties may be effected; and such a construction should be given as will operate most to the ease of the party entitled to favor, and by which rights will be secured and forfeitures avoided; O'Connor v. Towns, 1 Tex. 107; Ang. Lim. c. VI. Fractions of a day are not regarded, unless it becomes necessary in a question of priority; In re Richardson, 2 Story 571, Fed. Cas. No. 11,777; 8 Ves. 83; Cornell v. Moulton, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 12; Kennedy v. Palmer, 6 Gray (Mass.) 316; and then only in some cases, usually in questions concerning private acts and transactions; In re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407. See FRACTION OF A DAY; DAY; TIME.

Exceptions to general rule. If, when the right of action would otherwise accrue and the statute begin to run, there is no person who can exercise the right, the statute does not begin to run till there is such a person; Richards v. Ins. Co., 8 Cra. (U. S.) 84, 3 L. Ed. 496; for this would be contrary to the intent of the various statutes. Thus, if a note matures after the decease of the promisee, and prior to the issue of letters of administration, the statute runs from the date of the letters of administration unless otherwise specified in the statute; 5 B. & Ald. 204; Wenman v. Ins. Co., 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 28 Am. Dec. 464; Levering v. Rittenhouse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 130; Hobart v. Turnpike Co., 15 Conn. 145; and there must be a person in being to be sued, otherwise the statute will not begin to run; Montgomery v. Hernandez, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 129, 6 L. Ed. 575.

But the courts will not recognize exemptions, where the statute has once begun to run; Douglas v. Irvine, 126 Pa. 643, 17 Atl. 802; Northrop v. Marquam, 16 Or. 173, 18 Pac. 449. So where the statute begins to run before the death of the testator or intestate, it is not interrupted by his death; 4 M. & W. 43; Frost v. Frost, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 733; Handy v. Smith, 30 W. Va. 195, 3 S. E. 604; Hardy v. Riddle, 24 Neb. 670, 39 N. W. 841; nor by the death of the administrator; Pipkin v. Hewlett, 17 Ala. 291; nor by his removal from the state; Lowe's Adm'r v. Jones, 15 Ala. 545; nor by the subsequent mental incapacity of a party; De Arnaud v. U. S., 151 U. S. 483, 14 Sup. Ct. 374, 38 L. Ed. 244. So an insolvent's discharge as effectually removes him from pursuit by his creditor as absence from the state; but it is not an exception within the statute, and cannot avail; Sletor v. Oram, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 106; Sacia v. De Graaf, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 356; Collester v. Hailey, 6 Gray (Mass.) 517. A creditor's absence makes it inconvenient for him to return and sue; but as he can so do, he must, or be barred; 17 Ves. Ch. 87; Peck v. Trustees of Randall, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 165. And it has ever been held that a statutory impediment to the assertion of title will not help the party so impeded; McIver v. Ragan, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 25, 4 L. Ed. 175; but when a state of war exists between the governments of the debtor and creditor, the running of the statute is suspended; Ross v. Jones, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 576, 22 L. Ed. 730; Bell v. Hanks, 55 Ga. 274; McMerty v. Morrison, 62 Mo. 140; and it revives in full force on the restoration of peace. See Chancy v. Powell, 103 N. C. 159, 9 S. E. 298. The courts cannot create an exception to the operation of the statute not made by the statute itself, where the party designedly eludes the service of process; Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 320, 9 Sup. Ct. 537, 32 L. Ed. 953.

There are many authorities, however, to show that if, by the interposition of courts, the necessity of the case, or the provisions of a statute, a person cannot be sued for a limited time, the running of the statute is suspended during that period. In other words, if the law interposes to prevent suit, it will see to it that he who has a right of action shall not be prejudiced thereby; Tarver v. Cowart, 5 Ga. 66; Montgomery v. Hernandez, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 129, 6 L. Ed. 575. Thus, an injunction suspends the statute; Hutsonpiller's Adm'r v. Stover's Adm'r, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 579; Sands v. Campbell, 31 N. Y. 345; but it is held that an injunction against the commencement of an action does not prevent the running of the statute of limitations unless it so provides; Hunter v. Ins. Co., 73 Ohio St. 110, 76 N. E. 563, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1187, 112 Am. St. Rep. 699, 4 Ann. Cas. 146; and so where the injunction is induced by the debtor; Lagerman v. Casserly, 107 Minn. 491, 120 N. W. 1086, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673, 131 Am. St. Rep. 506; or where he was a party; Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 124 Ga. 596, 53 S. E. 251; Wilkinson v. Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. 499, 28 Am. Rep. 166.

The presentation of a claim against the United States to the treasury department for examination and allowance suspends the statute; Utz v. U. S., 75 Fed. 648. And so does an assignment of an insolvent's effects, as between the estate and the creditors; Willard v. Clarke, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 435; Succession of Flower, 12 La. Ann. 216; though not, as has just been said, as between the debtor and his creditor; Collester v. Hailey, 6 Gray (Mass.) 517. But when the statute does not in terms exclude and limit a particular case, the court will not extend it, although the case comes within the reason of the statute; Howell v. Hair, 15 Ala. 194; Favorite v. Booher's Adm'r, 17 Ohio St. 548; Warfield v. Fox, 53 Pa. 382.

By the special provisions of the statute, infants, married women, persons non compos mentis, those imprisoned, and those beyond seas, out of the state, out of the realm, or out of the country, are regarded as affected by the incapacity to sue, or, in other words, as being under disability, and have, therefore, the right of action secured to them until the expiration of the time limited, after the removal of the disability. The statute of limitations cannot be pleaded in bar to an action by a wife against a husband to recover present and future maintenance; Carr v. Carr, 6 Ind. App. 377, 33 N. E. 805. But these personal exceptions have been strictly construed, and the party alleging the disability has been very uniformly held to bring himself exactly within the express words of the statute to entitle himself to the benefit of the exception. To bring himself within the spirit or supposed reason of the exception is not enough; Sacia v. De Graaf, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 356; Beardsley v. Southmayd, 15 N. J. L. 171; 17 Ves. Ch. 87. And this privilege is accorded although the person laboring under the statute disability might in fact bring suit. Thus, an infant may sue before he arrives at his majority, but he is not obliged to, and his right is saved if he does not; 2 Saund. 117. The time during which a negro was held as a slave should not be counted in determining whether an action by him is barred by the statute; Berry v. Berry's Adm'r (Ky.) 22 S. W. 654. The disability must, however, be continuous and identical. One disability cannot be superadded to another so as to prolong the time; East Tennessee Iron & Coal Co. v. Wiggin, 37 U. S. App. 129, 68 Fed. 446, 15 C. C. A. 510; and if the statute once begins to run, whether before a disability exists or after it has been removed, no intervention of another and subsequent disability can stop it; Workman v. Guthrie, 29 Pa. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 654; Fritz v. Joiner, 54 Ill. 101; Turnipseed v. Freeman, 2 McCord (S. C.) 269; Hardy v. Riddle, 24 Neb. 670, 39 N. W. 841; Alvis v. Oglesby, 87 Tenn. 172, 10 S. W. 313; Royse v. Turnbaugh, 117 Ind. 539, 20 S. W. 485; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 13 Sup. Ct. 466, 37 L. Ed. 316.

Where the plaintiff sustains injuries to his head, resulting in insanity almost immediately thereafter, the two events are simultaneous and the statute begins to run the next day; Nebola v. Iron Co., 102 Minn. 89, 112 N. W. 880, 12 Ann. Cas. 56.

When, however, there are two or more coexisting disabilities at the time the right of action accrues, suit need not be brought till all are removed; Plowd. 375; Keeton's Heirs v. Keeton's Adm'r, 20 Mo. 530; Demarest v. Wynkoop, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 129, 8 Am. Dec. 467.

The time during which a debtor is absent residing out of the state of his own free will and accord, is to be deducted in estimating the time in which an action must be brought against him; Hoffman v. Pope's Estate, 74 Mich. 235, 41 N. W. 907; Ament v. Lowenthall, 52 Kan. 706, 35 Pac. 804; notwithstanding that he continues to have a usual place of residence in the state where service of the summons could be made on him; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 13 Sup. Ct. 466, 37 L. Ed. 316; a foreign corporation is a person out of the state; Larson v. Aultman & Taylor Co., 86 Wis. 285, 56 N. W. 915, 39 Am. St. Rep. 893. See BEYOND SEAS.

The word return, as applied to an absent debtor, applies as well to foreigners, or residents out of the state coming to the state, as to citizens of the state who have gone abroad and have returned; Ruggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 267, 3 Am. Dec. 482; Bulger v. Roche, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 36, 22 Am. Dec. 359; Crocker v. Arey, 3 R. I. 178. And in order to set the statute in motion the return must be open, public, and such and under such circumstances as will give a party, who exercises ordinary diligence, an opportunity to bring his action; Byrne v. Crowninshield, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 263; Berrien v. Wright, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 208; 24 Ont. App. Rep. 718; Steen v. Swadley, 126 Ala. 616, 28 South. 620; the creditor must at least take some steps from time to time to ascertain whether he can reach the debtor; Dukes v. Collins, 7 Houst. (Del.) 3, 30 Atl. 639.

Such a return, though temporary, will be sufficient; Faw v. Roberdeau, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 174, 2 L. Ed. 402; contra, Wilson v. Daggett, 88 Tex. 375, 31 S. W. 618, 53 Am. St. Rep. 766; nor will a stay of several weeks without the creditor's knowledge; Mazozon v. Foot, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 282, 15 Am. Dec. 679; nor a secret visit; Stewart v. Stewart, 152 Cal. 162, 92 Pac. 87, 14 Ann. Cas. 940. It has been held that there must be a return with an intention to reside; Lee v. McKoy, 118 N. C. 518, 24 S. E. 210.

But if the return is such and under such circumstances as to show that the party does not intend that his creditor shall take advantage of his presence, or such, in fact, that he cannot without extraordinary vigilance avail himself of it,—if it is secret, concealed, or clandestine,—it is insufficient. The absence of one of several joint-plaintiffs does not prevent the running of the statute; 4

Term 516; but the absence of one of several joint-defendants does; 29 E. L. & Eq. 271. This at least seems to be the settled law of England; but the cases in the several states are conflicting upon these points. See Bruce v. Flagg, 25 N. J. L. 219; Denny v. Smith, 18 N. Y. 567; Harlan's Heirs v. Seaton's Heirs, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 312; Seay v. Bacon, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 99, 67 Am. Dec. 601. If a claimant beyond seas when the claim accrued returned to this country, the statute began to run and was not suspended by his departure to foreign parts; Savage v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 255.

Where the statute saves the right if the party is "out of the state," it runs only upon the return, and this applies to non-residents equally; Ruggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 264, 3 Am. Dec. 482; followed in McCann v. Randall, 147 Mass. 81, 17 N. E. 75, 9 Am. St. Rep. 666; Van Schuyver v. Hartman, 1 Alaska 431; contra, Murray v. Farrell, 2 Alaska 360; that it applies only to residents, see Huff v. Crawford, 88 Tex. 368, 30 S. W. 546, 31 S. W. 614, 53 Am. St. Rep. 763; Orr v. Wilmarth, 95 Mo. 212, 8 S. W. 258. See note in 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 24.

Commencement of process. The question sometimes arises as to what constitutes the bringing an action or the commencement of process, and this is very uniformly held to be the delivery or transmission by mail in due course of the writ or process to the sheriff, in good faith, for service; Jackson v. Brooks, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 649. The date of the writ is prima facie evidence of the time of its issuance; Gardner v. Webber, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 407; Johnson v. Farwell, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 370, 22 Am. Dec. 203; but is by no means conclusive; 2 Burr. 950; Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 364, 8 Am. Dec. 105. The suit is not "brought" or "commenced" in a federal court, to stop the running of the statute, until there is a bona fide attempt to serve the process; U. S. v. Lumber Co., 80 Fed. 309.

If the writ or process seasonably issued fail of a sufficient service or return by any unavoidable accident, or by any default or neglect of the officer to whom it is committed, or is abated, or the action is otherwise avoided by the death of any party thereto, or for any matter of form, or judgment for plaintiff be arrested or reversed, the plaintiff may, either by virtue of the statutory provision or by reason of an implied exception to the general rule, commence a new action within a reasonable time; and that reasonable time is usually fixed by the statute at one year, and by the courts in the absence of statutory provision at the same period; 1 Ld. Raym. 434; Downing v. Lindsay, 2 Pa. 382; Huntington v. Brinckerhoff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 278. Irregularity of the mail is an inevitable accident within the meaning of the statute; Jewett v. Greene, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 447. And so is a failure of service by reason of the removal of the defendant, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, from the county in which he had resided and to which the writ was seasonably sent; Bullock v. Dean, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 15. But a mistake of the attorney as to time of the sitting of the court, and consequent failure to enter, is not; Packard v. Swallow, 29 Me. 458. The statute cannot be pleaded to an amended count when it contains only a restatement of the case as contained in the original counts; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Henneberry, 42 Ill. App. 126. The filing of a petition will bar the running of the statute, though stricken out because it does not contain the formal allegations required, where it was subsequently amended; Howard v. Windom, 86 Tex. 560, 26 S. W. 483. In Pennsylvania a citation to an executor to file an account is equivalent to the commencement of process.

A nonsuit is in some states held to be within the equity of the statute; Long v. Orrell, 35 N. C. 123; Haymaker v. Haymaker, 4 Ohio St. 272; but generally otherwise; Harris v. Dennis, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 236; Ivins v. Schooley, 18 N. J. L. 269; Swan v. Littlefield, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 417. If there are two defendants, and by reason of a failure of service upon one an alias writ is taken out, this is no continuance, but a new action, and the statute is a bar; Magaw v. Clark, 6 Watts (Pa.) 528. So of an amending bill introducing new parties; Miller v. McIntyre, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 61, 8 L. Ed. 320. A dismissal of the action because of the clerk's omission seasonably to enter it on the docket is for matter of form, within the Massachusetts statute, and a new suit may be instituted within one year thereafter; Allen v. Sawtelle, 7 Gray (Mass.) 165; and so is a dismissal for want of jurisdiction, where the action is brought in the wrong county; Woods v. Houghton, 1 Gray (Mass.) 580. In Maine, however, a wrong venue is not a matter of form; Donnell v. Gatchell, 38 Me. 217. The statute is a bar to an action at law after a dismissal from chancery for want of jurisdiction; 1 Vern. 74; Barker v. Millard, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 572. Upon the dismissal of an action the court cannot extend the statutory period of limitation for bringing a new action; Humphrey v. Carpenter, 39 Minn. 115, 39 N. W. 67. The dismissal of an action to recover for personal injuries because of failure to file a declaration does not prevent the bringing of a new action within the time allowed after failure of a former proceeding, although the statutory period has run since the accident occurred; La Follette Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Minton, 117 Tenn. 415, 101 S. W. 178, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478. Where the original petition states no cause of action whatever, and an amendment is filed after the statute has run, the cause of action is barred; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bagley, 65 Kan. 188, 69 Pac. 189, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259.

Lex fori governs. Questions under the statute are to be decided by the law of the place where the action is brought, and not by the law of the place where the contract is made or the wrong done. If the statute has run against a claim in one state, the remedy is gone, but the right is not extinguished; and therefore the right may be enforced in another state where the remedy is still open, the time limited by the statute not having expired; 15 East 439; Flowers v. Foreman, 23 How. (U. S.) 132, 16 L. Ed. 405; Putnam v. Dike, 13 Gray (Mass.) 535. So if the statute of the place of the contract is still unexpired, yet an action brought in another place is governed by the lex fori, and may be barred; Nash v. Tupper, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 402, 2 Am. Dec. 197; 5 Cl. & F. 1; Thomas v. Clarkson, 125 Ga. 72, 54 S. E. 77, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658. But statutes giving title by adverse possession are to be distinguished from statutes of limitation. Adverse possession gives title; lapse of time bars the remedy only. And a right acquired by adverse possession in the place where the adverse possession is had is good elsewhere; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 361, 6 L. Ed. 495; Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. (U. S.) 407, 13 L. Ed. 194; Story, Confl. Laws 582. In Pennsylvania, by a later statute an action is barred whenever it is so by the law of the state where the cause of action accrued. So by statute in Kansas; Bruner v. Martin, 76 Kan. 862, 93 Pac. 165, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 123 Am. St. Rep. 172, 14 Ann. Cas. 39. Such a statute has reference only to the primary and original jurisdiction in which the action arose, and does not contemplate other jurisdictions in which a cause of action may arise because a defendant takes up his domicil therein; McKee v. Dodd, 152 Cal. 637, 93 Pac. 854, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 780, 125 Am. St. Rep. 82; where the action in the original jurisdiction is not barred, but is barred by the statute of another state of which the defendant is a resident, the original action is not barred in a third state which has a comity statute; Doughty v. Funk, 15 Okl. 643, 84 Pac. 484, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029.

A court of the United States, whether sitting in law or equity, must give effect to the statute of limitations of the state where it sits; Dupree v. Mansur, 214 U. S. 161, 29 Sup. Ct. 548, 53 L. Ed. 950.

Public rights not affected. Statutes of limitation do not, on principles of public policy, run against a state or the United States, unless it is expressly so provided in the statute itself; U. S. v. Insley, 130 U. S. 263, 9 Sup. Ct. 485, 32 L. Ed. 968; Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508, 13 Sup. Ct. 418, 37 L. Ed. 259. So a claim against a hospital which is an agency of a state; Eastern State Hospital v. Graves' Committee, 105 Va. 151, 52 S. E. 837, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 8 Ann. Cas. 701; but not of a foreign government suing for the benefit of an individual; French Republic v. Spring Co., 191 U. S. 427, 24 Sup. Ct. 145, 48 L. Ed. 247; but the United States is entitled to take the benefit of them; Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508, 13 Sup. Ct. 418, 37 L. Ed. 259. No laches is to be imputed to the government; U. S. v. Hoar, 2 Mas. 312, Fed. Cas. No. 15,373; People v. Gilbert, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 228. But this principle has no application when a party seeks his private rights in the name of the state; Moody v. Fleming, 4 Ga. 115, 48 Am. Dec. 210; but see Glover v. Wilson, 6 Pa. 290; U. S. v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 8 Sup. Ct. 1083, 32 L. Ed. 121; U. S. v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 510, 12 Sup. Ct. 308, 35 L. Ed. 1099. Counties, towns, and municipal bodies have no exemption; Armstrong v. Dalton, 15 N. C. 568; City of Ft. Smith v. McKibbin, 41 Ark. 45, 48 Am. Rep. 19; City of Bedford v. Green, 133 Ind. 700, 33 N. E. 369; but see City of Cincinnati's Lessee v. Presbyterian Church, 8 Ohio 298, 32 Am. Dec. 718. And it is held that municipalities are excluded from the operation of the statute as to the soil of streets; Kopf v. Utter, 101 Pa. 27; but it is said that municipalities may be estopped from disputing title where justice and equity so require; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 675. But it is held that the exemption extends to counties, cities, towns and minor municipalities in all matters respecting strictly public rights; Brown v. Trustees of Schools, 224 Ill. 184, 79 N. E. 579, 115 Am. St. Rep. 146, 8 Ann. Cas. 96; this rule applies to the collection of taxes; Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 22 Okl. 761, 98 Pac. 1002; and to highways; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 110 Va. 95, 65 S. E. 531; Quinn v. Baage, 138 Ia. 426, 114 N. W. 205; also to a suit by a state university; Cox v. Board of Trustees, 161 Ala. 639, 49 South. 814; and to a suit brought by a county for the collection of school funds; Delta County v. Blackburn, 100 Tex. 51, 93 S. W. 419; contra, Clarke v. School Dist. No. 16, 84 Ark. 516, 106 S. W. 677. The statute has been held to run against a county relatively to land bought by it, but not needed, for jail purposes; Warren County v. Lamkin, 93 Miss. 123, 46 South. 497, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 920. A state statute is no bar to the United States; U. S. v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 486, 25 L. Ed. 194; U. S. v. Fitts, 197 Fed. 1007. If, however, the sovereign becomes a party in a private enterprise, as, for instance, a stockholder in a bank, it subjects itself to the operation of the statute; U. S. v. Buford, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 30, 7 L. Ed. 585; Bank of The U. S. v. McKenzie, 2 Brock. 393, Fed. Cas. No. 927. See, generally, Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508, 13 Sup. Ct. 418, 37 L. Ed. 259.

Particular classes of actions. Actions of trespass, trespass quare clausum, detinue, account, trover, replevin, and upon the case (except actions for slander), and actions of debt for arrearages of rent, and of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, or simple contract debt, are usually limited to six years. Actions for slander, libel, assault, and the like, are usually limited to a less time, generally two years. Judgments of courts not of record, as courts of justices of the peace and county commissioners' courts, are in some states, either by statute or the decisions of the highest courts, included in the category of debts founded on contract without specialty, and accordingly come within the statute; Bannegan v. Murphy, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 251; Carshore v. Huyck, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 583. In others, however, they are excluded upon the ground that the statute applies only to debts founded on contracts in fact, and not to debts founded on contracts implied by law; Pease v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 480.

Actions of assumpsit, though not specifically named in the original statute of James I. as included within the limitation of six years, were held in England, after much discussion, to be fairly embraced in actions of "trespass"; 4 B. & C. 44; 4 Ad. & E. 912. The same rule has been adopted in this country; Williams' Adm'rs v. Williams' Adm'rs, 5 Ohio 444; McCluny v. Silliman, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 270, 7 L. Ed. 676; Maltby & Bolls v. Cooper, Morr. (Ia.) 59; Beatty's Adm'rs v. Burnes's Adm'rs, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 98, 3 L. Ed. 500; but see 12 M. & M. 141; and, in fact, assumpsit is expressly included in most of the statutes. And it has also been held in this country that statutes of limitation apply as well to motions made under a statute as to actions; Prewett v. Hilliard, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 423. Such statutes are in aid of the common law, and furnish a general rule for cases that are analogous in their subject-matter, but for which a remedy unknown to the common law has been provided by statutes; as where compensation is sought for land taken for a railroad; Forster v. R. Co., 23 Pa. 371; Appeal of Hart, 32 Conn. 521.

But it must be remembered that in all such cases the debt is not discharged, though the right of action to enforce it may be gone; Miller v. Ry. Co., 55 Fed. 366, 5 C. C. A. 134, 13 U. S. App. 57. So, where a creditor has a lien on goods for a balance due, he may hold them, though the statute has run against his debt; 3 Esp. 81; Belknap v. Gleason, 11 Conn. 160, 27 Am. Dec. 721; Joy v. Adams, 26 Me. 330; Harris v. Mills, 28 Ill. 44, 81 Am. Dec. 259. And an acceptor may retain funds to indemnify him against his acceptances, though the acceptances may have been outstanding longer than the time limited by statute; 3 Campb. 418.

A set-off of a claim against which the statute has run cannot usually be pleaded in bar; 5 East 16; Ruggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 263, 3 Am. Dec. 482; though when there are cross-demands accruing at nearly the same time, and the plaintiff has saved the statute by suing out process, the defendant will be allowed to set off his demand; 2 Esp. 569; Princeton & K. B. Turnpike Co. v. Gulick, 14 N. J. L. 545; and, generally, when there is any equitable matter of defence in the nature of set-off, or which might be the subject of a cross-action, growing out of the subject-matter for which the action is brought, courts will permit it to be set up although a cross-action or an action on the claim in set-off might be barred by the statute; Evans' Ex'rs v. Yongue, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 113; 11 E. L. & Eq. 10; King v. King, 9 N. J. Eq. 44. A set-off is barred by the statute only when the original claim is barred; Peden v. Cavins, 134 Ind. 494, 34 N. E. 7, 39 Am. St. Rep. 276.

Debts by specialty, as contracts under seal, judgments of courts of record (except foreign judgments, and judgments of courts out of the state, upon which the decisions are very discordant), liabilities imposed by statute, awards under seal, or where the submission is under seal, indentures reserving rent, and actions for legacies, are affected only by the general limitation of twenty years; Ang. Lim. § 77. But a mortgage, though under seal, does not take the note, not witnessed, secured thereby, with it, out of the limitation of simple contracts; Jackson v. Sackett, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 94. And though liabilities imposed by statute are specialties, a liability under a by-law made by virtue of a charter is not; 6 E. L. & Eq. 309; on the ground that by becoming a member of the company enacting the by-laws, the party consents and agrees to assume the liabilities imposed thereby.

In Massachusetts, Vermont, and Maine, the statute is regulated in its application to witnessed promissory notes. In Massachusetts an action brought by the payee of a witnessed promissory note, his executor or administrator, is excepted from the limitation of simple contracts, and is only barred by the lapse of twenty years. But the indorsee of such a note must sue within six years from the time of the transfer to him; Frye v. Barker, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 384; though he may sue after that time in the name of the payee, with his consent; Rockwood v. Brown, 1 Gray (Mass.) 261. If there are two promisees to the note, and the signature of only one is witnessed, the note as to the other is not a witnessed note; Jenkins v. Dawes, 115 Mass. 599; Stone v. Nichols, 23 Me. 497. And the attestation of the witness must be with the knowledge and consent of the maker of the note; Smith v. Dunham, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 246; Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26. An attested indorsement signed by the promissee, acknowledging the note to be due, is not a witnessed note; Gray v. Bowden; 23

Pick. (Mass.) 282; but the same acknowledgment for value received, with a promise to pay the note, is; Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Whitney, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 21. If the note be payable to the maker's own order, witnessed and indorsed by the maker in blank, the indorsement being without attestation, an action by the first indorsee is barred in six years; Kinsman v. Wright, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 219. And even if the indorsement be attested, a second indorsee or holder by delivery, not being the original payee, is barred; Houghton v. Mann, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 128.

Statute bar avoided, when. Trusts in general are not within the operation of the statute, where they are direct and exclusively within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, and the question arises between the trustees and the cestui que trust; White v. White, 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 53; Sayles v. Tibbitts, 5 R. I. 79; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Morey v. Trust Co., 149 Mass. 253, 21 N. E. 384. And of this character are the trusts of executors, administrators, guardians, assignees of insolvents, and the like. The claim or title of such trustees is that of the cestui que trust; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 608; 2 Sch. & L. 607, 633; Appeal of Norris, 71 Pa. 106. The relation between directors and a corporation has the elements of an express trust, to which the statute does not apply; Ellis v. Ward (Ill.) 20 N. E. 671. Special limitations to actions at law are made in some states in favor of executors and administrators, modifying or abrogating the rule in equity; and as these laws are made in the interest of the trust funds, it is the duty of the executor or administrator to plead the special statute which applies to him as such, and protects the estate he represents, though he is not bound to plead the general statute; Brown v. Anderson, 13 Mass. 203; Walter v. Radcliffe, 2 Desaus. (S. C.) 577; Wisner v. Ogden, 4 Wash. C. C. 639, Fed. Cas. No. 17,914.

If, however, the trustee deny the right of his cestui que trust, and claim adversely to him, and these facts come to the knowledge of the cestui que trust, the statute will begin to run from the time when the facts become known; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Fox v. Cash, 11 Pa. 207; Key v. Hughes's Ex'rs, 32 W. Va. 184, 9 S. E. 77; Gisborn v. Ins. Co., 142 U. S. 326, 12 Sup. Ct. 277, 35 L. Ed. 1029. Long lapse of time will defeat the enforcement of a resulting trust; Smith v. Turley, 32 W. Va. 14, 9 S. E. 46. The rule exempting trusts from the operation of the statute does not apply to a resulting trust in favor of creditors; Dole v. Wilson, 39 Minn. 330, 40 N. W. 161; Stone v. Brown, 116 Ind. 78, 18 N. E. 392.

Principal and agent. The relation of an agent to his principal is a fiduciary one, and the statute does not begin to run so long as there is no breach of the trust or duty; McHarry v. Irvin's Ex'r, 85 Ky. 322, 3 S. W. 374, 4 S. W. 800. When, however, there is such a breach, and the principal has knowledge of it, the statute will begin to run; Green v. Johnson, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 389; Appeal of Hart, 32 Conn. 520. In many cases a lawful demand upon the agent to perform his duty, and neglect or refusal to comply, are necessary to constitute a breach. As when money is placed in the hands of an agent with which to purchase property, and the agent neglects to make the purchase, there must be a demand for the money before the statute will begin to run; Downey v. Garard, 24 Pa. 52; so where property is placed in the hands of an agent to be sold, and he neglects to sell; Green v. Johnson, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 389. If, however, the agent's conduct is such as to amount to a declaration on his part that he will not perform his duty, or if he has disabled himself from performing it, it is tantamount to a repudiation of the trust, or an adverse claim against the cestui que trust, and the same consequences follow. No demand is necessary; the right of action accrues at once upon the declaration, and the statute then begins to run; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown v. Bank, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 422.

But where a demand is necessary, it should itself be made within the limited time; otherwise an agent might be subject all his lifetime to demands, however stale; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; unless the agent, by his own act, prevents a demand; Emmons v. Hayward, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 501. The rendering an untrue account by a collection or other agent would seem to be such a breach of duty as to warrant an action without demand, and would therefore set the statute in motion; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145. If the custom of trade or the law makes it the clear duty of an agent to pay over money collected without a demand, then if the principal has notice, the statute begins to run from the time of collection; and when there is no such custom or law, if the agent having funds collected gives notice to his principal, the statute will begin to run after the lapse of a reasonable time within which to make the demand, though no demand be made; Lyle v. Murray, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 590.

In equity, as has been seen, fraud practised upon the plaintiff so that the fact of his right to sue does not come to his knowledge till after the expiration of the statute of limitations, is held to open the case so that he may bring his action within the time limited, dating from the discovery of the fraud; Bisph. Eq. 203; Terry v. Fontaine's Adm'r, 83 Va. 451, 2 S. E. 743. But herein the courts proceed with great caution, and require not only a clear case of fraudulent concealment, but the absence of negligence on the part of the party seeking to obviate the statute limitation by the replication of fraud; Stearns v. Page, 7 How. (U. S.) 819, 12 L. Ed. 928; Ferris v. Henderson, 12 Pa. 49, 51 Am. Dec. 580; Lawrence v. Trustees, 2 Denio (N. Y.) 577; Way v. Cutting, 20 N. H. 187. See Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 9 Sup. Ct. 594, 32 L. Ed. 1005. The concealment must be something more than silence or mere general declarations or speeches; it must appear that some trick or artifice has been employed to prevent inquiry or elude investigation, or calculated to mislead or hinder the party from obtaining information by the use of ordinary diligence; or it must appear that the facts were misrepresented to or concealed from the party by some positive act or declaration when inquiry was made; Stone v. Brown, 116 Ind. 78, 18 N. E. 392; Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 12 Sup. Ct. 862, 36 L. Ed. 719. In some states, fraudulent concealment of the cause of action is made by statute a cause of exemption from its effect in courts of law as well as of equity. And the courts construe the saving clause with great strictness, and hold that means of knowledge of the concealment are equivalent to knowledge in fact; Nudd v. Hamblin, 8 Allen (Mass.) 130; Rouse v. Southard, 39 Me. 404. In the absence of statutory provision, the admissibility of the replication of fraud in courts of law has been the subject of contradictory decisions in the different states. In New York (Troup v. Smith's Ex'rs, 20 Johns. 33), in Virginia (Rice v. White, 4 Leigh 474), and in North Carolina (Hamilton v. Shepperd, 7 N. C. 115), it is inadmissible. But in the United States courts (Jones v. Van Doren, 130 U. S. 684, 9 Sup. Ct. 685, 32 L. Ed. 1077), Pennsylvania (McDowell v. Young, 12 S. & R. 128), Indiana (Raymond v. Simonson, 4 Blackf. 85), New Hampshire (Douglas v. Elkins, 28 N. H. 26), South Carolina (Beck v. Searson, 8 Rich. Eq. 130), Virginia (Terry v. Fontaine's Adm'r, 83 Va. 451, 2 S. E. 743), it is held to be admissible; Sherwood v. Sutton, 5 Mas. 143, Fed. Cas. No. 12,782; and this is the rule generally prevalent in the United States.

Constructive notice of fraud is sufficient to start the statute running even though there may be no actual notice, and where the means of discovery lie in public records it is sufficient constructive notice; Board of Com'rs of Garfield County v. Renshaw, 23 Okl. 56, 99 Pac. 638, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207. A bill in equity to enjoin the pleading of the statute will be allowed where the defendant, without notice to the plaintiff, sold certain bonds on which a commission for collection was due the plaintiff; Holloway v. Appelget, 55 N. J. Eq. 583, 40 Atl. 27, 62 Am. St. Rep. 827.

Running accounts. Such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant were by the original statute of James I. exempted from its operation. The earlier statutes of limitation in this country contained the same exception. But it has been very generally omitted in late revised codes. Among the accounts excepted from the operation of the statute all accounts current were early held to be included; 6 Term 189; if they contained upon either side any item upon which the right of action accrued within six years, whether the accounts were between merchant and merchant or other persons. And this construction of the law, based, as is said in some cases, upon the ground that such accounts come within the equity of the exception in respect to merchants' accounts, and in others upon the ground that every new item and credit in an account given by one party to another is an admission of there being some unsettled account between them, and as an acknowledgment, sufficient to take the case out of the statute, has taken the form of legislative enactment in many states in this country, and, in the absence of such enactment, has been generally followed by the courts; Murray v. Coster, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 576, 11 Am. Dec. 333; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 308; Ashley v. Hill, 6 Conn. 246; Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 300, 9 L. Ed. 1093; Lee v. Polk, 4 McCord (S. C.) 215; Hibler v. Johnston, 18 N. J. L. 266; Mandeville & Jamesson v. Wilson, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 15; Chambers v. Marks, 25 Pa. 296; Norton v. Larco, 30 Cal. 126, 89 Am. Dec. 70.

But there must be a reciprocity of dealing between the respective parties, and the accounts must be such that there may be a fair implication that it is understood that the items of one account are to be a set-off so far as they go, against the items of the other account; Boylan v. The Victory, 40 Mo. 244; Atwater v. Fowler, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 417; Chambers v. Marks, 25 Pa. 296. Where the items of account are all on one side, as between a shopkeeper and his customer, or where goods are charged and payments credited, there is no mutuality, and the statute bars the account; Hallock v. Losee, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 220; Ingram v. Sherard, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 347; Wilson v. Calvert, 18 Ala. 274; See Borland v. Haven, 37 Fed. 394. And where, in the case of mutual account, after a statement, the balance has been struck and agreed upon, the statute at once applies to such balance as a distinct demand; 2 Saund. 125; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 308; Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 300, 9 L. Ed. 1093; unless it was made the first item of a new mutual account; President, etc., of Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 96, 15 Am. Dec. 181; 8 Cl. & F. 121; but see Estes v. Shoe Co., 54 Mo. App. 543.

The statute begins to run against mutual accounts from the date of the last credit and not from the last debit; George v. Machine Co., 65 Vt. 287, 26 Atl. 722; and if the last item on either side of a mutual account is not barred, the whole account is saved from the operation of the statute; Chadwick v. Chadwick, 115 Mo. 581, 22 S. W. 479; Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 27 Atl. 214.

A closed account is not a stated account. In order to constitute the latter, an account must have been rendered by one party, and expressly or impliedly assented to by the other; Bass v. Bass, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 187; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 308; Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 300, 9 L. Ed. 1093. Accounts between merchant and merchant are exempted from the operation of the statute, if current and mutual, although no item appears on either side within six years; 19 Ves. 180; 2 Saund. 124; Thompson v. Fisher, 13 Pa. 310; Brackenridge v. Baltzell, Smith (Ind.) 217. A single transaction between two merchants is not within the exception; Marseilles v. Kenton's Ex'rs, 17 Pa. 238; nor is an account between partners; Hendy v. March, 75 Cal. 566, 17 Pac. 702; nor an account between two joint-owners of a vessel; Smith v. Dawson, 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 112; nor an account for freight under a charter-party, although both parties are merchants; Spring v. Gray, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 8 L. Ed. 352.

Surety. The statute begins to run against a surety paying a debt only from the time of payment; Leak v. Covington, 99 N. C. 559, 6 S. E. 241; Mentzer v. Burlingame, 78 Kan. 219, 97 Pac. 371, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 585.

New promise to pay debt barred. There is another important class of exceptions, not made by the statute, but by the courts, wherein, although the statutory limitation may have expired, parties bringing themselves within the exception have always been allowed to recover. In actions of assumpsit, a new express promise to pay, or an acknowledgment of existing indebtedness made under such circumstances as to be equivalent to a new promise and within six years before the time of action brought, will take the case out of the operation of the statute, although the original cause of action accrued more than six years before that time; Poll. Contr. 625; Browne v. French, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 445, 22 S. W. 581. And this proceeds upon the ground that as the statutory limitation merely bars the remedy and does not discharge the debt, there is something more than a merely moral obligation to support the promise,—to wit, a pre-existent debt, which is a sufficient consideration for the new promise; Johnson v. Evans, 8 Gill (Md.) 155, 50 Am. Dec. 669; Phelps v. Williamson, 26 Vt. 230; Ans. Contr. 100; Fries v. Boisselet, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 128, 11 Am. Dec. 683; Jordan v. Jordan, 85 Tenn. 561, 3 S. W. 896. The new promise upon this sufficient consideration constitutes, in fact, a new cause of action; 4 East 399; 6 Taunt. 210; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 351, 7 L. Ed. 174; Hare, Contr. 259.

This was undoubtedly a liberal construction of the statute; but it was early adopted, and has maintained itself, in the face of much adverse criticism, to the present time. While, however, at an early period there was an inclination of the courts to accept the slightest and most ambiguous expressions as evidence of a new promise, the spirit and tendency of modern decisions are towards greater strictness, and seem to be fairly expressed in the learned judgment of Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 351, 7 L. Ed. 174. "It has often been matter of regret, in modern times, that, in the construction of the statute of limitations, the decisions had not proceeded upon principles better adapted to carry into effect the real objects of the statute; that, instead of being viewed in an unfavorable light, as an unjust and discreditable defence, it had [not] received such support as would have made it, what it was intended to be, emphatically a statute of repose. It is a wise and beneficial law, not designed merely to raise a presumption of payment of a just debt from lapse of time, but to afford security against stale demands after the true state of the transactions may have been forgotten, or be incapable of explanation, by reason of the death or removal of witnesses. It has a manifest tendency to produce speedy settlement of accounts, and to suppress those prejudices which may rise up at a distance of time and baffle every honest effort to counteract or overcome them. Parol evidence may be offered of confessions (a species of evidence which, it has been often observed, it is hard to disprove and easy to fabricate) applicable to such remote times as may leave no means to trace the nature, extent, or origin of the claim, and thus open the way to the most oppressive charges. If we proceed one step further, and admit, that loose and general expressions, from which a probable or possible inference may be deduced of the acknowledgment of a debt by a court or jury, that, as the language of some cases has been, any acknowledgment, however slight, or any statement not amounting to a denial of the debt, that any admission of the existence of an unsettled account, without any specification of amount or balance, and however indeterminate and casual, are yet sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations, and let in evidence, aliunde, to establish any debt, however large and at whatever distance of time; it is easy to perceive that the wholesome objects of the statute must be in a great measure defeated, and the statute virtually repealed." . . . "If the bar is sought to be removed by the proof of a new promise, that promise, as a new cause of action, ought to be proved in a clear and explicit manner, and be in its terms unequivocal and determinate; and, if any conditions

And to the same general purport are the following cases, although it is undeniable that in the application of the rule there seems in some cases to be a looseness and liberality which hardly comport with the rule: Bluehill Academy v. Ellis, 32 Me. 260; Ventris v. Shaw, 14 N. H. 422; Ayers v. Richards, 12 Ill. 146; Patterson v. Cobb, 4 Fla. 481; Gartrell v. Linn, 79 Ga. 700, 4 S. E. 918; Richmond v. Fugua, 33 N. C. 445; Bryan v. Ware, 20 Ala. 687; Stewart v. Reckless, 24 N. J. L. 427; Wilcox v. Williams, 5 Nev. 206; Randon v. Toby, 11 How. (U. S.) 493, 13 L. Ed. 784; Russell & Co. v. Davis, 51 Minn. 482, 53 N. W. 766; Custy v. Donlan, 159 Mass. 245, 34 N. E. 360, 38 Am. St. Rep. 419; In re Robbins' Estate, 7 Misc. 264, 27 N. Y. Supp. 1009; Howard v. Windom, 86 Tex. 560, 26 S. W. 483; Switzer v. Noffsinger, 82 Va. 518.

The promise must be made to the party in interest or his agent, in order to toll the statute; Spangler v. Spangler, 122 Pa. 358, 15 Atl. 436, 9 Am. St. Rep. 114; as an acknowledgment to a third person and not intended to be communicated to the creditor will not suffice; Cunkle v. Heald, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 485.

A new promise to pay the principal only does not except the interest from the operation of the statute; Graham v. Keys, 29 Pa. 189. Nor does an agreement to refer take the claim out of the statute; Broddie v. Johnson, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 464; nor the insertion, by an insolvent debtor, of an outlawed claim, in a schedule of his creditors required by law; Christy v. Flemington, 10 Pa. 129, 49 Am. Dec. 590; Roscoe v. Hale, 7 Gray (Mass.) 274 (but not so in Louisiana; Morgan's Ex'rs v. Metayer, 14 La. Ann. 612); Woodbridge v. Allen, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 470; nor an agreement not to take advantage of the statute; Hodgdon v. Chase, 29 Me. 47; Maitland v. Wilcox, 17 Pa. 232; Stockett v. Sasscer, 8 Md. 374; Sutton v. Burruss, 9 Leigh (Va.) 381, 33 Am. Dec. 246. If such an agreement were valid, it might be made part of the contract, and thus the object of the law would be defeated; Hodgdon v. Chase, 32 Me. 169. Nor will a devise of property to pay debts exempt debts upon which the statute has run prior to the testator's death; Carrington v. Manning's Heirs, 13 Ala. 611; Agnew's Adm'x v. Fetterman's Ex'x, 4 Pa. 56, 45 Am. Dec. 671; Tazewell's Ex'r v. Whittle's Adm'r, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 329; Bloodgood v. Bruen, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 427.

Nor, in general, will any statement of a debt, made officially, in pursuance of special legal requirement, or with another purpose than to recognize it as an existing debt; 12 E. L. & Eq. 191; Wellman v. Southard, 30 Me. 425; Bradford v. Spyker's Adm'r, 32 Ala. 134. Nor will a deed of assignment made by the debtor for the payment of certain debts, and of his debts generally, and a partial payment by the assignor to a creditor; Reed v. Johnson, 1 R. I. 81; 6 E. L. & Eq. 520; nor the entry of a debt in an unsigned schedule of the debtor's liabilities, made for his own use; Wellman v. Southard, 30 Me. 425; nor an undelivered mortgage to secure a debt against which the statute has run, though duly executed, acknowledged and recorded; Merriam v. Leonard, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 151. But if the mortgage be delivered, it will be a sufficient acknowledgment to exempt the debt secured thereby from the operation of the statute; Balch v. Onion, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 559; Merrills v. Swift, 18 Conn. 257, 46 Am. Dec. 315; Grayson v. Taylor, 14 Tex. 672. And so will the answer to a bill in chancery which expressly sets forth the existence of such a debt; Bloodgood v. Bruen, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 427; Allender v. Vestry of Trinity Church, 3 Gill (Md.) 166. An acknowledgment by a mortgagor to a stranger of the existence of the debt secured by the mortgage, without an express promise to pay the debt, will not prevent the bar of the statute; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354, 30 Pac. 609.

A mere request by a defendant not to sue will not prevent him from taking advantage of the statute later; Brown v. R. Co., 147 N. C. 217, 60 S. E. 985; and giving a note for interest upon a prior note already barred by the statute does not revive it; Kleis v. McGrath, 127 Ia. 459, 103 N. W. 371, 69 L. R. A. 260, 109 Am. St. Rep. 396. The bar of the statute is not removed on a quantum meruit for services where a legacy recites that it is given in consideration for such services, such legacy being a mere bounty and not an acknowledgment of a debt; McNeal v. Pierce, 73 Ohio 7, 75 N. E. 938, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117, 112 Am. St. Rep. 695, 4 Ann. Cas. 71. Under a statute requiring a new promise to be in writing it was held that where a receiver of a bank orally promises a creditor that he would not plead the statute if the creditor would refrain from bringing suit, it would prevent the running of the statute of limitation since the defendant was estopped from pleading it; Bridges v. Stephens, 132 Mo. 524, 34 S. W. 555.

If there is any thing said to repel the inference of a promise, or inconsistent therewith, the statute will not be avoided; Moore v. Bank, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 86, 8 L. Ed. 329; Thayer v. Mills, 14 Me. 300. A promise to pay is implied from an acknowledgment of a debt as an existing debt; Custy v. Donlan, 159 Mass. 245, 34 N. E. 360, 38 Am. St. Rep. 419; but it is held that a mere acknowledgment is insufficient; Wood v. Merrietta, 63 Kan. 748, 71 Pac. 579; Lambert v. Doyle, 117 Ga. 81, 43 S. E. 416.

"The account is due, and I supposed it had been paid, but did not know of its being ever paid," is no new promise; Clementson v. Williams, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 72, 3 L. Ed. 491.

If the debtor admits that the debt is due, but intimates his purpose to avail himself of the bar of the statute, the acknowledgment is insufficient; Sanford v. Clark, 29 Conn. 457. So if he says he will pay if he owes, but denies that he owes; Perley v. Little, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 97; Bangs v. Hall, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 368, 13 Am. Dec. 437; Meyer v. Andrews, 70 Tex. 327, 7 S. W. 814. So if he states his inability to pay; Barnard v. Bartholomew, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 291; Manning v. Wheeler, 13 N. H. 486. So if he admits the claim to have been once due, but claims that it is paid by an account against the claimant; Marshall v. Dalliber, 5 Conn. 480; Belknap v. Gleason, 11 Conn. 160, 27 Am. Dec. 721.

"I am too unwell to settle now; when I am better, I will settle your account;" held insufficient; Aylett's Ex'r v. Robinson, 9 Leigh (Va.) 45. So of an offer to pay a part in order to get the claim out of the hands of the creditor; Cohen v. Aubin, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 283; and of an admission that the account is right; Ditto v. Ditto's Adm'rs, 4 Dana (Ky.) 505. An indorsement on a note dated the day before it would outlaw, that "the within note shall not be outlawed," written and signed by the party thereto, will take it out of the statute; In re Estate of King, 94 Mich. 411, 54 N. W. 178; Bacchus v. Peters, 85 Tenn. 678, 4 S. W. 833. Letters which merely acknowledge an indebtedness, but do not refer to any particular account, or mention the amount of the debt, and which are not written to serve as an acknowledgment, are not sufficient; Allen v. Hillman, 69 Miss. 225, 13 South. 871.

If the new promise is subject to conditions or qualifications, is indefinite as to time or amount, or as to the debt referred to, or in any other way limited or contingent, the plaintiff will be held to bring himself strictly within the terms of the promise, and to show that the condition has been performed, or the contingency happened, and that he is not excluded by any limitation, qualification, or uncertainty; Wetzell v. Bussard, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 309, 6 L. Ed. 481; Sands v. Gelston, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 511; 3 Hare 299; Shown v. Hawkins, 85 Tenn. 214, 2 S. W. 34. If the promise be to pay when able, the ability must be proved by the plaintiff; 4 Esp. 36; Manning v. Wheeler, 13 N. H. 486; Sherman v. Wakeman, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 254. But see Cummings v. Gassett, 19 Vt. 308; Sennott v. Horner, 30 Ill. 429; Cocks v. Weeks, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 45; Bulloch v. Smith, 15 Ga. 395; Shown v. Hawkins, 85 Tenn. 214, 2 S. W. 34; Lange v. Caruthers, 70 Tex. 718, 8 S. W. 604. So if it be to pay as soon as convenient, the convenience must be proved; 2 Cr. & M.; or, "if E will say that I have had the timber," the condition must be complied with; Robbins v. Otis, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 370.

And if there be a promise to pay in specific articles, the plaintiff must show that he offered to accept them; Bush v. Barnard, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 407. The vote of a town to appoint a committee to "settle the dispute" was held to be a conditional promise, requiring, to give it force as against the statute, proof that the committee reported something due; Fiske v. Inhabitants of Needham, 11 Mass. 452. If the original promise be conditional, and the new promise absolute, the latter will not alter the former; Lonsdale v. Brown, 3 Wash. C. C. 404, Fed. Cas. No. 8,492. But where the promise by A was to pay if the debtor could not prove that B had paid it, it was held that the onus was upon A to prove that B had paid it; Richmond v. Fugua, 33 N. C. 445. The offer must be accepted altogether or rejected altogether. The liability of the defendant is to be tried by the test he has himself prescribed; Dean v. Pitts, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 35.

It must appear clearly that the promise is made with reference to the particular demand in suit; Moore v. Bank, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 86, 8 L. Ed. 329; Martin v. Broach, 6 Ga. 21, 50 Am. Dec. 306; Arey v. Stephenson, 33 N. C. 86; though a general admission would seem to be sufficient, unless the defendant show that there were other demands between the parties; Gibson v. Grosvenor, 4 Gray (Mass.) 606; Huff v. Richardson, 19 Pa. 388; Buckingham v. Smith, 23 Conn. 453. If the admission be broad enough to cover the debt in suit, according to some authorities, the plaintiff can prove the amount really due aliunde. But the authorities are not at one on this point; 12 C. & P. 104; Eastman v. Walker, 6 N. H. 367; Barnard v. Wyllis, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 291; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 351, 7 L. Ed. 174; Sutton v. Burruss, 9 Leigh (Va.) 381, 33 Am. Dec. 246; Shitler v. Bremer, 23 Pa. 413.

Part payment of a debt is evidence of a new promise to pay the remainder; Carshore v. Huyck, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 583; Blaskower v. Steel, 23 Or. 106, 31 Pac. 253. It is, however, but prima facie evidence, and may be rebutted by other evidence; Aldrich v. Morse, 28 Vt. 642; White v. Jordan, 27 Me. 370; Jewett v. Petit, 4 Mich. 508; L. R. 7 Q. B. 493; U. S. v. Wilder, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 20 L. Ed. 681; Harper v. Fairley, 53 N. Y. 442; Davidson v. Harrisson, 33 Miss. 41. The payment must be voluntary and made with the intent that it should be applied upon the debt; Austin v. McClure, 60 Vt. 453, 15 Atl. 161. Payment of the interest has the same effect as payment of part of the principal; 8 Bingh. 309; Barron v. Kennedy, 17 Cal. 574; Town of Huntington v. Chesmore, 60 Vt. 566, 15 Atl. 173. And the giving a note for part of a debt; Ilsley v. Jewett, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 168; Pracht v. McNee, 40 Kan. 1, 18 Pac. 925; or for accrued interest, is payment; Wenman v. Ins. Co., 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 28 Am. Dec. 464; Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 553; and so is a second mortgage given as payment of interest on the first mortgage; Blair v. Carpenter, 75 Mich. 167, 42 N. W. 790; and so is the credit of interest in an account stated; Smith v. Ludlow, 6 Johns. 267; and the delivery of goods on account; 4 Ad. & E. 71; Sibley v. Lumbert, 30 Me. 253; Randon v. Toby, 11 How. (U. S.) 493, 13 L. Ed. 784. But the payment of a dividend by the assignee of an insolvent debtor is no new promise to pay the remainder; Stoddard v. Doane, 7 Gray (Mass.) 387; 6 E. L. & Eq. 520; and it has been held by respectable authorities that new part payment is no new promise, but that in order to take the case out of the statute, the payment must be made on account of a sum admitted to be due, accompanied with a promise to pay the remainder; 6 M. & W. 824; Smith v. Westmoreland, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 663; Roscoe v. Hale, 7 Gray (Mass.) 274. Payments of part of the sum sued for do not take the case out of the statute, when the evidence does not show that at the time of such payment, the party knew that he owed the sum in suit and the payments were apparently made on account of bills that accrued after the accrual of the debt in suit; Crow v. Gleason, 141 N. Y. 489, 36 N. E. 497. And a payment intended to cover the whole amount due is ineffectual as part payment to defeat the operation of the statute; Compton v. Bowns, 5 Misc. 213, 25 N. Y. Supp. 465.

Part payment upon a mortgage debt will extend the limitation period for actions upon the mortgage as well as upon the debt; Hughes v. Thomas, 131 Wis. 315, 111 N. W. 474, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 11 Ann. Cas. 673. Where stock is assigned as collateral security to the payee of a note, dividends thereon if applied are payments on the debt and will stay the running of the statute; Bosler v. McShane, 78 Neb. 86, 110 N. W. 726, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032; but payment of taxes on a mortgage does not prevent the running of a statute, nor is the mortgagor estopped from so pleading; Snyder v. Miller, 71 Kan. 410, 80 Pac. 970, 69 L. R. A. 250, 114 Am. St. Rep. 489.

Part payment by a surety in the presence of his principal, and without dissent, is payment by the principal; Whipple v. Stevens, 22 N. H. 219; but part payment by the surety after the statute has barred the debt, is not a new promise to pay the other part; Emmons v. Overton, 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 643. A payment by the maker of a note cannot be relied on to take the note out of the statute as to the surety; Davis v. Mann, 43 Ill. App. 301. A general payment on account of a debt for which several notes were given, without direction as to the application of the payment, may be applied by the creditor to either of the notes, so as to take the note to which the payment is applied out of the statute; but the payment cannot be apportioned to the several notes with the same effect; Ayer v. Hawkins, 19 Vt. 26; 31 E. L. & Eq. 55; Pond v. Williams, 1 Gray (Mass.) 630. With respect to promissory notes and bonds, the general proof of part payment or of interest is the indorsement thereon; 1 Ad. & E. 102; Hathaway v. Haskell, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 42; Roseboom v. Billington, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 182. But it must be made bona fide, and with the privity of the debtor; 2 Campb. 321; Read v. Hurd, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 408; President, etc., of Village Bank v. Arnold, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 587.

The payment may be made to an agent, or even a stranger not authorized to receive it, but erroneously supposed to be authorized. It is as much an admission of the debt as if made to the principal himself; 1 Bingh. 480; 10 B. & C. 122. And so with reference to acknowledgments or new promises; Whitney v. Bigelow, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 110; Howe v. Thompson, 11 Me. 152; Philips v. Peters, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 351; Palmer v. Butler, 36 Ia. 576; Keener v. Crull, 19 Ill. 189. And the weight of authority is in favor of the rule that part payment of a witnessed note or bond will avoid the statute; Estes v. Blake, 30 Me. 164; Craig v. Callaway County Court, 12 Mo. 94; Armistead v. Brooke, 18 Ark. 521. Whether the new promise or payment, if made after the debt is barred by the statute, will remove the bar, is also a mooted point, the weight of authority perhaps being in favor of the negative; Sigourney v. Drury, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 387; Deshler v. Cabiness, 10 Ala. 959; Davidson v. Morris, 5 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 564; Van Keuren v. Parmelee, 2 N. Y. 523, 51 Am. Dec. 322; Mason v. Howell, 14 Ark. 199. In Ohio it is so, by statute; Hill v. Henry, 17 Ohio 9. For the affirmative, see Wheelock, Son & Co. v. Doolittle, 18 Vt. 440, 46 Am. Dec. 163; Walton v. Robinson's Adm'r, 27 N. C. 341; Hays v. Cage, 2 Tex. 501; Hunter v. Starkes, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 656; Yaw v. Kerr, 47 Pa. 333; Carshore v. Huyck, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 583.

It was long held that an acknowledgment or part payment by one of several joint-contractors would take the claim out of the statute as to the other joint-contractors; Steph. Ev. § 17; 2 Greenl. Ev. 438; 2 H. Bla. 340; and such is the law in some parts of the Union; Frye v. Barker, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 382; Noyes v. Cushman, 25 Vt. 390; Caldwell v. Sigourney, 19 Conn. 37; Turner v. Ross, 1 R. I. 88; Winchell v. Hicks, 18 N. Y. 559; contra, Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 351, 7 L. Ed. 174; Exeter Bank v. Sullivan, 6 N. H. 124; Belote's Ex'rs v. Wynne, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 534; Levy v. Cadet, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 126, 17 Am. Dec. 650; Myatts v. Bell, 41 Ala. 222.

An acknowledgment or part payment made by an agent acting within the scope of his authority is, upon the familiar maxim, qui facit per alium facit per se, an acknowledgment or part payment by the principal; see Tayl. Ev. 606; and hence if a partner has been appointed specially to settle the affairs of a dissolved partnership, his acknowledgment or part payment by virtue of his authority as such agent will take the claim out of the statute; Smith v. Ludlow, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 267; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 351, 7 L. Ed. 174; as will part payment by a partner without special authority; Harding v. Butler, 156 Mass. 34, 30 N. E. 168. A written acknowledgment to take a barred demand out of the statute must be made to the creditor or his agent, and it must be made with knowledge of his agency; Williamson v. Williamson, 50 Mo. App. 194. And the wife may be such agent as to a claim for goods sold to her during the absence of her husband; 3 Bing. 119; but a wife during coverture, not made specially or by implication of law an agent, cannot make a new promise effectual to take a claim to which she was a party dum sola out of the statute; 1 B. & C. 248; Farrar v. Bessey, 24 Vt. 89; not even though the coverture be removed before the expiration of six years after the alleged promise; Kline v. Guthart, 2 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 490.

Nor is the husband an agent for the wife for such a purpose; Powers v. Southgate, 15 Vt. 471, 40 Am. Dec. 691; but he is an agent for the wife, payee of a note given to her dum sola, to whom a new promise or part payment may be made; 6 Q. B. 937; nor is the widow of the maker of notes, although she made payments before the cause of action was barred; Gallagher v. Whalen, 9 S. W. 390, 701, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 458. So a new promise to an executor or administrator is sufficient; Baxter v. Penniman, 8 Mass. 134; Peck v. Botsford, 7 Conn. 179, 18 Am. Dec. 92; and the weight of authority seems to be in favor of the binding force of a promise or part payment made by an executor or administrator; Foster v. Starkey, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 324; Hall v. Darrington, 9 Ala. 502; Griffin v. Justices of the Inferior Court of Baker County, 17 Ga. 96; Semmes v. Magruder, 10 Md. 242; particularly if the promise be express; Johnson v. Beardslee, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 3; Oakes v. Mitchell, 15 Me. 360; Shreve v. Joyce, 36 N. J. L. 44, 13 Am. Rep. 417. But see contra, Riser v. Snoddy, 7 Ind. 442, 65 Am. Dec. 740; Miller v. Dorsey, 9 Md. 317; Moore v. Hillebrant, 14 Tex. 312, 65 Am. Dec. 118; Clark v. Maguire's Adm'x, 35 Pa. 259; Henderson v. Ilsley, 11 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 9, 49 Am. Dec. 41; Peck v. Botsford, 7 Conn. 172, 18 Am. Dec. 92. A promise by the life tenant to pay taxes may be relied upon as against a remainderman, to remove the bar of the statute; Duvall v. Perkins, 77 Md. 582, 26 Atl. 1085.

To put an end to all litigation in England as to the effect of a new promise or acknowledgment, it was enacted by stat. 9, Geo. IV. c. 14, commonly known as Lord Tenterden's Act, that the new promise or acknowledgment by words only, in order to be effectual to take a case out of the statute of limitations, should be in writing, signed by the party chargeable thereby; and this statute has been substantially adopted by most of the states in this country. This statute affects merely the mode of proof. The same effect is to be given to the words reduced to writing as would, before the passage of the statute, have been given to them when proved by oral testimony; 7 Bingh. 163. See Pittman v. Elder, 76 Ga. 371. If part payment is alleged, "words only," admitting the fact of payment, though not in writing, are admissible to strengthen the proof of the fact of payment; 2 Gale & D. 59.

In construing these statutes it has been held that the return, under citation, by an administrator of the maker of a note, showing the note as one of his intestate's debts, is in writing within the meaning of this statute; 12 Sim. 17; and so is the entry by an insolvent debtor of the debt in his schedule of liabilities; Woodbridge v. Allen, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 470. It was held in the last case that the mere entry was not in itself a sufficient acknowledgment, but being in writing, within the meaning of the statute, it might be used with other written evidence to prove a new promise. But the making one note and tendering it in payment of another is not a new promise in writing; Smith v. Eastman, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 355; not even if the note be delivered, if it be redelivered to the maker for the purpose of restoring matters between the parties to the state they were in before the note was given; Sumner v. Sumner, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 394. An entry in a ledger of a balance due the owner's wife, made by the husband or under his direction, is such an admission that the amount is due as will raise an implied promise to pay the same and will bar the statute; Coulson v. Hartz, 47 Ill. App. 20; but see Adams v. Olin, 140 N. Y. 150, 35 N. E. 448.

A and B had an unsettled account. In 1845, A signed the following: "It is agreed that B, in his general account, shall give credit to A for £10, for books delivered in 1834." Held, no acknowledgment in writing, so as to give B a right to an account against A's estate more than six years before A's death; 35 E. L. & Eq. 195. The writing must be signed by the party himself. The signature of the husband's name by the wife, though at his request, is not a signing by the party to be charged; 2 Bingh. N. C. 776. Nor is the signature by a clerk sufficient; 8 Scott 147. Nor is a promise in the handwriting of the defendant sufficient; it must be signed by him; 12 Ad. & E. 493. And a request by the defendant to the plaintiff to get certain moneys due the defendant from third parties, does not charge the party making the request, because it is not apparent that the defendant intended to render himself personally liable; 5 C. & P. 209. Since this statute, mutual accounts will not be taken out of the operation of the statute by any item on either side, unless the item be the subject of a new promise in writing; 2 Cr. M. & R. 45; Chace v. Trafford, 116 Mass. 529, 17 Am. Rep. 171. The effect of part payment is left by the statute as before; 10 B. & C. 122. And the fact of part payment, it is now held, contrary to some earlier cases, may be proved by unsigned written evidence; 4 E. L. & Eq. 514; or by oral testimony; Williams v. Gridley, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 482.

As to Real Property and Rights. The general if not universal limitation of the right to bring an action or to make entry, is to twenty or twenty-one years after the right to enter or to bring the action accrues, i. e. to twenty or twenty-one years after the cause of action accrues. As the rights and interests of different parties in real property are various, and attach at different periods, and successively, it follows that there may be a right of entry in a particular person, accruing after the expiration of antecedent rights at a period from the beginning of the adverse possession, much exceeding twenty or twenty-one years.

Thus, if an estate be limited to one in tail, and the tenant in tail be barred of his remedy by the statute, yet, as the statute only affects the remedy, and the right or estate still exists, the right of entry in the remainder man does not accrue until the failure of the issue of the tenant in tail, which may not happen for many years. The estate still existing in the tenant in tail or his issue supports and keeps alive the remainder man's right of action till the expiration of twenty years after his right of entry accrues; 1 Burr. 60; Lessee of Hall v. Vandegrift, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 374; 5 Bro. P. C. 689.

The laches of the owner of a prior right in an estate cannot prejudice the owner of a subsequently accruing right in the same estate; Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 390; 3 Cruise, Dig. 403; 2 Stark. Ev. 887. And where there exist two distinct rights of entry in the same person, he may claim under either. He is not obliged to enter under his earlier right; 5 C. & P. 563; Gwynn v. Jones' Lessee, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 173.

Where it is necessary to prove that an actual entry has been made upon the land within a certain time before bringing suit, such entry must be proved to have been made upon the land in question; Robison v. Sweet, 3 Me. 316; Shearman v. Irvine, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 367, 2 L. Ed. 649; Harbaugh v. Moore, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 283; unless prevented by force or fraud, when a bona fide attempt is equivalent; Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 390. If the land lie in two counties, there must be an entry in each county; though if the land be all in one county an entry upon part, with a declaration of claim to the whole, is sufficient; Co. Litt. 419; Jackson v. Lunn, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 115. The intention to claim the land is essential to the sufficiency of the entry; and whether this intention has existed is to be left in each case to the jury; Holtzapple v. Phillibaum, 4 Wash. C. C. 367, Fed. Cas. No. 6,648; Dillon v. Mattox; 21 Ga. 113; Doe v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 364. An entry may be made by the guardian for his ward, by the remainder man or reversioner for the tenant, and the tenant for the reversioner or remainder man, being parties having privity of estate; 9 Co. 106; McMasters v. Bell, 2 Pen. & W. Pa. 180. So a cestui que trust may enter for his trustee; 1 Ld. Raym. 716; and an agent for his principal; Ingersoll v. Lewis, 11 Pa. 212, 51 Am. Dec. 536; even without original authority, if the act be adopted and ratified; Hinman v. Cranmar, 9 Pa. 40. And the entry of one joint-tenant, coparcener, or tenant in common will inure to the benefit of the other; Watson v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 296, 36 Am. Dec. 176.

Adverse possession for the necessary statutory period gives title against the true owner; but it must be open, uninterrupted, and with intent to claim against the true owner. The possession must be an actual occupation, so open that the true owner ought to know it and must be presumed to know it, and in such manner and under such circumstances as amount to an invasion of his rights, thereby giving him cause of action; Abell v. Harris, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 371; Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 438, 8 L. Ed. 170; Somerville v. Hamilton, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 230, 4 L. Ed. 558; in Pennsylvania this rule has been announced with special distinctness. "The owner of land," says the supreme court in Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 341, "can only be barred by such possession as has been actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile or adverse." See Paldi v. Paldi, 95 Mich. 410, 54 N. W. 903; Murray v. Hoyle, 97 Ala. 588, 11 South. 797; Sharon v. Tucker, 144 U. S. 533, 12 Sup. Ct. 720, 36 L. Ed. 532; Evans v. Templeton, 69 Tex. 375, 6 S. W. 843, 5 Am. St. Rep. 71; Gildehaus v. Whiting, 39 Kan. 706, 18 Pac. 916; Haffendorfer v. Gault, 84 Ky. 124; Colvin v. Land Ass'n, 23 Neb. 75, 36 N. W. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 114.

Adverse and exclusive occupation for the statutory period of a railroad's right of way does not prevail against the railroad since it is for a public purpose and the statute does not run against it; Southern Pac. Co. v.

Title by adverse possession for a period such as is required by statute to bar an action is a fee simple title, and is as effective as any otherwise acquired; Cox v. Cox, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 1. See Sharon v. Tucker, 144 U. S. 533, 12 Sup. Ct. 720, 36 L. Ed. 532.

A possession not actual, but constructive, not exclusive, but in participation with the owner or others, falls short of that kind of adverse possession which deprives the true owner of his title; Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. 230, 37 L. Ed. 1195.

Adverse possession must be open, so that the owner may know it or might know of it. Many acts of occupation would be unequivocal, such as fencing the land or erecting a house on it; Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 402, 8 L. Ed. 170; Tourtelotte v. Pearce, 27 Neb. 57, 42 N. W. 915; actual improvement and cultivation of the soil; Brandt v. Ogden, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 156; building on land and putting a fence around it; Poignard v. Smith, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 172; digging stones and cutting timber from time to time; 14 East 332; Boaz v. Heister, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 21; driving piles into the soil covered by a mill-pond, and thereon erecting a building; Boston Mill Corp. v. Bulfinch, 6 Mass. 229, 4 Am. Dec. 120; cutting roads into a swamp, and cutting trees and making shingles therefrom; Tredwell v. Reddick, 23 N. C. 56; and setting fish-traps in a non-navigable stream, building dams across it, and using it every year during the entire fishing-season for the purpose of catching fish; Williams v. Buchanan, 23 N. C. 535, 35 Am. Dec. 760. But entering upon uninclosed flats, when covered by the tide, and sailing over them with a boat or vessel for the ordinary purposes of navigation, is not an adverse possession; Drake v. Curtis, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 395; though the filling up the flats, and building a wharf there, and using the same, would be if the use were exclusive; Wheeler v. Stone, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 313; McFarlane v. Kerr, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 249; nor is the entering upon a lot and marking its boundaries by splitting the trees; Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101; nor the getting rails and other timber for a few weeks each year from timberland; Bartlett v. Simmons, 49 N. C. 295; nor the overflowing of land by the stoppage of a stream; Green v. Harman, 15 N. C. 158; nor the survey, allotment, and conveyance of a piece of land, and the recording of the deed; unless there is open occupation; Thayer v. McLellan, 23 Me. 417. As a rule the nature of the acts necessary to constitute adverse possession varies with the region and character of the ground. If the latter is uncultivated and the region sparsely populated, much less unequivocal acts are necessary on the part of the adverse holder.

It must be continuous for the whole period. If one trespasser enters and leaves, and then another trespasser, a stranger to the former and without purchase from or respect to him, enters, the possession is not continuous; Schrack v. Zubler, 34 Pa. 38; Christy v. Alford, 17 How. (U. S.) 601, 15 L. Ed. 256; Stout v. Taul, 71 Tex. 438, 9 S. W. 329. But a slight connection of the latter with the former trespasser, as by a purchase by parol contract, will be sufficient to give the possession continuity; Cunningham v. Patton, 6 Pa. 355; 1 Term 448. And so will a purchase at a sale or execution; Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. 126; Cleveland Ins. Co. v. Reed, 24 How. (U. S.) 284, 16 L. Ed. 686. To give continuity to the possession by successive occupants, there must be privity of estate; Melvin v. Proprietors of Locks and Canals, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 15, 38 Am. Dec. 384; Ang. Lim. § 414; and such a privity that each possession may be referred to one and the same entry; as that of a tenant to his landlord, or of the heir of a disseisor to his ancestor; King v. Smith, 1 Rice (S. C.) 10. It is not essential that one and the same person shall have been all the while the adverse holder, if the latter succeeds to the asserted rights of the preceding holders or occupants as grantee or transferee; Black v. Coke Co., 85 Ala. 504, 5 South. 89.

An administrator's possession may be connected with that of his intestate; Moffitt v. McDonald, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 457; and that of a tenant holding under the ancestor, with that of the heir; Williams v. McAliley, Cheves (S. C.) 200. In some states, however, it is held that whether the possession be held uniformly under one title, or at different times under different titles, can make no difference, provided the claim of title is always adverse; as in Connecticut; Fanning v. Willcox, 3 Day (Conn.) 258; and in Kentucky; Shannon v. Kinney, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 4, 10 Am. Dec. 705.

The possession must be adverse. If it be permissive; 2 Jac. & W. 1; or by mistake; Comegys v. Carley, 3 Watts (Pa.) 280, 27 Am. Dec. 356; or unintentional; Burrell v. Burrell, 11 Mass. 296; or confessedly in subordination to another's right; 5 B. & Ald. 223; Kirk v. Smith, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 241, 6 L. Ed. 81; Jackson v. Denison, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 558; Dikeman v. Parrish, 6 Pa. 210, 47 Am. Dec. 455; it does not avail to bar the statute. The possession of a life tenant and those claiming under him, or subject to his control, is not adverse to those entitled in remainder; Austin v. Brown, 37 W. Va. 634, 17 S. E. 207. If the occupation is such and by such a person that it may be for the true owner, it will be presumed to be for him, unless it be shown that the adverse claimant gave notice that he held adversely and not in subordination; 1 Batt. Ch. 373; 5 Burr. 2604. And this notice must be clear and unequivocal. If the act of the tenant or adverse claimant may be a trespass as well as a disseisin, the true owner may elect which he will consider it, regardless of the wishes of the trespasser, who cannot be allowed to qualify his own wrong; 1 Burr. 60; Proprietors of Tp. No. 6 v. McFarland, 12 Mass. 325; Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mas. 329, Fed. Cas. No. 11,390. So that if the adverse claimant sets up his trespasses as amounting to adverse possession, the owner may reply they are no disseisin, but trespasses only; while, on the other hand, the true owner may elect, if he please, for the sake of his remedy, to treat them as a disseisin; Bryant v. Tucker, 19 Me. 383. This is called a disseisin by election, in distinction from a disseisin in fact,—a distinction which was taken for the benefit of the owner of the land. Whenever the act done of itself necessarily works an actual disseisin, it is a disseisin in fact: as, when a tenant for years or at will conveys in fee. On the other hand, those acts which are susceptible of being made a disseisin by election are no disseisin till the election of the owner makes them so; Jackson v. Rogers, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36.

Evidence of adverse possession must be strictly construed and every presumption is in favor of the true owner; Fairfield v. Barrette, 73 Wis. 463, 41 N. W. 624. The statute does not begin to run in favor of the possession of public land until the title passes from the United States; Cummings v. Powell, 97 Mo. 524, 10 S. W. 819; Skipwith v. Martin, 50 Ark. 141, 6 S. W. 514; there is no adverse possession against the state; Hurst v. Dulany, 84 Va. 701, 5 S. E. 802.

The claim by adverse possession must have some definite boundaries; Munshower v. Patton, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 334, 13 Am. Dec. 678; Hapgood v. Burt, 4 Vt. 155. There ought to be something to indicate to what extent the adverse possessor claims. A sufficient inclosure will establish the limits, without actual continued residence on the land; Johnston v. Irvin, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 291; Brown v. Porter, 10 Mass. 93. But it must be an actual, visible, and substantial inclosure; Smith v. Hosmer, 7 N. H. 436, 28 Am. Dec. 354. An inclosure on three sides, by a trespasser as against the real owner, is not enough; Dennett v. Crocker, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 239; Armstrong v. Risteau's Lessee, 5 Md. 256, 59 Am. Dec. 115; nor is an unsubstantial brush fence; Hale v. Glidden, 10 N. H. 397; nor one formed by the lapping of fallen trees; Coburn v. Hollis, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 125; Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 230. Natural barriers may be a sufficient inclosure; Goodwin v. McCabe, 75 Cal. 584, 17 Pac. 705. And where the claim is by possession only, without any color or pretence of title, it cannot extend beyond the actual limits of the inclosure; Watrous v. Southworth, 5 Conn. 305; Hatch v. R. Co., 28 Vt. 142; Bell v. Longworth, 6 Ind. 273. And this must be fixed, not roving from part to part; Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 53, 9 L. Ed. 624. Possession and occupancy of land not enclosed by a fence may be adverse; Beecher v. Galvin, 71 Mich. 391, 39 N. W. 469.

Extension of the inclosure within the time limited will not give title to the part included in the extension; Hall v. Gitting's Lessee, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 391. Where, however, the claim rests upon color of title as well as possession, the possession will be regarded as coextensive with the powers described in the title-deed; Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 41, 9 L. Ed. 624; Bynum v. Thompson, 25 N. C. 578; Webb v. Sturtevant, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 181; Jackson v. Smith, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 406; Proprietors of Kennebeck Purchase v. Springer, 4 Mass. 416, 3 Am. Dec. 227; Kile v. Tubbs, 23 Cal. 431; unless the acts or declarations of the occupant restrict it. But the constructive possession of land arising from color of title cannot be extended to that part of it whereof there is no actual adverse possession; Beaupland v. McKeen, 28 Pa. 124, 70 Am. Dec. 115; Franklin Academy v. Hall, 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 472; nor will a subsequent conflicting possession, whether under color of title or not, be extended by construction beyond the limits of the actual adverse possession for the purpose of defeating a prior constructive possession; Jackson v. Vermilyea, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 677; Ralph v. Bayley, 11 Vt. 521. Nor can there be any constructive adverse possession against the owner when there has been no actual possession which he could treat as a trespass and bring suit for; Steedman v. Hilliard, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 101. A trespasser who afterwards obtains color of title can claim constructively only from the time when the title was obtained; Jackson v. Thomas, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 293. If one by mistake enclose the land of another, and claim it as his own to certain fixed monuments or boundaries, his actual and uninterrupted possession as owner for the statutory period will work a disseisin, and his title will be perfect; Levy v. Yerga, 25 Neb. 764, 41 N. W. 773, 13 Am. St. Rep. 525; White v. Spreckels, 75 Cal. 610, 17 Pac. 715; Erck v. Church, 87 Tenn. 575, 11 S. W. 794, 4 L. R. A. 641.

This doctrine of constructive possession, however, applies only to land taken possession of for the ordinary purpose of cultivation and use, and not to a case where a few acres are taken possession of in an uncultivated township for the mere purpose of thereby gaining title to the entire township; Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388; Jackson v. Woodruff, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 286, 13 Am. Dec. 525.

In fine, with a little relaxation of strictness in the case of wild, remote, and uncultivated lands, the sort of possession necessary to acquire title is adverse, open, public, and notorious, and not clandestine and secret; possession, exclusive, uninterrupted, definite as to boundaries, and fixed as to its locality.

Color of title is anything in writing, however defective, connected with the title, which serves to define the extent of the claim; Lea v. Copper Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 493, 16 L. Ed. 203; Dickenson v. Breeden, 30 Ill. 279; North v. Hammer, 34 Wis. 425; Walls v. Smith, 19 Ga. 8; Swift v. Mulkey, 17 Or. 532, 21 Pac. 871; and it may exist even without writing, if the facts and circumstances show clearly the character and extent of the claim; McClellan v. Kellogg, 17 Ill. 498; Ang. Lim. § 404.

It exists wherever there is a reasonable doubt regarding the validity of an apparent title, whether such doubt arises from the circumstances under which the land is held, the identity of the land conveyed, or the construction of the instrument under which the party in possession claims title; Cameron v. U. S., 148 U. S. 301, 13 Sup. Ct. 595, 37 L. Ed. 459.

A fraudulent deed, if accepted in good faith, gives color of title; Gregg v. Sayre, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 244, 8 L. Ed. 932; so does a defective deed; 4 H. & M'H. 222; Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527, 70 Am. Dec. 473; unless defective in defining the limits of the land; Jackson v. Woodruff, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 276, 13 Am. Dec. 525; so does an improperly executed deed, if the grantor believes he has title thereby; Sumner v. Stevens, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 337; so does a sheriff's deed; Doe v. Roe, 22 Ga. 56; Northrop v. Wright, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 476; and a deed from a collector of taxes; City of Chicago v. Middlebrooke, 143 Ill. 265, 32 N. E. 457; Lantry v. Parker, 37 Neb. 353, 55 N. W. 962; Ward v. Huggins, 7 Wash. 617, 32 Pac. 740, 1015, 36 Pac. 285; Redfield v. Parks, 132 U. S. 239, 10 Sup. Ct. 83, 33 L. Ed. 327; unless defective on its face; Bartlett v. Kauder, 97 Mo. 356, 11 S. W. 67; but see Wilson v. Atkinson, 77 Cal. 485, 20 Pac. 66, 11 Am. St. Rep. 299; and a deed from an attorney who has no authority to convey; Hill's Heirs v. Wilton's Heirs, 6 N. C. 14; Munro v. Merchant, 28 N. Y. 9; and a deed founded on a voidable decree in chancery; Whiteside v. Singleton, Meigs (Tenn.) 207; and a deed, by one tenant in common, of the whole estate, to a third person; 4 D. & B. 54; Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head (Tenn.) 674; and a deed by an infant; 4 D. & B. 289; and a deed made by a husband and wife of the wife's interest in a former husband's estate; Irey v. Markey, 132 Ind. 546, 32 N. E. 309.

So possession, in good faith, under a void grant from the state, gives color of title; Moody v. Fleming, 4 Ga. 115, 48 Am. Dec. 210. And if A purchases under an execution against B, takes a deed, and on the same day conveys to B, though the purchase and conveyance be at the request of B, and no money is paid, B has a colorable title; Tubb v. Williams, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 367. A will gives color of title; but if it has but one subscribing witness, and has never been proved, it does not; Doe v. Sherman, 27 N. C. 711. Nor does the sale by an administrator of the land of his solvent intestate, under a license of the probate court, unless accompanied by a deed from the administrator; Livingston v. Pendergast, 34 N. H. 544. Nor does the sale of property by an intestate to his son, of which the possession is held by the wife, who is administratrix, while the son lives in the family, as against the intestate's creditors; Snodgrass v. Andrews, 30 Miss. 472, 64 Am. Dec. 169. A person taking possession under a judicial sale has color of title, though the judicial proceedings were void; Irey v. Mater, 134 Ind. 238, 33 N. E. 1018; Mullan's Adm'r v. Carper, 37 W. Va. 215, 16 S. E. 527.

If there is no written title, then the possession must be under a bona fide claim to a title existing in another; McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts (Pa.) 72. Thus, if under an agreement for the sale of land the consideration be paid and the purchaser enter, he has color of title; Brown v. King, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 173; Lander v. Rounsaville, 12 Tex. 195; though if the consideration be not paid, or be paid only in part, he has not; Hunter v. Parsons, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 59; Woods v. Dille, 11 Ohio 455; because the fair inference in such case is that the purchaser is in by consent of the grantor, and holds subordinately to him until the payment of the full consideration. There is, in fact, a mutual understanding, and a mutual confidence, amounting to an implied trust; Kirk v. Smith, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 241, 6 L. Ed. 81; Proprietors of Township No. 6 v. McFarland, 12 Mass. 325; Fowke v. Beck, 1 Speer (S. C.) 291.

In New York, a parol gift of land is said not to give color of title; Jackson v. Rogers, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36; but it is at least doubtful if that is the law of New York; Jackson v. Vermilyea, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 677. In a later case it is said that to avoid a deed given by one out of possession, the party in possession must hold adversely, "claiming under a title" and not "under a claim of title"; Fish v. Fish, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 513. In some other states, a parol gift is held to give color of title if accompanied by actual entry and possession. It manifests, equally with a sale, the intent of the donee to enter, and not as tenant; and it equally proves an admission on the part of the donor that the possession is so taken; Clark v. Gilbert, 39 Conn. 98; Rannels v. Rannels, 52 Mo. 108; Magee v. Magee, 37 Miss. 138; Steel v. Johnson, 4 Allen (Mass.) 425; Outcalt v. Ludlow, 32 N. J. L. 239; but see contra, Roe v. Doe, 24 Ga. 494, 17 Am. Dec. 142. The element of good faith, and the actual belief on the part of the claimant that he has title, give the claimant by color of title his advantage over the mere trespasser, who, as we have seen, is restricted carefully to his actual occupation; and it may be said, generally, that whenever the facts and circumstances show that one in possession, in good faith and in the belief that he has title, holds for himself and to the exclusion of all others, his possession must be adverse, and according to his assumed title, whatever may be his relations in point of interest or priority, to others; Jackson v. Porter, 1 Paine 467, Fed. Cas. No. 7,143; Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 41, 9 L. Ed. 624. When a man enters under such a claim of title, his entry on a part is an entry on the whole; but if he claims no such title he has no seisin by his entry but by the ouster of him who was seised, which can only be by the actual and exclusive occupation of the land; Proprietors of the Kennebeck Purchase v. Springer, 4 Mass. 416, 3 Am. Dec. 227.

In cases of mixed possession, or a possession at the same time by two or more persons, each under a separate colorable title, the seisin is in him who has the better or prior title; White v. Burnley, 20 How. (U. S.) 235, 15 L. Ed. 886; Doe v. Butler, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 149; for, though there may be a concurrent possession, there cannot be a concurrent seisin; and, one only being seised, the possession must be adjudged to be in him, because he has the better right; Mather v. Ministers of Trinity Church, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 509, 8 Am. Dec. 663. Of course, in such a case, if one has color of title, and the other is a mere trespasser or intruder, the possession is in him who has color of title; Hall v. Gittings' Lessee, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 112; Hall v. Powel, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 465, 8 Am. Dec. 722. The possession of the true owner must prevail over the claim by constructive possession by one who holds under mere color of title; Anderson v. Jackson, 69 Tex. 346, 6 S. W. 575. No length of possession of one partner of real estate paid for with partnership funds and conveyed to him, bars the other partners; Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 621, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282.

But, with all the liberality shown by the courts in giving color of title, it has been denied that a grant from a foreign government confers it, on the ground that the possession under such a title was rather a question between governments than individuals; Davidson's Lessee v. Beatty, 3 H. & McH. (Md.) 621. Thus, the courts of New York have refused to recognize claims under a grant of the French government in Canada, made prior to the treaty between Great Britain and France in 1763; Jackson v. Ingraham, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 163; as conferring color of title. But the soundness of the exception has since been questioned in the same court; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589, 18 Am. Dec. 463; and the grant of another state has been expressly held to give color of title in Pennsylvania, even as against one claiming under her own grant; Barney v. Sutton, 2 Watts (Pa.) 37. For political reasons, it has been held that a grant from the Indians gives no color of title; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 571, 5 L. Ed. 681; nor does a grant by an Indian in contravention of a statute; Smythe v. Henry, 41 Fed. 705; but a sheriff's deed for land in the Southern Confederacy was held to give color of title; McIntyre v. Thompson, 10 Fed. 531. See COLOR OF TITLE.

One joint-tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener cannot dismiss another but by actual ouster, as the seisin and possession of one are the seisin and possession of all, and inure to the benefit of all; 2 Salk. 422; Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 59, 5 L. Ed. 398; Caperton v. Gregory, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 505; Carothers v. Dunning's Lessee, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 381; McCray v. Humes, 116 Ind. 103, 18 N. E. 500; Northrop v. Marquam, 16 Or. 173, 18 Pac. 449; actual ouster implies exclusion or expulsion. No force is necessary; but there must be a denial of the right of the co-tenant; 5 Burr. 2604; Gilkey v. Peeler, 22 Tex. 663; and, like a grant, after long lapse of time it may be presumed; Parker v. Proprietors of Locks and Canals, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 101, 37 Am. Dec. 121; Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226; and inferred from acts of an unequivocal character importing a denial; Lodge v. Patterson, 3 Watts (Pa.) 77, 27 Am. Dec. 335; Bracket v. Norcross, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 89; Rodney v. McLaughlin, 97 Mo. 426, 9 S. W. 726; Northrop v. Marquam, 16 Or. 173, 18 Pac. 449; Lindley v. Groff, 37 Minn. 338, 34 N. W. 26; Fry v. Payne, 82 Va. 759, 1 S. E. 197; McDowell v. Sutlive, 78 Ga. 142, 2 S. E. 937; Killmer v. Wuchner, 74 Ia. 359, 37 N. W. 778; but the possession of the grantee of one tenant in common is adverse to all; Larman v. Huey's Heirs, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 436; Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 178.

The possession of the tenant is likewise the possession of his landlord, and cannot be adverse unless he distinctly renounce his landlord's title; 2 Campb. 11; Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 43, 7 L. Ed. 596; Shepley v. Lytle, 6 Watts (Pa.) 500; Alderson v. Marshall, 7 Mont. 288, 16 Pac. 576; Brunson v. Morgan, 84 Ala. 598, 4 South. 589; Bedlow v. Dry-Dock Co., 112 N. Y. 263, 19 N. E. 800, 2 L. R. A. 629; Parish Board of School Directors v. Edrington, 40 La. Ann. 633, 4 South. 574.

Mere non-payment of rent during the time limited, there having been no demand, does not prejudice the landlord's right to enter and demand it, even though the lease contains a clause giving the right of reentry in case of non-payment of rent; Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123, 15 Am. Dec. 451; 7 East 299; and payment of rent is conclusive evidence that the occupation of the party paying was permissive and not adverse; 3 B. & C. 135. The defendant in execution after a sale is a quasi tenant at will to the purchaser; and his possession is not therefore adverse; Jackson v. Sternbergh, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 153. And a mere holding over after the expiration of a lease does not change the character of the possession; Gwynn v. Jones' Lessee, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 173; nor does the assignment of the lease, or a sub-letting. The assignee and sub-lessees are still tenants, so far as the title by adverse possession is concerned; Graham v. Moore, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 467; Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 43, 7 L. Ed. 596; Jackson v. Miller, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 751.

If the tenant convey the premises, as we have before seen, the landlord may treat the grantee as a disseisor by election; but the grantee cannot set up the act as the basis of a title by adverse possession; Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123, 15 Am. Dec. 451; unless in the case where the relation of landlord and tenant subsists by operation of law; as where one makes a grant and by the omission of the word "heirs" an estate for life only passes. In such case, after the death of the tenant for life an adverse possession may commence; Jackson v. Harsen, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 323, 17 Am. Dec. 517. So in case the tenant has attorned to a third person and the landlord has assented to the attornment; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. (U. S.) 289, 11 L. Ed. 979; Rabe v. Fyler, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 440, 48 Am. Dec. 763; Rigg v. Cook, 4 Gilm. (Ill.) 336, 46 Am. Dec. 462. But a mere parol disclaimer, by the lessor, of the existence of the relationship, and of all right in the premises, is not equivalent to an attornment. To admit such disclaimer would lead to fraud and perjury, and is in direct violation of the principles of the statute of frauds; Jackson v. Johnson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 74, 15 Am. Dec. 433; but see Satterlee v. Matthewson, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 133.

The possession of one's agent is, within the purview of the statute of limitation, the possession of his principal; Lantry v. Parker, 37 Neb. 353, 55 N. W. 962. See Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508, 13 Sup. Ct. 418, 37 L. Ed. 259.

The possession of the mortgagor is not adverse to the mortgagee (the relation being in many respects analogous to that of landlord and tenant); Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 43, 7 L. Ed. 596; Perkins v. Pitts, 11 Mass. 125; Martin v. Jackson, 27 Pa. 504, 67 Am. Dec. 489; not even if the possession be under an absolute deed, if intended as a mortgage; Babcock v. Wyman, 19 How. (U. S.) 289, 15 L. Ed. 644. The relation of mortgagor and mortgagee is very peculiar and sui generis. It is sometimes like a tenancy for years; Cro. Jac. 659; sometimes like a tenancy at will; Dougl. 275; and sometimes like a tenancy on sufferance; 1 Salk. 245; but, whatever it may be like, it is always presumed to be by permission of the mortgagee until the contrary be shown. The assignee of the mortgagor, with notice, is in the same predicament as the mortgagor; but if he purchase without notice, and particularly if the mortgage be forfeited at the date of his purchase, his possession will be adverse; Martin v. Bowker, 19 Vt. 526; Field v. Wilson, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 479; McNair v. Lot, 34 Mo. 285, 84 Am. Dec. 78; Babcock v. Wyman, 19 How. (U. S.) 289, 15 L. Ed. 644.

But, although the possession of the mortgagor be not adverse so as to give title under the statute against the mortgagee, the courts have nevertheless practically abrogated this rule, by holding that where the mortgagor has held during the statutory limit, and has meantime paid no interest nor otherwise recognized the rights of the mortgagee, this raises a presumption that the debt has been paid, and is a good defence in an action to foreclose; Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 497, 6 L. Ed. 142; Bacon v. McIntire, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 87. And the reasons for so holding seem to be equally cogent with those upon which rests the well-settled rule that, with certain exceptions, the mortgagee's possession for the time limited bars the mortgagor's right to redeem; 2 J. & W. 434; Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 385; Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 489, 6 L. Ed. 142; Lamar v. Jones, 3 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 328; Phillips v. Sinclair, 20 Me. 269.

The exceptions to this rule are—first, where an account has been settled within the limited time; 5 Bro. C. C. 187; Coster v. Murray, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 522; second, where within that time the mortgagee, by words spoken or written, or by deed, has clearly and unequivocally recognized the fact that he held as mortgagee; 1 Sim. & Stu. 347; Marks v. Pell, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 594; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 152, 6 L. Ed. 289; Dexter v. Arnold, 3 Sumn. 160, Fed. Cas. No. 3,859; by which recognition a subsequent purchaser, with actual or constructive notice of the mortgage, is barred; Heyer v. Pruyn, 7 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 465, 34 Am. Dec. 355; third, where no time is fixed for payment, as in the case of a mortgage where the mortgagee is by agreement to enter and hold till he is paid out of the rents and profits; Babcock v. Kennedy, 1 Vt. 457, 18 Am. Dec. 695; fourth, where the mortgagor continues in possession of the whole or of any part of the premises; Sel. Cas. Ch. 55; Marks v. Pell, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 594; Wilson v. Richards, 1 Neb. 342; and, fifth, where there is fraud on the part of the mortgagee, or at the time of the inception of the mortgage he has taken advantage of the necessities of the mortgagor; Marks v. Pell, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 594; 2 Cruise 161.

The trustee of real estate, under an express trust, as well as of personal, as we have seen, holds for his cestui que trust, and the latter is not barred of his right unless it be denied and repudiated by the trustee; in which case the statute will begin to run from the denial or repudiation; Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. (U. S.) 233, 12 L. Ed. 130; Key v. Hughes, 32 W. Va. 184, 9 S. E. 77; Reynolds v. Sumner, 126 Ill. 58, 18 N. E. 334, 1 L. R. A. 327, 9 Am. St. Rep. 523. In cases of implied, constructive, and resulting trusts, the rule is also the same as with reference to personal property. The statute is a bar even in cases where the conduct of the trustee was originally fraudulent; Higginbotham v. Burnet, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 184; 2 Bro. C. C. 438.

Where a trustee who holds the legal title to the trust property, permits his right to bring an ejectment for a certain part thereof to become barred, the beneficiary is also barred; Ewing v. Shannahan, 113 Mo. 188, 20 S. W. 1065.

The lapse of time does not bar a defense resting upon an equitable title and possession; De Guire v. Lead Co., 38 Fed. 65; and staleness of demand cannot be urged against a right to relief in equity where plaintiff has been in continuous possession of the land; Hemphill v. Hemphill, 99 N. C. 436, 6 S. E. 201.

The same general rules as regards persons under disabilities apply in cases of real estate as have already been described as applicable to personalty at the time the right descends or the cause of action accrues, and prevent the running of the statute, till their removal; but only such as existed at that time. When the statute once begins to run, no subsequent disability can stop it; Mercer v. Selden, 1 How. (U. S.) 37, 11 L. Ed. 38; Eager v. Com., 4 Mass. 182; Walden v. Gratz, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 292, 4 L. Ed. 94; Douglas v. Irvine, 126 Pa. 643, 17 Atl. 802; and there is no distinction in this respect between voluntary and involuntary disabilities; 4 Term 301; Fewell v. Collins, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 286. The disability of one joint-tenant, tenant in common, or co-parcener does not inure to the benefit of the other tenants; Jackson v. Sellick, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 262, 265; 2 Taunt. 441; Moore's Lessee v. Armstrong, 10 Ohio 11, 36 Am. Dec. 63; Doe v. Gullatt, 10 Ga. 218; Wade v. Johnson, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 117, 42 Am. Dec. 422.

It is impracticable here to give a compend, or even an analysis, of the different statutes of the several states. Nor, indeed, would such an analysis be of much service because of the frequent revision, changes, and modifications. The state statutes are substantially the same, differing only in details, and all are derived directly or indirectly from the English statutes.

Of Criminal Proceedings. The time within which indictments may be found, or other proceedings commenced, for crimes and offences varies considerably in the different jurisdictions. In general, in all jurisdictions, the length of time is adjusted in some proportion to the gravity of the offence. Indictments for murder, in most, if not all, of the states, may be found at any time during the life of the criminal after the death of the victim. Proceedings for less offences are to be commenced within periods varying from ten years to sixty days. See Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 316.

Although an offence on the face of the indictment is barred, yet the prosecution may prove, without averring it in the indictment, that the defendant, having fled the state, was without the statute. But the better practice is to aver in the indictment the facts relied upon to toll the statute; Blackman v. Com., 23 W. N. C. (Pa.) 464. It is sufficient if he left the district of the offence and was found in another, where he did not reside, under circumstances indicating a purpose to evade the jurisdiction of the court having jurisdiction; Greene v. U. S., 154 Fed. 401, 85 C. C. A. 251.

A criminal statute does not apply to quo warranto which is really a civil proceeding, though criminal in form; High, Extraord. Leg. Rem. § 621.

Of Estates. A description either by express words or by intendment of law of the continuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, marking the period at which the time of enjoyment is to end. Prest. Est. 25.

The definition or circumscription, in any conveyance, of the interest which the grantee is intended to take.

The term is used by different writers in different senses. Thus, it is used by Coke to denote the express definition of an estate by the words of its creation, so that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail; Co. Litt. 23 b. In Sanders on Uses, 68, the term is used, however, in a broader and more general sense, as given in the second definition above. And, indeed, the same writers do not always confine themselves to one use of the term; see Fearne, Cont. Rem. Butler's note n, 9th ed. 10; 1 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 364, 527. For the distinctions between limitations and remainders, see CONDITIONAL LIMITATIONS; CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

In instruments. A limitation in an instrument is a provision that restricts the interest or property one may have in the subject-matter of such instrument. A. & E. Encyc.

A grant to the "heirs" of a living person will be construed as meaning children, if such appears to have been the intention of the grantor; Roberson v. Wampler, 104 Va. 380, 51 S. E. 835, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 318.

LIMITED ADMINISTRATION. An administration of a temporary character, granted for a particular period, or a special or a particular purpose. 1 Wms., Ex., 8th ed. 486.

LIMITED COMPANY. A company in which the liability of each shareholder is limited by the number of shares he has taken, so that he cannot be called on to contribute beyond the amount of his shares. See 1 Lindl. Part. 383; Mozl. & W. Dict.; JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

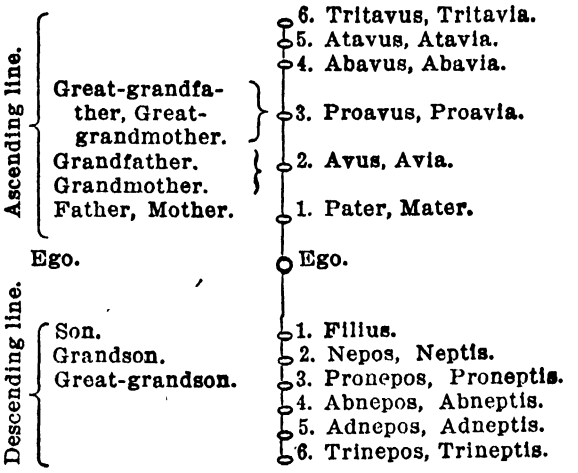
LIMITED LIABILITY. A principle of modern statutory law whereby those interested in a partnership or joint stock company are held liable only to the extent of their own interest in the business. See JOINT STOCK COMPANY; PARTNERSHIP.

The phrase is also used in a less technical and more colloquial sense as applied to restrictions of the liability of certain classes of common carriers, such as steamship, express, or telegraph companies, either by statute or contract.

As to the limited liability of vessel owners, see SHIP; VESSEL; HARTER ACT.

LIMITED OWNER. A tenant for life, in tail, or by the curtesy. The Limited Owner's Residences Acts, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 56 and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 84, enable the tenant for life of a settled estate to charge the estate with the expense of building a mansion house. Whart. Lex.

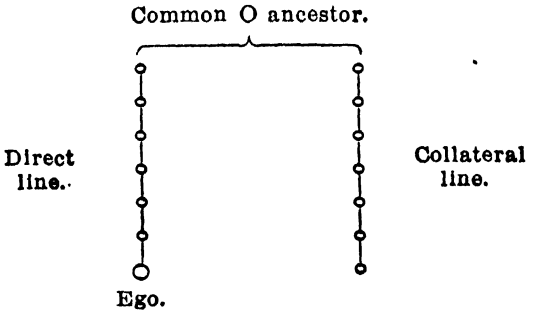
LIMITED PARTNERSHIP. A form of partnership created by statute in many states, wherein the liability of certain special partners, who contribute a specific amount of capital, is limited to the amount so contributed, while the general partners are jointly and severally responsible as in ordinary partnership. All the partners are liable as general partners, unless the statutes upon the subject are strictly, or as some cases say, substantially complied with; Pierce v. Bryant, 5 Allen (Mass.) 91; Holliday v. Paper Co., 3 Colo. 342; Vandike v. Rosskam, 67 Pa. 330; Van Ingen v. Whitman, 62 N. Y. 513. See 1 Lindl. Partn. 383, n., 2d Am. ed. (Ewell) 201, n.; Pars. Part. 424.



One who aids and assists in the organization of a limited partnership cannot thereafter hold the members liable as general partners, upon the ground that such organization was defective; Allegheny Nat. Bank v. Bailey, 147 Pa. 111, 23 Atl. 439.

Such associations under the laws of Pennsylvania may sue or be sued in the partnership name; they have all the essential characteristics of corporations and may sue in the federal court irrespective of the citizenship of the individual members; Youngstown Coke Co. v. Andrews Bros. Co., 79 Fed. 669; Sanitas Nut Food Co. v. Food Co., 124 Fed. 302.

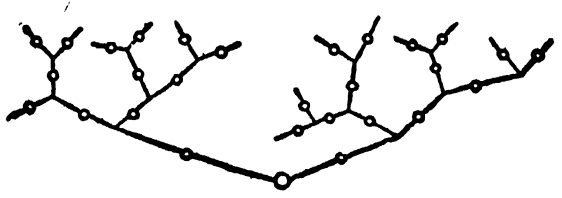
See PARTNERSHIP; JOINT STOCK COMPANY.



LINCOLN'S INN. See INNS OF COURT.

LINE. In Descents. The series of persons who have descended from a common ancestor, placed one under the other, in the order of their birth. It connects successively all the relations by blood to each other. See CONSANGUINITY; DEGREE.

The line is either direct or collateral. The direct line is composed of all the persons who are descended from each other. If, in the direct line, any one person is assumed as the propositus, in order to count from him upwards and downwards, the line will be divided into two parts, the ascending and descending lines. The ascending line is that which, counting from the propositus, ascends to his ancestors, to his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, etc. The descending line is that which, counting from the same person, descends to his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc. The preceding table is an example.



The collateral line, considered by itself and in relation to the common ancestor, is a direct line; it becomes collateral when placed alongside of another line below the common ancestor, in whom both lines unite. For example:

These two lines are independent of each other; they have no connection except by their union in the person of the common ancestor. This reunion is what forms the relation among the persons composing the two lines.

A line is also paternal or maternal. In the examination of a person's ascending line, the line ascends first to his father, next to his paternal grandfather, his paternal great-grandfather, etc., so on from father to father; this is called the paternal line. Another line will be found to ascend from the same person to his mother, his maternal grandmother, and so from mother to mother; this is the maternal line. These lines, however, do not take in all the ascendants; there are many others who must be imagined. The number of ascendants is double at each degree, as is shown by the following diagram:

See 2 Bla. Com. 200, b.; Pothier, Des Successions, c. 1, art. 3, § 2; ASCENDANTS; CONSANGUINITY.

In Real Property Law. The division between two tracts or parcels of land. Limit; border; boundary.

When a line is mentioned in a deed as ending at a particular monument (q. v.), it is to be extended in the direction called for, without regard to distance, till it reaches the boundary; Den v. Green, 9 N. C. 219. See Whitehead v. Ragan, 106 Mo. 231, 17 S. W. 307. And a marked line is to be adhered to although it depart from the course; Newsom v. Pryor, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 7, 5 L. Ed. 382; Thornberry v. Churchill, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 29, 16 Am. Dec. 125. A crooked line is just as much a line as a straight one; Den v. Cubberly, 12 N. J. L. 308. Ordinarily, if a boundary runs to or by the line of an object, the exterior limit of the object is intended; Hamlin v. Mfg. Co., 141 Mass. 56, 6 N. E. 531.

Where a number of persons settle simultaneously or at short intervals in the same neighborhood, and their tracts, if extended in certain directions, would overlap each other, the settlers sometimes by agreement determine upon dividing lines, which are called consentible lines. These lines, when fairly agreed upon, have been sanctioned by the courts; and such agreements are conclusive upon all persons claiming under the parties to them, with notice, but not upon bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice, actual or constructive; Dixon's Ex'rs v. Crist, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 57. See PARALLEL LINES.

Lines fixed by compact between nations are binding on their citizens and subjects; 1 Ves. Sen. 450; 1 Atk. 2; 1 P. Wms. 723; Perkins v. Gay, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 331, 8 Am. Dec. 653. See BOUNDARY.

Measures. A line is a lineal measure, containing the one-twelfth part of an inch.

LINE OF DUTY. Where a statute provides for a pension for disability or death from wound or injury received, casualty occurring, or disease contracted in the line of duty, "the performance of duty must have relation, or causation, or consociation, mediate or immediate, to the wound, injury, casualty, or disease." Opinion of Atty. Gen. Cushing, 2 Dec. Dept. Int. on Pensions 401, where the meaning of the phrase and the whole subject are very fully discussed.

LINES AND CORNERS. In deeds and surveys. Boundary-lines and their angles with each other. Nolin v. Parmer, 21 Ala. 66.

LINEA RECTA (Lat.). The perpendicular line; the direct line. The line of ascent, through father, grandfather, etc., and of descent, through son, grandson, etc. Co. Litt. 10, 158; Bract. fol. 67; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11. This is represented in a diagram by a vertical line.

Where a person springs from another immediately, or mediately through a third person, they are said to be in the direct line (linea recta), and are called ascendants and descendants. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 129.

LINEA TRANSVERSALIS (Lat.). A line crossing the perpendicular lines. See COLLATERAL KINSMAN.

LINEAGE. Race; progeny; family, ascending or descending.

LINEAL. In a direct line.

Lineal descent would be as from father or grandfather to son or grandson. Levy v. McCartee, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 112, 8 L. Ed. 334.

LINEAL WARRANTY. See WARRANTY.

LINEN. A thread or cloth made of flax or hemp. Claflin v. Robertson, 38 Fed. 93. See Richardson v. Lawrence, 1 Blatchf. 501, Fed. Cas. No. 11,785. In an insurance policy where one insures his stock in trade, household furniture, linen, wearing apparel, and plate, linen in the policy is confined to household linen or linen used by way of apparel; 3 Camp. 422. In a bequest the clause "all my clothes and linen" passes body linen only; 3 Bro. C. C. 311. A bequest of "some of my best linen" was held void for uncertainty; 2 P. Wms. 387.

LINK. A single constituent part of a continuous and connected series, as a casual or logical sequence; as a link in a chain of evidence; Stand. Dict.

LIQUIDATE. To pay; to settle, to adjust and gradually extinguish all indebtedness. See Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338, 5 L. Ed. 631.

LIQUIDATED ACCOUNT. One the amount of which is agreed upon by the parties, or fixed by operation of law. Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 321; Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 469.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES. Damages the amount of which has been determined by anticipatory agreement between the parties.

Damages for a specific sum stipulated or agreed upon as part of a contract, as the amount to be paid to a party who alleges and proves a breach of it.

Where there is an agreement between parties for the doing or not doing particular acts, the parties may, if they please, estimate beforehand the damages to result from a breach of the agreement, and prescribe in the agreement itself the sum to be paid by either by way of damages for such breach. See 2 B. & P. 335, 350; 2 Bro. P. C. 431; 4 Burr. 2225. The civil law appears to recognize such stipulations; Inst. 3. 16. 7; Toullier l. 3, n. 800; La. Civ. Code Art. 1928, n. 5; Code Civile 1152, 1153.

The parties may bona fide, where the damages are of an uncertain nature, estimate and agree upon the measure of damages upon a breach. The intention of the parties is arrived at by a proper construction of their agreement. It is the duty of the court, when the damages are uncertain and have been liquidated by agreement, to enforce the contract; Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n v. Moore, 183 U. S. 642, 22 Sup. Ct. 240, 46 L. Ed. 366, a fully considered case. A court will not substitute its judgment for that of the parties; Schell v. Plumb, 55 N. Y. 592.

Such a stipulation on the subject of damages differs from a penalty in this, that the parties are holden by it; whereas a penalty is regarded as a forfeiture, from which the defaulting party can be relieved.

It is settled both at law and in equity that the courts will not go behind an agreement for liquidated damages, but that a penalty is only security for the sum due or damages actually sustained; 1 Sedgw. Dam. § 394. The word penalty in this contradistinction is not used according to its exact definition, but has acquired a settled technical meaning; id. note.

The sum named in an agreement as damages to be paid in case of a breach will, in general, be considered as liquidated damages, or as a penalty, according to the intent of the parties; and the mere use of the words "penalty" or "liquidated damages" will not be decisive of the question, if on the whole the instrument discloses a different intent; 6 B. & C. 216; Maxwell v. Allen, 78 Me. 32, 2 Atl. 386, 57 Am. Rep. 783; Kemp v. Ice Co., 69 N. Y. 45; 4 H. & N. 511; Condon v. Kemper, 47 Kan. 126, 27 Pac. 829, 13 L. R. A. 671; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Reichert, 58 Md. 261; Houghton v. Pattee, 58 N. H. 326; Lansing v. Dodd, 45 N. J. L. 525. See Ward v. Building Co., 125 N. Y. 230, 26 N. E. 256. It has been said, however, that if the parties use the word "penalty," it will control the interpretation of the contract; 3 B. & P. 630; Tayloe v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 13, 5 L. Ed. 384; Colwell v. Lawrence, 38 N. Y. 75; Brewster v. Edgerly, 13 N. H. 275; but in Bagley v. Peddie, 16 N. Y. 469, 69 Am. Dec. 713; the sum named was stated to be "liquidated damages," but was held to be a penalty. Whether the sum mentioned in the agreement to be paid for a breach is to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages is a question of law, to be determined by the court upon a consideration of the whole instrument; 7 C. B. 716. The construction must be the same in law and equity; 5 H. L. C. 105. The tendency of the court is to regard the sum named as a penalty rather than liquidated damages; 2 B. & P. 346; Cushing v. Drew, 97 Mass. 445; yet courts seek to ascertain the intent and are governed by it; id. As to the distinction, see also Jackson v. Baker, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 471, 30 Am. Rep. 28, n.

Such a stipulation in an agreement will be considered as a penalty, in the following cases:

Where the parties in the agreement have expressly declared it or described it as a "penalty," and no other intent is clearly to be deduced from the instrument; 2 B. & P. 340, 350, 630; Tayloe v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 14, 5 L. Ed. 384; Dennis v. Cummins, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 297, 2 Am. Dec. 160; Meyer v. Estes, 164 Mass. 457, 41 N. E. 683, 32 L. R. A. 283.

Where it is doubtful from the language of the instrument whether the stipulation was intended as a penalty or as liquidated damages; 3 C. & P. 240; Bagley v. Peddie, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 192; Low v. Nolte, 16 Ill. 475.

Where the agreement was evidently made for the attainment of another object or purpose, to which the stipulation is wholly collateral; Wood v. Partridge, 11 Mass. 488; 1 Bro. C. C. 418; McCann v. City of Albany, 11 App. Div. 378, 42 N. Y. Supp. 94.

Where the agreement imposes several distinct duties, or obligations of different degrees of importance, and yet the same sum is named as damages for a breach of either indifferently; 7 Scott 364; Bagley v. Peddie, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 192; Wilhelm v. Eaves, 21 Or. 194, 27 Pac. 1053, 14 L. R. A. 297; Trower v. Elder, 77 Ill. 452; Carter v. Strom, 41 Minn. 522, 43 N. W. 394; Lyman v. Babcock, 40 Wis. 503. But see Cotheal v. Talmage, 9 N. Y. 551, 61 Am. Dec. 716; Trower v. Elder, 77 Ill. 452; L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 731; and see 19 Centr. L. J. 282, 302, where many authorities are collected.

Where the agreement is not under seal, and the damages are capable of being certainly known and estimated; 2 B. & Ald. 704; 6 B. & C. 216; Graham v. Bickham, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 150, 1 L. Ed. 778; Spencer v. Tilden, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 144; Squires v. Elwood, 33 Neb. 126, 49 N. W. 939. See Scofield v. Tompkins, 95 Ill. 190, 35 Am. Rep. 160; Grand Tower Min. Mfg. & Transp. Co. v. Phillips, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 471, 23 L. Ed. 71.

Where the instrument provides that a larger sum shall be paid upon default to pay a lesser sum in the manner prescribed; Bagley v. Peddie, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 192;

Beale v. Hayes, id. 640; Peine v. Weber, 47 Ill. 41; Haldeman v. Jennings, 14 Ark. 329; 2 B. & P. 346. This case is said to be considered as settling the doctrine of liquidated damages in England; 1 Sedgw. Dam. § 398; and it is cited approvingly in 6 Ves. 815, and the doctrine applied in 6 Bingh. 141, 147. In the latter case, Tindal, C. J., said, "that a very large sum should become immediately payable in consequence of the non-payment of a very small sum, and that the former should not be considered as a penalty, appears to be a contradiction in terms; the case being precisely that in which courts of equity have always relieved, and against which courts of law have in modern times endeavored to relieve by directing juries to assess the real damages sustained by the breach of the agreement." See also 12 U. C. C. P. 9; White v. Arleth, 1 Bond 319, Fed. Cas. No. 17,536.

So where the stipulation was in respect of a matter certain in value, as the payment of a debt or liquidated money demand, and the sum fixed upon is greater than the debt or demand; L. R. 8 Ch. 1022. If a debt be secured by a stipulation that in case of its not being paid at the appointed time, a larger sum shall become payable, the stipulation for the larger sum is in the nature of a penalty; L. R. 4 H. L. 1; Leake, Contr. 3d ed. 939.

Where a sum named is evidently to evade usury laws or statutory prohibitions, it will be treated as a penalty; Davis v. Freeman, 10 Mich. 188; Clark v. Kay, 26 Ga. 403; but see Gould v. Bishop Hill Colony, 35 Ill. 324.

Where, by a clause in a building contract, the builder, in default of the completion of the work at a certain time, agreed to pay the owner of the property a stipulated sum for every day the building was delayed after that time, it was held to be a penalty and not an agreement to pay liquidated damages; Cochran v. Ry. Co., 113 Mo. 359, 21 S. W. 6; but see Monmouth Park Ass'n v. Iron Works, 55 N. J. L. 132, 26 Atl. 140, 19 L. R. A. 456, 39 Am. St. Rep. 626. Nilson v. Jonesboro, 57 Ark. 168, 20 S. W. 1093.

The plaintiff as well as the defendant may show that a stipulated sum is to be considered a penalty and not liquidated damages, and he may prove the actual damages even if greater than the penalty; Noyes v. Phillips, 60 N. Y. 408.

The stipulation will be sustained as liquidated damages in the following cases:—

Where the agreement is of such a nature that the damages are uncertain, and are not capable of being ascertained by any satisfactory and known rule; 13 M. & W. 702; Leary v. Laflin, 101 Mass. 334; Esmond v. Van Benschoten, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 366; L. R. 15 Eq. 36; Keeble v. Keeble, 85 Ala. 552, 5 South. 149; Tennessee Mfg. Co. v. James, 91 Tenn. 154, 18 S. W. 262, 15 L. R. A. 211, 30 Am. St. Rep. 865; Yenner v. Hammond, 36 Wis. 277; Gobble v. Linder, 76 Ill. 157; Mead v. Wheeler, 13 N. H. 351; Malone v. Philadelphia, 147 Pa. 416, 23 Atl. 628.

Where, under the contract, a deposit is made of a sum to be forfeited in case of default, it will be considered liquidated damages; 21 Ch. Div. 243; Mathews v. Sharp, 99 Pa. 560; Eakin v. Scott, 70 Tex. 442, 7 S. W. 777; but this was held to be so only if the deposit was a part performance and not as security; Chaude v. Shepard, 122 N. Y. 397, 25 N. E. 358.

Under contracts not to carry on a particular business within specified limits of time and place, a sum named to be paid on default is liquidated damages; Stewart v. Bedell, 79 Pa. 336; Johnson v. Gwinn, 100 Ind. 466; 40 Ch. Div. 112; Newman v. Wolfson, 69 Ga. 764; Potter v. Ahrens, 110 Cal. 674, 43 Pac. 388; but not where the contract describes it as a "penalty"; Smith v. Brown, 164 Mass. 584, 42 N. E. 101.

Where, in contracts for government work, provision was made for the retention of percentages, to be forfeited on non-completion, it was treated as a provision for liquidated damages; Satterlee v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cl. 31; and so were such provisions in a building contract; Reichenbach v. Sage, 13 Wash. 364, 43 Pac. 354, 52 Am. St. Rep. 51; and in one for refitting a barge $50 for each day's delay, designated in the contract a "fine," where the fair rental value of the boat was $40 per day; Manistee Iron-Works Co. v. Lumber Co., 92 Wis. 21; 65 N. W. 863; and generally under contracts for the payment of such daily sum upon failure of completion; Standard Button Fastening Co. v. Breed, 163 Mass. 10, 39 N. E. 346; Collier v. Betterton, 87 Tex. 440, 29 S. W. 467; Lincoln v. Granite Co., 56 Ark. 405, 19 S. W. 1056; 28 Ont. 195; Monmouth Park Ass'n v. Wallis Iron Works, 55 N. J. L. 132, 26 Atl. 140, 19 L. R. A. 456, 39 Am. St. Rep. 626; but a similar provision in a contract for railroad ties was held a penalty; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ward (Tex.) 34 S. W. 328.

Where, from the tenor of the agreement or from the nature of the case, it appears that the parties have ascertained the amount of damages by fair calculation and adjustment; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1318; 1 Bingh. 302; Chamberlain v. Bagley, 11 N. H. 234; Watt's Ex'rs v. Sheppard, 2 Ala. 425; Hamaker v. Schroers, 49 Mo. 406.

Where a bond was given in the penal sum of $10,000 upon condition not to practise as a physician and in case of breach, to pay $500 for every month in which he practised, the $10,000 was held to be a penalty and the $500 stipulated damages; Smith v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 468. See Cheddick's Ex'r v. Marsh, 21 N. J. L. 463.

See, as to the distinguishing tests of liquidated damages and penalty, Bagley v. Peddie, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 192.

The following has been suggested as a general rule governing the whole subject: "Whenever the damages were evidently the subject of calculation and adjustment between the parties and a certain sum was agreed upon and intended as compensation, and is in fact reasonable in amount, it will be allowed by the court as liquidated damages." 1 Sedgw. Dam. § 405. To establish a liquidation of damages there must concur all the necessary elements of a valid contract, assent of parties, consideration and performance of the condition, if any; Union Locomotive & Express Co. v. Ry. Co., 37 N. J. L. 23. The intent of the parties must be clear, but it must appear from the contract; 1 Sedgw. Dam. § 406. But prior negotiations may be referred to, to decide whether it is a penalty or liquidated damages; U. S. v. Steel Co., 205 U. S. 105, 27 Sup. Ct. 450, 51 L. Ed. 731.

The question of penalty or liquidated damages is a matter of law for the court; 1 Tayl. Ev. Chamb. ed. § 40; 7 C. B. 713. The liquidation must be reasonable; Myer v. Hart, 40 Mich. 517, 29 Am. Rep. 553; Pennypacker v. Jones, 106 Pa. 237; hence the contract is not conclusive so far as that it would be permitted to violate this principle; Jaquith v. Hudson, 5 Mich. 123.

The penal sum in a bond is usually a penalty, but if a sum be agreed upon in the condition of a bond to be payable upon a breach, the question may arise whether it is liquidated damages or a penalty, and it will be subject to the same principles of construction as in any other forms of contract; Leake, Contr. 938, 1091; 2 Ves. Sen. 530. See 5 H. L. C. 105.

Where the language used is explicit, the extravagance of the sum named as liquidated damages will not be considered; Bagley v. Peddie, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 192. See Kelso v. Reid, 145 Pa. 606, 23 Atl. 323, 27 Am. St. Rep. 716; Bigony v. Tyson, 75 Pa. 157; Eakin v. Scott, 70 Tex. 442, 7 S. W. 777; [1892] 1 Q. B. 127.

Some discussion has arisen as to whether the question of liquidated damages is involved in alternative contracts to do a certain thing or pay a certain sum. In such cases what is known as the rule of least beneficial alternative is applied and damages are given upon the theory that the defendant, if he performed, would have chosen the least onerous obligation; L. R. 8 C. P. 475; but in such a case it has been held that a defendant, having failed to exercise his option, must pay the sum as stipulated damages; Pearson v. Williams' Adm'rs, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 244; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Reichert, 58 Md. 261; Hodges v. King, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 583. But see Condon v. Kemper, 47 Kan. 126, 27 Pac. 829, 13 L. R. A. 671, and note.

LIQUIDATED DEBT. A debt is such when it is certain what is due and how much is due. Roberts v. Prior, 20 Ga. 561.

LIQUIDATED DEMAND. A demand the amount of which has been ascertained or settled by agreement of the parties, or otherwise. Mitchell v. Addison, 20 Ga. 53.

LIQUIDATION. A fixed and determinate valuation of things which before were uncertain.

LIQUOR LAWS. Laws regulating, prohibiting, or taxing the sale of intoxicating liquors.

The term liquor, when used in a statute prohibiting its sale, refers only to spirituous or intoxicating liquors; State v. Townley, 18 N. J. L. 311; People v. Crilley, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 246. Alcohol is held not an intoxicating liquor; State v. Witt, 39 Ark. 216; contra, Snider v. State, 81 Ga. 753, 7 S. E. 631, 12 Am. St. Rep. 350. Within the meaning of a statute restricting the sale of ardent or vinous spirits of any kind, alcohol is included; State v. Martin, 34 Ark. 340; contra, Lemly v. State, 70 Miss. 241, 12 South. 22, 20 L. R. A. 645. Where a statute defines intoxicating liquor as including alcohol, etc., its sale is unlawful, however much it may be diluted; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 76 Ia. 243, 41 N. W. 6, 2 L. R. A. 408; and so where no liquor is sold except alcohol, it being sold in the shape of toddy, punch, etc., and drunk on the premises; Winn v. State, 43 Ark. 151.

Ale is held an intoxicating liquor; State v. Wittmar, 12 Mo. 407; State v. Sharrer, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 323; Rau v. People, 63 N. Y. 277 (contra, People v. Crilley, 20 Barb. [N. Y.] 246; Walker v. Prescott, 44 N. H. 511); beer; Milwaukee Malt Extract Co. v. Ry. Co., 73 Ia. 98, 34 N. W. 761; Waller v. State, 38 Ark. 656; Watson v. State, 55 Ala. 159; State v. Goyette, 11 R. I. 592; Bandalow v. People, 90 Ill. 218 (see BEER; JUDICIAL NOTICE); whisky; Frese v. State, 23 Fla. 267, 2 South. 1; Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 751, 37 Am. Rep. 284; brandy; State v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 55; State v. Wittmar, 12 Mo. 407; blackberry brandy; Fenton v. State, 100 Ind. 598; rum and gin; State v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 55; State v. Wittmar, 12 Mo. 407; Com. v. Peckham, 2 Gray (Mass.) 514; toddy or sling made with brandy or gin mixed with sugar and water; Com. v. White, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 14; wine; Schwab v. People, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 520; State v. Wittmar, 12 Mo. 407; Hatfield v. Com., 120 Pa. 395, 14 Atl. 151. Champagne is included within a statute forbidding credit for liquors; Kizer v. Randleman, 50 N. C. 428.

Medicated bitters producing intoxication are intoxicating liquors where the compound is reasonably liable to be used as an intoxicating beverage; James v. State, 21 Tex. App. 353, 17 S. W. 422; Foster v. State, 36 Ark. 258; Com. v. Hallett, 103 Mass. 452; Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 757, 37 Am. Rep. 284; State v. Wilson, 80 Mo. 303; but not where their use as a beverage is rendered practically impossible by reason of other ingredients; Carl v. State, 87 Ala. 17, 6 South. 118, 4 L. R. A. 380; or where made and sold in good faith for medicinal purposes; Russell v. Sloan, 33 Vt. 656.

The test whether roots and tinctures change liquor into medicine is whether liquor loses its distinctive character by their introduction so that it is no longer desirable as a beverage; State v. Laffer, 38 Ia. 426. See Lemly v. State, 69 Miss. 628, 12 South. 559, 20 L. R. A. 645. The question what are vinous, spirituous, malt, or brewed liquors is one of fact for the jury; Com. v. Reyburg, 122 Pa. 299, 16 Atl. 351, 2 L. R. A. 415.

For the opinion of the United States attorney general on blending whisky, see 26 Op. Atty. Gen. 216; and Thornton, Pure Food & Drugs § 384, and id. § 385, the opinion of the President on labelling whiskies.

For hundreds of years dealers have engaged in the sale of intoxicants as a beverage without a single instance in which it was held illegal at common law. When restrictive legislation commenced it necessarily assumed that such sales were legal until made illegal by positive enactment, either by constitution or statute; In re Phillips, 82 Neb. 45, 116 N. W. 950, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001.

The legislature of a state has plenary power over the matter of licensing the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and it may, in its discretion, fix the terms on which the license shall be granted; Schulherr v. Bordeaux, 64 Miss. 59, 8 South. 201; State v. Pond, 93 Mo. 606, 6 S. W. 469; Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 27 Sup. Ct. 447, 51 L. Ed. 724, 10 Ann. Cas. 733; Appeal of Allyn, 81 Conn. 534, 71 Atl. 794, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 630, 129 Am. St. Rep. 225. The intendment of law which grants such discretionary powers to license boards is that the discretionary decision shall be the result of examination and consideration; that it shall constitute a discharge of official duty and not a mere expression of personal will; U. S. v. Douglass, 8 Mackey (D. C.) 99. The discretion must be a sound, legal one according to the requirements of the people, having regard to the location and the requirements of the public; Muller v. Com'rs of Buncombe County, 89 N. C. 171; it must be based upon the circumstances of each particular case as presented to the court, and not biased by general opinions as to the propriety of such licenses; Schlaudecker v. Marshall, 72 Pa. 200; favoritism and monopoly must be avoided; Zanone v. Mound City, 103 Ill. 552; and it must not be used in an arbitrary manner; People v. Cregier, 138 Ill. 401, 28 N. E. 812; Amperse v. City of Kalamazoo, 59 Mich. 78, 26 N. W. 222, 409; U. S. v. Ronan, 33 Fed. 117; Sparrow's Petition, 138 Pa. 116, 20 Atl. 711. It will not be assumed that the court acted in such a manner; State v. Gray, 61 Conn. 39, 22 Atl. 675. Discretion cannot be used to grant licenses to act retrospectively in order to condone an offence previously committed; Edwards v. State, 22 Ark. 253. Where no discretion is given by a municipal ordinance as to the number and locality of liquor shops, it is held that the authorities can exercise none; People v. Cregier, 138 Ill. 401, 28 N. E. 812; see U. S. v. Ronan, 33 Fed. 117; but where discretion is conferred, a license may be refused where the locality is already overcrowded with liquor shops; People v. Board of Excise, 16 N. Y. Supp. 798. Such a board must, however, consider all the merits before it can legally refuse a license; Martin v. Symonds, 4 Misc. 6, 23 N. Y. Supp. 689.

A license court may not bargain with an applicant and exact a promise as a condition; nor refuse a license to one because "he made a promise last year not to apply for a license this year"; Donoghue's License, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 1.

A statute authorizing city councils to create excise boards, which, when created, shall be vested with certain well defined powers, is not a delegation of powers, as such powers are vested by the statute in the board to be created; Riley v. Trenton, 51 N. J. L. 498, 18 Atl. 116, 5 L. R. A. 352; but when the licensing power is expressly conferred upon the council, it cannot be delegated to the mayor by ordinance; City of Kinmundy v. Mahan, 72 Ill. 462; nor can county commissioners with statutory authority to license a saloon, confer that power on a county attorney; County Com'rs of Hennepin County v. Robinson, 16 Minn. 381 (Gil. 340); or upon the clerk of the board; Mayson v. City of Atlanta, 77 Ga. 662.

A state act vesting in judges in the respective counties jurisdiction over licenses to sell liquor does not contravene the 14th amendment (privileges and immunities); State v. Durein, 70 Kan. 13, 80 Pac. 987, affirmed Durein v. State, 208 U. S. 613, 28 Sup. Ct. 567, 52 L. Ed. 645. The right to sell liquor is not protected by that amendment; id. Jacobs Pharmacy v. City of Atlanta, 89 Fed. 244; Jordan v. Evansville, 163 Ind. 512, 72 N. E. 544, 67 L. R. A. 613, 2 Ann. Cas. 96; City of Hoboken v. Goodman, 68 N. J. L. 217, 51 Atl. 1092; State v. Richardson, 48 Or. 309, 85 Pac. 225, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362; or any other constitutional provision; State v. Calloway, 11 Idaho, 719, 84 Pac. 27, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109, 114 Am. St. Rep. 285.

When the performance of an act rests, by statute, on the discretion of a person or depends on the exercise of personal judgment, mandamus will not lie to compel its performance; Post v. Township Board, 64 Mich. 597, 31 N. W. 535; Eve v. Simon, 78 Ga. 120; and where there is no ordinance rendering it a legal obligation to grant a license, a mandamus will not lie to compel its issuance; Village of Crotty v. People, 3 Ill.

App. 465; see Deehan v. Johnson, 141 Mass. 23, 6 N. E. 240 (distinguishing Braconier v. Packard, 136 Mass. 50); State v. Weeks, 93 Mo. 499, 6 S. W. 266; State v. Cass County, 12 Neb. 54, 10 N. W. 571; Ex parte Persons, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 650; Commissioners of Maxton v. Commissioners of Robeson County, 107 N. C. 335, 12 S. E. 92; Schlaudecker v. Marshall, 72 Pa. 200; a court will not review on certiorari the refusal of a board of excise commissioners to grant a license, where its action was not upon illegal grounds; People v. Bennett, 4 Misc. 10, 23 N. Y. Supp. 695.

A license to sell liquors is a privilege and not property, and the forfeiture of a license does not deprive the licensee of property without due process of law; Sprayberry v. City of Atlanta, 87 Ga. 120, 13 S. E. 197; it cannot be levied upon by the sheriff and sold; Ulrich's License, 6 Dist. Rep. (Pa.) 408; nor can the liquor; Nichols v. Valentine, 36 Me. 322; Ingalls v. Baker, 13 Allen (Mass.) 449; Hines v. Stahl, 79 Kan. 88, 99 Pac. 273, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1118, 131 Am. St. Rep. 280, 17 Ann. Cas. 298; contra, Wildermuth v. Cole, 77 Mich. 483, 43 N. W. 889; Nutt v. Wheeler, 30 Vt. 436, 73 Am. Dec. 316; nor can it be transferred unless such transfer is approved by the authorities empowered to grant licenses; Blumenthal's Petition, 125 Pa. 412, 18 Atl. 395. A license, which under the terms of the statute is transferable and therefore has a money value, is an asset of the estate of the licensee, to which a receiver for the benefit of creditors is entitled; Deggender v. Malting Co., 41 Wash. 385, 83 Pac. 898, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626. A license to operate a saloon in a certain building does not authorize the operation of two saloons in different rooms in it; Malkan v. City of Chicago, 217 Ill. 471, 75 N. E. 548, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 488, 3 Ann. Cas. 1104.

Where, after payment of a license fee, the business either has not been entered upon, or has been abandoned voluntarily, or because the license turns out to be improperly issued, or prohibition has been adopted, generally there is a right to a return of the unearned license fee; Allsman v. Oklahoma City, 21 Okl. 142, 95 Pac. 468, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 511, 17 Ann. Cas. 184; City of Fitzgerald v. Witchard, 130 Ga. 552, 61 S. E. 227, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519.

Within the meaning of an act prescribing the qualifications of the person licensed, the word person is held not to embrace an incorporated club, and the sales of liquor by a bona fide social club with limited membership, the property of which is actually owned by its members, and admission to which cannot be obtained by persons at pleasure, are held not illegal, within the prohibition against sales by unlicensed persons; State v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308, 28 S. W. 604, 26 L. R. A. 573; State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 33 S. W. 113, 30 L. R. A. 500; Piedmont Club v. Com., 87 Va. 540, 12 S. E. 963; the general rule seems to be that clubs are not subject to the license laws; Seim v. State, 55 Md. 566, 39 Am. Rep. 419; L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373; Com. v. Geary, 146 Mass. 139, 15 N. E. 363; as the furnishing of liquors to the members and their friends at a club house is no more a violation of the law than it would be if such entertainment were given at a private house; People v. Andrews, 50 Hun 591, 3 N. Y. Supp. 508. In Pennsylvania it is held that in view of the fact that clubs had openly and notoriously furnished liquors to the members thereof for a long period of years before the license law was passed, the supposition is that if the legislature had intended to prohibit the practice, it would have done so in direct terms; Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 35 Atl. 606, 34 L. R. A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717. But other cases have held that clubs are subject to the license laws; Marmont v. State, 48 Ind. 21; State v. Neis, 108 N. C. 787, 13 S. E. 225, 12 L. R. A. 412; U. S. v. Alexis Club, 98 Fed. 725; People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250, 41 N. W. 908, 2 L. R. A. 494; People v. Andrews, 115 N. Y. 427, 22 N. E. 358, 6 L. R. A. 128; Rickart v. People, 79 Ill. 85; Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34, where the steward was punished as an unlicensed seller of intoxicating liquor. And they have been required to pay the license tax imposed upon retailers; Kentucky Club v. City of Louisville, 92 Ky. 309, 17 S. W. 743; People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 239, 41 N. W. 908, 2 L. R. A. 494; State v. Boston Club, 45 La. Ann. 585, 12 South. 895, 20 L. R. A. 185; Nogales Club v. State, 69 Miss. 218, 10 South. 574. Any sale by a club to its members in violation of a prohibition or local option law is illegal; State v. Easton Club, 73 Md. 97, 20 Atl. 783, 10 L. R. A. 64; State v. Lockyear, 95 N. C. 633, 59 Am. Rep. 287; and the club is subjected to the annulment of its charter; State v. Easton Club, 73 Md. 97, 20 Atl. 783, 10 L. R. A. 64. Even a bona fide social club cannot sell on Sunday to persons not members; Com. v. Loesch, 153 Pa. 502, 26 Atl. 208.

The steward of a social club which is run as a cover for the sale of liquor without license may be punished in the same manner as the bar-tender of an unlicensed saloon; Com. v. Tierney, 148 Pa. 552, 24 Atl. 64.

A physician, carelessly issuing a prescription to an entire stranger without inquiry as to the purpose, may be convicted of selling liquor without a license; Com. v. Hensel, 34 Pa. C. C. R. 369.

A sale of intoxicating liquor to a habitual drunkard, after notification from his wife, in violation of a statute making such sale a misdemeanor, is such negligence as to enable the wife to maintain an action for injuries to him resulting from such sale; Riden v. Grimm, 97 Tenn. 220, 36 S. W. 1097, 35 L. R. A. 587. Under the Illinois statutes all who furnish intoxicating liquors which contribute to the habit of drunkenness are liable for injuries resulting from habitual intoxication; Keller v. Lincoln, 67 Ill. App. 404; and it was held that a parent had a right of action against a liquor seller and his bondsmen, both for the death of a minor son caused by intoxication resulting from the sale of liquor to him, and also for loss of his services; Fitzgerald v. Donoher, 48 Neb. 852, 67 N. W. 880. A mother who is injured in her means of support by the death of her son through intoxication may recover from the owner of the premises on which the liquor was sold, the premises having been leased for the purpose of liquor-selling; De Puy v. Cook, 90 Hun 43, 35 N. Y. Supp. 632. See CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS.

Where there are statutory provisions against the sale of liquor to minors, it is no excuse that the vendor is ignorant that the buyer is a minor, even if he attempts to ascertain the truth before furnishing the liquor; Carlson's License, 127 Pa. 330, 18 Atl. 8; Eick's License, 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 461; or if the minor made affidavit that he was of age; State v. Sasse, 6 S. D. 212, 60 N. W. 853, 55 Am. St. Rep. 834; but it is held that the vendor's knowledge of the purchaser's minority must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt; Schurzer v. State (Tex.) 25 S. W. 23. See INTENT.

Where the minor brings a written order from an adult by whom he is employed, the sale is to the adult; State v. McLain, 49 Mo. App. 398; Harley v. State, 127 Ga. 308, 56 S. E. 452; Short v. People, 96 Ill. App. 638; contra, where the order is verbal only; id.; and the latter is so, even if the minor has been in the habit of bringing bona fide orders and if he once drink the liquor himself, the sale is to him; Dixon v. State, 89 Ga. 785, 15 S. E. 684. It has even been held that the sale is to the minor when he actually delivered the liquor to his employer, where such sale was on a verbal order; Yakel v. State, 30 Tex. App. 391, 17 S. W. 943, 20 S. W. 205; but see Wallace v. State, 54 Ark. 542, 16 S. W. 571, where the sale is held to be to the adult if the minor is known to be doing an errand. The fact that a minor has no parent or guardian to give their written consent will not justify a sale without it; Herchenbach v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 122, 29 S. W. 470; the written authority must be special for each occasion, and a general permit without limitation is void; Pressly v. State, 114 Tenn. 534, 86 S. W. 378, 69 L. R. A. 291, 108 Am. St. Rep. 921.

Statutes and ordinances excluding women from employment in saloons or other places where intoxicating liquor is sold have been almost universally sustained; Ex parte Hayes, 98 Cal. 555, 33 Pac. 337, 20 L. R. A. 701; City of Hoboken v. Goodman, 68 N. J. L. 217, 51 Atl. 1092; Bergman v. Cleveland, 39 Ohio St. 651; State v. Considine, 16 Wash. 358, 47 Pac. 755; In re Considine, 83 Fed. 157. See POLICE POWER.

An ordinance prohibiting treating is valid as a reasonable restraint; City of Tacoma v. Keisel, 68 Wash. 685, 124 Pac. 137, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 757. Serving liquor with meals on Sunday by a hotel-keeper, violates a statute against selling or disposing of liquor on Sunday; Seelbach Hotel Co. v. Com., 135 Ky. 376, 122 S. W. 190, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 943; Savage v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 190, 88 S. W. 351; serving liquor with meals is a sale; State v. Lotti, 72 Vt. 115, 47 Atl. 392; State v. Wenzel, 72 N. H. 396, 56 Atl. 918; Nicrosi v. State, 52 Ala. 336; but see In re Breslin, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 210.

One who receives apples to be distilled into brandy does not, by delivering to the original owner his portion of the product, violate a law prohibiting the sale, gift, or other disposition of intoxicating liquor; Maxwell v. State, 120 Ala. 375, 25 South. 235.

There is a decided conflict among the cases as to the criminal and penal responsibility of one for the violation of the liquor laws by a co-partner, agent or servant, where the sale was without the knowledge or consent or express or implied authority of the defendant. That he is liable; State v. Gilmore, 80 Vt. 514, 68 Atl. 658, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 786, 13 Ann. Cas. 321; People v. Kriesel, 136 Mich. 80, 98 N. W. 850, 4 Ann. Cas. 5; State v. Constatine, 43 Wash. 102, 86 Pac. 384, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1043; contra, Kittrell v. State, 89 Miss. 666, 42 South. 609; Rosenbaum v. State, 24 Ind. App. 510, 57 N. E. 156; Beane v. State, 72 Ark. 368, 80 S. W. 573.

Mistake as to the character of the liquor sold, under statutes where guilty knowledge or intent are not elements of the offence, is, by the prevailing rule, no defence for the seller; he sells at his peril; Compton v. State, 95 Ala. 25, 11 South. 69; Byars v. City of Mt. Vernon, 77 Ill. 467; Peters v. District Court of Jefferson County, 114 Ia. 207, 86 N. W. 300; State v. Moulton, 52 Kan. 69, 34 Pac. 412; Com. v. O'Kean, 152 Mass. 584, 26 N. E. 97. Most of the cases holding mistake of fact a defence are to be found in the Texas reports, but in that state the question is governed by a special statute; Walker v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 495, 98 S. W. 843. In Ohio the question has been passed upon without reference to a special statute; Farrell v. State, 32 Ohio St. 456, 30 Am. Rep. 614; and in State v. Powell, 141 N. C. 780, 53 S. E. 515, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, the alleged mistake was pointed out to be a mistake of fact and held a sufficient defence.

That a state may, under its police power, regulate or even prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is settled by many state and federal cases; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L.

Ed. 205; W. A. Vandercook Co. v. Vance, 80 Fed. 786; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 17 Sup. Ct. 265, 41 L. Ed. 632. There is no inherent right of a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors by retail. It is not a privilege of a citizen of the United States. It may be entirely prohibited, or it may be permitted under such conditions as will limit to the utmost its evils. The regulation rests in the discretion of the governing authority; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 91, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620. The regulation of the sale of liquor is an essential police power of a state; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, 198 U. S. 17, 25 Sup. Ct. 552, 49 L. Ed. 925; City of Danville v. Hatcher, 101 Va. 523, 44 S. E. 723; the state may, by statute, prohibit the gift of such liquor to one visibly affected by it though the recipient be a friend and the gift made in a social manner; Altenburg v. Com., 126 Pa. 602, 17 Atl. 799, 4 L. R. A. 543. It may prohibit the manufacture of liquor even though intended for exportation and not for use within the state; Pearson v. The International Distillery, 72 Ia. 348, 34 N. W. 1; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346.

Statutes and ordinances making it an offence for a minor to frequent a liquor saloon are valid; Com. v. Price, 123 Ky. 163, 94 S. W. 32, 13 Ann. Cas. 489; State v. Baker, 50 Or. 381, 92 Pac. 1076, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040.

Prior to the fourteenth amendment, no question was raised as to this right of the states; Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 129, 21 L. Ed. 929; it is justified by the rule that while power does not exist with the whole people to control rights which are exclusively private, government may require each citizen so to conduct himself and use his own property as not necessarily to injure another; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346.

But a state in the exercise of its police power may not interfere with commerce between the states; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 6 Sup. Ct. 454, 29 L. Ed. 691; and it cannot forbid the importation of intoxicating liquors; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; In re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 564, 11 Sup. Ct. 865, 35 L. Ed. 572; Donald v. Scott, 67 Fed. 854; nor can it by statute impose a tax or duty on persons who, not having their principal place of business within the state, engage in the business of selling liquors therein; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 6 Sup. Ct. 454, 29 L. Ed. 691; or forbid common carriers from bringing them into the state without having been furnished with a certificate that the consignee was authorized to sell liquors; Bowman v. Ry. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700.

Under the prohibition law in Iowa, it was held that sales of liquor in the original packages were prohibited; State v. Exp. Co., 70 Ia. 271, 30 N. W. 568; but the supreme court held in the case of Leisy v. Hardin that, in the absence of congressional permission, a state had no right to interfere with the sale, by an importer, of liquors imported from another state in original packages, as such an action interfered with the right of congress to regulate commerce; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128, followed in Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 214 U. S. 218, 29 Sup. Ct. 633, 53 L. Ed. 972. The decision in Leisy v. Hardin induced the passage of the act of August 8, 1890 (the Wilson Bill); Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 17 Sup. Ct. 265, 41 L. Ed. 632; which provides that all fermented, distilled, or intoxicating liquors transported into any state for use therein, regardless of whether they are in the original packages or not, shall be subject to the police laws of such state. This act was held constitutional as a valid exercise of the police powers vested in congress; In re Rahrer, 43 Fed. 556, 10 L. R. A. 444; by it congress has declared when imported property shall be subject to state laws, but the states are not authorized to declare when such goods become the subject of their control; In re Spickler, 43 Fed. 653, 10 L. R. A. 446. It was not intended to and did not cause the power of the state to attach to an interstate shipment, whilst the merchandise was in transit under such shipment, nor until arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 18 Sup. Ct. 664, 42 L. Ed. 1088; Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Shannon, 223 U. S. 472, 32 Sup. Ct. 236, 56 L. Ed. 510. Word arrival as used in the act means delivery of the goods to the consignee and not merely reaching destination, and the state's power does not attach before notice and a reasonable time for the consignee to receive the goods from the carrier; and this rule is not affected by the fact that under the state law the carrier's liability as such may have ceased and become that of a warehouseman; Heyman v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 270, 27 Sup. Ct. 104, 51 L. Ed. 178, 7 Ann. Cas. 1130. Under the act a state may impose a license, for regulating the sale of liquor in original packages brought from foreign countries, as well as that brought from other states; De Bary & Co. v. Louisiana, 227 U. S. 108, 33 Sup. Ct. 350, 57 L. Ed. 556; and on travelling salesmen soliciting orders for intoxicating liquors; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, 198 U. S. 17, 25 Sup. Ct. 552, 49 L. Ed. 925; and also, as a condition of the right to sell liquor over the bar on board of a steamboat, while within the boundaries of the state, notwithstanding such boat is navigating the Mississippi River and is engaged in interstate commerce; Foppiano v. Speed, 199 U. S. 501, 26 Sup. Ct. 138, 50 L. Ed. 288. A state may forbid the publication within its limits of advertisements of the keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors at places in other states; State v. Pub. Co., 104 Me. 288, 71 Atl. 894, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 495.

The intent of congress in enacting the Wilson act was to give the several states power to deal with all liquors coming from outside to within their respective limits; De Bary & Co. v. Louisiana, 227 U. S. 108, 33 Sup. Ct. 350, 57 L. Ed. 556, affirming 130 La. 1090, 58 South. 892.

The Act of Congress, March, 1913, prohibiting interstate shipments of intoxicating liquor where the shipment will violate the law of the place of destination, is constitutional; and the carrier of an interstate shipment of such liquors is amenable to state laws for taking interstate shipments into local option territory; State v. Van Winkle, 88 Atl. (Del.) 807.

Under the South Carolina dispensary act, the state itself engages in the business of importing liquors for the purpose of profit, to the state, and thus recognizes that their use is lawful. She cannot, therefore, under her constitutional obligations to other states, control, hinder, and burden commerce in such articles between their citizens and her own; Donald v. Scott, 67 Fed. 854, affirmed in Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 17 Sup. Ct. 265, 41 L. Ed. 632.

In this case the question whether a state could, under the constitution, confer upon certain officers or agents the sole power to buy all liquors sold in the state, and allow no other liquor to be sold, was reserved for future decision, it not being necessary to decide it at that time. And in Vandercook Co. v. Vance, 80 Fed. 786, under a subsequent amended statute, it was held that such officers could not seize original packages shipped into the state in violation of a provision of such statute that a sample of the contents should be first furnished to the state inspector, as such a provision could not be justified as an inspection law and was an interference with interstate commerce and in itself void. Affirmed as to this point in the supreme court; Vance v. Vandercook Co., 170 U. S. 438, 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 42 L. Ed. 1100; but reversed as to the right of the state to prohibit and regulate the sale of liquors even in the original package. (Fuller C. J., Shiras and McKenna, JJ., dissenting as to the point reversed.) See ORIGINAL PACKAGE; COMMERCE.

In its general provisions, the dispensary act does not conflict with the constitution of the United States; Cantini v. Tillman, 54 Fed. 969; but in so far as its provisions conflict with interstate commerce, it is void; In re Langford, 57 Fed. 570; Moore v. Bahr, 82 Fed. 19. But when once a sale has been made of an original package and it has been delivered within the state, it cannot be again sold by its recipient or by any one else without violation of the law; Moore v. Bahr, 82 Fed. 19.

The defendant, at the request of a neighbor, ordered a quantity of beer to be shipped into a dry county, paying for it himself and delivering it upon its arrival to the neighbor who repaid him. Defendant had neither interest nor profit in the enterprise. Held he could not be convicted under a local option law making it an offence "to sell, give away, or furnish" intoxicating liquors to any one in the local option area; People v. Driver, 174 Mich. 214, 140 N. W. 515.

One may order liquor shipped to him from outside a local option area without violating the statute. In the absence of evidence of a contrary intention by the parties, delivery of the goods by the seller to a common carrier for shipment to the buyer transfers title and completes the sale; [1898] A. C. 200. Hence there is no sale in the prohibited territory; Frank v. Hoey, 128 Mass. 263; State v. Wingfield, 115 Mo. 428, 22 S. W. 363, 37 Am. St. Rep. 406; Harding v. State, 65 Neb. 238, 91 N. W. 194. There is also no furnishing in the dry county; Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 107 Ga. 670, 33 S. E. 637, 46 L. R. A. 417, 73 Am. St. Rep. 146; as title has already passed to the purchaser and one cannot "furnish" the owner with his own goods. What one may do himself he may do by an agent, and a sale to the agent is a sale to the principal. So where one acts merely as agent for another in purchasing liquor outside the local option area and delivering it to his principal, he is not guilty of any act of sale within the county, although he advances his own money and is afterwards repaid by the principal; Whitmore v. State, 72 Ark. 14, 77 S. W. 598; State v. Allen, 161 N. C. 226, 75 S. E. 1082; People v. Tart, 169 Mich. 586, 135 N. W. 307.

Property used for the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor may be declared a common nuisance, and as such abated; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; and the abatement of such a nuisance is not a taking of property without due process of law; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346. See NUISANCE.

A right of property in whisky cannot shield one from the consequences of his unlawful acts in keeping such whisky for illegal sale; State v. Creeden, 78 Ia. 556, 43 N. W. 673, 7 L. R. A. 295.

See FOOD AND DRUG ACTS; ORIGINAL PACKAGE; CONSTITUTIONALITY; JUDICIAL NOTICE (as to whether certain liquors are intoxicating).

LIRA. The name of a foreign coin.

In all computations at the custom-house, the lira of Sardinia shall be estimated at eighteen cents and six mills; Act of March 22, 1846; the lira of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, and the lira of Tuscany at sixteen cents; Act of March 22, 1846.

LIS. A controversy; an action at law.

LIS ALIBI PENDENS. A suit pending elsewhere. Where proceedings are pending in one court between plaintiff and defendant in respect to a given matter, it has been used as a ground for preventing the plaintiff from entering proceedings in another court against the same defendant and for the same cause of action. See AUTER ACTION PENDANT.

LIS MOTA (Lat.). A controversy begun, i. e. on the point at issue, and prior to commencement of judicial proceedings.

The arising of that state of facts on which the claim is founded. 6 C. & P. 552.

Such a controversy is taken to arise on the advent of the state of facts on which the claim rests; and after such controversy has arisen (post litem motam) no declarations of deceased members of the family as to matters of pedigree are admissible; Steph. Ev. § 31; Greenl. Ev. § 131; 4 M. & S. 497; Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 337, 7 L. Ed. 164; Caujolle v. Ferrie, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 177.

There is no lis mota till a dispute has arisen; it is not enough that a right of action has arisen or a cause of action accrued; 2 Sw. & Tr. 170. The dispute need not be between the same parties; 15 Q. B. D. 114.

LIS PENDENS (Lat.). A pending suit. Suing out a writ and making attachment (on mesne process) constitute a lis pendens at common law. Bennett v. Chase, 21 N. H. 570.

The doctrine of lis pendens, as usually understood, is the control which a court has over the property involved in a suit, during the continuance of the proceedings, and until its final judgment has been rendered therein.

"The established rule is that a lis pendens, duly prosecuted and not collusive, is notice to a purchaser so as to effect and bind his interest by the decree; and the lis pendens begins from the service of the subpœna after the bill is filed." Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 566. This was said to be the "fundamental proposition" of the doctrine; Warren County v. Marcy, 97 U. S. 106, 24 L. Ed. 977.

The purpose of the rule is to keep the subject-matter of the litigation within the power of the court until the judgment or decree shall be entered; otherwise by successive alienations pending the litigation, its judgment or decree could be rendered abortive and thus make it impossible for the court to execute its judgment or decree; Houston v. Timmerman, 17 Or. 499, 21 Pac. 1037, 4 L. R. A. 716, 11 Am. St. Rep. 848. The rule will be applied even in a case where it is a physical impossibility that the purchaser could have known of the existence of the suit; Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. (Va.) 93, 14 Am. Dec. 766. It was formulated in Lord Bacon's twelfth ordinance. There were earlier cases, the first being reported in Cro. Eliz. 677. See Bennett, Lis Pendens.

An alienee, during the pendency of a suit, is bound by the proceedings therein subsequent to the alienation, though before he became a party; 4 Beav. 40; Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456; Harrington v. Slade, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 166; Hersey v. Turbett, 27 Pa. 418.

Purchasers during the pendency of a suit are bound by the decree in the suit without being made parties; 4 Russ. 372; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 375; Story, Eq. Pl. § 351 a; Fash v. Ravesies, 32 Ala. 451; Carr v. Cates, 96 Mo. 271, 9 S. W. 659; Shotwell v. Lawson, 30 Miss. 27, 64 Am. Dec. 145; Masson v. Saloy, 12 La. Ann. 776; Zeiter v. Bowman, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 133; Hersey v. Turbett, 27 Pa. 418; Gilman v. Hamilton, 16 Ill. 225; and will not be protected because they paid value and had no actual notice of the suit; Norton v. Birge, 35 Conn. 250; Ferrier v. Buzick, 6 Ia. 258; Kellar v. Stanley, 86 Ky. 240, 5 S. W. 477; Shirk v. Whitten, 131 Ind. 455, 31 N. E. 87. A purchaser pendente lite cannot litigate, over again in an original independent suit, the matters determined in a suit to which his vendor was a party; Mellen v. Iron Works, 131 U. S. 352, 9 Sup. Ct. 781, 33 L. Ed. 178; a purchaser is only chargeable with notice when the purchase is from a party to the suit; Green v. Rick, 121 Pa. 130, 15 Atl. 497, 2 L. R. A. 48, 6 Am. St. Rep. 760.

So also is the doctrine applied to a purchaser during a suit to avoid a conveyance as fraudulent; Copenheaver v. Huffaker, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 18.

A citizen of the United States residing in a different state from that in which the suit is pending, is bound by the rule regarding purchasers pendente lite; Caldwell v. Carrington's Heirs, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 86, 9 L. Ed. 60; and actual notice of the pendency of the suit is not necessary; Fletcher v. Ferrel, 9 Dana (Ky.) 372, 35 Am. Dec. 143. It is said that the doctrine has no force or operation beyond the boundaries of the state where the suit is pending; Carr v. Coal Co., 96 Mo. 149, 8 S. W. 907, 9 Am. St. Rep. 328; but this does not, of course apply to a case where the court has jurisdiction of the res and of the party. The doctrine cannot be made applicable by state laws or decisions to negotiable instruments so as to affect persons not residing and not being within the state; Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 7 Sup. Ct. 358, 30 L. Ed. 523.

Lis pendens by a mortgagor under a prior unrecorded mortgage is notice to a second mortgagee; Bolling v. Carter & Womack, 9 Ala. 921. But see Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. (Va.) 93, 14 Am. Dec. 766. One taking a mortgage on property while a proceeding to foreclose a vendor's lien thereon is pending, is bound by a decree in such proceedings as if a party thereto, and has no right of redemption other than that given by statute; Owen v. Kilpatrick, 96 Ala. 421, 11 South. 476.

The rule does not apply where a title imperfect before suit brought, is perfected during its pendency; Hopkins v. McLaren, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 667; Gibler v. Trimble, 14 Ohio 323.

When one comes into possession of the subject of litigation, during proceedings in ejectment, he will be bound by the judgment, though not a party, and may be ejected under the judgment against his grantor; Wade, Notice; Smith v. Trabue, 1 McLean, 87 Fed. Cas. No. 13,116; Jackson v. Tuttle, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 233.

In law, the same effect is produced by the rule that each purchaser takes the title of his vendor only; Zeiter v. Bowman, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 133; Shotwell v. Lawson, 30 Miss. 27, 64 Am. Dec. 145; Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456. This doctrine was originally confined to controversies over real estate; Winston v. Westfeldt, 22 Ala. 760, 58 Am. Dec. 278; McLaurine v. Monroe's Adm'rs, 30 Mo. 462; but a purchaser of securities pendente lite has been decreed to surrender them upon receiving the sum he had paid for them; Watlington v. Howley, 1 Desaus. (S. C.) 167; and the principle has been extended to a bond and mortgage, assigned by a trustee, pending a suit by the cestui que trust; In re M'Farlan, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441. In County of Warren v. Marcy, 97 U. S. 105, 24 L. Ed. 977, Bradley, J., states a general rule that all persons dealing with property are bound to take notice of a suit by lis pendens, but that this rule does not apply to negotiable securities purchased before maturity nor to articles of ordinary commerce sold in the ordinary way. After citing Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 566, as the leading American case relating to land, with regard to which the doctrine is uniformly applied, he cites Murray v. Lylburn, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441, as containing the whole law on the subject which has been carried out or applied by later cases. Chancellor Kent, in that case, applied the rule to choses in action assigned by one of the parties pendente lite.

In Kieffer v. Ehler, 18 Pa. 388, it was held that the doctrine does not apply to a promissory note bought before maturity, but without actual notice of an attachment levied before the purchase. In Diamond v. Lawrence County, 37 Pa. 353, 78 Am. Dec. 429, it was held that the doctrine applies to a non-negotiable instrument. In Winston v. Westfeldt, 22 Ala. 760, 58 Am. Dec. 278, it was held that the doctrine does not apply to negotiable paper, the case being decided upon great consideration. To the same effect, see Leitch v. Wells, 48 N. Y. 585, overruling the same case in 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 637. That the doctrine does not apply to negotiable securities, was held in Presidio Co. v. Stock Co., 212 U. S. 58, 29 Sup. Ct. 237, 53 L. Ed. 402; Mims v. West, 38 Ga. 18, 95 Am. Dec. 379; so of articles sold in the market in the usual course of trade; Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 693, 7 Sup. Ct. 358, 30 L. Ed. 523.

In Chase v. Searles, 45 N. H. 511, the court refused to apply the doctrine to personalty; in Carr v. Lewis Coal Co., 15 Mo. App. 551, it was applied to an article of ordinary commerce, cattle and grain. In McCutchen v. Miller, 31 Miss. 65, the doctrine was held to apply with equal force to contracts in regard to personalty and those concerning real estate. That it applies to personalty, except negotiable paper; Reid v. Sheffy, 75 Ill. App. 136; contra, as to personalty; Miles v. Lefi, 60 Ia. 168, 14 N. W. 233; Winston v. Westfeldt, 22 Ala. 760, 58 Am. Dec. 278; it is held not to apply to shares of corporate stock; Davis v. Signal Co., 105 Ill. App. 657; American Press Ass'n v. Brantingham, 75 App. Div. 435, 78 N. Y. Supp. 305. In State v. Board of Com'rs, 59 Kan. 512, 53 Pac. 526, it was held not to apply to commercial paper, and in Calkins v. Bank, 20 S. D. 466, 107 N. W. 675, not to apply to one taking a chattel mortgage, pending an action to recover the mortgaged property.

In divorce there is no lis pendens before decree as to the property included in the marriage settlement; 7 P. D. 228.

The proceedings must relate directly to the specific property in question; Lewis v. Mew, 1 Strobh. Eq. (S. C.) 180; Green v. White, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 242; Feigley v. Feigley, 7 Md. 537, 61 Am. Dec. 375; Story, Eq. 13th ed. § 405; and the rule applies to no other suits; Edmonds v. Crenshaw, 1 McCord, Ch. (S. C.) 252. There must be property which will be affected by the judgment; St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Daggett, 84 Ill. 556; Dovey's Appeal, 97 Pa. 153.

Lis pendens is said to be general notice to all the world; see Story, Eq. Jur. § 405; 2 P. Wms. 282; Woodfolk v. Blount, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 147, 9 Am. Dec. 736; but it has been said that it is not correct to speak of it as a part of the doctrine of notice; the purchaser pendente lite is affected, not by notice, but because the law does not allow litigating parties to give to others, pending the litigation, rights to the property in dispute so as to prejudice the opposite party. Per Cranworth, L. C., in 1 De G. & J. 566. The doctrine rests upon public policy, not notice; Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. (Va.) 93, 14 Am. Dec. 766; Dovey's Appeal, 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 389; Bisph. Eq. 274; Murray v. Ballow, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 566.

But it has been said that the basis of the rule is involved in controversy. One line of authorities speaks of it as an equitable doctrine based on constructive notice; 2 Ves. Sr. 571; King v. Bill, 28 Conn. 593; the other insists that it is based on the principles of res judicata; 1 De G. & J. 566; Geishaker v. White, 57 N. J. Eq. 60, 40 Atl. 200. It is said that where any requisite is lacking a purchaser of the property for value and without actual notice should not be held to have constructive notice of the lis so as to be bound by it; it may equally be argued that the principle of res judicata is not under such circumstances applicable to it; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 488.

Filing a judgment creditor's bill constitutes a lis pendens; Scudder v. Van Amburgh, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 29. A petition by heirs to sell real estate is not a lis pendens; Clarkson v. Barnett's Heirs, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 164. Generally, suit is not pending till service of process; Bailey v. McGinniss, 57 Mo. 362; Wade, Notice 152; but see Maddox v. Humphries, 30 Tex. 494. Where service is by advertising, lis pendens does not attach till the completion of the advertising; Bayer v. Cockerill, 3 Kan. 282.

Only unreasonable and unusual negligence in the prosecution of a suit will take away its character as a lis pendens; Gossom v. Donaldson, 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 230, 68 Am. Dec. 723; but it is held that there must be an active prosecution to keep it alive; 1 Russ. & M. 617; Carter v. Mills, 30 Mo. 432; Hayden v. Bucklin, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 512. But as long as the court retains jurisdiction, the doctrine applies; Benn. Lis Pend. 172.

The court must have jurisdiction over the property involved; Benn. Lis Pend. 153; and the property must be sufficiently described to establish its identity; id.; and the party who holds the title must be before the court as a party; id. 162. But this would not be required in proceedings to enforce a lien on property within the jurisdiction of the court.

Filing the bill and serving a subpœna creates a lis pendens in equity; Tiedem. Eq. Jur. § 95; 7 Beav. 444; Herrington v. Herrington, 27 Mo. 560; Hayden v. Bucklin, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 512; Center v. Bank, 22 Ala. 743; Union Trust Co. v. Imp. Co., 130 U. S. 565, 9 Sup. Ct. 606, 32 L. Ed. 1043; which the final decree terminates; 1 Vern. 318. Amendment of the bill after demurrer has been sustained thereto relates back to the filing of the bill, so far as the doctrine of lis pendens is concerned; Cotton v. Dacey, 61 Fed. 481. In the civil law, an action is not said to be pending till it reaches the stage of contestatio litis.

It has been held that while a lis pendens against one taking under the defendant dates from the commencement of the action, a cross-bill seeking affirmative relief is notice to one taking under the plaintiff only from the moment of filing; Bridger v. Bank, 126 Ga. 821, 56 S. E. 97, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, 115 Am. St. Rep. 118. In England and in some states the notice by lis pendens begins upon the service of process or subpœna; Armstrong Cork Co. v. Refrigerating Co., 184 Fed. 199, 107 C. C. A. 93; Stone v. Tyree, 30 W. Va. 687, 5 S. E. 878. It is said that a suit and cross suit constituted one cause and notice of the suit is notice of the cross suit also; S. C. Hall Lumber Co. v. Gustin, 54 Mich. 624, 20 N. W. 616.

A voluntary assignment during the pendency of a suit does not affect the rights of other parties, if not disclosed, except so far as the alienation may disable the party from performing the decree of the court; Story, Eq. Pl. § 351; Lee v. Salinas, 15 Tex. 495; as in the case of mortgage by a tenant in common of his undivided interest, and subsequent partition; Westervelt v. Haff, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 98.

An involuntary assignment by a plaintiff, as under the bankrupt or insolvent laws, renders the suit so defective that it cannot be prosecuted if the defendant objects; Garr v. Gomez, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 649; 1 Hare 621; Story, Eq. Pl. § 349. Not if made under the bankrupt law of 1841; Cleveland v. Boerum, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 252.

The same may be said of a voluntary assignment of all his interest by a sole complainant: 5 Hare 223; Story, Eq. Pl. § 349.

A debtor need not pay to either party pendente lite; Mills v. Pittman, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 490.

The doctrine of lis pendens is modified in many of the states, and by statutes requiring records of the attachment to preliminary proceedings to be made, and constituting such records notice.

The phrase is sometimes incorrectly used as a substitute for auter action pendant, (q. v.). See City Bank of New Orleans v. Walden, 1 La. Ann. 46; Bennett v. Chase, 21 N. H. 570.

"It is part of our fast decaying real property system; it belongs to the palmy days of conveyancing." 11 Law. Quart. Rev. 6.

See Wade, Notice; Whitney, Lis Pendens; Newman v. Chapman, 2 Rand. (Va.) 93, 14 Am. Dec. 774; Green v. Rick, 121 Pa. 130, 15 Atl. 497, 6 Am. St. Rep. 760, 2 L. R. A. 48, and note.

LIST. A table of cases arranged for trial or argument; as, the trial list, the argument list.

A list may consist of a single item; Homer v. Cilley, 14 N. H. 85. See Harrison v. Com., 83 Ky. 162. Where a notice is required to be directed to a person at his abode as described in a list of voters, it must be at the place therein mentioned, even if erroneous; L. R. 9 C. P. 233. The subscription list of a newspaper is property only as connected with the newspaper plant and not separate from it; McFarland v. Stewart, 2 Watts (Pa.) 111, 26 Am. Dec. 109. See 1 Pars. 270; Wilson v. Davis, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 521. See CIVIL LIST.

LISTERS. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables. See Vt. Rev. Stat.

LITE PENDENTE. Pending suit. See LIS PENDENS.

LITERÆ. Letters. A term which in old English law was applied to instruments in writing, public and private.

LITERÆ MORTUÆ. Read letters; fulfilling words of a statute. Bacon, Works IV. 189.

LITERÆ PATENTES. Letters patent. Literally, open letters.

LITERÆ PROCURATORIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Letters procuratory. A written authority, or power of attorney (litera attornati), given to a procurator. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.; Bracton, fol. 40–43.

LITERAL. According to the language; following the exact words. Literal construction of a document, adheres closely to the words, making no difference for extrinsic circumstances.

LITERAL CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration. Lec. Elém. § 887.

LITERAL PROOF. In Civil Law. Written evidence.

LITERARY OR SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION. A college fraternity house is not such within the meaning of a statute exempting them from taxation; Inhabitants of Orono v. Kappa Sigma Society, 108 Me. 320, 80 Atl. 831.

LITERARY PROPERTY. The general term which describes the interest of an author in his works, or of those who claim under him, whether before or after publication, or before or after a copyright has been secured. 9 Am. L. Reg. 44; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 379; id., 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 49; 2 Bla. Com. 405; 4 Viner Abr. 278; Bacon Abr. Prorogation (F 5); 2 Kent 306; Nickl. Lit. Prop.; Shortt, Copyr.; Morgan, Law of Lit. A person has a property in his literary productions, and by the common law, as long as they are kept within his possession, he has the same right of exclusive enjoyment of them as of any other species of personal property; Rees v. Peltzer, 75 Ill. 475. See 4 H. L. C. 962; Kiernan v. Telegraph Co., 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 194. So of a painting; Caliga v. Newspaper Co., 157 Fed. 186, 84 C. C. A. 634. He loses his rights if he offers such property to the public for sale without being copyrighted; Bamforth v. Mach. Co., 158 Fed. 355.

At common law, the author of a literary composition, drama, music, art, etc., had an absolute right therein while unpublished; the author might permit the use of his production, and might give a copy thereof, without parting with his property right; an author does not lose his right to a play by a public representation; Frohman v. Ferris, 238 Ill. 430, 87 N. E. 327, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639, 128 Am. St. Rep. 135, affirmed in 223 U. S. 424, 32 Sup. Ct. 263, 56 L. Ed. 492 (it appeared here that there had been a public performance of the play in England and that such performance there was under the English law equivalent to a publication).

The publication of a book as that of another, when in fact it is not such, is said to constitute such an injury as entitles such other person to an injunction, although the misrepresentation does not amount to the infringement of a copyright; the case is not altered by the fact that the representation is true in part, if the public are likely to be misled to the plaintiff's injury; 1 Spelling, Extr. Rel. 887.

An injunction was granted at the suit of Lord Byron to prevent the publication in his name or as his work of poems proved not to have been written by him; 2 Meriv. 29; and at the suit of Bret Harte to prevent the publication of a book in such manner as to lead the public to suppose he had written it when he had actually written but a small portion; 1 Cent. L. J. 360.

Where a plaintiff refused to edit a new edition of a law book written by him, the copyright of which was owned by the defendant, and the latter had the necessary alterations made for himself and the work (containing numerous errors) published without notice that it was not prepared by the original author, the jury were instructed to find for the plaintiff if they believed that the new edition would be understood by those who bought it to have been prepared by the plaintiff; 5 C. & P. 219.

An injunction was refused to prevent the publication under plaintiff's name of a mutilated edition of the autobiography of Lord Herbert of Cherbury; 67 L. T. N. S. 263; Kekewich, J., said an action for damages might lie if the writer's reputation were injured.

An injunction was refused a physician who claimed a breach of contract on the part of the publisher of his book. But in this case the contract was to produce a "first class" book from manuscript to be furnished for a medical text book. The contract was held too indefinite to be specifically enforced; Cleveland v. Martin, 218 Ill. 73, 75 N. E. 772, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 629.

In every writing the author has a property at common law, which descends to his representative, but is not liable to seizure by creditors so that they can publish it; Bartlett v. Crittenden, 5 McLean 32, Fed. Cas. No. 1,076. And an unauthorized publication will be restrained in equity; 4 Burr. 2320, 2408; 2 Bro. P. C. 138; Hoyt v. Mackenzie, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 320, 49 Am. Dec. 178; 2 Mer. 434; 1 Ball & B. 207; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Sto. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901. The passage of the copyright acts has not abrogated the common-law rights of an author to his unpublished manuscript, and for a wanton infringement of his rights, exemplary damages may be given; Press Pub. Co. v. Monroe, 73 Fed. 196, 19 C. C. A. 429, 51 L. R. A. 353. Letters are embraced within this principle; for, although the receiver has a qualified property in them, the right to object to their publication remains with the writer. It is held, however, that the receiver may publish them for the purposes of justice publicly administered, or to vindicate his character from an accusation publicly made; 2 V. & B. 19; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Stor. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; 2 Atk. 342; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush (Ky.) 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509; Denis v. Le Clerc, 1 Mart. O. S. (La.) 297, 5 Am. Dec. 712; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 379. The receiver may destroy or give away the letters, as soon as received; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush (Ky.) 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509. The latter proposition has been doubted; see Drone, Copyr. 137.

The biographer of Whistler was allowed to use Whistler's letters in his possession as giving him information as to Whistler's habits, character, opinions and doings, but not to publish any quotation from them or the substance of any letter; [1907] 2 Ch. 577.

See COPYRIGHT; MANUSCRIPT; LETTER.

LITERIS OBLIGATIO. In Roman Law. An obligation created by an entry made in one of the books kept by the head of a Roman family, called the codex accepti et expensi. The creditor made an entry to the effect that a certain sum had been paid by him to the debtor, and the debtor made a corresponding entry indicating such a payment to him by the creditor; but it was sufficient if the creditor's entry was made by direction of the debtor, in which case an entry by the debtor was unnecessary. The effect was to constitute an obligation under which the debtor was liable, whether the money was actually paid or not. He was said to be bound literis, i. e. by the writing in the codex as such. The entry itself created the obligation to pay. It was immaterial whether it was based upon an obligation to pay existing in fact.

The item in the codex was called the nomen, and this species of contract might either create an obligation or transform one, i. e. operate as a novation, in which case it was called nomen transcripticium. The literis obligatio was distinguished from the nomen arcarium, another species of entry in the codex accepti et expensi. This has been termed a mere cash item. It was an entry of a concrete or existing ground of obligation, in which case the obligation continued to be based on the loan or depositum, or whatever might be its original character, and was not converted into literis obligatio. In the time of the empire the literal contract fell into disuse.

The three classes of books kept by the paterfamilias were: (1) the liber patrimonii, or libellus familiæ, in which was kept inventories of the property, and liber kalendarii, which was a list of capital sums let out at interest; (2) the codex rationum, which was the regular account book in which were entered receipts and expenses; (3) the codex accepti et expensi, designed not merely to afford evidence of, but also to effect, changes in the state of a person's property.

Gaius, Inst. III, §§ 128-31, describes the literis obligatio as being made in two ways: (1) A re in personam, where the obligation was entered in the form of a debt under the name of the original purchaser or debtor; (2) a persona in personam, where a debt already standing under one nomen was transferred by novation from that one to another. Some writers lay great stress upon the fact that the obligation a re in personam was first entered as a memorandum in a day book or waste book (adversaria ephemeris), but it has been truly remarked that this fact, although indisputable, has no legal importance; and this is apparent from the nature of the two transactions.

There is some difference in the statement of these obligations by different authors, but that which is here given is the result of the more recent investigations, having been established by Voigt, Abhandl. der Koen. Saechs. Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, vol. 10, 515.

See Sohm., Inst. Rom. L. § 68 and note 1, where reference may be found to the authors on the subject.

LITIGANT. One engaged in a suit.

LITIGATION. A contest, authorized by law, in a court of justice, for the purpose of enforcing a right.

The prime object of all litigation is to establish a right asserted by the plaintiff or to sustain a defence asserted by the party pursued; Tyler v. Judges of Court of Registration, 179 U. S. 406, 21 Sup. Ct. 206, 45 L. Ed. 252, per Brown, J.

Facts have been litigated when they were necessarily within the issue presented in a judicial proceeding, so that the judgment could not have been rendered without proof of them; Eastman v. Symonds, 108 Mass. 567.

LITIGIOUS. That which is the subject of a suit or action; that which is contested in a court of justice. In another sense, litigious signifies a disposition to sue; a fondness for litigation. See VEXATIOUS ACTIONS ACT.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A church is said to be litigious, when two rival presentations are offered to the bishop upon the same avoidance of the living. 3 Steph. Com. 417.

LITIGIOUS RIGHTS. In French Law. Those which are or may be contested either in whole or in part, whether an action has been commenced, or when there is reason to apprehend one. Pothier, Vente, n. 584; Prevost's Heirs v. Johnson, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 183; Troplong, De la Vente, n. 984 à 1003; Eva. Civ. Code, art. 2623; id. 3522, n. 22. See CONTENTIOUS JURISDICTION.

LITIS ÆSTIMATIO. The measure of damages (q. v.).

LITIS CONTESTATIO. In Civil Law. The process by which a suit is contested by the opposing statements of the respective parties, to attain an issue; the issue itself.

In the ecclesiastical courts in England every pleading had first to be submitted to the judge and receive his approval. He might, after argument, admit or reject it, or order it to be amended. When the libel was admitted by the judge, the defendant was required to state orally in court whether he admitted or denied the truth; if he denied it, he was said to contest the suit (litis contestatio). This bore no relation to our pleas by way of traverse, nor was it a pleading at all. Langdell, Equity Pleading, citing Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum, tit. 61, where the ceremony of litis contestatio is described.

LITIS DOMINIUM. In Civil Law. Direction of a suit. A fiction of law authorizing the appointment of an attorney, by which appointment he was supposed to become dominus litis.

LITISPENDENCIA. In Spanish Law. Litispendency. The condition of a suit pending in a court of justice.

In order to render this condition valid, it is necessary that the judge be competent to take cognizance of the cause; that the defendant has been duly cited to appear, and fully informed, in due time and form, of the nature of the demand, or that, if he has not, it has been through his own fault or fraud.

The litispendencia produces two effects: the legal impossibility of alienating the property in dispute during the pendency of the suit; the accumulation of all the proceedings in the cause, in the tribunal where the suit is pending, whether the same be had before the same judge or other judges or notaries. This cumulation may be required in any stage of the cause, and forms a valid exception to the further proceeding, until the cumulation is effected. Escriche, Dict.

LITRE. A French measure of capacity. It is of the size of a cubic décimètre, or the cube of one-tenth part of a metre. It is equal to 61.027 cubic inches, or a little more than a quart. See MEASURE.

LITTORAL (littus). Belonging to shore: as of sea and great lakes. Webst. Corresponding to riparian proprietors on a stream or small pond are littoral proprietors on a sea or lake. But riparian is also used coextensively with littoral. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 94.

See RIPARIAN OWNERS.

LITURA. In Civil Law. An obliteration or blot in a will or other instrument.

LITUS. In Old European Law. A person who surrendered himself into another's power; a kind of servant.

LITUS MARIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Shore; beach. Qua fluctus cluderet. Cic. Top. c. 7. Qua fluctus adludit. Quinct. lib. 5, c. ult. Quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. Celsus. Said to have been first so defined by Cicero, in an award as arbitrator. L. 92, D, de verb signif. Qua maximus fluctus exæstuat. L. 112, D, eod. tit. Quatenus hibernus fluctus maximus excurrit. Inst. lib. 2, de rer. divis. et qual. § 3. That is to say, as far as the largest winter wave runs up. Vocab. Jur. Utr.

At Common Law. The shore between common high-water mark and low-water mark. Hale, de Jure Maris, cc. 4, 5, 6; 3 Kent 427; 2 Hill. R. P. 90.

Shore is also used of a river. Handly v. Anthony, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 385, 5 L. Ed. 113; Starr v. Child, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 149. See Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 How. (U. S.) 381, 14 L. Ed. 189; Littlefield v. Littlefield, 28 Me. 180; McCullough v. Wainright, 14 Pa. 171. See SHORE; FORESHORE.

LIVE. "Live animals" has been held to include singing birds. Reich v. Smythe, 7 Blatchf. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 11,666. "Live stock" has been held not to include live fowls. Matilda v. Lewis, 5 Blatchf. 520, Fed. Cas. No. 9,281.

LIVE AND RESIDE. Where, in the gift of a house, there was a condition that the donee should "live and reside" therein, it was held that the word "live" added nothing to its point. T. & R. 530.

LIVELIHOOD. Means of subsistence or maintaining life; means of living. 3 Atk. 399; Torbert v. Twining, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 432. See 16 East 147; 5 L. J. Ex. 263.

LIVERY. In English Law. The delivery of possession of lands to those tenants who hold of the king in capite or by knight's service.

The name of a writ which lay for the heir of age to obtain possession of the seisin of his lands at the king's hands; abolished by stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24. Fitzh. N. B. 155; 2 Bla. Com. 68.

The distinguishing dress worn by the servants of a gentleman or nobleman, or by the members of a particular guild. "Livery or clothing." Say. 274. By stat. 1 Rich. II. c. 7, and 16 Rich. II. c. 4, none but the servants of a lord, and continually dwelling in his house, or those above the rank of yeomen, should wear the lord's livery.

The clothes supplied by a master for his servants' use belong to the master; 3 C. & P. 470. See Stubbs, Const. Hist. 470.

Privilege of a particular company or guild. The members of such company are called liverymen. Whart. Lex.

LIVERY IN CHIVALRY. In Feudal Law. The delivery of the property of a ward in chivalry out of the guardian's hands, upon the heir's attaining the required age. 2 Bla. Com. 68.

LIVERY OF SEISIN. In Estates. A delivery of possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments unto one entitled to the same. This was a ceremony used in the common law for the conveyance of real estate; and livery was in deed, which was performed by the feoffer and the feoffee going upon the land and the latter receiving it from the former; or in law, where the same was not made on the land, but in sight of it; 2 Bla. Com. 315.

In America livery of seisin is unnecessary, it having been dispensed with either by express law or by usage. The delivery and recording of the deed have the same effect; 1 Washb. R. P., 5th ed. *14, 34. In Maryland, until more recent times, it seems that a deed could not operate as a feoffment without livery of seisin; but under the Rev. Code of 1878, art. 44, § 6, neither livery of seisin nor indenting is necessary; Carroll v. Norwood's Heirs, 5 H. & J. (Md.) 158. See 4 Kent 381; Perry v. Price, 1 Mo. 553; Davis v. Mason, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 508, 7 L. Ed. 239; Lessee of Rugge v. Ellis, 1 Bay (S. C.) 107; Dane, Abr.; SEISIN; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L.; Maitland, Mystery of Seisin.

Feoffment by livery of seisin was, till the Statute of Uses, the normal assurance of freehold interests in land. The livery of seisin was the essential part of the conveyance.

LIVERY OFFICE. In Old English Law. An office for the delivery of lands.

LIVERY STABLE. A place where horses are groomed, fed, and hired, and where vehicles are let. Williams v. Garignes, 30 La. Ann. 1095.

A liveryman who lets a horse does not warrant that it is free from defects which he does not know of, and could not have discovered by the exercise of due care; and where a person is injured through such defects, the liveryman is not liable; Copeland v. Draper, 157 Mass. 558, 32 N. E. 944, 19 L. R. A. 283, 34 Am. St. Rep. 314.

Under the contract of bailment he is required to exercise ordinary care over the property entrusted to him. He is liable for the negligence of his servants in the performance of any duty in regard to the care and custody of the property, within the general scope of his own employment; Eaton v. Lancaster, 79 Me. 480, 10 Atl. 449.

LIVERYMAN. A liveryman who hires out a horse and driver is a private, and not a common, carrier. He is required only to "exercise the usual care, skill and diligence ordinarily exercised by those engaged in the same pursuit"; Payne v. Halstead, 44 Ill. App. 97; McGregor v. Gill, 114 Tenn. 521, 86 S. W. 318, 108 Am. St. Rep. 919; relations between the hirer and the liveryman are those of bailor and bailee; Gibson v. R. Co., 226 Pa. 198, 75 Atl. 194, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689, 18 Ann. Cas. 535. If the horse was not reasonably safe, and this fact was known to him, or could, by reasonable care, have been known to him, he is liable in case of an accident; Nisbet v. Wells, 76 S. W. 120, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 511; Conn v. Hunsberger, 224 Pa. 154, 73 Atl. 324, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 372, 132 Am. St. Rep. 770, 16 Ann. Cas. 504; Lynch v. Richardson, 163 Mass. 160, 39 N. E. 801, 47 Am. St. Rep. 444. If he negligently furnishes an unsuitable horse, it is no defense that he did not know it was such; Horne v. Meakin, 115 Mass. 326. It is his duty to notify a customer of any vicious propensity of his horse; Ohlweiler v. Lohmann, 88 Wis. 75, 59 N. W. 678; Windle v. Jordan, 75 Me. 149; he must keep safe horses or fully disclose the character of the horse at the time of hiring him; Huntoon v. Trumbull, 12 Fed. 844. The "customer must rely upon the liveryman to guard him against the danger of a vicious animal or defective vehicle"; Conn v. Hunsberger, 224 Pa. 154, 73 Atl. 324, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 372, 132 Am. St. Rep. 770, 16 Ann. Cas. 504; so also L. R. 10 C. P. 90.

Where a liveryman hired a vicious horse, with a carriage and driver, to one who took his wife to drive, and the horse became unmanageable, and both the husband and wife were upset and injured, held that he was liable to the wife, independent of contract, because it was his duty to warn her, and also because, as he kept control of the carriage, he was bound to carry her safely with a proper horse; White and Wife v. Steadman, [1913] 3 K. B. 340.

See LIEN.

LIVING CHILD. A term less broad than "issue living." Buckley v. Frasier, 153 Mass. 527, 27 N. E. 768.

LIVING WITH ME. In a bequest to a servant the phrase "living with me" does not mean living in the testator's house but living in his service. 22 L. J. Ch. 155.

LIVRE TOURNOIS. A coin used in France before the revolution. It is to be computed in the ad valorem duty on goods, etc., at eighteen and a half cents. Act of March 2, 1798, § 61; 1 Story, Laws 629. See FOREIGN COINS.

LLOYD'S. An association in the city of London, the members of which underwrite each other's policies. 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 138, n.

The name is derived from Lloyd's coffee house, the great resort for seafaring men and those doing business with them in the time of William III. and Anne. The affairs of the association are managed by a committee called Lloyd's Committee, who appoint agents in all the principal ports of the world, whose business it is to forward all such maritime news as may be of importance in guiding the judgment of the underwriters. These accounts, which arrive almost hourly from some part of the world, are at once posted up, and are called Lloyd's Shipping Lists. They are subsequently copied into three books, called Lloyd's Book. Lloyd's shipping list, stating the time of a vessel's sailing, is prima facie evidence of what it contains; 11 M. & W. 116; 11 Beav. 283.

See LLOYD'S INSURANCE.

LLOYD'S BONDS. See BONDS.

LLOYD'S INSURANCE. A system of insurance similar to the English Lloyds, which is carried on in the United States by unincorporated associations of individuals. It originated in connection with marine risks, but has now been extended to other kinds of insurance. The principal features of the system are, that each individual assumes a liability for a specific amount; that attorneys or managers are appointed by a power of attorney authorizing them to be sued; that suits are brought against such attorneys or managers; and that each underwriter is bound by the fundamental agreement to accept the result of such suit. Such action may be maintained against the attorneys in fact; Compton v. Beecher, 17 App. Div. 38, 44 N. Y. Supp. 887; and the agreement is not repugnant to public policy; Stieglitz v. Belding, 20 Misc. 297, 45 N. Y. Supp. 670; it is valid to prevent the institution of separate suits where the attorney is an underwriter; Lawrence v. Schaefer, 19 Misc. 239, 42 N. Y. Supp. 992. One who signs such policy as attorney for the underwriters is a "trustee of an express trust," within New York Code Civ. Proc. § 449; Lawrence v. Schaefer, 19 Misc. 239, 42 N. Y. Supp. 992. Proofs of loss are properly served at the office of the association on one acting as its attorney, even if irregularly appointed; Ralli v. White, 21 Misc. 285, 47 N. Y. Supp. 197. The provision for simultaneous contribution and making the liability several, not joint, does not prevent the collection of the full proportion from each where only a portion are served; McAllister v. Hoadley, 76 Fed. 1000.

Such associations have been held subject to prosecution for unlawfully exercising a public franchise; People v. Loew, 19 Misc. 248, 44 N. Y. Supp. 42; State v. Ackerman, 51 Ohio St. 163, 37 N. E. 828, 24 L. R. A. 298; where the forms of organization, power of attorney, and policy may be found. They are not companies; Com. v. Reinoehl, 163 Pa. 287, 29 Atl. 896, 25 L. R. A. 247; State v. Stone, 118 Mo. 388, 24 S. W. 164, 25 L. R. A. 243, 40 Am. St. Rep. 388; Fort v. State, 92 Ga. 8, 18 S. E. 14, 23 L. R. A. 86; and unincorporated persons may be prohibited from being insurers; Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 30 Atl. 217, 25 L. R. A. 250, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603; Arrott v. Walker, 118 Pa. 249, 12 Atl. 280, three judges dissenting.

LOAD-LINE. The depth to which a ship will sink in salt water when loaded.

Every British ship must be marked on each side amidships with a load-line indicating the maximum load-line in salt water, to which it is lawful to load the ship. Sailing ships under eighty tons, fishing ships, and pleasure yachts, also ships employed exclusively in trading in any river or inland water wholly or partly in any British possession, and tugs and passenger steamers plying in smooth water or in excursion limits are excepted. This mark is called Plimsoll's Mark or Line, from Samuel Plimsoll, by whose efforts the passage of an act of parliament to prevent overloading was procured. The law applies to foreign ships while within any port of the United Kingdom, other than such as come into any such port to which they are not bound and for any purpose other than embarking or landing passengers or taking in or discharging cargo or taking in bunker coal. There must also be a mark on each side amidships indicating the position of each deck above water.

LOADMANAGE. See LODEMANAGE.

LOAN. A bailment without reward. A bailment of an article for use or consumption without reward. The thing so bailed.

A loan, in general, implies that a thing is lent without reward; but, in some cases, a loan may be for a reward: as, the loan of money. Nichols v. Fearson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 109, 8 L. Ed. 623.

It would be an inquiry too purely speculative, whether this use of the term loan originated in the times when taking interest was considered usury and improper, the bailment of money which was to be returned in kind. The supposition would furnish a reasonable explanation of the exception to the general rule that loan includes properly only those bailments where no reward is given or received by the bailee.

Within the statutory and constitutional prohibition against the loaning of public funds, with or without interest, a general deposit of such funds by a public officer subject to check is not a loan; Allibone v. Ames, 9 S. D. 74, 68 N. W. 165, 33 L. R. A. 585. See USURY.

LOAN CERTIFICATES. See CLEARING HOUSE.

LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION. A contract by which the owner of a personal chattel, called the lender, delivers it to the bailee, called the borrower, to be returned in kind.

For example, if a person borrows a bushel of wheat, and at the end of a month returns to the lender a bushel of equal value. This class of loans is commonly considered under the head of bailments; but it lacks the one essential element of bailment, that of a return of the property; it is more strictly a barter or an exchange: the property passes to the borrower; Foster v. Pettibone, 7 N. Y. 433, 57 Am. Dec. 530; Story, Bailm. § 439. Those cases, sometimes called mutuum, such as where corn is delivered to a miller to be ground into wheat, are either cases of hiring of labor and service, as where the miller grinds and returns the identical wheat ground into flour, retaining a portion for his services, or constitute a mere exchange, as where he mixes the wheat with his own, undertaking to furnish an equivalent in corn. It amounts to a contract of sale, payment being stipulated for in a specified article instead of money. See IN GENERE; IN KIND; MUTUUM.

LOAN FOR EXCHANGE. A contract by which one delivers personal property to another, and the latter agrees to return to the lender a similar thing, without reward for its use. Cal. Civ. Code § 1902.

LOAN FOR USE (called, also, commodatum). A bailment of an article to be used by the borrower without paying for the use. 2 Kent 573.

An agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another, to use it according to its natural destination, or according to the agreement, under the obligation on the part of the borrower, to return it after he shall have done using it. La. Civ. Code (1889) Art. 2893.

Loan for use (called commodatum in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called mutuum in the civil law) in this, that the commodatum must be specifically returned, the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

The loan, like other bailments, must be of some thing of a personal nature; Story, Bailm. § 223; it must be gratuitous; 2 Ld. Raym. 913; for the use of the borrower, and this as the principal object of the bailment; Story, Bailm. § 225; Carpenter v. Brand, 13 Vt. 161, 37 Am. Dec. 587; and must be lent to be specifically returned at the determination of the bailment; Story, Bailm. § 228.

The general law of contracts governs as to the capacities of the parties and the character of the use; Story, Bailm. §§ 50, 162, 302, 380. He who has a special property may loan the thing, and this even to the general owner, and the possession of the general owner still be that of a borrower; 8 Term 199. 2 Taunt. 268.

The borrower may use the thing himself, but may not, in general, allow others to use it; 1 Mod. 210; Scranton v. Baxter, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 8; during the time and for the purposes and to the extent contemplated by the parties; Wheelock v. Wheelright, 5 Mass. 104; 3 Bingh. N. C. 468. He is bound to use extraordinary diligence; Phillips v. Coudon, 14 Ill. 84; Scranton v. Baxter, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 8; Story, Bailm. § 237; is responsible for accidents, though inevitable, which injure the property during any excess of use; Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 25; must bear the ordinary expenses of the thing; Jones, Bailm. 67; and restore it at the time and place and in the manner contemplated by the contract; Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 25; Clapp v. Nelson, 12 Tex. 373, 62 Am. Dec. 530; Story, Bailm. § 99; including, also, all accessories; Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 25; 2 Kent 566. As to the place of delivery, see Esmay v. Fanning, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 189; Aldrich v. Albee, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 120, 10 Am. Dec. 45; Mason v. Briggs, 16 Mass. 453. He must, as a general rule, return it to the lender; Edson v. Weston, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 278; 1 B. & Ad. 450.

The lender may terminate the loan at his pleasure; 9 East 49; Putnam v. Wyley, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 432, 5 Am. Dec. 346; Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 25; is perhaps liable for expenses adding a permanent benefit; Story, Bailm. § 274. The lender still retains his property as against third persons, and, for some purposes, his possession; Gelston v. Hoyt, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 561; 1 B. & Ald. 59. As to whether the property is transferred by a recovery of judgment for its value, see 26 E. L. & Eq. 328; White v. Philbrick, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 147, 17 Am. Dec. 214; Campbell v. Phelps, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 62, 11 Am. Dec. 139. See, generally, Edwards; Jones; Story, Bailments; Kent, Lect. 46; BAILMENT.

LOAN SOCIETIES. In English Law. A kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes. They are authorized and regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. ch. 110, and 21 Vict. ch. 19.

See BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS.

LOBBYIST. One who makes it a business to procure the passage of bills pending before a legislative body.

One "who makes it a business to 'see' members and procure, by persuasion, importunity, or the use of inducements, the passing of bills, public as well as private, which involve gain to the promoters." 1 Bryce, Am. Com. 156.

A contract for the employment of personal influence or solicitation to procure the passage of a public or private law is void; Rose v. Truax, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 361; Marshall v. R. Co., 16 How. (U. S.) 314, 14 L. Ed. 953; Powers v. Skinner, 34 Vt. 274, 80 Am. Dec. 677; Burke v. Wood, 162 Fed. 533; Houlton v. Dunn, 60 Minn. 26, 61 N. W. 698, 30 L. R. A. 737, 51 Am. St. Rep. 493; Sweeney v. McLeod, 15 Or. 330, 15 Pac. 275; as contrary to sound morals and tending to inefficiency in the public service; Houlton v. Nichol, 93 Wis. 393, 67 N. W. 715, 33 L. R. A. 166, 57 Am. St. Rep. 928; if by its terms or by necessary implication, it stipulates for, or tends to, corrupt action or personal solicitations; Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 45, 17 L. Ed. 868; Elkhart County Lodge v. Crary, 98 Ind. 238, 49 Am. Rep. 746; Winpenny v. French, 18 Ohio St. 469; Spalding v. Ewing, 149 Pa. 375, 24 Atl. 219, 15 L. R. A. 727, 34 Am. St. Rep. 308. And if the contract is broad enough to cover services of any kind, either secret or open, honest or dishonest, the law pronounces a ban upon the contract itself; Weed v. Black, 2 McArth. (D. C.) 268, 29 Am. Rep.

618. It is not required that it tends to corruption. If its effect is to mislead, it is decisive against the claimant. It may not corrupt all, but if it corrupt or tend to corrupt some, or if it deceive or tend to deceive some, that is sufficient to stamp its character with the seal of reprobation before a judicial tribunal; Clippinger v. Hepbaugh, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 315, 40 Am. Dec. 519; Ormerod v. Dearman, 100 Pa. 561, 45 Am. Rep. 391. But it has been held that though the contract contemplates the use of personal solicitation, yet if no personal influence is brought to bear upon the members, and no dishonest, secret, or unfair means employed, to accomplish the object, it is not illegal; Foltz v. Cogswell, 86 Cal. 542, 25 Pac. 60.

Where the agreement is for compensation contingent upon success, it suggests the use of sinister and corrupt means for the accomplishment of the desired end. The law meets the suggestion of evil and strikes down the contract from its inception; Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 45, 17 L. Ed. 868; Elkhart County Lodge v. Crary, 98 Ind. 238, 49 Am. Rep. 746; and see Houlton v. Dunn, 60 Minn. 26, 61 N. W. 698, 30 L. R. A. 737, 51 Am. St. Rep. 493. But if the contract does not by its terms or by necessary implication contain anything illegal or tend to any violation of sound morals, the fatal element should not, through an overzealous desire to fortify against the deplorable effects of lobbying contracts, be injected into it by mere suspicion and conjecture that the party intended to do an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means. Presumptions in human affairs are in favor of innocence rather than of guilt, and this rule applies in testing a contract; Houlton v. Nichol, 93 Wis. 393, 67 N. W. 715, 33 L. R. A. 166, 57 Am. St. Rep. 928. In the last two cases, brought by the same plaintiff, the contracts were somewhat similar; but in the first the decision was based mainly on what was done under and before the contract was entered into, whilst that of the latter was upon the construction of the contract.

A contract for services as an attorney before a legislative body is valid; McBratney v. Chandler, 22 Kan. 692, 31 Am. Rep. 213; and where it contains an agreement to labor faithfully before such body to effect the desired end, it is not necessarily illegal; Powers v. Skinner, 34 Vt. 275, 80 Am. Dec. 677. It is allowable to employ counsel to appear before a legislative committee or the legislature itself to advocate or oppose a measure in which the individual has an interest; Lyon v. Mitchell, 36 N. Y. 241, 93 Am. Dec. 502; and an agent may be authorized by the legislature to prosecute claims on behalf of the state which require the procurement of legislation, for a contingent fee; Davis v. Com., 164 Mass. 241, 41 N. E. 292, 30 L. R. A. 743. Services which are intended to reach only the reason of those sought to be influenced rest on the same principles of ethics as professional services and are no more exceptionable. They include drafting the petition which sets forth the claim, attending to the taking of testimony, collecting facts, preparing arguments and submitting them orally or in writing to a committee, and other services of a like character; but such services are separated by a broad line of demarcation from personal solicitation, and though compensation can be recovered for them when they stand alone, yet when they are blended and confused with those which are forbidden, the whole is a unit and indivisible, and that which is bad destroys the good; Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 441, 22 L. Ed. 623.

Acts exist in some states regulating lobbying.

LOCAL. Relating to place. A particular place.

LOCAL ACTION. In Practice. An action the cause of which could have arisen in some particular county or district only.

All local actions must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose.

In general, all actions are local which seek the recovery of real property; 2 W. Bla. 1070; 4 Term 504; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Cullers, 81 Tex. 382, 17 S. W. 19, 13 L. R. A. 542; whether founded upon contract or not; or damages for injury to such property, as waste, under the statute of Gloucester, trespass quare clausum fregit, trespass or case for injuries affecting things real, as for nuisances to houses or lands, disturbance of rights of way or of common, obstruction or diversion of ancient watercourses; 1 Chitty, Pl. 271; Gould, Pl. § 105; Du Breuil v. Pennsylvania Co., 130 Ind. 137, 29 N. E. 909; but not if there was a contract between the parties on which to ground an action; Sumner v. Finegan, 15 Mass. 284; Lewis v. Martin, 1 Day (Conn.) 263.

Many actions arising out of injuries to local rights are local: as, quare impedit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 241. The action of replevin is also local; 1 Wms. Saund. 247, n. 1; Gould, Pl. § 111. See Com. Dig. Action; TRANSITORY ACTION.

LOCAL ALLEGIANCE. The allegiance due to a government from an alien while within its limits. 1 Bla. Com. 370; 2 Kent 63.

LOCAL COURTS. Courts limited to a particular territory or district. The term frequently signifies the state courts in opposition to the United States courts.

LOCAL FREIGHT. Freight shipped from either terminus to a way station, or vice versa, or from one way station to another,—that is over a part of a railroad only. Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 579.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT. The government of a particular locality; the governmental authority of a municipal corporation over its individual affairs by virtue of power delegated to it by the general government.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD. A department of State in Great Britain created in 1871 to concentrate in one department of the government the supervision of the laws relating to public health, the relief of the poor, and local government. The president is usually a member of the cabinet and has a staff of permanent assistants. The lord president of the council, all the secretaries of state, the lord privy seal, and the chancellor of the exchequer are ex officio members. It has the power of making regulations which have the effect of statutes. It has complete control in poor law matters; very important powers relating to the pollution of streams; the adulteration of food, etc.; vaccination; the supervision of loans by local authorities and auditing their accounts. Local authorities may ask its advice; it may investigate as to the outbreak of diseases; and must report specially as to all bills relating to public matters. See 7 Encyc. Laws of England.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT. It is not the agency used or its comparative durability which must determine whether the work is an improvement. . . . The only essential element of a local improvement is that it shall benefit the property on which the cost is assessed in a manner local in its nature, and not enjoyed by property generally; State v. Reis, 38 Minn. 371, 38 N. W. 97.

A city having power to make local improvements by special assessment and taxation has implied power to declare what are local improvements, where such declaration is not made arbitrarily or unreasonably, or without reference to benefits; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. City of Decatur, 154 Ill. 173, 38 N. E. 626; but the decision of a city council that a proposed act constitutes a local improvement within the statute authorizing such improvement is not conclusive; City of Chicago v. Blair, 149 Ill. 310, 36 N. E. 829, 24 L. R. A. 412.

See ASSESSMENT; TAX.

LOCAL LAW. One that in fact, even if not in form, is directed only to a specific spot. Gray v. Taylor, 227 U. S. 51, 33 Sup. Ct. 199, 57 L. Ed. 413. See STATUTE.

LOCAL OPTION. A term often used to designate a right granted by legislative enactments to the inhabitants of particular districts, to determine by ballot whether or not licenses shall be issued for the sale of intoxicating liquors within such districts.

An act of this character passed in Delaware in 1847 was declared unconstitutional as an attempted delegation of the power to make laws, confided to the legislature; Rice v. Foster, 4 Harr. (Del.) 479; so, also, in Indiana and Iowa; Maize v. State, 4 Ind. 342; Groesch v. State, 42 Ind. 547; Geebrick v. State, 5 Ia. 495. This kind of legislation has been supported, however, as falling within the class of police regulations; Com. v. Bennett, 108 Mass. 27. In Pennsylvania, Agnew, J., in a leading opinion on this subject, says the true distinction is this: "The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend;" Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716. The weight of authority is in favor of the constitutionality of local option laws; State v. Court of Common Pleas, 36 N. J. L. 72, 13 Am. Rep. 422; State v. Wilcox, 42 Conn. 364, 19 Am. Rep. 546; Fell v. State, 42 Md. 71, 20 Am. Rep. 83; Ex parte Swann, 96 Mo. 44, 9 S. W. 10; State v. Watts, 111 Mo. 553, 20 S. W. 237; Friesner v. Common Council, 91 Mich. 504, 52 N. W. 18. The Texas act is valid; Rippey v. State (Tex.) 73 S. W. 15, affirmed in 193 U. S. 504, 24 Sup. Ct. 516, 48 L. Ed. 767.

That the general liquor law is suspended while the local option law is in operation is held; Stringer v. State, 32 Fla. 238, 13 South. 450; Batty v. State, 114 Ga. 79, 39 S. E. 918; Norton v. State, 65 Miss. 297, 3 South. 665; State v. Beam, 51 Mo. App. 368; Boone v. State, 12 Tex. App. 184. These cases hold that one cannot be convicted under the general law for selling intoxicating liquors without a license when the local option law which prohibits the issuing of licenses is in force; contra, Com. v. Barbour, 121 Ky. 463, 89 S. W. 479, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 620; State v. Smiley, 101 N. C. 709, 7 S. E. 904; Webster v. Com., 89 Va. 154, 15 S. E. 513.

An act submitting to the voters of any district the question of local tax for public school is valid; Coleman v. Board of Education of Emanuel County, 131 Ga. 643, 63 S. E. 41; or the question of the adoption of an act for restraining domestic animals; State v. Mathis, 149 N. C. 546, 63 S. E. 99. So the submission of a charter to the voters of a city; Graham v. Roberts, 200 Mass. 152, 85 N. E. 1009.

See 12 Cent. L. J. 123; 12 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 133; Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 145. See DELEGATION; LIQUOR LAWS; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

LOCAL PREJUDICE. Prejudice or influence warranting the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court. Neal v. Foster, 31 Fed. 53. See REMOVAL; VENUE.

LOCAL STATUTES. See STATUTE.

LOCAL VENUE. In Pleading. A venue which must be laid in a particular county.

LOCATAIRE. In French Law. A lessee, tenant, or renter.

LOCATARIUS. A depositee.

LOCATE. To ascertain the place in which something belongs, as to locate the calls in a deed or survey; to determine the place to which something shall be assigned; to fix or establish the situation of anything. Abbott.

LOCATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Letting for hire. Calvinus, Lex.; Voc. Jur. Utr. The term is also used by textwriters upon the law of bailment at common law. 2 Pars. Contr., 8th ed. 121. In Scotch law it is location. Bell, Dict.

LOCATIO CONDUCTIO REI. See HIRE.

LOCATIO CUSTODIÆ. In Civil Law. The receiving of goods on deposit for reward.

LOCATIO OPERIS FACIENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Hire of services to be performed. See HIRE.

LOCATIO OPERIS MERCIUM VEHENDARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The carriage of goods for hire.

LOCATIO REI. A hiring by which the hirer gains the use of the thing. See BAILMENT.

LOCATION. The act of selecting and designating lands which the person making the location is authorized by law to select.

It is applied among surveyors who are authorized by public authority to lay out lands by a particular warrant. The act of selecting the land designated in the warrant and surveying it is called its location. In Pennsylvania, it was an application made by any person for land in the office of the secretary of the late land office of Pennsylvania, and entered in the books of said office, numbered and sent to the surveyor-general's office. Act June 25, 1781, § 2. It is often applied to denote the act of selecting and marking out the line upon which a railroad, canal, or highway is to be constructed.

In Mining Law. A parcel of land appropriated according to certain established rules, such as placing on the ground, in a conspicuous position, a notice setting forth the name of the locator, the fact that it is thus taken or located, with the requisite description of the extent and boundaries of the parcel according to the local custom. St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 649, 26 L. Ed. 875. See U. S. R. S. § 2324.

A location cannot be validated by subsequent discovery; a prior discovery is necessary; Upton v. Larkin, 7 Mont. 449, 17 Pac. 728. See LANDS, PUBLIC.

LOCATIVE CALLS. Calls or requirements of a deed, etc., for certain landmarks, describing certain means by which the land to be located can be identified.

Reference to physical objects in entries and deeds, by which the land to be located is exactly described. Hite v. Graham, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 145; Baker v. Hardin, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 414.

Special, as distinguished from general, calls or descriptions. Johnson v. Pannel, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 211, 4 L. Ed. 221; Holmes v. Trout, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 171, 8 L. Ed. 647; Smith v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 445; Riley v. Griffin, 16 Ga. 141, 60 Am. Dec. 726; Hunt v. Francis, 5 Ind. 302; McGill v. Somers, 15 Mo. 80.

LOCATOR. In Civil Law. He who leases or lets a thing for hire to another. His duties are, first, to deliver to the hirer the thing hired, that he may use it; second, to guarantee to the hirer the free enjoyment of it; third, to keep the thing hired in good order in such manner that the hirer may enjoy it; fourth, to warrant that the thing hired has not such defects as to destroy its use. Pothier, Contr. de Louage, n. 53.

One who locates, or surveys lands.

The claim of a "locator" is peculiar to Kentucky, and is for a portion of the land located in compensation for his services; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 446, 7 L. Ed. 903. See LANDS, PUBLIC.

LOCATUM. A hiring. See BAILMENT.

LOCK OUT. See STRIKE.

LOCK-UP HOUSE. A place used temporarily as a prison.

LOCO PARENTIS. See IN LOCO PARENTIS.

LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE. An engine which moves cars by its own forward and backward motion. Stranahan v. Ry. Co., 84 N. Y. 314. An ordinance regulating the speed of cars includes a locomotive engine; East St. Louis Connecting Ry. Co. v. O'Hara, 150 Ill. 587, 37 N. E. 917.

See SAFETY APPLIANCE ACT.

LOCUM TENENS. Holding the place of another. A deputy. See LIEUTENANT.

LOCUS CONTRACTUS. See LEX LOCI.

LOCUS CRIMINIS. The locality or place of a crime.

LOCUS DELICTI. The place where the tort, offence, or injury has been committed.

LOCUS IN QUO (Lat. the place in which). The place where anything is alleged to have been done. 1 Salk. 94.

LOCUS PARTITUS. In Old English Law. A division made between two towns or counties to make trial where the land or place in question lies. Fleta, l. 4, c. xv.

LOCUS PŒNITENTIÆ (Lat. a place of repentance). The opportunity of withdrawing from a projected contract, before the parties are finally bound; or of abandoning the intention of committing a crime, before it has been completed. 2 Bro. C. C. 569. Until an offer is accepted by the offeree the party making it may withdraw it at any time. So of a bid at auction. "An auction is not inaptly called locus pœnitentiæ." 3 Term 148.

The expression has a broader use; it is said, arguendo, by Mr. Elihu Root in Harriman v. Securities Co., 197 U. S. 281, 25 Sup. Ct. 493, 49 L. Ed. 739, that this doctrine is available only to those who seasonably seek to make restitution and to withdraw from their illegal executory contract, and that laches is a fatal vice, citing many cases.

See ATTEMPT; CONTRACT; REFUSAL.

LOCUS REI SITÆ. See LEX REI SITÆ.

LOCUS SIGILLI (Lat.). The place of the seal.

In many of the states, instead of sealing deeds, writs, and other papers or documents requiring it, a scroll is made, in which the letters L. S. are printed or written, which is an abbreviation of locus sigilli. This in some of the states, has all the efficacy of a seal, but in others it has no such effect. See SCROLL; SEAL.

LOCUS STANDI (a place of standing). A right of appearance in a court of justice or before a legislative body, on a given question. A right to be heard.

It is commonly used in England in reference to parliamentary practice and usually as to the passage of private bills. There is a series of reports called Locus Standi Reports in the Court of Referees. See May, Parl. Pr. 761; 9 Jurid. Rev. 47, 206; REFEREES.

In private bill legislation in the British Parliament an outsider contestant on the basis of interest in the bill must prove the ground of his appointment in order to obtain a locus standi. If his right to appear is contested, the question of his locus standi, if in the commission, is determined by the Court of Referees, composed chiefly of members of the House of Commons, or if in the Lords, it is determined by the committee who is in charge of the bill.

LODE. A body of mineral or mineral-bearing rock located within defined boundaries within the general mass of the mountain. Stevens v. Williams, 1 McCrary, 480, Fed. Cas. No. 13,413; Buffalo Zinc & Copper Co. v. Crump, 70 Ark. 525, 69 S. W. 572, 91 Am. St. Rep. 87.

A body of mineral or mineral-bearing rock in the general mass, so far as it may continue unbroken and without interruption, whatever the boundaries may be. Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 143 U. S. 394, 12 Sup. Ct. 543, 36 L. Ed. 201; Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Cheesman, 116 U. S. 529, 6 Sup. Ct. 481, 29 L. Ed. 712.

A lode must be held "in place" by the adjoining country rock and must be impregnated with some of the minerals or valuable deposits mentioned in the act of congress; Meydenbauer v. Stevens, 78 Fed. 787; to an extent sufficient to warrant a prudent man in spending money on it, though it may not contain ore in paying quantities; Muldrick v. Brown, 37 Or. 185, 61 Pac. 428. The mineralized matter must be separated from the neighboring rock by well-defined boundaries; Hayes v. Lavagnino, 17 Utah 185, 53 Pac. 1029.

If the mineral-bearing rock be present, very slight evidence of the boundaries will be accepted; Grand Central Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 29 Utah 490, 83 Pac. 648; but in such case the value of the material must be so in excess of the country rock as to differentiate it therefrom; id.; it must depend on the characteristics of the district; id. In the absence of well-defined walls, broken and stained, etc., matter characteristic of the district is not a vein; id.

Veins or lodes as used in the statutes mean lines or aggregations of metal embedded in quartz or other rock in place; U. S. v. Mining Co., 128 U. S. 679, 9 Sup. Ct. 195, 32 L. Ed. 571.

"It is difficult to give any definition of the term, as understood and used in the acts of congress, which will not be subject to criticism. A fissure in the earth's crust, an opening in its rocks, a strata made by some force of nature, in which a mineral is deposited, was said to be essential to a lode in the judgment of geologists. But to the practical miner, the fissure and its walls are only of importance as indicating the boundaries within which he may look for and reasonably expect to find the ore he seeks. A continuous body of mineralized rock lying within any other well defined boundaries on the earth's surface and under it, would equally constitute in his eyes a lode. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the term as used in the acts of congress is applicable to any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rock." Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Cheesman, 116 U. S. 529, 6 Sup. Ct. 481, 29 L. Ed. 712, citing Eureka Consol. Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 4 Sawy. 302, Fed. Cas. No. 4,548.

By act of congress the owner of a mineral vein or lode is entitled not only to that which is covered by the surface lines of his established claim, as those lines are extended vertically, but also to the right to possess and enjoy that lode or vein by following it when it passes outside of those vertical lines laterally; Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Cheesman, 116 U. S. 529, 6 Sup. Ct. 481, 29 L. Ed. 712; but this right is dependent upon its being the same vein as that within those limits; and for its exercise, it must appear that the vein outside is identical with and a continuation of the one within these lines; id. See Book v. Mining Co., 58 Fed. 106; LANDS, PUBLIC.

LODE MANAGE. The hire of a pilot, for conducting a ship from one place to another. Cowell.

The Lodesmen had a monopoly of pilotage in the Cinque Ports (q. v.). Their society was controlled by the court of lodemanage, which was transferred to the trinity house in 1853. See Lyons, Cinque Ports.

LODGE. To make, prefer, as to lodge a complaint or information; to deposit or file with.

LODGER. One who inhabits a portion of a house of which another has the general possession and custody.

It is difficult to state exactly the distinctions between a lodger, a guest, and a boarder. A person may be a guest at an inn without being a lodger; Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280, 20 Am. Dec. 471; Peet v. McGraw, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 653; Hickman v. Thomas, 16 Ala. 666; 6 C. B. 132. And boarder includes one who regularly takes his meals with, and forms in some degree a part of, the householder's family; 25 E. L. & Eq. 76. A lodger does not take meals in the house as lodger; but the duration of the inhabitancy is of no importance as determining his character. The difficulty in this respect is in deciding whether a person is an under-tenant, entitled to notice to quit, or merely a lodger, and not entitled to such notice. See Woodf. L. & T., 2d ed. 132, 177; 7 M. & G. 87; BOARDER; GUEST; INN; INNKEEPER.

LODGING HOUSE ACTS. Various acts for the well ordering of common lodging houses, beginning in 1851 with the stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 28.

An act for the regulation and licensing of public lodging houses is a legitimate exercise of the police power; Com. v. Muir, 180 Pa. 47, 36 Atl. 413.

LODS ET VENTES. A fine payable to the seigneur upon every sale of lands within his seigniory. 1 Low. C. 50.

Any transfer of lands for a consideration gives rise to the claim; 1 Low. C. 79; as, the creation of a rente viagire (life-rent) ; 1 Low. C. 84; a transfer under bail emphyteotique; 1 Low. C. 295; a promise to sell, accompanied by transfer of possession; 9 Low. C. 272. It does not arise on a transfer by a father to his son subject to a payment by the son of a life-rent to the father, and of the father's debts; 8 Low. C. 5, 34, 324; nor where property is required for public uses; 1 Low. C. 91.

LOG-BOOK. A ship's journal. It contains a minute account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. 1 Marsh. Ins. 408.

The part of the log-book relating to transactions in the harbor is termed the harbor log; that relating to what happens at sea. the sea log. Young, Naut. Dic.

When a log-book is required by law to be kept, it is an official register so far as regards the transactions required by law to be entered in it, but no further; Abbott, Shipp., 13th ed. 984; Cloutman v. Tunison, 1 Sumn. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 2,907; Orne v. Townsend, 4 Mas. 541, Fed. Cas. No. 10,583; 1 Dods. 9; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 159; Douglass v. Eyre, Gilp. 147, Fed. Cas. No. 4,032.

All vessels making foreign voyages from the United States, or, of the burden of seventy-five tons or more, from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, must have an official log-book; Rev. Stat. § 4290; in which must be entered: Every offence committed by a member of the crew for which it is intended to prosecute or to enforce a forfeiture; every offence for which punishment is inflicted on board, and the punishment inflicted; a statement of the character, conduct, and qualifications of each member of the crew, or a statement that the master declines to give such particulars; every case of illness or of injury to any member of the crew, the nature thereof, and the medical treatment; every death on board and the cause thereof; every birth, with the sex of the infant, and the name of the parents; every marriage, with the names and ages of the parties; the name of any seaman who ceases to be a member of the crew, and the place, time, manner, and cause thereof; a statement of the wages due any seaman or apprentice who dies during the voyage and the gross amount of all deductions to be made; the sale of the effects of the deceased seaman, including a statement of each article sold and the sum received for it. Id. §§ 4290–4292. In case of collision an entry must be made in the log; Act of Feb. 14, 1900.

In suits for seamen's wages, the log-book is to be produced if required, or otherwise the plaintiff may state its contents. The neglect of a seaman to render himself on board, and his absence without leave, are also to be entered on the log-book in certain cases, or the sailor's fault will not forfeit his wages. Acts 20 July, 1790, §§ 2, 5, & 6; 7 June, 1872; 27 Feb. 1877.

In collision actions log-books are not evidence for the ship in which they are kept, though they are against them; L. R. 1 P. C. 378; though the master and mate were both dead; 10 P. D. 31. "An entry made with full knowledge or opportunity of ascertaining the truth must be accepted as the truth when it tells against the party making it, and can be denied no more than a deed"; The Newfoundland, 176 U. S. 97, 20 Sup. Ct. 274, 44 L. Ed. 386.

It is the duty of the mate to keep the log-book. Dana, Seaman's Friend 145, 200.

Every entry shall be signed by the master and mate or some other one of the crew, and shall be made as soon as possible after the occurrence to which it relates. For keeping the log in an improper manner the master is punishable by fine; U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4291, 4292.

LOG ROLLING. Mutual compacts between members of a legislature by which one assists the passage of a bill in which he has no interest in consideration of like assistance from the interested member.

As to constitutional provisions concerning such practices, see HODGE PODGE ACT; STATUTES.

LOGS. The stems or trunks of trees cut into convenient lengths for the purpose of being afterwards manufactured into lumber of various kinds. Kollock v. Parcher, 52 Wis. 398, 9 N. W. 67.

When logs are driven in a navigable stream in an ordinarily skillful and prudent manner, the owner is not liable for damages sustained by a riparian owner; Field v. Log Driving Co., 67 Wis. 569, 31 N. W. 17.

Such logs floating down a stream may be moored to the shore for a reasonable length of time for the purpose of making them into rafts, or for breaking up the rafts, or to enable the owner to sell them; Hayward v. Knapp, 23 Minn. 430. But they may not be so stored as to prevent another from entering with a drive of logs from a tributary; McPheters v. Log Driving Co., 78 Me. 329, 5 Atl. 270; nor may they be run upon adjacent lands or cause water to overflow, to the injury of the riparian proprietor; Haines v. Welch, 14 Or. 319, 12 Pac. 502; Lilley v. Fletcher, 81 Ala. 234, 1 South. 273; or obstruct a landing place on a navigable river; French v. Lumber Co., 145 Mass. 261, 14 N. E. 113; and where a boom obstructs navigation or interferes with the use of a dock built in aid of navigation it is a nuisance; Union Mill Co. v. Shores, 66 Wis. 476, 29 N. W. 243. A state may require all logs running out of a boom to be inspected and scaled; Lindsay & Phelps Co. v. Mullen, 176 U. S. 126, 20 Sup. Ct. 325, 44 L. Ed. 400.

Boom companies are not insurers of the logs collected by their booms, nor are they liable for logs which escape by inevitable accident; Brown v. Boom Co., 109 Pa. 57, 1 Atl. 156, 58 Am. Rep. 708; except where they fail to exercise due care; Holway v. Machias Boom, 90 Me. 125, 37 Atl. 882. Where logs drift from a raft broken by a storm without fault of the owner, he is not obliged to re-capture and remove them, when by so doing he must resort to extraordinary methods and unreasonable expense, in order to escape liability caused by a subsequent storm, although he has not abandoned them; New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. McEwen & Murray, 49 La. Ann. 1184, 22 South. 675, 38 L. R. A. 134.

The intention to abandon logs left upon a rollway so long that they have become imbedded in the earth and covered with grass and bushes is necessary to work a change of title, but it may be inferred from the conduct of the owners and the situation of the property; Log Owners' Booming Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 65, 97 N. W. 157, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 573.

See LIEN; RIVERS; NAVIGABLE WATERS; RIPARIAN RIGHTS; TIMBER; BOOM COMPANIES.

LONDON AND MIDDLESEX SITTINGS. The nisi prius sittings held at Westminster or in the Guildhall of London for the trial of causes arising for the most part in London or Middlesex. 3 Steph. Com. 514. See TERM.

LONDON COURT OF BANKRUPTCY. See COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

LONG PARLIAMENT. The parliament which met November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved (informally) by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653. The same name is also given to the parliament which met in 1661 and was dissolved Dec. 30, 1678. The latter is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "Long Parliament of Charles II." Moz. & W.

LONG QUINTO, THE. An expression used to denote part II. of the year-book which gives reports of cases in 5 Edw. IV. Wallace, Reporters. See YEAR BOOKS.

LONG VACATION. The recess of the English courts from August 12th to October 24th. See TERM.

LONGEVITY PAY. Extra compensation for longevity in actual service in the army or navy. Thornley v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 111.

Its introduction was intended (1) to induce men to enter the service and remain in it for life; (2) to remove the depressing influence of long years of service in one grade without increase of pay; (3) to compensate for increased professional knowledge and efficiency of officers by increasing their pay in advance of promotion. Id.

The act relating to longevity pay deals with credit for length of service and the additional pay which arises therefrom, and not with the matter of regular salary, and it has no reference to benefits derived from promotion to different grades, but is confined to the lowest grade having graduated pay; Barton v. U. S., 129 U. S. 249, 9 Sup. Ct. 285, 32 L. Ed. 663; U. S. v. Alger, 151 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 346, 38 L. Ed. 192; U. S. v. Stahl, 151 U. S. 366, 14 Sup. Ct. 347, 38 L. Ed. 194.

Service as midshipman at a naval academy is service as an officer in the navy as respects longevity pay; U. S. v. Baker, 125 U. S. 646, 8 Sup. Ct. 1022, 31 L. Ed. 824; U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S. 254, 9 Sup. Ct. 108, 32 L. Ed. 464; U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S. 309, 8 Sup. Ct. 507, 31 L. Ed. 465; so is that of a cadet at West Point; U. S. v. Morton, 112 U. S. 1, 5 Sup. Ct. 1, 28 L. Ed. 613; a private in the marine corps who was one of the members of the marine band is entitled to the benefit of the act; U. S. v. Bond, 124 U. S. 301, 8 Sup. Ct. 501, 31 L. Ed. 473; and officers retired from active service; Marshall v. U. S., 124 U. S. 391, 8 Sup. Ct. 520, 31 L. Ed. 475. It is not necessary that one should have entered the service more than once; U. S. v. Mullan, 123 U. S. 186, 8 Sup. Ct. 78, 31 L. Ed. 140; but service in a volunteer regiment will not be included in computing the time of service of an officer; U. S. v. Sweeny, 157 U. S. 281, 15 Sup. Ct. 608, 39 L. Ed. 702.

In a suit for longevity pay, a sum previously paid the claimant for such pay to which he was not entitled, may be deducted from the sum found to be due him; U. S. v. Stahl, 151 U. S. 366, 14 Sup. Ct. 347, 38 L. Ed. 194.

An aid to an admiral is not entitled to have his longevity pay calculated upon the additional pay which he receives as an aid; U. S. v. Miller, 208 U. S. 32, 28 Sup. Ct. 199, 52 L. Ed. 376.

LOOK-OUT. A person upon board a vessel, stationed in a favorable position to see, and near enough to the helmsman to communicate with him, and exclusively employed in watching the movements of other vessels. The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. (U. S.) 462, 13 L. Ed. 1058. See COLLISION; VESSELS; NAVIGATION RULES.

LOQUELA (Lat.). In Practice. An imparlance, loquela sine die, a respite in law to an indefinite time. Formerly by loquela was meant the allegations of fact mutually made on either side, now denominated the pleadings. Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 81.

LORD. In English Law. A person of whom land is held by another as his tenant.

Hereditary peers, and lords of parliament not hereditary peers. It is not at the present time a title of honor in itself, but an appellation of some particular titles of honor or dignities. By custom it extends to the sons of dukes and marquises and the eldest sons of earls. It is also bestowed on certain official persons in respect of their offices, as mayors of cities, the lord chancellor, judges of the High Court, etc. Ency. Laws of Engl.

LORD ADVOCATE. See ADVOCATE.

LORD CHAMBERLAIN. An officer in the sovereign's household, whose chief duties now consist in attending upon and attiring the sovereign at his coronation; in the care of the ancient palace of Westminster, the charge of and furnishing Westminster hall and the houses of parliament on state occasions, and attendance upon peers and bishops at their creation or doing of homage. 2 Enc. of Laws of Engl. 428.

LORD CHANCELLOR. The lord high chancellor of Great Britain is commonly so called. See CHANCELLOR.

LORD CHIEF BARON. The title of the chief judge or baron of the Court of Exchequer. Now obsolete. See LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND; COURTS OF ENGLAND.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE COMMON PLEAS. The title of the chief judge of the Court of Common Pleas. Now obsolete. See LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND. The title of the lord chief justice of the King's Bench, formerly a popular title and first fully recognized by the judicature act, 1873. He is ex officio a judge of the Court of Appeal, and president of the High Court of Justice, in the absence of the lord chancellor. He is the head of the King's Bench Division of the High Court. He has all the statutory powers formerly belonging to the lord chief justice of the Common Pleas and the lord chief baron. He alone is entitled to wear on state occasions the collar of SS. He is appointed by the prime minister.

See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. See CHANCELLOR.

LORD HIGH TREASURER. An officer who had charge of the royal revenues and the leasing of crown lands. His functions are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury. Mozley & W.

LORD IN GROSS. He who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. Whart.

LORD JUSTICE CLERK. In Scotch Law. The second judicial officer in Scotland. See COURTS OF SCOTLAND.

LORD JUSTICE OF APPEAL. In English Law. The title of five of the judges of the Court of Appeal. Jud. Act. 1881, s. 4. They are appointed by the prime minister. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

LORD KEEPER. Keeper of the great seal. See CANCELLARIUS.

LORD LIEUTENANT. In English Law. Lords lieutenants of counties were first appointed about the reign of Henry VIII. as standing representatives of the crown to keep the counties in military order. They succeeded to the duties of sheriffs and justices of the peace. Till 1871 the militia was under the command of the lord lieutenant. They still retain duties for the preservation of peace. They are appointed by the crown, and may appoint deputy-lieutenants. Enc. Laws of Engl. They exist in the counties of England and Wales.

It is also the title of the chief representative of the government in Ireland.

LORD MAYOR. The chief officer of the city of London and some other cities.

LORD MAYOR'S COURT. One of the chief courts of special and local jurisdiction in London. It is a court of the king, held before the lord mayor and aldermen. In this court, the recorder, or, in his absence, the common sergeant, presides as judge; 3 Steph. Com., 316, n.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY. November 9th. It is the day of the inauguration of the lord mayor of London. The banquet has come to be the occasion for an address by a member of the cabinet of political importance.

LORD ORDINARY. In Scotch Law. The judge who officiates in the court of session for the time being.

LORD PRIVY SEAL. See KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL.

LORD STEWARD. The chief officer of a department of the king's household. See COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD.

LORD WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See CINQUE PORTS.

LORD WARDEN OF THE STANNARIES. See STANNARIES.

LORDS APPELLANT. The five peers who superseded Richard II. in his government, and whom he superseded after a brief control of the government.

LORDS COMMISSIONERS. The persons charged with the duties of a high public office which has been put into commission in lieu of being devolved upon an individual officer. See COMMISSIONERS.

LORD'S DAY. Sunday. Co. Litt. 135. It is the legal name of Sunday. 3 Toml. L. Dict. See Maxims, Dies Dominicus.

LORDS MARCHERS. Those noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland; who in times past had their laws and power of life and death, like petty kings. Abolished by 27 Henry VIII. c. 26, and 6 Edw. VI. c. 10.

LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY. Judicial officers, six in number, who sit in the House of Lords when acting as an appellate court. They may sit and vote as Lords of parliament. They also sit in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which see. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

LORDS OF PARLIAMENT. See PARLIAMENT.

LORDS OF TRADE. A standing committee of the British Privy Council, styled "Lords of the Committee of Trade and Plantations," and known as "Lords of Trade" which, after 1675, had the supervision of the American Colonies.

LORDS ORDAINERS. Lords appointed in 1312 for the control of the sovereign and court party for the general reform of the country. Brown.

LORDS SPIRITUAL. See PARLIAMENT.

LORDS TEMPORAL. See PARLIAMENT.

LORDSHIP. Dominion, manor, domain; also a title of honor given to a nobleman. Also given to judges and other persons in authority. See LORD.

LOSS. When used in a statute with reference to a loss of goods by common carriers, loss means injury or damage to the goods, as well as their destruction or disappearance; Hawkins v. Haynes, 71 Ga. 40; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. White & Co., 88 Ga. 805, 15 S. E. 802.

In Insurance. The destruction of or damage to the insured subject by the perils insured against, according to the express provisions and construction of the contract.

These accidents, or misfortunes, or perils, as they are usually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in the policy. And no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils. Marsh. Ins. 1, c. 12.

Loss under a life policy is the death of the subject by a cause the risk of which is not expressly excepted in the policy, and where the loss is not fraudulent, as where one assured, who insures the life of another for his own benefit, procures the death.

Loss in insurance against fire must, under the usual form of policy, be by the partial or total destruction or damage of the thing insured by fire.

In maritime insurance, in which loss by fire is one of the risks usually included, the loss insured against may be absolutely or constructively total, or a partial or general average loss, or a particular average. See AVERAGE.

In other forms of insurance what constitutes a loss is determined by the risks or perils insured against as specified in the policy. As to the various kinds of which see the sub-titles of INSURANCE.

A partial loss is any loss or damage short of, or not amounting to, a total loss: for if it be not the latter it must be the former. See Brewer v. Ins. Co., 12 Mass. 170, 7 Am. Dec. 53; Tucker v. Ins. Co., 12 Mass. 288; Gracie v. Ins. Co., 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 237; Law v. Davy, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 553.

Partial losses are sometimes denominated average losses, because they are often in the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; and they are distinguished into general and particular averages. See AVERAGE.

A total loss is such destruction of, or damage to, the thing insured that it is of little or no value to the owner.

Total losses, in maritime insurance, are absolutely such when the entire thing perishes or becomes of no value. Constructively, a loss may become total where the value remaining is of such a small amount that the whole may be surrendered. See 2 Phill. Ins. ch. xvii.; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. v. Garlington, 66 Tex. 103, 18 S. W. 337, 59 Am. Rep. 613; Natchez & N. O. P. & N. Co. v. Louisville Underwriters, 44 La. Ann. 714, 11 South. 54.

Insurers are not liable upon memorandum articles except in case of actual total loss, and there is no such actual total loss when such articles have arrived in whole or in part at the port of destination; Washburn & Moen Mfg. Co. v. Ins. Co., 179 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 1, 45 L. Ed. 49. See ABANDONMENT.

It is under marine policies that questions of constructive total loss most frequently arise. Such loss may be by capture or seizure by unlawful violence, as piracy; 1 Phil. Ins. § 1106; 2 E. L. & E. 85; or damage to ship or goods over half of the value at the time and place of loss; Bullard v. Ins. Co., 1 Curt. C. C. 148, Fed. Cas. No. 2,122; Greely v. Ins. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 415; or loss of the voyage; De Peyster v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 272, 75 Am. Dec. 331; though the ship or goods may survive in specie, but so as not to be fit for use in the same character for the same service or purpose; Judah v. Randal, 2 Caines, Cas. (N. Y.) 324; Valin, tom. 2, tit. Ass. a. 46; or by jettison; Maggrath & Higgins v. Church, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 196, 2 Am. Dec. 173; or by necessity to sell on account of the action and effect of the peril insured against; Marshall v. Ins. Co., 4 Cra. (U. S.) 202, 2 L. Ed. 596; or by loss of insured freight consequent on the loss of cargo or ship; Whitney v. Ins. Co., 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 208.

A ship became a constructive total loss through stranding and was later totally consumed by fire; under a valued policy, the underwriters were held liable for the loss; 12 L. T. R. 97.

There may be a claim for a total loss in addition to a partial loss; Hugg v. Ins. & Banking Co., 7 How. (U. S.) 595, 12 L. Ed. 834. A total loss of the ship is not necessarily such of cargo; Adams v. Ins. Co., 3 Binn. (Pa.) 287; nor is submersion necessarily a total loss; 7 East 38; nor is temporary delay of the voyage; 5 B. & Ald. 597.

A constructive total loss, and an abandonment thereupon of the ship, is a constructive total loss of freight; and a constructive total loss and abandonment of cargo has a like effect as to commissions or profits thereon; and the validity of the abandonment will depend upon the actual facts at the time of the abandonment, as the same may subsequently prove to have been; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1630; Herbert v. Hallett, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 93. See ABANDONMENT.

An insured cannot recover for a total loss of a vessel, in the absence of proof of abandonment and of notice of the same on the insurer; Gomila v. Ins. Co., 40 La. Ann. 553, 4 South. 490.

In determining the proportion which the cost of repairing a vessel must bear to its value, so as to justify its abandonment to the insurers as a constructive total loss, its value as stated in the policy controls, and not its actual value immediately before the accident; Murray v. Ins. Co., 72 Hun, 282, 25 N. Y. Supp. 414.

Under a fire insurance policy, it is not necessary to show that all the material of the building was destroyed, to sustain a finding of total loss, and where it is such a loss, a provision of the policy limiting the amount to less than the sum written is invalid; Insurance Co. of North America v. Bachler, 44 Neb. 549, 62 N. W. 911; Royal Ins. Co. v. McIntyre, 90 Tex. 170, 37 S. W. 1068, 35 L. R. A. 672, 59 Am. St. Rep. 797. The loss has been held to be total where the building was so injured as to lose its identity; Commercial Union Assur. Co. of London v. Meyer, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 7, 29 S. W. 93; Lindner v. Ins. Co., 93 Wis. 526, 67 N. W. 1125; or so that it was unsafe and was condemned by the municipal authorities; Monteleone v. Ins. Co., 47 La. Ann. 1563, 18 South. 472, 56 L. R. A. 794. But where the roof and interior woodwork of a building were destroyed, leaving the walls standing, it was a question for the jury whether it was a total loss within the meaning of the policy; Corbett v. Ins. Co., 85 Hun 250, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1059.

PROOFS OF LOSS. It is a usual condition in all policies in insurance that immediate notice of loss shall be given by the insured, and generally some time is named within which the proofs of loss shall be given in writing to the company. Compliance with such is a condition precedent, and notice, or waiver of it, must be shown; Western Home Ins. Co. v. Thorp, 48 Kan. 239, 28 Pac. 991; German Ins. Co. of Freeport v. Davis, 40 Neb. 700, 59 N. W. 698; Fink v. Ins. Co., 60 Mo. App. 673; though there is a mortgage clause; Southern Home Building & Loan Ass'n v. Ins. Co., 99 Ga. 65, 24 S. E. 396; but where there is such clause, a mortgagee is not required to make proofs; Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Trust Co., 5 Kan. App. 137, 48 Pac. 891.

Failure to make proof is not excused by refusal of the company to furnish blanks; Coldham v. Security Co., 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 620. A statement mailed within the time is rendered to the company; Manufacturers' & Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Zeitinger, 168 Ill. 286, 48 N. E. 179, 61 Am. St. Rep. 105; and notice duly addressed, stamped, and mailed is presumed to have been received, if not denied; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 3 Ind. App. 332, 29 N. E. 432. Where a statute requires notice "accompanied by an affidavit" of the circumstances, they need not be attached together or delivered at the same moment; Russell v. Ins. Co., 84 Ia. 93, 50 N. W. 546. Notice is conclusively shown when the company sends an adjuster; Welsh v. Assur. Corp., 151 Pa. 607, 25 Atl. 142, 31 Am. St. Rep. 786; or telegraphs an adjuster to give it attention; Anthony v. Ins. Co., 48 Mo. App. 65. A new proof of loss made long afterwards under promise of settlement if the claim was reduced, was mere surplusage and did not affect the rights of the insured; McNally v. Ins. Co., 137 N. Y. 389, 33 N. E. 475; and where the policy required duplicate bills, vouchers, etc., it was only necessary to show reasonable effort to obtain them; Langan v. Ins. Co., 162 Pa. 357, 29 Atl. 710.

An itemized estimate of the cost of rebuilding is sufficient compliance with a requirement of a verified certificate of the value of the building destroyed, Summerfield v. Assur. Co, 65 Fed 202, contra, Heusinkveld v. Ins. Co, 96 Ia 224, 64 N W. 769 A false statement in the affidavit of loss, made by mistake, will not vitiate a policy which provides that it shall be void in case of any false swearing by the insured in relation to the insurance; Knop v Ins Co, 107 Mich 823, 65 N W. 228; and formal defects or irregularities which cannot be obviated will not prevent recovery; 26 Ins L. J. 695

Formal or preliminary proofs may be waived by parol; American Fire Ins Co v. Bland (Ky) 40 S W 670. A waiver of proofs results from a denial of all liability; Ætna Ins Co v Strout, 16 Ind. App. 160, 44 N. E. 934; National Union v Thomas, 10 App D C. 277, Dooly v. Ins Co., 16 Wash 155, 47 Pac 507, 58 Am St Rep. 26, or a denial on other grounds; Standard Loan & Acc. Ins Co. v. Thornton, 97 Tenn. 1, 40 S. W 136; Jefferson v. Life Ass'n, 69 Mo App. 126; Hicks v Assur Co, 13 App Div. 444, 43 N. Y. Supp 623, as from the defence that the policy was never in force, Ætna Ins. Co v Simmons, 49 Neb 811, 69 N. W. 125; or the omission to object to the form, German-American Ins. Co. v Hocking, 115 Pa. 398, 8 Atl. 586, but they are not waived by careful investigation; People's Bank of Greenville v. Ins Co, 74 Fed 507, 20 C C. A. 630, 42 U. S App. 81; or by reason of an irresistible conclusion that the company had determined to defend the suit, resulting from assertions made during the negotiations, id., or by an offer of compromise; Flanaghan v Ins. Co, 42 W. Va 426, 26 S E. 513, or by a refusal after insufficient proofs are furnished to consider the loss unless a specified claim should be eliminated; Rockford Ins Co v Winfield, 57 Kan 576, 47 Pac 511; or by the mere denial of liability on the ground that the property destroyed was not covered; Robinson v Ins Co., 90 Me 385, 38 Atl 320; Welsh v Assur Co, 151 Pa. 607, 25 Atl. 142, 31 Am. St Rep 786; Devens v. Ins Co., 83 N Y. 168; or mere silence; Central City Ins Co v Oates, 86 Ala. 558, 6 South. 83, 11 Am. St. Rep. 67; or a promise by local agents, without authority to adjust, that the loss would be paid; Welsh v. Ins Co., 77 Ia. 376, 42 N W. 324. The act relied on to establish a waiver must occur within the time fixed by the policy, Bolan v Fire Ass'n, 58 Mo. App. 225. The insured does not lose the benefit of a waiver by making proofs, and he may plead both compliance and the waiver; Warshawky v. Ins. Co., 98 Ia. 221, 67 N. W. 237.

The proofs should ordinarily be made by the insured, but where he is not in a position to make them in person, they may be made by an agent; Lumbermen's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bell, 166 Ill. 400, 45 N. E. 130, 57 Am. St. Rep. 140; or mortgagee to whom the policy is made payable; Armstrong v. Ins. Co., 56 Hun 399, 9 N. Y. Supp. 873; or the company's adjuster; Phœnix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Perry, 131 Ind. 572, 30 N. E. 637; and they may be in the name of a firm; Karelson v. Fire Office, 122 N. Y 545, 25 N E. 921 Where the policy requires proofs "as soon as possible," what is reasonable time is a mixed question of law and fact; American Fire Ins Co. v. Hazen, 110 Pa. 530, 1 Atl 605; Miller v. Ins. Co., 70 Ia. 704, 29 N W 411

ARBITRATION A common provision in policies for all kinds of insurance is one for compulsory arbitration in case of difference between the parties as to the amount of loss Such a provision has been held void as ousting the court of its jurisdiction; Baldwin v. Accident Ass'n, 21 Misc. 124, 46 N. Y. Supp 1016, contra, Western Assur. Co. v. Hall, 112 Ala 318, 20 South 447; Wolff v. Ins. Co, 50 N. J. L. 453, 14 Atl. 561. An award is not required as a condition precedent to a right of action, but a refusal for a demand of appraisal may be set up as a bar, Davis v. Assur Co, 16 Wash. 232, 47 Pac. 436, in which rehearing was denied, 47 Pac 885, but it has been held a condition precedent; McNees v Ins Co, 69 Mo App. 232, Scottish Union & National Ins Co. v. Clancy, 71 Tex 5, 8 S W. 630, but not unless requested in writing; Davis v. Ins Co, 96 Ia. 70, 64 N W 687, and it is inoperative where no arbitrators are agreed upon; Ætna Ins. Co v. McLead, 57 Kan. 95, 45 Pac 73, 57 Am. St. Rep. 320, and is not applicable to a case of total loss; Rosenwald v. Ins. Co., 50 Hun 172, 3 N Y Supp 215; or to the portion of the insured property totally destroyed, Lang v. Fire Co., 12 App Div. 39, 42 N Y Supp. 539, or where the insurer denies liability; Nelson v. Ins. Co, 120 N. C. 302, 27 S E 38, or in case of total loss under valued policy acts; Seyk v Ins Co; 74 Wis 67, 41 N. W. 443, 3 L. R A 523; German Ins. Co. of Freeport v Eddy, 36 Neb. 461, 54 N. W 856, 19 L R A. 707, Jacobs v Ins. Co., 61 Mo App 572 Formal notice of the proceedings of appraisers is not necessary to a party who has knowledge of them, Remington Paper Co. v. Assur. Corp., 12 App. Div 218, 43 N. Y. Supp 431. A valuation by the company's adjuster and builders selected by the insured is an appraisal within the policy, without previous effort to agree upon the loss; London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Storrs, 71 Fed. 120, 17 C. C. A. 645.

Appraisers cannot determine the construction of the policy, Michel v. Ins Co., 17 App Div. 87, 44 N. Y Supp. 832; and the award may be set aside where it is grossly below the actual loss; Royal Ins. Co. v. Parlin & Orendorff Co., 12 Tex. Civ. App. 572, 34 S. W. 401; but not for a mere mistake, not appearing on its face; Remington Paper Co v Assur. Corp. of England, 12 App. Div. 218, 43 N. Y. Supp. 431; and it need not state the manner of arriving at the result; id.

Loss of a member (in accident insurance) has taken place, according to the weight of authority, if the use of the member has been permanently lost, as by paralysis; 3 Willh & Beck, Med Jurispr 140, citing Sheanon v. Ins. Co., 77 Wis 618, 46 N W. 799, 9 L. R. A. 685, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151; Sneck v. Ins. Co, 88 Hun 94, 34 N. Y. Supp. 545; Sisson v. Supreme Court of Honor, 104 Mo. App 54, 78 S W. 297; contra, Stevers v. Ins Ass'n, 150 Pa. 132, 24 Atl 662, 16 L. R A. 446, if the member can be used by means of an appliance, though not without.

See TOTAL LOSS

LOST INSTRUMENT. A document or paper which has been so mislaid that it cannot be found after diligent search.

Suits to recover upon lost instruments are within the jurisdiction of equity, but the proof as to the contents must be clear and satisfactory, Fries v Griffin, 35 Fla 212, 17 South. 66; and such a suit will not be entertained to establish the lost instrument merely as a piece of written evidence to sustain an action of tort; Security Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Buchanan, 66 Fed. 799, 14 C. C. A. 97.

This equitable jurisdiction extends to ordering the issue of bonds to replace those lost, where the loss or destruction was without fault of the party seeking relief; and it can be done without derogating from positive agreement or violating equal or superior equities in other parties. Such relief was given in case of bonds stolen and hidden in the ground at the evacuation of Petersburg by the Confederate forces, Chesapeake & O Canal Co v Blair, 45 Md 102; and for bonds stolen from the vault of a bank, Force v City of Elizabeth, 27 N. J. Eq. 408.

A copy of a deed by joint makers cannot be established without proof of execution by all; Neely v Carter, 96 Ga 197, 23 S E. 313; and wherever it is sought to establish title to real property under a lost unrecorded deed, the rule as to the amount of evidence required is very strict, Day v. Philbrook, 89 Me. 462, 36 Atl 991

Formerly in such cases a resort to equity was compelled by the want of any remedy at law, resulting from the necessity of making profert; 1 Ch. Cas 77; but after profert was dispensed with, the courts of law acquired concurrent jurisdiction and the loss of a paper would not prevent recovery; 1 Ves. 341; 3 V. & B. 54. Nevertheless a court of equity still has jurisdiction to establish a lost deed; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 12 Sup Ct. 239, 35 L. Ed. 1063

The fact that interest on a bond is payable upon "presentation and delivery of the coupon" will not prevent recovery on a lost coupon; Rolston v. R. Co, 21 Misc. 439, 47 N. Y. Supp. 650. Where a note is lost pending an action while in the hands of the justice, indemnity is not required; Winship v. May, 7 Colo. App. 355, 43 Pac. 904, and an allegation of loss after maturity of a note sued on, dispenses with the necessity of tender of indemnity; Swatts v Bowen, 141 Ind. 322, 40 N. E. 1057. An action may be brought on a lost official bond, People v. Pace, 57 Ill. App 674. In an action for the breach of a lost contract, where the fact of its existence is controverted, it is a question for the jury; Thomas v. Ribble (Va.) 24 S. E. 241.

It is held that an action will lie upon a lost negotiable instrument, 10 Ad. & E. 616; Whitesides v Wallace, 2 Speers, L. (S. C.) 193 The weight of authority seems to be that an action would not lie on a lost negotiable note; 1 Exch. 167; 9 id. 604; Moses v Trice, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 556, 8 Am. Rep 609, Chancy v Baldwin, 46 N. C. 78; Willis v. Cresey, 17 Me 9; Butler v. Joyce, 20 Dist. Col 191 (distinguishing Boteler v. Dexter, 20 D C 26, where the action was maintained on a note accidentally lost after being in evidence in that court), contra, Anderson v. Robsqn, 2 Bay (S C) 495; Robinson v. Bank, 18 Ga 65; Aborn v. Bosworth, 1 R. I. 401; Meeker v. Jackson, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 442; but see comments on these cases, 16 L. R. A. 305, note In some courts the suit has been permitted upon giving indemnity, Bridgeford v Mfg. Co, 34 Conn. 546, 91 Am. Dec. 744; Lewis v Petayvin, 4 Mart. N S. (La.) 4; Fales v. Russell, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 315. It will not lie if the owner has destroyed it; Booth v Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 1,649.

In a case at law on a lost lottery ticket, it was held: "There never was a time when a recovery might not be had in a court of common law on an unsealed security which was proved to be destroyed The case of a bond did not depend on the difference between loss and destruction, but on the necessity that once existed, of making a profert of the instrument, to enable the defendant to have oyer of it; and as this could not be done at law, where the bond was either lost or destroyed, the chancellor was forced to assume jurisdiction, . . and the exercise of this equitable jurisdiction is still continued, although the common law courts allow loss or destruction to be pleaded as an available excuse for the want of profert. But in the case of a note, bill, check, or other simple contract security, oyer cannot be demanded, and you may therefore recover by proving the contents. With respect to a negotiable security paper which passes by mere delivery and which is not destroyed but lost, the remedy is always in chancery, on terms of giving security. By the express term of the ticket (a lottery ticket), whatever prize should be drawn opposite to its number, was to be payable only to the bearer; which, by necessary implication, would require the production of the ticket itself; or as an equivalent, in case of its loss, security against damage from payment being made without having it delivered up. Tender of indemnity, therefore, was a substantial part of the plaintiff's title, and no right of action would accrue, till it were made; the sufficiency of the security being a matter to be judged of at the trial. Equity may dispense with tender before bill filed, because complete justice may be done by prescribing it at any time, as the terms of relief; but in a court of law proceeding to administer equity, according to the forms of the common law, a plaintiff suing without a previous tender presents the ordinary case of a suit brought before the cause of action is complete." Per Gibson, J., in Snyder v. Wolfley, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 331.

In some states and in England it is provided by statute that an action may be maintained on a lost negotiable instrument. Under such statutes it is held that they may be maintained without showing the absolute destruction of the instrument; Fairbanks v. Campbell, 53 Ill. App. 216; but judgment cannot be recovered without indemnity; Hendricks v. Whitecotton, 60 Mo. App. 671; Wiedenfeld v. Gallagher (Tex.) 32 S. W. 248.

Where the remedy at law is denied in the case of a lost negotiable instrument and there is no statute, relief must be sought by a bill in equity to compel payment after tender of indemnity; 7 B. & C. 90; Means v. Kendall, 35 Neb. 693, 53 N. W. 610. The loss of a bond is no objection to its payment by the company which issued it, upon indemnity; Miller v. R. Co., 40 Vt. 399, 94 Am. Dec. 413. The title of the true owner of a lost certificate of stock may be asserted against a subsequent owner even though he be a bona fide purchaser; Knox v. Eden Musée Americain Co., 148 N. Y. 441, 42 N. E. 988, 31 L. R. A. 779, 51 Am. St. Rep. 700.

The contents of a lost deed, will, agreement, etc., may be proved by secondary evidence after proof of its existence; Gorgas v. Hertz, 150 Pa. 538, 24 Atl. 756; and that diligent search has been made and that it cannot be found; Tayl. Ev. 402; Laubach v. Meyers, 147 Pa. 447, 23 Atl. 765; the party's own evidence is sufficient for this purpose; 1 Atk. 446; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 349; or that of any one who knows the facts; Turner v. Cates, 90 Ga. 731, 16 S. E. 971. There must be conclusive evidence of its former existence, loss and contents; Smith v. Lurty, 108 Va. 799, 62 S. E. 789. See SPECIALTY.

Even a will proved to be lost may be admitted to probate upon secondary evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 84, 509, 575; 1 P. & D. 154; 17 Eng. Rep. 45, note; but this case has been characterized as going to the "verge of the law"; 11 App. Cas. 474. The fact of the loss must be proved by the clearest evidence; Davis v. Sigourney, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 487; 2 Add. Eccl. 223; Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 173; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 115. Where it has been in the custody of the testator and is not found at his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed, animo revocandi; 17 Moak's Engl. Rep. 511; Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 173; Southworth v. Adams, 11 Biss. 265, Fed. Cas. No. 13,194; 11 Biss. 265; especially where the testator knew of the loss while alive and did not produce it; Deaves' Estate, 140 Pa. 242, 21 Atl. 395. Its absence is said to be prima facie evidence of cancellation; Legare v. Ashe, 1 Bay (S. C.) 464; but where no revocation is proved or presumed, declarations, written or oral, made by a testator, both before and after the execution of the will, are admissible as secondary evidence; id.; Steph. Ev. § 29; In re Lambie's Estate, 97 Mich. 49, 56 N. W. 223; Schoul. Wills § 402. And see Dower v. Seeds, 28 W. Va. 113, 57 Am. Rep. 646, for an extended historical discussion of the subject. It is also said that chancery, on a bill suitably filed, has exercised a similar jurisdiction; id.

The "copy" of a lost instrument intended by the act of congress of January 23, 1874 (for stamping unstamped instruments), is a substantial copy, or such a draft of the original instrument as will identify the subject of the tax; Miller v. Wentworth, 82 Pa. 280. See SPECIALTY.

LOST, OR NOT LOST. A phrase in policies of insurance, signifying the contract to be retrospective and applicable to any loss within the specified risk, provided the same is not already known to either of the parties, and that neither has any knowledge or information not equally obvious or known to the other. The clause has been adopted only in maritime insurance; though a fire or life policy is not infrequently retrospective, or, under a different phraseology, by a provision that the risk is to commence at some time prior to its date. 1 Phill. Ins. § 925. Such policy on a vessel building "to take effect as soon as water-borne," takes effect at once if she is already water-borne; Cobb v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 192.

LOST PAPERS. See LOST INSTRUMENT.

LOT. That which fortuitously determines what we are to acquire.

When it can be certainly known what are our rights, we ought never to resort to a decision by lot; but when it is impossible to tell what actually belongs to us, as if an estate is divided into three parts and one part given to each of three persons, the proper way to ascertain each one's part is to draw lots; Wolff, Dr. etc., de la Nat. § 669.

Verdicts reached by a jury by drawing lots will be set aside; 1 Ky. L. J. 500. See JURY; Goodman v. Cody, 1 Wash. T. 329, 34 Am. Rep. 808, n.

LOT AND SCOT. Duties to be paid by persons exercising the elective franchise in certain cities before being allowed to vote.

LOT OF GROUND. A small piece of land in a town or city, usually employed for building, a yard, a garden, or such other urban use. Lots are in-lots, or those within the boundary of the city or town, and out-lots, those which are out of such boundary and which are used by some of the inhabitants of such town or city.

LOTHERWITE, or LEYERWIT. A liberty or privilege to take amends from another for lying with a bondwoman without license. See LAIRWITE.

LOTTERY. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance. Alms House of New York City v. Art Union, 7 N. Y. 228; Thomas v. People, 59 Ill. 160.

A scheme by which a result is reached by some action or means taken, in which result man's choice or will has no part, and which human reason, foresight, sagacity, or design cannot enable him to know or determine, until the same has been accomplished. People v. Elliott, 74 Mich. 264, 41 N. W. 916, 3 L. R. A. 403, 16 Am. St. Rep. 640.

A scheme by which, on one's paying money or some other thing of value, he obtains the contingent right to have something of greater value, if an appeal to chance, by lot or otherwise, under the direction of the manager of the scheme, should decide in his favor. Bish. St. Crimes § 952.

The word lottery "embraces the elements of procuring, through lot or chance, by the investment of a sum of money or something of value, some greater amount of money or thing of greater value." U. S. v. Wallis, 58 Fed. 942. It includes policy-playing, gift-exhibitions, prize concerts, raffles at fairs, etc., and various forms of gambling; id.

Every drawing, where money or property is offered as prizes to be distributed by chance according to a specified scheme and tickets sold which entitle the holder to money or property, and which is dependent on chance, is a lottery; Grant v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 403, 112 S. W. 1068, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 130 Am. St. Rep. 897, 16 Ann. Cas. 844.

Where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is to be determined by chance, according to some scheme held out to the public, as to what and how much he who pays the money is to receive for it, that is a lottery; Hull v. Ruggles, 56 N. Y. 424. It is well settled that every scheme for the division of property or money by chance is prohibited by law; Rothrock v. Perkinson, 61 Ind. 39. Lotteries were formerly often resorted to as a means of raising money, by states as well as individuals, and are still authorized in many foreign countries, but have been abolished as immoral in England, and throughout this country. They were prohibited by 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 17, and foreign lotteries were forbidden to be advertised in England by the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 66.

Selling boxes of candy, each box being represented to contain a prize, the purchaser selecting his box in ignorance of its contents, is a lottery; Holoman v. State, 2 Tex. App. 610, 28 Am. Rep. 439; so in State v. Lumsden, 89 N. C. 572; Com. v. Wright, 137 Mass. 250, 50 Am. Rep. 306; 11 Q. B. Div. 207. Where money was subscribed which was to be invested in funds which were to be divided amongst the subscribers by lot, and divided unequally, it was held a lottery; 11 Ch. Div. 170. Although every ticket in a drawing represents a prize of some value, yet if those prizes are of unequal values, the scheme of distribution is a lottery; Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 465.

A scheme for increasing the circulation of a newspaper, whereby all subscribers receive numbered tickets corresponding to numbered coupons, which are drawn from a box by a blindfolded person, prizes to be given to the holders of certain tickets, is a lottery under U. S. R. S. § 3894, prohibiting carrying through the mails of any newspaper containing any advertisement of any lottery, etc.; U. S. v. Wallis, 58 Fed. 942; so it was held that an issue of bonds of the Austrian government, payable at a specified time, but with a provision that bonds, as drawn, should be redeemed with a bonus, which was to increase year by year, was within that act, which related to all lotteries, the word "illegal" having been omitted from the original act by amendment in 1890; Horner v. U. S., 147 U. S. 456, 13 Sup. Ct. 409, 37 L. Ed. 237.

A lottery for the disposal of land is within the prohibition of the Pennsylvania act, where the lots drawn are of very unequal value; Seidenbender v. Charles' Adm'rs, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 151, 8 Am. Dec. 682; so when there is a contract for the sale of several lots of land, of unequal value, to several subscribers, which provides that each one's lot shall be determined "by lot" and a certain "prize" lot is to be given to one of the subscribers by "lot"; Lynch v. Rosenthal, 144 Ind. 86, 42 N. E. 1103, 31 L. R. A. 835, 55 Am. St. Rep. 168; or the offering of parcels of land at public sale with the inducement that each purchaser would be entitled to share in a drawing for a certain lot not put up at such sale; this was held a lottery; Whitley v. McConnell, 133 Ga. 738, 66 S. E. 933, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 287, 134 Am. St. Rep. 223.

So where one furnished a cigar to every person who placed a five-cent piece in a slot machine, and the one after whose play the machine indicated the highest card hand was to receive all the cigars; Loiseau v. State, 114 Ala. 34, 22 South. 138, 62 Am. St. Rep. 84; and where every purchaser of dry goods received a key and was told that one key would be given out which would unlock a certain box containing twenty-five dollars, which would go to the person who received this key; Davenport v. City of Ottawa, 54 Kan. 711, 39 Pac. 708, 45 Am. St. Rep. 303. So where every subscriber to a newspaper received a ticket which entitled him to participate in a distribution of prizes by lot; State v. Mumford, 73 Mo. 647, 39 Am. Rep. 532; and of a bond investment scheme, where bonds were issued at a specified price and the value of each bond was determined by its number, the bonds being numbered in the order of application for them; MacDonald v. U. S., 63 Fed. 426, 12 C. C. A. 339.

A "missing word" competition, in which the winners are to be those who, upon sending a shilling to the promoter of the competition, select, to fill up a named sentence, a particular word also selected by the promoter, is a lottery within the English act; [1896] 2 Ch. 154; [1909] 2 K. B. 93.

Raffles at fairs, etc., are as clearly violations of the criminal law as the most elaborate and carefully organized lotteries; Com. v. Manderfield, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 457. Thus the American Art Union is a lottery; Governors of Alms House of New York v. Art Union, 7 N. Y. 228; People v. Art Union, 7 N. Y. 240; so a "gift-sale" of books; State v. Clarke, 33 N. H. 329, 66 Am. Dec. 723; so "prize-concerts"; Com. v. Thacher, 97 Mass. 583, 93 Am. Dec. 125; and "gift-exhibitions"; State v. Shorts, 32 N. J. L. 398, 90 Am. Dec. 668; Thomas v. People, 59 Ill. 160; Buckalew v. State, 62 Ala. 334, 34 Am. Rep. 22; Wilkinson v. Gill, 74 N. Y. 63, 30 Am. Rep. 264. The payment of prizes need not be in money; Governors of Alms House of New York v. Art Union, 7 N. Y. 228; as where a suit of clothing was given at a weekly drawing in a merchant tailor's club; State v. Moren, 48 Minn. 555, 51 N. W. 618; Grant v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 403, 112 S. W. 1068, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 130 Am. St. Rep. 897, 16 Ann. Cas. 844.

On the other hand, where the scheme affords room for the exercise of skill and judgment, it is not a lottery; 60 L. J. M. C. 116. So of a coupon competition in a newspaper, where purchasers of copies of the newspapers fill in on coupons the horses selected by them as likely to come in first, second, third, and fourth in a given race, the purchaser to receive a penny for every coupon filled up after the first, and a money prize to be given to the holder of the coupon who should name the first four horses correctly; [1895] 2 Q. B. 474.

Guessing contests are lotteries; People ex rel. Ellison v. Lavin, 179 N. Y. 164, 71 N. E. 753, 66 L. R. A. 601, 1 Ann. Cas. 165; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 48 L. Ed. 1092; Stevens v. Times-Star Co., 72 Ohio St. 112, 73 N. E. 1058, 106 Am. St. Rep. 586; contra, [1899] 1 Q. B. 198; 23 Op. Atty. Gen. 492.

The mere determination by lot where there is no giving of prizes, is not a lottery; Com. v. Manderfield, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 457. Joint owners of property may ordinarily divide it by lot; Elder v. Chapman, 176 Ill. 142, 52 N. E. 10. Merely determining by lot the time at which certain bonds are to be paid, is not a lottery; U. S. v. Zeisler, 30 Fed. 499; but it is otherwise if a prize is offered on the bonds so drawn; id. To constitute a lottery something of value must be parted with, directly or indirectly, by him who has the chance; Yellow-Stone Kit v. State, 88 Ala. 196, 7 South. 338, 7 L. R. A. 599, 16 Am. St. Rep. 38 and note. Therefore, where every customer of a shoe store and every applicant received a ticket gratuitously, and a piano was allotted by chance among the holders, it was held not to be a lottery; Cross v. People, 18 Colo. 321, 32 Pac. 821, 36 Am. St. Rep. 292. Where the element of certainty goes hand in hand with the element of chance in an enterprise offering prizes, the former element does not destroy the existence or effect of the latter; Horner v. U. S., 147 U. S. 449, 13 Sup. Ct. 409, 37 L. Ed. 237.

The act which forbids conveying in the mails newspapers containing anything relating to a lottery is within the power of congress to establish postoffices, and does not abridge the freedom of the press; In re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 12 Sup. Ct. 374, 36 L. Ed. 93. The right to operate a lottery is not a fundamental right; id. Under this act it is an offence to deliver in Illinois a prohibited circular mailed in the city of New York, and such an offence is triable in Illinois; Horner v. U. S., 143 U. S. 207, 12 Sup. Ct. 407, 36 L. Ed. 126. The carriage of lottery tickets from one state to another by an express company is interstate commerce, which congress may make an offence against the United States; Lottery Case, 188 U. S. 321, 23 Sup. Ct. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492. See CONSTITUTIONALITY.

It is a valid exercise of power in a state to protect the morals and advance the welfare of the people by prohibiting any scheme bearing any semblance to a lottery or gambling; Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 22 Atl. 4, 12 L. R. A. 425, 28 Am. St. Rep. 268.

"A lottery grant is not, in any sense, a contract, within the meaning of the constitution of the United States, but is simply a gratuity and license, which the state, under its police powers, and for the protection of the public morals, may at any time revoke and forbid the further conduct of the lottery; and no right acquired during the life of the grant, on the faith of, or by agreement with, the grantee, can be exercised after the revocation of such grant and the forbidding of the lottery, if its exercise involves a continuance of the lottery as originally authorized;" Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 502, 18 Sup. Ct. 199, 42 L. Ed. 553, following Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. Ed. 1079, where it was said, referring to lotteries: "Certainly the right to suppress them is governmental, to be exercised at all times by those in power at their discretion." A lottery charter is "in legal effect nothing more than a license. . . ."

The fact that one government authorizes lotteries and the sale of lottery tickets, cannot authorize their sale in another government which forbids their sale; Horner v. U. S., 147 U. S. 462, 13 Sup. Ct. 409, 37 L. Ed. 237.

A purchase of a ticket in a foreign lottery outside the state, is a valid contract; McNight v. Biesecker, 13 Pa. 328. An ordinance which makes it unlawful "for any person to have in his possession, unless it be shown that such possession is innocent, any lottery ticket, "is unconstitutional, inasmuch as it places on the person accused of its violation, the burden of showing the innocence of his possession; In re Wong Hane, 108 Cal. 680, 41 Pac. 693, 49 Am. St. Rep. 138.

Where it was undisputed that the defendant was engaged in the lottery business, evidence that he received an order for lottery tickets such as were subsequently mailed with the letter; that the name used in the address of the letter was the same as that signed to the order; that the tickets bore his stamp, and that the letter enclosed his business card, would justify the conclusion that the defendant deposited the letter in the post-office for mailing; U. S. v. Noelke, 1 Fed. 426.

A court of equity will not grant relief where letters addressed to the secretary of a lottery company are detained by a postmaster under the direction of the postmaster-general, if the pleadings fail to show that the letters had no connection with the lottery business; Commerford v. Thompson, 1 Fed. 417. The act of June 8, 1872, R. S. § 4041, authorizes the postmaster-general to forbid the payment by any postmaster of a money order to any person engaged in the lottery business. But this does not authorize any person to open any letter not addressed to himself.

The act of March 2, 1895, prohibits bringing lottery tickets into the country or mailing them; see France v. U. S., 164 U. S. 676, 17 Sup. Ct. 219, 41 L. Ed. 595.

LOTTERY BOND. A species of bond found in most of the financial markets of Europe, combining the ordinary bond or deed of loan with the peculiarities of a lottery ticket. 9 Harv. L. Rev. 386. As a deed of loan it confers upon the holder the right to the payment of interest and reimbursement of the capital lent; as a lottery ticket it takes part periodically in drawings for prizes.

LOUAGE. In French Law. The contract of hiring and letting. It may be of things or of labor. (1) Letting of things. (a) Bail à loyer, the letting of houses; (b) Bail à ferme, the letting of land; (2) Letting of labor,—(a) Loyer, the letting of personal service; (b) Bail à cheval, the letting of a horse.

LOUISIANA. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

It was first explored by the French in 1682, under Robert Chevalier de la Salle, and named Louisiana, in honor of Louis XIV. In 1699, a French settlement was begun at Biloxi by Lemoyne d'Iberville. His efforts were followed up in 1712 by Anthony Crozat, a man of wealth, who upheld the trade of the country for several years. About 1717 all his interest in the province was transferred to the "Western Company," a chartered corporation, at the head of which was the celebrated John Law, whose speculations involved the ruin of one-half of the French nobility. In 1732 the "Company" resigned all their rights to the crown, by whom the whole of Louisiana was ceded to Spain in 1762. By the treaty of St. Ildefonso, signed October 1, 1800, Spain re-conveyed it to France, from whom it was purchased by the United States, April 30, 1803, for $15,000,000. Louisiana was admitted into the Union by an act of congress, approved April 8, 1812.

The first constitution was adopted January 22, 1812, and was substantially copied from that of Kentucky. This constitution was superseded by that of 1845, which was in its turn replaced by the one adopted July 11, 1852. Next in order came the constitution of 1864, which yielded to that of 1868, which in turn was succeeded by the constitution adopted July 21, 1879.

A new constitution was adopted May 11, 1898, and promulgated by the convention without submission to the people, to go into effect May 12, 1898. The instrument is very lengthy and contains a great deal of general legislation; it provides educational and property qualifications in the alternative for suffrage, and in addition the right of suffrage is specifically conferred upon every male person who was on Jan. 1, 1867, or at any date prior thereto, entitled to vote under the constitution or statutes of any state of the United States wherein he then resided, and also upon any son or grandson of such person not less than twenty-one years of age at the date of the adoption of the constitution; and it is also provided that no person of foreign birth naturalized prior to Jan. 1, 1898, shall be denied the right to vote by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualifications prescribed, provided he shall have resided in the state five years next preceding the date of his application for registration. This exceptional right of suffrage can only be exercised by persons registered prior to September 1, 1898. There is an amendment extending the "grandfather" clause, allowing illiterate white men to vote if their father or grandfather could vote or had voted.

SYSTEM OF LAWS. Louisiana is governed by the civil law, unlike the other states of the Union (except, to a slight extent, the states that formed part of the Louisiana Purchase). The first body of civil laws was adopted in 1808, and was substantially the same as the Code Napoleon, with some modifications derived from the Spanish law. It was styled the "Digest of the Civil Law," and has been afterwards frequently revised and enlarged to suit the numerous statutory changes in the law, and since 1825 has become known as the "Civil Code of Louisiana." There is no criminal offence in this state but such as is provided for by statute; the law does not define crimes, but prescribes their punishment by reference to their name; for definitions we turn to the common law of England. The civil code lays down the general leading principles of evidence, and the courts refer to treatises on that branch of the law for the development of those principles in their application to particular cases, as they arise in practice. Most of these rules have been borrowed from the English law, as having a more solid foundation in reason and common sense. The usages of trade sanctioned by courts of different countries at different times, or the lex mercatoria, also exist entirely distinct and independent of the civil code, and are recognized and duly enforced. When Louisiana was ceded to the United States, some of the lawyers from the old states spared no efforts to introduce the laws with which they were familiar, and of which they sought to avail themselves, rather than undergo the toil of learning a new system in a foreign language. But of those conversant with the common law, the most eminent did not favor its introduction as a general system to the exclusion of the civil law. Succession of Franklin, 7 La. Ann. 395. The laws of the state on public and personal rights, criminal and commercial matters were assimilated to those of the other states; but in relation to real property and its tenures, the common law or English equity system has never had a place in Louisiana.

LOW BOTE. A recompense for the death of a man killed in a tumult. Cow.

LOWERS. In French Maritime Law. Wages. Ord. Mar. liv. 1, t. 14, Art. 16.

LOW-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waters recede when the tide is lowest; i. e. the line to which the ebb-tide usually recedes, or the ordinary low-water mark unaffected by drought. Gerrish v. Proprietors of Union Wharf, 26 Me. 384, 46 Am. Dec. 568; Stover v. Jack, 60 Pa. 339, 100 Am. Dec. 566. It has been said to be the point to which a river recedes at its lowest stage; Paine Lumber Co. v. U. S., 55 Fed. 854. See Tappan v. Water Power Co., 157 Mass. 24, 31 N. E. 703, 16 L. R. A. 353; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356; HIGH-WATER MARK; RIVER; SEA; Dane, Abr.

LOYAL. Legal, or according to law: as, loyal matrimony, a lawful marriage.

"Uncore n'est loyal a homme de faire un tort" (it is never lawful for a man to do a wrong). Dyer, fol. 36, § 38. "Et per curiam n'est loyal" (and it is held by the court that it was not lawful). T. Jones 24. Also spelled loayl. Dyer 36, § 38; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. The Norman spelling is "loyse." Kelh. Norm. Dict.

Faithful to a prince or superior; true to plighted faith or duty. Webster, Dict.

LOYALTY. Adherence to law. Faithfulness to the existing government.

LUCID INTERVALS. In Medical Jurisprudence. Periods in which an insane person is so far free from his disease that the ordinary legal consequences of insanity do not apply to acts done therein.

A lucid interval is not a perfect restoration to reason, but a restoration so far as to be able, beyond doubt, to comprehend and do the act with such perception, memory, and judgment as to make it a legal act. Frazer v. Frazer, 2 Del. Ch. 263; Whart. & Stillé, Med. Jur. § 2.

Lucid intervals were regarded as more common and characterized by greater mental clearness and vigor, by earlier medical writers than the later ones. This view was shared by legal authorities, who treated a lucid interval as a complete, though temporary, restoration. D'Aguesseau, in the case of the Abbé d'Orléans, concludes: "It must not be a mere diminution, a remission, of the complaint, but a kind of temporary cure, an intermission so clearly marked as in every respect to resemble the restoration of health." Pothier, Obl., Evans' ed. 579. And Lord Thurlow characterized it as "an interval in which the mind, having thrown off the disease, had recovered its general habit." 3 Bro. C. C. 234. Possibly there may be such intermissions of absolute restoration but they are of rare occurrence. Usually, with apparent clearness, there is a real loss of mental force and acuteness,—not necessarily apparent to a superficial observer, but, upon critical examination, showing confusion of ideas and singularity of behavior indicative of serious though latent disease. In this condition the patient may hold some correct notions, even on a matter of business, and yet be quite incompetent to embrace all the relations connected with a contract or a will, even though no delusion was present to warp his judgment. This conclusion is aided by the recorded experiences of patients after entire recovery. See Georget, Des Mal. Men. 46; Reid, Essays on Hypochondriacal Affections, Essay 21; Combe, Men. Derang. 241; Ray, Med. Jur. 376.

Of late years the interest of the courts in connection with lucid intervals both in civil and criminal cases is confined to the ascertainment of the mental capacity of the person concerned with relation to the transaction in question. This idea has even been carried to the excess of treating the reasonableness of the act itself as the test of the capacity of the individual, or the existence of a lucid interval; 1 Phill. Lect. 90; 2 C. & P. 415. But this has been said to be a mere begging of the question, inasmuch as persons undeniably insane constantly do and say things which appear perfectly rational; 2 Hagg. 433, where two wills, both perfectly reasonable, were set aside because within a short time prior to their execution there had been admitted insanity. And it was said: "When there is not actual recovery, and a return to the management of himself and his concerns . . . the proof of a lucid interval is extremely difficult."

In criminal cases this difficulty is intensified, since the very term lucid interval implies that the disease has not disappeared, but only that its outward manifestations have ceased and there remains an abnormal condition of the brain, by whatever name it may be called, whereby the power of the mind to sustain provocations, resist temptations, or withstand any other causes of excitement, is greatly weakened. Being in their nature, as temporary and of uncertain duration, there is no presumption that they will continue; Pike v. Pike, 104 Ala. 642, 16 South. 689; contra, Wright v. Jackson, 59 Wis. 569, 18 N. W. 486; and see Snow v. Benton, 28 Ill. 306.

Lucid intervals are not to be confounded with periods of apparent recovery between two successive attacks of mental disorder, nor with transitions from one phase of insanity to another. These are said to be equivocal conditions during which persons subjected to them labor under a degree of nervous irritability, which renders them peculiarly susceptible to many of those incidents and influences which lead to crime; Ray, Med. Jur. ch. Luc. Int.

Both in civil and criminal cases the burden rests upon the party who contends for a lucid interval to prove it, since a person once insane is presumed so until it is shown that he had a lucid interval or has recovered; Co. Litt. 185, n.; 3 Bro. Ch. 441; Turner v. Cheesman, 15 N. J. Eq. 243; Emery v. Hoyt, 46 Ill. 258; 8 Can. S. C. 335. This presumption may be rebutted by proof of a change of mental condition and a lucid interval at the time; 41 Miss. 291; and it arises only where habitual insanity is shown, and in cases of temporary or recurrent insanity, no burden is thrown upon the party seeking to take advantage of the lucid interval; Ford v. State, 73 Miss. 734, 19 South. 665, 35 L. R. A. 118; People v. Montgomery, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 207; Armstrong v. State, 30 Fla. 170, 11 South. 618, 17 L. R. A. 484; State v. Schaeffer, 116 Mo. 96, 22 S. W. 447; Com. v. Winnemore, 1 Brews. (Pa.) 356.

A contract made during a lucid interval is valid; Norman v. Trust Co., 92 Ga. 295, 18 S. E. 27; Wright v. Wright, 139 Mass. 177, 29 N. E. 380. And the same is true of deeds, wills, and of the performances of any civil act. But where a lucid interval is relied upon, it must appear to have been of such a character as to enable the person to comprehend intelligently the nature and character of the transaction; Pike v. Pike, 104 Ala. 642, 16 South. 689. Proof of a lucid interval, where it is required, must be made to the satisfaction of the jury; Vance v. Upson, 66 Tex. 476, 1 S. W. 179. There is no presumption of continuance of a lucid interval; it is temporary in its nature; Pike v. Pike, 104 Ala. 642, 16 South. 689.

Insane persons, during a lucid interval, are competent witnesses, but the question of their competency is for the court to determine when the witness is produced to be sworn; People v. N. Y. Hospital, 3 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 229; which see for a note on the practice in such cases.

The general rule "is that a lunatic, or person affected with insanity, is admissible as a witness, if he have sufficient understanding to apprehend the obligation of an oath, and to be capable of giving a correct account of the matters which he has seen or heard in reference to the questions at issue; and whether he have that understanding is a question to be determined by the court upon examination of the party himself, and any competent witnesses who can speak to the nature and extent of his insanity." District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519, 2 Sup. Ct. 840, 27 L. Ed. 618; Kendall v. May, 10 Allen (Mass.) 64; Tucker v. Shaw, 158 Ill. 326, 41 N. E. 914; L. R. 11 Eq. 420; Walker v. State, 97 Ala. 85, 12 South. 83; Coleman v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 865, 18 Am. Rep. 711; Holcomb v. Holcomb, 28 Conn. 177; Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563, 15 S. E. 146. In State v. Brown, 2 Marv. (Del.) 380, 36 Atl. 458, the witness was an inmate of an insane asylum and was admitted by an equally divided court to testify in a case of homicide in the asylum. The modern doctrine is that the fact of insanity goes to the credibility rather than to the competency of the witness; 5 Eng. L. & Eq. 547; 2 Den. C. C. 254; 5 Cox, C. C. 259; McCutchen v. Pigue, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 565. See Clevenger, Med. Jur. of Insan. 607.

See 35 L. R. A. 117, n.; INSANITY.

LUCRATIVE OFFICE. One for which "pay, supposed to be an adequate compensation, is fixed to the performance of" its "duties." Dailey v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 329, where, under the Indiana constitution forbidding the holding of more than one lucrative office at one time, the offices of county commissioners and county recorder were held such. So also were prison director; Howard v. Shoemaker, 35 Ind. 111; mayor of a city; colonel of volunteers and reporter of the supreme court; Kerr v. Jones, 19 Ind. 351; otherwise as to the office of councilman in a city; State v. Kirk, 44 Ind. 405, 15 Am. Rep. 239.

LUCRI CAUSA (Lat. for the sake of gain). A term descriptive of the intent with which property is taken in cases of larceny.

Under modern decisions this ingredient is generally considered immaterial. In many English cases there is shown a tendency to resort to sophistical reasoning to avoid directly overruling the doctrine; 1 Den. C. C. 180, 193; Russ. & R. 307. In this country these cases have not been considered as authority; State v. Hawkins, 8 Port. (Ala.) 461, 33 Am. Dec. 294. But the question has not been much discussed and the rule is generally considered well settled that it is sufficient if the taking be fraudulent and with the intent wholly to deprive the owner of his property. See LARCENY.

LUCRUM. A small slip or parcel of land.

LUCRUM CESSANS. In Civil Law. A cession of gain. The amount of profit lost as distinguished from damnum emergens, an actual loss.

The actual loss sustained for the breach of contracts other than the mere non-payment of money which was covered by interest. Damages could be recovered in particular cases for both. Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 215.

LUGGAGE. Such articles of personal comfort and convenience as travellers usually find it desirable to carry with them. This term is synonymous with baggage; the latter being in more common use in this country, while the former is used in England. Pfister v. R. Co., 70 Cal. 169, 11 Pac. 686, 59 Am. Rep. 404. See BAGGAGE.

LUMINA. Openings to obtain light in a building.

LUMINARE. A lamp or candle set burning on the altar of any church or chapel, for the maintenance whereof lands and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches. Kenn. Glos.

LUNACY. See INSANITY; MANIA.

LUNAR. Belonging to or measured by the moon.

LUNAR MONTH. See MONTH.

LUNATIC. One who is insane. See INSANITY; DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO.

LUPINUM CAPUT. See CAPUT LUPINUM.

LUSHBOROW. A counterfeit coin, made abroad like English money, and brought in during Edward III.'s reign. To bring any of it into the realm was made treason. Cowell.

LUXURY. Excess and extravagance, formerly an offence against public economy. Whart.

LYEF-GELD. In Saxon Law. Leave-money. A small sum paid by customary tenants for leave to plough, etc. Cowell; Somn. on Gavelk. p. 27.

LYING. Saying that which is false, knowing or not knowing it to be so. Every deceit comprehends a lie, but a deceit is more than a lie on account of the view with which it is practised. 3 Term 56. See DECEIT; MISREPRESENTATION.

LYING ABOUT. An owner is liable to a penalty for cattle found lying about a highway; 3 Q. B. 345; but not where cattle being driven along a highway lie down for a short time and are then driven on again; id.

LYING AT ANCHOR. A vessel is lying at anchor when floating upon the water but held by her cable and anchor; Reid v. Ins. Co., 19 Hun (N. Y.) 285; but not where beached with a cable attached to an anchor sunk in the bank; id.; or fastened to a pier; Walsh v. Dock Co., 77 N. Y. 453.

LYING IN GRANT. Incorporeal rights and things which cannot be transferred by livery of possession, but which exist only in idea, in contemplation of law, are said to lie in grant, and pass by the mere delivery of the deed. See GRANT; LIVERY OF SEISIN; SEISIN.

LYING IN PORT. Where a vessel has been lying in port for a long time a policy "at and from" the port attaches as soon as preparations for the voyage are commenced, but if she changes ownership in port, it attaches only when the assured becomes owner; Seamans v. Loring, 1 Mas. 127, Fed. Cas. No. 12,583; Kemfle v. Bowne, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 75; Smith v. Steinbach, 2 Cai. Cas. (N. Y.) 158.

LYING IN WAIT. Being in ambush for the purpose of murdering another.

Lying in wait is evidence of deliberation and intention. Where murder is divided into degrees, as in Pennsylvania, lying in wait is such evidence of malice that it makes the killing murder in the first degree. See Dane, Abr. Index.

To constitute lying in wait, three things must concur: Waiting, watching, and secrecy. Riley v. State, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 651.

LYING ON. Where this term is used in the description of metes, bounds, and location of land, it imports in law as well as in fact that it extends to borders upon the boundary designated in the description. Roe v. Doe, 4 Houst. (Del.) 337.

LYING UP. A vessel insured against perils on the voyage or while lying up, was held to be within the meaning of this clause while she was being towed into the harbor; 5 Robt. 473.

LYNCH LAW. A common phrase used to express the vengeance of a mob inflicting an injury and committing an outrage upon a person suspected of some offence. In England this is called Lidford Law; in Scotland, Cowper Law, Jedburgh Justice.

The Ohio act (see infra) defines lynching and mob as follows: "That any collection of individuals, assembled for any unlawful purposes intending to do damage or injury to any one, or pretending to exercise correctional power over persons by violence, and without authority of law, shall for the purposes of this act be regarded as a 'mob,' and any act of violence exercised by them upon the body of any person, shall constitute a 'lynching.'" 92 Ohio Laws 136.

There are various theories as to the person from whom lynch law derived its name. That most generally accepted credits it to Col. James Lynch, a Virginian, who, in 1780, administered such law to the extent of whipping but not the death penalty against Tory conspirators. For the protection of himself and his associates an act of amnesty was passed by the Virginia legislature in October, 1782, in which their action was described as "not strictly warranted by law, although justified by the imminence of the danger." Another person mentioned in this connection was the founder of the town of Lynchburg, Virginia, and another, an Englishman, sent out in the seventeenth century under a commission to suppress pirates whom he summarily executed without trial. Another account ascribes the term to James Fitz-Stevens Lynch, mayor of Galway in 1493, who tried his son for murder and when prevented from publicly executing him, hanged him from the window of his own house. See Int. Cyc.; 5 Green Bag 116; 4 id. 561; 2 Inter-Coll. L. J. 163.

All who consent to the infliction of capital punishment by lynch law are guilty of murder in the first degree when not executed in hot blood. The act strikingly combines the distinctive features of deliberation and intent to take life.

Lynch law differs from mob law in disregarding the forms of ordinary law, while intending to maintain its substance; while mob law disregards both.

In Ohio the act for the suppression of mob violence (supra) provided that any person assaulted by a mob and suffering lynching should be entitled to recover from the county $500; or, if the injury was serious, $1,000; or if it resulted in permanent disability of earning a livelihood $5,000. It also gave the county the right of recovering the amount of any judgment rendered against it from any of the parties composing the mob. This provision was held unconstitutional in specifying a definite recovery regardless of the actual damages suffered, being an encroachment of the legislature upon the judicial power, and so far as the damages awarded exceeded the actual damages suffered, it taxed the county for private interests; Caldwell v. Cuyahoga County Com'rs, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 167, affirming 4 Ohio N. P. 249. This decision was followed in another county; 39 Wkly. L. Bul. 103.

It is the sworn duty of the governor and the sheriff to see to it that the constitutional guaranty that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, does not become a dead letter. Constitutional and statutory provisions have been enacted providing for the removal of any sheriff who through neglect, connivance, or other grave fault permits a prisoner to be taken away from his custody and killed or grievously harmed in body; Ala. Const. 1901; Md. Acts, 1905; So. Cr. Code, 1896. In some states there is legislation to the effect that in all cases of lynching, the county where it takes place shall, without regard to the conduct of the officer, be liable in damages to the estate of the deceased; Brown v. Orangeburg County, 55 S. C. 45, 32 S. E. 764, 44 L. R. A. 734; Board of Com'rs of Champaign County v. Church, 62 Ohio St. 318, 57 N. E. 50, 48 L. R. A. 738, 78 Am. St. Rep. 718. Such acts are held constitutional against the contention that it violates the right of a trial by jury or takes property without due process of law. A sheriff was held guilty of contempt for allowing the lynching of a federal prisoner; U. S. v. Shipp, 214 U. S. 386, 29 Sup. Ct. 637, 53 L. Ed. 1041.

The Alabama constitution provides that, when a prisoner is taken from a jail and killed, the sheriff may be impeached; in State v. Cazalas, 162 Ala. 210, 50 South. 296, 19 Ann. Cas. 886, it was held that, where a negro was quietly taken from the jail and lynched by a few armed men, the sheriff should be removed from office.

See Lynch Law, by J. E. Cutler.

LYTÆ. In Old Roman Law. A name given to students of civil law in the fourth year of their course. Tayl. Civ. L. 39.

M

M. The thirteenth letter of the alphabet.

Persons convicted of manslaughter, in England, were formerly marked with this letter on the brawn of the thumb.

This letter was sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signifies that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per dollar, and not one per centum interest.

MACE BEARER. In English Law. One who carries the mace, an ornamented staff, before certain functionaries. In Scotland an officer attending the court of session, and usually called a macer.

MACE-GREFF. In Old English Law. One who willingly bought stolen goods, especially food. Brit. c. 29.

MACE-PROOF. Secure against arrest. Wharton.

MACEDONIAN DECREE. In Roman Law. A decree of the Roman senate, which derived its name from that of a certain usurer, who was the cause of its being made, in consequence of his exactions.

It was intended to protect sons who lived under the paternal jurisdiction from the unconscionable contracts which they sometimes made on the expectations after their fathers' deaths; another, and perhaps the principal object, was to cast odium on the rapacious creditors. It declared such contracts void. Dig. 14, 6, 1; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, tit. 6, § 4; Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 2, § 12, note. See CATCHING BARGAIN; POST OBIT.

MACHINATION. The act by which some plot or conspiracy is set on foot.

MACHINERY. A more comprehensive term than machine, including the appurtenances necessary to the working of a machine; Seavey v. Ins. Co., 111 Mass. 540; as the mains of a gas company; Com. v. Gas Light Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 75; or even a rolling-mill; Lowbler v. Le Roy, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 202.

Parts of a machine considered collectively; also the combination of mechanical means to a given end, such as the machinery of a locomotive, or of a canal lock, or of a watch; Bennedict v. City of New Orleans, 44 La. Ann. 793, 11 South. 41. Those devices and parts of a car which have no physical operation and connection with the locomotive, except by means of the cars of a train, and the couplers between them are not within the meaning of the word as used in the exemption clause of a bill of lading; N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Ry., 81 Fed. 289, 26 C. C. A. 402, 47 U. S. App. 744. The mains or pipes laid in streets to distribute gas are "part of the machinery by means of which the corporate business (is) carried on;" Washington Gas Light Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 325, 16 Sup. Ct. 564, 40 L. Ed. 712. A saw is part of the machinery of a saw-mill; State v. Avery, 44 Vt. 629; and iron and steel dies used in the manufacture of tinware are machinery; Seavey v. Ins. Co., 111 Mass. 540.

See FIXTURES.

MACTATOR. A murderer.

MAD PARLIAMENT. Henry III, in 1258, at the desire of the Great Council in Parliament, consented to the appointment of a committee of twenty-four, of whom twelve were appointed by the Barons and twelve by the King, in a parliament which was stigmatized as the "Mad Parliament." Unlimited power was given to it to carry out all necessary reforms. It drew up the Provisions of Oxford.

MADE KNOWN. Words used as a return to a writ of scire facias when it has been served on the defendant.

MADMAN. See INSANITY.

MÆG. A kinsman. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 241.

The larger group of individuals into which the Anglo-Saxon family were divided was called the mægth or mægburh. At her marriage the wife did not become a member of her husband's mægth but remained in her own. If she committed a wrong her own kindred were responsible therefor, and the wergild of the husband was paid to his mægth as was that of the wife to hers. The mægth of the wife entrusted to her husband the guardianship over her, but constantly watched over his administration of the trust and interfered to protect her if necessary. The children belonged to both the mægth of the father and to that of the mother. The organization of the mægth offered a natural means to the mutual guaranty of personal safety, but as civilization became more advanced both the church and the state encouraged every tendency to weaken the tie of kinship as it became so strong as to threaten the rights of the king. See Essays, Ang. Sax. Fam. L. 121; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 241.

MÆGBOTE. A recompense for the slaying of a kinsman. Cowell. See WERGILD.

MÆGTH. See MÆG.

MAGISTER AD FACULTATES (Lat.). In English Ecclesiastical Law. The title of an officer who grants dispensations: as, to marry, to eat flesh on days prohibited, and the like. Bacon, Abr. Eccles. Courts (A 5).

MAGISTER CANCELLARIÆ. In Old English Law. A master in chancery.

MAGISTER LIBELLORUM. Master of requests.

MAGISTER LITIS. Master of a suit.

MAGISTER NAVIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Master of a ship; he to whom the whole care of a ship is given up, whether appointed by the owner, or charterer. L. 1, ff. de exercit.; idem § 3; Calvinus, Lex.; Story, Ag. § 36.

MAGISTER PALATII. Master of the palace, an officer similar to the modern lord chamberlain. Tayl. Civ. L. 37.

MAGISTER SOCIETATIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Managing partner. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calv. Lex. Especially used of an officer employed in the business of collecting revenues, who had power to call together the tything-men (decumands), as it were a senate, and lay matters before them, and keep account of all receipts, etc. He had, generally, an agent in the province, who was also sometimes called magister societatis. Id.; Story, Partn. § 95.

MAGISTRACY. In its most enlarged signification, this term includes all officers, legislative, executive, and judicial. For example, in some of the state constitutions will be found this provision: "the powers of the government are divided into three distinct departments, and each of these is confided to a separate magistracy, to wit: those which are legislative, to one; those which are executive, to another; and those which are judicial, to another." In a more confined sense, it signifies the body of officers whose duty it is to interpret the laws; as, judges, justices of the peace, and the like. In a still narrower sense, it is employed to designate the body of justices of the peace. It is also used for the office of a magistrate.

MAGISTRALIA BREVIA (Lat.). Writs adapted to special cases, and so called because drawn by the masters in chancery. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 239. For the difference between these and judicial writs, see Bracton 413 b.

MAGISTRATE. A public civil officer, invested with some part of the legislative, executive, or judicial power given by the constitution. In a narrower sense this term includes only inferior judicial officers, as justices of the peace.

The president of the United States is the chief magistrate of this nation; the governors are the chief magistrates of their respective states.

It is the duty of all magistrates to exercise the power vested in them for the good of the people, according to law, and with zeal and fidelity. A neglect on the part of a magistrate to exercise the functions of his office, when required by law, is a misdemeanor. See 15 Viner, Abr. 144; Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 22; Dig. 30. 16. 57; Merlin, Rép.; Scanlan v. Wright, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 523, 25 Am. Dec. 344.

A federal law requiring an affidavit to be sworn to before a magistrate, is complied with when "sworn to before me, J. M., Clerk of the Municipal Court," it being presumed that it was taken in the court; In re Keller, 36 Fed. 684; as used in U. S. R. S. § 5278 (extradition proceedings), it includes an assistant police magistrate of a city; Kurtz v. State, 22 Fla. 36, 1 Am. St. Rep. 173.

See JUDGE; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT. In American Law. See COURT OF MAGISTRATES AND FREEHOLDERS.

MAGNA ASSISA ELIGENDA. See GRAND ASSIZE.

MAGNA CARTA, MAGNA CHARTA. The Great Charter of English liberties, so called (but which was really a compact between the king and his barons, and almost exclusively for the benefit of the latter, though confirming the ancient liberties of Englishmen in some few particulars), was wrung from King John by his barons assembled in arms, on the 19th of June, 1215, and was given by the king's hand, as a confirmation of his own act, on the little island in the Thames, within the county of Buckinghamshire, which is still called "Magna Carta Island."

The struggle to secure from the king some recognition of the rights of person and property and some settled administration of law had been going on for nearly two centuries. In fact it had begun soon after the time of William the Conqueror. That monarch had overthrown the laws he found prevailing in England and had distributed to his followers the lands of the conquered people. But the same arbitrary power which gave these estates could, at a moment's caprice, take them away, and the barons were anxious for a more stable system. The ancient baronial laws of Edward the Confessor contained all that was needed to secure their rights, and these ancient laws they petitioned to have restored. They renewed their efforts from time to time with William I., William Rufus, Henry I., and Stephen, all of whom, except Henry I., succeeded in putting them off with promises. From Henry a charter was extorted about the year 1100 declaring that the church should be free, heirs should receive their possessions unredeemed, and evil customs should be abolished. In fact it gave most of the privileges which were afterwards embodied in Magna Carta. But in the course of a hundred years nearly all the copies of it were lost and its provisions were forgotten. It was not until John came to the throne in 1199 that the barons had their best opportunity. John's right to assume the crown was weak, and in order to gain the support of the barons he had to promise them the privileges for which they clamored, and with arms in their hands they compelled him to keep his word. Thomson, Magna Carta 2.

(It is said by Holdsworth [Hist. E. L. vol. II. p. 165] that "all classes united to obtain the charter.")

The preliminary interview was held in the meadow of Running Mede, or Runny Mede (fr. Sax. rune, council), that is, council meadow, which had been used constantly for national assemblies, and which was situated on the southwest side of the Thames, between Staines and Windsor. Though such formalities were observed, the provisions of the charter were disregarded by John and succeeding kings, each of whom, when wishing to do a popular thing, confirmed this charter. There were thirty-two confirmations between 1215 and 1416, the most celebrated of which were those by Hen. III. (1225) and Edw. I., which last confirmation was sealed with the great seal of England at Ghent, on the 5th November, 1297. Confirmatio Chartarum. It "ranks as a statute by virtue, not of John's original grant in 1215, but of Edward I.'s confirmation in 1297." Sir F. Pollock in 21 L. Q. Rev. 6. The Magna Carta printed in all the books as of 9 Hen. III. is really a transcript of the roll of parliament of 25 Edw. I.

There were many originals of Magna Carta made, two of which are preserved in the British Museum. An original was found early in the 17th century by Sir Robert Cotton, the antiquary, in the hands of a tailor, who was just on the point of cutting it into measuring strips, having bought it in a lot of old papers out of an apartment anciently used as a scrivener's office. 11 Am. L. Rec. 634.

It is a misunderstanding to regard the Charter either as containing new principles or as terminating a struggle. On the contrary its character is eminently conservative, setting up "the laws of Henry I." as its standard. At the same time "confirmation of the Charter" was the rallying cry of the three next generations, and the constitutional progress up to 1340 is little more than the working out of the Charter's main clauses. 1 Soc. Eng. 267. H. Brunner (2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 26) remarks that its "constitutional significance is often overrated."

The Magna Carta of our statute-book is not exactly the charter that John sealed at Runnymede. It is a charter granted by his son and successor. Henry III., the text of the title of the original document having been modified on more than one occasion. 1 Soc. Eng. 410.

Magna Carta consists of thirty-seven chapters. At the beginning is the clause which guarantees the liberty of the Church. The other clauses may be divided into four classes: 1. The clauses dealing with what may be called feudal grievances. 2. The clauses relating to trade, and, 3. Central government. 4. The clauses which place limitations upon arbitrary power.

C. 1 provides that the Anglican church shall be free and possess its rights inviolable, probably referring chiefly to immunity from papal jurisdiction. C. 2 fixes relief which shall be paid by king's tenants, of full age. C. 3 relates to heirs and their being in ward. C. 4: guardians of wards within age are by this chapter restrained from waste of ward's lands, "vasto hominum et rerum," waste of men and of things. C. 5 relates to the land and other property of heirs, and the delivering them up when the heirs are of age. C. 6: the marriage of heirs. C. 7 provides that a widow shall have quarantine of forty days in her husband's chief house, and shall have her dower set out to her at once, without paying anything for it, and in meanwhile to have reasonable estovers; the dower to be one-third of lands of the husband, unless the wife was endowed of less at the churchdoor; widow not to be compelled to marry, but to find surety that she will not marry without consent of the lord of whom she holds.

C. 8: the goods and chattels of crown-debtor to be exhausted before his rents and lands are distrained; the surety not to be called upon if the principal can pay; if sureties pay the debt, they to have the rents and lands of debtor till the debt is satisfied. C. 9 secures to London and other cities, boroughs, towns, and the Barons of the Five Ports and all other ports, their liberties and free customs. C. 10 prohibits excessive distress for more service or rent than was due. C. 11 provides that the courts of common pleas should not follow the court of the king, but should be held in a certain place. They were, accordingly, located at Westminster. C. 12 declares the manner of taking assizes of novel desseisin and Mortdancester. These were actions to recover lost seisin (q. v.), now abolished. C. 13 relates to assizes of darrein presentment brought by ecclesiastics to try right to present to ecclesiastical benefices. Abolished. C. 14 provides that amercement of a freeman for a fault shall be proportionate to his crime, and not excessive, and that the villein of any other than the king shall be amerced in the same manner, his farm, utensils, etc., being preserved to him. (For otherwise he could not cultivate the lord's land.) Amercement shall be only by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage; and earls and barons by their peers. C. 15 and c. 16 relate to making of bridges and keeping in repair of sewers and seawalls. This is now regulated by local parochial law.

C. 17 forbids sheriffs and coroners to hold pleas of the crown. Pleas of the crown are criminal cases which it is desirable should not be tried by an inferior and perhaps ignorant magistrate. C. 18 provides that if any one holding a lay fee from the crown die, the king's bailiff, on showing letters patent of summons for debt from the king, may attach all his goods and chattels, so that nothing be moved away till the debt to the crown be paid off clearly, the residue to go to the executors to perform the testament of the dead; and if there be no debt owing to the crown, all the chattels of the deceased to go to the use of the dead, saving to the wife and children their reasonable parts. C. 19 relates to purveyance of the king's house; C. 20, to the castle-ward; C. 21, to taking horses, carts, and wood for use of royal castles. The last three chapters are now obsolete. C. 22 provides that the lands of felons shall go to the king for a year and a day, afterwards to the lord of the fee. The day is added to prevent dispute as to whether the year is exclusive or inclusive of its last day. C. 23 provides that the wears shall be pulled down in the Thames and Medway, and throughout England, except on the sea-coast. These wears destroyed fish, and interrupted the floating of wood and the like down stream. C. 24 relates to the writ of præcipe in capite for lords against their tenants offering wrong, etc. Now abolished. C. 25 provides a uniform measure and weights. C. 26 relates to inquisitions of life and member, which are to be granted freely. Now abolished. C. 27 relates to knight-service and other ancient tenures, now abolished.

C. 28 relates to accusations, which must be under oath, or not without faithful witnesses brought in for the same. C. 29 provides that "no freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseised from his freehold, or liberties, or immunities, nor outlawed, nor exiled, nor in any manner destroyed, nor will we come upon him or send against him, except by legal judgment of his peers or the law of the land. We will sell or deny justice to none, nor put off right or justice." This clause is very much celebrated, as confirming the right to trial by jury. C. 30 relates to merchant-strangers, who are to be civilly treated, and, unless previously prohibited, are to have free passage through, and exit from, and dwelling in, England, without any manner of extortions, except in time of war. If they are of a country at war with England, and found in England at the beginning of the war, they are to be kept safely until it is found out how English merchants are treated in their country, and then are to be treated accordingly. C. 31 relates to escheats; C. 32, to the power of alienation in a freeman, which is limited. C. 33 relates to patrons of abbeys, etc. C. 34 provides that no appeal shall be brought by a woman except for the death of her husband. This was because the defendant could not defend himself against a woman in single combat. The crime of murder or homicide is now inquired into by indictment. C. 35 relates to rights of holding county courts, etc. Obsolete. C. 36 provides that a gift of lands in mortmain shall be void, and lands so given go to the lord of fee. C. 37 relates to escuage and subsidy. C. 38 confirms every article of the charter.

In Magna Carta we get the first attempt at the expressions in exact legal terms of some of the leading ideas of constitutional government. ... The period in which the law is developed by the power of the crown alone is over; the period which will end in the establishment of a body which will limit the power of the crown and share in the making of laws is begun. ... Meantime the common law is safe. The king himself is restrained, but the law remains. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 168.

The object of this statute was to declare and reaffirm such common-law principles as, by reason of usurpation and force, had come to be of doubtful effect, and needed therefore to be authoritatively announced, that king and subject might alike authoritatively observe them. Cooley, Const. Lim. 30.

Magna Carta is said by some to have been so called because larger than the Charta de Foresta (q. v.), which was given about the same time. Spelman, Gloss. But see Cowell. Magna Carta is mentioned casually by Bracton, Fleta, and Britton. Glanville is supposed to have written before Magna Carta. The Mirror of Justices (q. v.) has a chapter on its defects. See Co. 2d Inst.; Barringt. Stat.; 4 Bla. Com. 423. See a copy of Magna Carta in 1 Laws of South Carolina, edited by Judge Cooper, p. 78. In the Penny Magazine for the year 1833, p. 229, there is a copy of the original seal of King John affixed to this instrument; a specimen of a fac-simile of the writing of Magna Carta, beginning at the passage, Nullus liber homo capiatur vel imprisonetur, etc. A fac-simile has been published by Chatto & Windus, London. A copy of both m be found in the Magasin Pittoresque for the year 1834, pp. 52, 53. Magna Carta was published for the first time in America in a tract issued by William Penn called "The Excellent Privilege of Liberty and Property," printed by Bradford at Philadelphia in 1687. Besides extensive extracts from Magna Carta and Coke's comments thereon, the tract contains the confirmation of the charters of the liberties of England and of the forest made in the 25 Edward I., the Statute de Tallagio, the royal charter of Pennsylvania, and Penn's charter of liberties to the freemen of the province. This tract having become very scarce, has been reprinted by the Philobiblion Club of Philadelphia, with an historical introduction by Dr. Frederick D. Stone. See Encyc. Brit.; Wharton, Lex.; Thomson; Wells; McKechnie; Barrington, Magna Carta. The Latin text, with a translation, is to be found in 1 Stat. at Large p. 1 (British).

MAIHEMATUS. Maimed or wounded.

MAIL. (Fr. malle, a trunk). The bag, valise, or other contrivance used in conveying through the post-office letters, packets, newspapers, pamphlets, and the like, from place to place, under the authority of the United States. The things thus carried are also called the mail. The right to use the mails is statutory and can be withdrawn by the postmaster-general without a hearing; Missouri Drug Co. v. Wyman, 129 Fed. 623.

See LETTER; DECOY LETTER; POSTAL SERVICE; OBSCENITY.

MAIL MATTER. Letters, packets, etc., received for transmission, and to be transmitted by post to the person to whom such matter is directed. U. S. v. Rapp, 30 Fed. 820.

MAILABLE. Belonging to the class of articles transmissible by mail.

MAILE. In Old English Law. A small piece of money. A rent.

MAILED. As applied to a letter, it means that the letter was properly prepared for transmission by the servants of the postal department, and that it was put in the custody of the officer charged with the duty of forwarding the mail. Pier v. Heinrichshoffen, 67 Mo. 169, 29 Am. Rep. 501. See LETTER.

MAIM. To deprive a person of such part of his body as to render him less able in fighting or defending himself than he would have otherwise been. Whart. Cr. L. § 581. In New York, under the Rev. Stat., a blow aimed at and delivered upon the head does not constitute the crime of assault and battery, with intent to maim; Foster v. People, 50 N. Y. 598. Distinguished from wounding; 11 Cox, Cr. Cas. 125; State v. Harris, 11 Ia. 414. See MAYHEM.

In Pleading. The words "Feloniously did maim" must of necessity be inserted, because no other word nor any circumlocution will answer the same purpose. 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 244.

MAIN CHANNEL. See CHANNEL.

MAIN SEA. See SEA.

MAINAD. A false oath; perjury. Cowell.

MAINE. The name of one of the states of the United States of America, formed out of that part of the territory of Massachusetts called the district of Maine.

The territory embraced in the new state was not contiguous to that remaining in the state from which it was taken, and was more than four times as large. The legislature of Massachusetts, by an act passed June 19, 1819, gave its consent for the people of the district to become a separate and independent state. They met in convention, by delegates elected for the purpose, and formed a separate state, by the style of the State of Maine, and adopted a constitution for the government thereof, October 19, 1819, and applied to congress, at its next session, for admission into the Union.

The petition was presented in the house of representatives of the United States, December 8, 1819, and the state was admitted into the Union by the act of congress of March 3, 1820, from and after the fifteenth day of March, 1820. The constitution of 1819 is still in force but has been frequently amended.

In 1913 amendments were adopted creating Augusta as the capital and providing for the issue of $2,000,000 of bonds for roads.

MAINOUR. In Criminal Law. The thing stolen found in the hands of the thief who has stolen it. See LARCENY.

MAINOVER, or MAINŒUVRE. A trespass committed by hand. See 7 Rich. II. c. 4.

MAINPERNABLE. Capable of being bailed; one for whom bail may be taken; bailable.

MAINPERNORS. In English Law. Those persons to whom a man is delivered out of custody or prison, on their becoming bound for his appearance.

Mainpernors differ from bail; a man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither; but are merely sureties for his appearance at the day; bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for all the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 6 Mod. 231; 7 id. 77, 85, 98; 3 Bla. Com. 128. See Dane, Abr.; BAIL.

MAINPRIZE. A writ of mainprize lay "where a man is taken for suspicion of felony, or indicted of felony for the which thing by the law he is bailable, and he offers sufficient sureties unto the sheriff or others who have authority to bail him, and he or they do refuse to let him to bail." This writ and the writ de homine replegiando were chiefly used to compel the sheriff or other gaoler to release on bail or mainprize. In the former, the person is not in custody at all; in the latter the prisoner is actually in the custody of the person who has given bail for him; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 96.

See DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO; BAIL.

MAINSWORN. Forsworn, by making a false oath with hand (main) on book. Used in the North of England. Brownl. 4; Hob. 125.

MAINTAINED. In Pleading. A technical word indispensable in an indictment for maintenance. 1 Wils. 325.

MAINTAINORS. In Criminal Law. Those who maintain or support a cause depending between others, not being retained as counsel or attorney. For this they may be fined and imprisoned. 2 Swift, Dig. 328; 4 Bla. Com. 124; Bacon, Abr. Barrator.

MAINTENANCE. Aid; support; assistance; the support which one person, who is bound by law to do so, gives to another. See HUSBAND; PARENT AND CHILD.

In Criminal Law. A malicious, or, at least, officious, interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties to it against the other, with money or advice to prosecute or defend the action, without any authority of law. 1 Russ. Cr. 176. See 4 Kent 446; Whart. Cr. L. § 1854.

An unlawful taking in hand or upholding of quarrels or sides to the disturbance or hindrance of common right. Hovey v. Hobson, 51 Me. 63.

An officious intermeddling in a suit that no way belongs to one, by assisting either party to the disturbing of the community by stirring up suits. Reece v. Kyle, 49 Ohio St. 475, 31 N. E. 747, 16 L. R. A. 723.

At common law it signifies an unlawful taking in hand or upholding of quarrels, or sides, to the disturbance or hindrance of common right. The maintenance of one side, in consideration of some bargain to have part of the thing in dispute, is called champerty. Champerty, therefore, is a species of maintenance; Richardson v. Rowland, 40 Conn. 570.

The intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing the litigation. 2 Pars. Contr., 8th ed. *766. See 4 Term 340; 4 Q. B. 883.

But there are many acts in the nature of maintenance which become justifiable from the circumstances under which they are done. They may be justified, first, because the parties have a common interest recognized by the law in the matter at issue in the suit; Bacon, Abr. Maintenance; 11 M. & W. 675; Lathrop v. Bank, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 489 [1895] 1 Q. B. 339; second, because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son, or heir apparent, or husband or wife; Thallhimer v. Brinkerhoff, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 623, 15 Am. Dec. 308; Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. 673, 18 S. W. 272; third, because the relation of landlord and tenant or master and servant subsists between the party to the suit and the person who assists him; fourth, because the money is given out of charity; State v. Chitty, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 401; fifth, because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counsellor; the assistance to be rendered must, however, be strictly professional, for a lawyer is not more justified in giving his client money than another man; 1 Russ. Cr. 179; Bacon, Abr. Maintenance; Brooke, Abr. Maintenance. This offence is punishable criminally by fine and imprisonment; 4 Bla. Com. 124. Maintenance as a criminal matter is practically obsolete; see 11 Q. B. D. 14. Contracts growing out of maintenance are void; Swett v. Poor, 11 Mass. 549; McCall's Adm'r v. Capehart, 20 Ala. 521; Brown v. Beauchamp, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 413, 17 Am. Dec. 81; Arden v. Patterson, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 44; 4 Q. B. 883.

See 14 L. R. A. 785, n.; CHAMPERTY.

MAÎTRE. In French Law. Lawyers are so styled, abbreviated as Me.

MAJESTAS. In Roman Law. The supreme authority of the state or prince.

MAJOR. One who has attained his full age and has acquired all his civil rights; one who is no longer a minor; an adult. See MAJORITY.

In Military Law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

For the use of the word in Latin maxims, see MAXIMS.

MAJOR-GENERAL. In Military Law. An officer next in rank above a brigadier-general. He commands a division consisting of several brigades, or even an army.

MAJORA REGALIA. The king's dignity, power, and royal prerogative, as opposed to his revenue, which is comprised in the minora regalia. 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 483; 1 Bla. Com. 240.

MAJORES (Lat.). The male ascendants beyond the sixth degree. The term was used among the Romans, and is still retained in making genealogical tables.

MAJORITY. The state or condition of a person who has arrived at full age. He is then said to be a major, in opposition to minor, which is his condition during infancy. See AGE.

The greater number. More than all the opponents.

Some question exists as to whether a majority of any body is more than one-half the whole number or more than the number acting in opposition. Thus, in a body of one hundred voters, in which twenty did not vote on any particular question, on the former supposition fifty-one would be a majority, on the latter forty-one. The intended signification is generally denoted by the context, and where it is not, the second sense is generally intended; a majority on a given question being more than one-half the number of those voting.

In every well-regulated society, the majority has always claimed and exercised the right to govern the whole society, in the manner pointed out by the fundamental laws; and the minority are bound whether they have assented or not, for the obvious reason that opposite wills cannot prevail at the same time, in the same society, on the same subject; 1 Tuck. Bla. Com. Appx. 168; 9 Dane, Abr. 37; 1 Story, Const. § 207.

As to the rights of the majority of part-owners of vessels, see 3 Kent 114; Pars. Marit. Law; PART-OWNERS.

In the absence of contract, the general rule in partnerships is that each partner has an equal voice, and a majority acting bona fide have the right to manage the partnership concern and dispose of the partnership property notwithstanding the dissent of the minority; but in every case when the minority have a right to give an opinion, they ought to be notified. See PARTNER.

As to the conflict of laws relating to majority, see Barrera v. Alpuente, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 69, 17 Am. Dec. 180.

In corporations, in the absence of any provision in the charter or constitution, the general rule is that, within the scope of the corporate affairs, the acts of a majority bind the corporation; Lauman v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 42, 72 Am. Dec. 685; Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891; Eggleston v. Doolittle, 33 Conn. 396. It is not necessary that those present at a meeting constitute a majority of all the members; Ex parte Willcocks, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 402, 17 Am. Dec. 525; a majority of those who appear may act; Craig v. First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, 88 Pa. 42, 32 Am. Rep. 417; Brewer v. Proprietors of Boston Theatre, 104 Mass. 378; Faulds v. Yates, 57 Ill. 416, 11 Am. Rep. 24; 33 Beav. 595. When, however, an act is to be performed by a select and definite body, such as a board of directors, a majority of the entire body is required to constitute a meeting; Buell v. Buckingham & Co., 16 Ia. 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516; but if a quorum is present, a majority of such quorum may act; Edgerly v. Emerson, 23 N. H. 555, 55 Am. Dec. 207; Price v. R. Co., 13 Ind. 58. The minority of a committee to which a corporate power has been delegated cannot bind the majority, or do any valid act, in the absence of any special provision otherwise; Brown v. District of Columbia, 127 U. S. 579, 8 Sup. Ct. 1314, 32 L. Ed. 262.

In political elections, a majority of the votes cast at an election on any question means the majority of those who voted on that question; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107 (Gil. 81); Holcomb v. Davis, 56 Ill. 414; Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544; Cass County v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 369, 24 L. Ed. 416. "All qualified voters who absent themselves from an election duly called are presumed to assent to the express will of the majority of those voting, unless the law providing for the election otherwise declares. Any other rule would be productive of the greatest inconvenience, and ought not to be adopted unless the legislative will to that effect is clearly expressed." Id. (Miller and Bradley, JJ., dissenting); but the opposite view is held in State v. Winkelmeier, 35 Mo. 103; Bayard v. Klinge, 16 Minn. 249 (Gil. 221); State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 505. Where an amendment to the constitution received less than a majority of all those who voted at the election, but had a majority of the votes cast for or against the adoption of the amendment; and it was held (two judges dissenting) that the amendment had been neither ratified nor rejected.

The United States House of Representatives has power to transact business when a majority of its members is present, and may prescribe any method which is reasonably certain to determine the presence of a majority; U. S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 36 L. Ed. 321. See ELECTION; MEETING; QUORUM; REORGANIZATION; STOCKHOLDER.

MAJUS JUS. A writ proceeding in some customary manors to try a right to land. Cow.

MAKE. To perform or execute; as, to make his law, is to perform that which a man had bound himself to do; that is, to clear himself of an action commenced against him, by his oath and the oath of his neighbors. Old Nat. Brev. 161.

To make default is to fail to appear in proper trial; to fail in a legal duty.

To make oath is to swear according to the form prescribed by law. It is also used intransitively of persons and things, to have effect; to tend. See Hardr. 133.

MAKER. A term applied to one who makes a promissory note and promises to pay it when due.

He who makes a bill of exchange is called the drawer; and frequently in common parlance and in books of reports we find the word drawer inaccurately applied to the maker of a promissory note. See PROMISSORY NOTE.

MAKING HIS LAW. A phrase used to denote the act of a person who wages his law. Bacon, Abr. Wager of Law.

MAL. A prefix meaning wrong or fraudulent.

MAL-TOLTE. In Old French Law. A term supposed to have arisen from the usurious gains of the Jews and Lombards in their management of the public revenue. Steph. Lect. 372.

MALA FIDES (Lat.). Bad faith. It is opposed to bona fides, good faith.

MALA IN SE. Acts morally wrong; offences against conscience. 1 Bla. Com. 57, 58; 4 id. 8. See MALA PROHIBITA.

MALA PRAXIS (Lat.). Bad or unskilful practice in a physician or other professional person, whereby the health of the patient is injured. Present usage adopts rather the English term malpractice. See PHYSICIAN.

MALA PROHIBITA (Lat.). Those things which are prohibited by law, and therefore unlawful.

Crimes, made such, only by reason of statutory prohibition. 1 McClain, Cr. L. § 23.

The distinction was formerly made with respect to the right to recover upon a contract for doing an unlawful act between mala prohibita and mala in se, but it has been said that this "has been long since exploded," and that "it was not founded upon any sound principle,"—that it makes no difference whether an act is forbidden because it is against good morals or against the interest of the state; 5 B. & Ald. 335, 340; Warren v. Ins. Co., 13 Pick. (Mass.) 519, 25 Am. Dec. 341; 12 Q. B. Div. 121; and "it is now well settled that every contract to do a thing made penal by statute is void as unlawful;" Sharsw. note, 1 Bla. Com. 58.

An act done in violation of a statutory prohibition confers no right upon the wrongdoer; Waskey v. Hammer, 223 U. S. 85, 32 Sup. Ct. 187, 56 L. Ed. 359.

In the criminal law the distinction is important with reference to the intent with which a wrongful act is done. Thus, a man in the execution of one act, by chance, does another one for which, if he had wilfully committed it, he would be liable to punishment,—if the act that he is doing were lawful or merely malum prohibitum, he is not punishable for the act arising from chance; but if malum in se, it is otherwise. For instance, if a person unauthorized to kill game in England, contrary to the statutes, in unlawfully shooting at game, accidentally kills a man, it is no more criminal than if he were authorized; but if the accidental killing be the result of wantonly shooting at another's fowls, which is malum in se, as a trespass, it is manslaughter; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 332; citing 1 East, P. C. 260; and see State v. Stanton, 37 Conn. 424; Conn. v. Adams, 114 Mass. 323, 19 Am. Rep. 362; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 25.

Mr. Bishop also considers that the rule that ignorance of the law is no excuse for crime is particularly harsh when applied to what is only malum prohibitum; but that at the same time this is less important because most indictable wrongs are mala in se; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 295.

It is said that "offences which are mala in se attract no additional turpitude from being declared unlawful by human legislation," while "mala prohibita are such acts as are in themselves indifferent," and become right or wrong, just or unjust, duties or misdemeanors, as the municipal legislature sees proper for protecting the welfare of society and more adequately carrying on the purposes of civil life; Anderson, Law Dict. In Com. v. Willard, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 476, the court speak of offences "of a high and aggravated character, tending to breaches of the peace or other great disorder and violence, being what are usually considered mala in se, or criminal in themselves, in contradistinction to mala prohibita, or acts otherwise indifferent than as they are restrained by positive law."

"The substance of the distinction between malum in se and malum prohibitum is that the former is more intensely evil than the latter." 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 658. Offences which have been judicially characterized in this country as mala prohibita are violations of statutes against gambling and lotteries; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 821, 25 L. Ed. 1079; carrying concealed weapons; State v. Shelby, 90 Mo. 302, 2 S. W. 468.

Blackstone mentions as examples, game laws and laws against exercising certain trades without having served a certain apprenticeship, for not performing the statute-work on the public roads, and "for innumerable other positive misdemeanors," the subject of discussion being more particularly the effect of the mere prohibition of an act and affixing a penalty; he adds: "Now these prohibitory laws do not make the transgression a moral offence or sin; the only obligation in conscience is to submit to the penalty, if lawful. It must, however, here be observed that we are speaking of laws that are merely penal where the thing forbidden or enjoined is wholly a matter of indifference and where the penalty involved is an adequate compensation for the small inconvenience supposed to arise from the offence, but where disobedience to the law involves also indirect or public mischief or private injury, there it falls within our former distinction and is also an offence against conscience." 1 Bla. Com. 57. His "former distinction" is as to mala in se which we are in conscience bound to abstain from, apart from their being criminal. These views of Blackstone have been the subject of much criticism and are controverted in the notes of Christian, Sharswood, and Chase.

Aside from the considerations suggested by Bishop as above stated, the distinction between mala prohibita and mala in se is of little, if any, practical utility, and some crimes usually relegated to the former class are so generally recognized as such by statute as to be considered as covered by the criminal law in the same sense as malum in se; 1 McClain, Cr. L. § 23. Judicial notice is taken of them in a country where the common law prevails; Morrissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327. See CRIME; MALUM IN SE.

MALADMINISTRATION. A term in law used interchangeably with mis-administration and meaning "wrong administration." Minkler v. State, 14 Neb. 183, 15 N. W. 330.

MALANDRINUS. A thief or pirate. Wals. 338.

MALBERGE. A hill where the people assembled at a court, similar to the English assizes. Du Cange.

MALE. Of the masculine sex; of the sex that begets young; the sex opposed to the female.

MALEDICTION. In Ecclesiastical Law. A curse which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches and religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.

MALEFACTOR. He who has been guilty of some crime; in another sense, one who has been convicted of having committed a crime.

MALEFICIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Waste; damage; tort; injury. Dig. 5. 18. 1.

MALFEASANCE. The unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not, to do. It differs from misfeasance and nonfeasance, which titles see. See 1 Chitty, Pr. 9; 1 Chitty, Pl. 134.

MALICE. In Criminal Law. The doing a wrongful act intentionally without just cause or excuse. 4 B. & C. 255; Com. v. York, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 104, 43 Am. Dec. 373; Zimmerman v. Whiteley, 134 Mich. 39, 95 N. W. 989. A wicked and mischievous purpose which characterizes the perpetration of an injurious act without lawful excuse. 4 B. & C. 255; Com. v. York, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 104, 43 Am. Dec. 373.

A conscious violation of the law, to the prejudice of another. 9 Cl. & F. 32.

That state of mind which prompts a conscious violation of the law to the prejudice of another. 9 Cl. & F. 32.

In a legal sense malice is never understood to denote general malevolence or unkindness of heart, or enmity towards a particular individual, but it signifies rather the intent from which flows any unlawful and injurious act committed without legal justification. McGurn v. Brackett, 33 Me. 331; State v. Pierce, 7 Ala. 728; Dexter v. Spear, 4 Mas. 115, Fed. Cas. No. 3,867; 90 Ga. 95; R. & R. 26, 465; 1 Mood. C. C. 93; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 11 South. 550, 17 L. R. A. 705. It is not confined to the intention of doing an injury to any particular person, but extends to an evil design, a corrupt and wicked notion against some one at the time of committing the crime; Bacon, Max. Reg. 15; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 727; 3 id. 1104; Johnson v. State, 90 Ga. 441, 16 S. E. 92; U. S. v. Reed, 86 Fed. 308; Tinker v. Colwell, 193 U. S. 487, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 48 L. Ed. 754.

Any formed design of mischief may be called malice. Malice is a wicked, vindictive temper, regardless of social duty, and bent on mischief. There may be malice, in a legal sense, in homicide, where there is no actual intention of any mischief, but the killing is the natural consequence of a careless action; Add. 156; Brooks v. Jones, 33 N. C. 261; 3 Cr. Law Mag. 216; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. (U. S.) 213, 16 L. Ed. 73.

"Malice as used in the books, means sometimes malevolence, sometimes absence of excuse, and sometimes absence of a motive for the public good. If so 'slippery' a word, to borrow Lord Bowen's adjective, were eliminated from legal arguments and opinions, only good would follow." J. B. Ames, in 18 Harv. L. Rev. 422, note.

Express malice exists when the party evinces an intention to commit the crime; 3 Bulstr. 171.

Implied malice is that inferred by law from the facts proved; Worley v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 172; Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 299; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 371. In cases of murder this distinction is of no practical value; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 675.

Malice is implied in every case of intentional homicide; and where the fact of killing is proved, all the circumstances of accident or necessity are to be satisfactorily established by the accused, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him to prove the homicide and the circumstances attending it. If there are, in fact, circumstances of justification, excuse, or palliation, such proof will naturally indicate them. But where the fact of killing is proved by satisfactory evidence, and there are no circumstances disclosed tending to show justification or excuse, there is nothing to rebut the natural presumption of malice. It is material to the just understanding of this rule that it applies only to cases where the killing is proved and nothing further is shown; for if the circumstances disclosed tend to extenuate the act, the prisoner has the full benefit of such facts; Com. v. York, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 93, 43 Am. Dec. 373; Com. v. Hawkins, 3 Gray (Mass.) 463.

Malice in fact is synonymous with "express malice," as distinguished from implied malice; Smith v. Rodecap, 5 Ind. App. 78, 31 N. E. 479; Ramsey v. Cheek, 109 N. C. 270, 13 S. E. 775.

Malice in law is synonymous with implied malice; Smith v. Rodecap, 5 Ind. App. 78, 31 N. E. 479, it is an act done wrongfully and wilfully, without reasonable or probable cause, and not necessarily an act done from ill feeling or spite, or a desire to injure another; Tucker v. Cannon, 32 Neb. 444, 49 N. W. 435.

It is a general rule that when a man commits an act, unaccompanied by any circumstances justifying its commission, the law presumes he has acted with an intent to produce the consequences which have ensued. And therefore the intent to kill is conclusively inferred from the deliberate violent use of a deadly weapon; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 305, 52 Am. Dec. 711. See 3 M. & S. 15; 1 R. & R. Cr. Cas. 207; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 223, 232, 340; 15 Viner, Abr. 506; Wilkins v. State, 98 Ala. 1, 13 South. 312.

In Torts. A malicious act is a wrongful act, intentionally done without cause or excuse. Buckley v. Knapp, 48 Mo. 152.

A malevolent motive for action without reference to any hope of a remoter benefit to oneself to be accomplished by the intended harm to another. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560.

Malice "is improper and indirect motive;" but a better definition is said to be, "A wish to injure the party, rather than to vindicate the law." Pollock, Torts 303.

The evil mind that is regardless of social duty and the rights of others. Graham v. Life Ass'n, 98 Tenn. 48, 37 S. W. 995.

In a libel. In connection with a privileged communication, malice is any direct and wicked motive which induces the writer to defame the other party. Ramsey v. Cheek, 109 N. C. 270, 13 S. E. 775. See LIBEL.

In slander it is the absence of legal excuse; Branstetter v. Dorrough, 81 Ind. 527. See SLANDER.

This term, as applied to torts, does not necessarily mean that which must proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengeful disposition, but a conduct injurious to another, though proceeding from an ill-regulated mind not sufficiently cautious before it occasions an injury to another; Weckerly v. Geyer, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 39.

Malice consists in one's wilful doing of an act or wilful neglect of an obligation which he knows is liable to injure another, regardless of the consequences, and a malignant spirit or a specific intention to hurt an individual is not an essential element; U. S. v. Reed, 86 Fed. 308, per Brown, J. See State v. Toney, 15 S. C. 409; 5 B. & A. 594; Davis v. State, 51 Neb. 301, 70 N. W. 984.

It has been held that an act done in the exercise of a lawful right and without negligence may be unlawful if done with express malice; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 6 Atl. 453, 57 Am. Rep. 445; 7 H. L. Cas. 387; as persuading another to do, to the prejudice of a third person, something which he has a right to do, may give that third person a cause of action if the persuasion be malicious; [1895] 2 Q. B. 21, but this decision was reversed by the house of lords; [1898] A. C. 1; and the majority of the decisions tend to support the rule that an act in itself lawful is not converted by a malicious motive into an unlawful act, so as to make the doer liable to a civil action; id.; Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39, 28 Am. Rep. 93; Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49; and that no use of property which would be legal if due to a proper motive, can become illegal because it is prompted by a motive which is improper or even malicious; [1895] A. C. 587; and see 8 Harv. L. Rev. 1. See LABOR UNIONS. An injunction will not lie against one who, actuated by ill-will, places on her land a large sign: "For sale. Best offer from colored family;" Holbrook v. Morrison, 214 Mass. 209, 100 N. E. 1111, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 228, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 824. Pecuniary dishonesty is held malicious; First Nat. Bank of Flora v. Burkett, 101 Ill. 391, 40 Am. Rep. 209.

A corporation may be liable civilly for that class of torts in which a specific malicious intention is an essential element; U. S. v. John Kelso Co., 86 Fed. 306.

See FALSE IMPRISONMENT; LIBEL; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. A technical phrase employed in indictments, which with the word murder must be used to distinguish the felonious killing called murder from what is called manslaughter. Yelv. 205; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 242; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 429. In the description of murder the words do not imply deliberation, or the lapse of considerable time between the malicious intent to take life and the actual execution of that intent, but rather denote purpose and design in contradistinction to accident and mischance; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 306, 52 Am. Dec. 711; and the intent necessary to constitute malice aforethought need not have existed for any particular time before the act of killing, but it may spring up at the instant and may be inferred from the fact of killing; Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 Sup. Ct. 154, 41 L. Ed. 528; but premeditation may be an element showing malice when otherwise it would not sufficiently appear; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 677. See 8 C. & P. 616; U. S. v. Cornell, 2 Mas. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 14,867; 1 D. & B. 121, 163; Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 299; State v. Simmons, 3 Ala. 497.

MALICIOUS ABANDONMENT. The forsaking without a just cause a husband by the wife, or a wife by her husband. See ABANDONMENT; DIVORCE.

MALICIOUS ARREST. A wanton arrest made without probable cause by a regular process and proceeding. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

MALICIOUS INJURY. An injury committed wilfully and wantonly, or without cause. 1 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 136. See Whar. Cr., 9th ed. § 126 as to malice. See 4 Bla. Com. 143, 198, 206; 2 Russ. Cr. 544.

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF. An expression applied to the wanton or reckless destruction of property, and the wilful perpetration of injury to the person. Washb. Cr. L. 73.

The term is not sufficiently defined as the wilful doing of any act prohibited by law, and for which the defendant has no lawful excuse. To sustain a conviction of the offence of malicious mischief, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty or of wicked revenge. Jacob, Law Dict. Mischief, Malicious; Com. v. Walden, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 558; State v. Robinson, 20 N. C. 130, 32 Am. Dec. 661; State v. Helmes, 27 N. C. 364; Brown's Case, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 177. See People v. Burkhardt, 72 Mich. 172, 40 N. W. 240; Brady v. State (Tex.) 26 S. W. 621; State v. McBeth, 49 Kan. 584, 31 Pac. 145.

This is a common-law offence; Loomis v. Edgerton, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 419; Respublica v. Teischer, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 335, 1 L. Ed. 163; Com. v. Wing, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 1, 19 Am. Dec. 347; State v. Watts, 48 Ark. 56, 2 S. W. 342, 3 Am. St. Rep. 216; contra, State v. Clark, 29 N. J. L. 96; Kilpatrick v. People, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 277; but there are in many states statutes on the subject, and it is now considered rather with reference to statutes; 2 McCl. Cr. L. § 811, where will be found an excellent classified collection of the statutes and cases under them. One may be convicted of maliciously injuring the property of another, without knowing who the owner is; State v. Phipps, 95 Ia. 491, 64 N. W. 411; but it is necessary to allege that the rightful possession of the property was in some person other than the defendant; Woodward v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 554, 28 S. W. 204. In Georgia the statute is held applicable only to inanimate property and not to the case of a dog killed; Patton v. State, 93 Ga. 111, 19 S. E. 734, 24 L. R. A. 732; but see Nehr v. State, 35 Neb. 638, 53 N. W. 589, 17 L. R. A. 771. The destruction of a boat by order of the owner of a pond, in an effort to protect his possession of the latter from trespasses of the owner of the boat who had repeatedly taken the boat back to the water after the defendant had hauled it away, is not malicious mischief; People v. Kane, 142 N. Y. 366, 37 N. E. 104; and see id., 131 N. Y. 111, 29 N. E. 1015, 27 Am. St. Rep. 574, where the advice of counsel was held no defence.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. A wanton prosecution made by a prosecutor in a criminal proceeding, or a plaintiff in a civil suit, without probable cause, by a regular process and proceeding, which the facts did not warrant, as appears by the result. Actions for malicious prosecution are not favored by the law; they are to be carefully guarded and their true principles strictly adhered to; 1 Ld. Raym. 374; Cloon v. Gerry, 13 Gray (Mass.) 201; Hurd v. Shaw, 20 Ill. 354; Newell, Mal. Pros. 21.

Where the defendant commences a criminal prosecution wantonly, and in other respects against law, he will be responsible; Stone v. Stevens, 12 Conn. 219, 30 Am. Dec. 611. Any motive other than that of simply instituting a prosecution for the purpose of bringing the person to justice is a malicious motive; 10 Exch. 356.

The prosecution of a civil suit, when malicious, is a good cause of action, even when there has been no seizure of property; Wade v. Bank, 114 Fed. 377; Lipscomb v. Shofner, 96 Tenn. 112, 33 S. W. 818; or no arrest; Whipple v. Fuller, 11 Conn. 582, 29 Am. Dec. 330; Pangburn v. Bull, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 345. See O'Brien v. Barry, 106 Mass. 300, 8 Am. Rep. 329; Big. Torts 71; Brounstein v. Sahlein, 65 Hun 365, 20 N. Y. Supp. 213; O'Neill v. Johnson, 53 Minn. 439, 55 N. W. 601, 39 Am. St. Rep. 615; Newell, Mal. Pros. 43. But see 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 261; 21 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 287 (by John D. Lawson); Wetmore v. Mellinger, 64 Ia. 741, 18 N. W. 870, 52 Am. Rep. 465; Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. 289; Gorton v. Brown, 27 Ill. 489, 81 Am. Dec. 245. In such cases the want of probable cause must be very palpable; very slight grounds will not justify an action; Big. Torts 71. See L. R. 4 Q. B. 730. On the whole the weight of authority seems to be against the maintenance of an action for the malicious prosecution of a civil suit in which no process other than the summons was issued; Eastin v. Bank, 66 Cal. 123, 4 Pac. 1106, 56 Am. Rep. 77; Newell, Mal. Pros. 37; Smith v. Buggy Co., 66 Ill. App. 516. The bringing of an ordinary action, however maliciously, and however great the want of reasonable and probable cause, will not support an action for malicious prosecution; 11 Q. B. D. 690; contra, Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 209, 1 Am. Rep. 316; otherwise of bankruptcy proceedings maliciously instituted, without probable cause; 11 Q. B. D. 674; brought after the adjudication in bankruptcy has been set aside; 10 App. Cas. 210; and of civil proceedings begun by attachment, or by arrest; Poll. Torts 303; Tamblyn v. Johnston, 126 Fed. 267, 62 C. C. A. 601; although the goods are at once returned; Vincent v. McNamara, 70 Conn. 332, 39 Atl. 444; also, probably, of bringing and prosecuting an action maliciously and without probable cause in the name of a third person; id.; a malicious prosecution of extradition proceedings may be the basis of an action; Castro v. De Uriarte, 16 Fed. 93. The assertion of patent rights may be so conducted as to constitute malicious prosecution; Virtue v. Mfg. Co., 227 U. S. 8, 33 Sup. Ct. 202, 57 L. Ed. 393; but not interference proceedings in the patent office, though maliciously instituted; B. F. Avery & Son v. Plow Works, 163 Fed. 842.

An action will lie for damages for wrongfully procuring the appointment of a receiver for a solvent corporation; it need not appear that it was done maliciously and without probable cause; Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Bretherton, 32 Mont. 80, 80 Pac. 10; see also Joslin v. Williams, 76 Neb. 594, 107 N. W. 837, 112 N. W. 343; Cutter v. Pollock, 7 N. Dak. 631, 76 N. W. 235.

There is a distinction between a malicious use and a malicious abuse of legal process. Abuse is where it is used "for some unlawful object, not the purpose which it is intended by the law to effect—a perversion of it"; Whelan v. Miller, 49 Pa. Super. Ct. 91; Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. 283.

The action lies against the prosecutor, and even against a mere informer, when the proceedings are malicious; Randall v. Henry, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 367. But grand jurors are not liable for information given by them to their fellow-jurors, on which a prosecution is founded; Black v. Sugg, Hard. (Ky.) 556. Such action lies against a plaintiff in a civil action who maliciously sues out the writ and prosecutes it; Savage v. Brewer, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 453, 28 Am. Dec. 255; but an action does not lie against an attorney at law for bringing the action, when regularly retained; Bicknell v. Dorion, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 478. See Pierce v. Thompson, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 193. The attorney, however, must act in good faith. If an attorney knows that there is no cause of action, and dishonestly and with some sinister view, for some purpose of his own, or for some other ill purpose which the law calls malicious, causes the plaintiff to be arrested and imprisoned, he is liable; 34 Eng. C. L. R. 276; Newell, Mal. Pros. 23.

The action lies against a corporation aggregate if the prosecution be commenced and carried on by its agents in its interest and for its benefit, and they acted within the scope of their authority; 6 Q. B. D. 287; Goodspeed v. Bank, 22 Conn. 530, 58 Am. Dec. 439; Reed v. Bank, 130 Mass. 443, 39 Am. Rep. 468; American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430; Poll. Torts 301; [1900] 1 Q. B. 22; contra, 11 App. Cas. 250 (a dictum, see id. 244, 256). See also Cooley, Torts 121; 7 C. B. N. S. 290. There must be express precedent authority or subsequent ratification by the corporation; Canon v. R. Co., 216 Pa. 408, 65 Atl. 795.

The proceedings under which the original prosecution or action was held must have been regular, in the ordinary course of justice, and before a tribunal having power to ascertain the truth or falsity of the charge and to punish the supposed offender, the now plaintiff; Bodwell v. Osgood, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 379, 15 Am. Dec. 228. When the proceedings are irregular, the prosecutor is a trespasser; Turpin v. Remy, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 210. A warrant issued to a proper officer for the arrest of one accused of crime need not be executed in order to support an action for malicious prosecution; Halberstadt v. Ins. Co., 194 N. Y. 1, 86 N. E. 801, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293, 16 Ann. Cas. 1102; and a writ of attachment in garnishee process sued out maliciously and without probable cause, even though the court had no jurisdiction, is sufficient; Ailstock v. Lime Co., 104 Va. 565, 52 S. E. 213, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1060, 7 Ann. Cas. 545.

The burden is on the plaintiff to prove affirmatively that he was prosecuted, that he was exonerated or discharged, and that the prosecution was both malicious and without probable cause; 11 Q. B. D. 440; Webb, Poll. Torts 392; Boyd v. Cross, 35 Md. 194; Miller v. Milligan, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 30; Stone v. Stevens, 12 Conn. 219, 30 Am. Dec. 611.

Malice is a question of fact for the jury, and is generally inferred from a want of probable cause; Brounstein v. Wile, 65 Hun 623, 20 N. Y. Supp. 204; but it is not evidence of malice when the prosecutor honestly believes in the charge; [1891] 2 Q. B. 718; and such presumption is only prima facie and may be rebutted; Lunsford v. Dietrich, 86 Ala. 250, 5 South. 461, 11 Am. St. Rep. 37; see Cartwright v. Elliott, 45 Ill. App. 458. Although absence of reasonable and probable cause is sometimes evidence of malice, yet it is not when the prosecutor actually believes in the charge; [1891] 2 Q. B. 718. From the most express malice, however, want of probable cause cannot be inferred; Boyd v. Cross, 35 Md. 194. Both malice and want of probable cause must concur in order to constitute a cause of action; Fenstermaker v. Page, 20 Nev. 290, 21 Pac. 322; Glasgow v. Owen, 69 Tex. 167, 6 S. W. 527; Coleman v. Allen, 79 Ga. 637, 5 S. E. 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 449; Crescent City Live Stock Co. v. Slaughter House Co., 120 U. S. 141, 7 Sup. Ct. 472, 30 L. Ed. 614. The plaintiff must show total absence of probable cause, whether the original proceedings were civil or criminal; 11 Ad. & E. 483; Stone v. Crocker, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 81; Ives v. Bartholomew, 9 Conn. 309; Jackson v. Linnington, 47 Kan. 396, 28 Pac. 173, 27 Am. St. Rep. 300; Barhight v. Tammany, 158 Pa. 545, 28 Atl. 135, 38 Am. St. Rep. 853.

Probable cause means the existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite the belief in a reasonable mind that the plaintiff was guilty of the offence for which he was prosecuted; Cooper v. Utterbach, 37 Md. 282; Lunsford v. Dietrich, 86 Ala. 250, 5 South. 461, 11 Am. St. Rep. 37. It is such conduct on the part of the accused as may induce the court to infer that the prosecution was undertaken from public motives; Ulmer v. Leland, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 135, 10 Am. Dec. 48. See, also, Hirsch v. Feeney, 83 Ill. 548; French v. Smith, 4 Vt. 363, 24 Am. Dec. 616; Tucker v. Cannon, 32 Neb. 444, 49 N. W. 435. Where there are grounds of suspicion that a crime has been committed and the interests of public justice require an investigation, there is said to be probable cause, however malicious the intention of the accuser may have been; Cro. Eliz. 70; 2 Term 231; Pangburn v. Bull, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 345; Faris v. Starke, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 4; Sanders v. Palmer, 55 Fed. 217, 5 C. C. A. 77. It is a reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the accused is guilty of the offence with which he is charged; Sanders v. Palmer, 55 Fed. 217, 5 C. C. A. 77. And probable cause will be presumed until the contrary appears; circumstances sufficient merely to warrant a belief by a cautious man are not sufficient, but the belief must be that also of a reasonable and prudent man; McClafferty v. Philp, 151 Pa. 86, 24 Atl. 1042. The plaintiff must prove affirmatively the absence of probable cause and the existence of malice, and where the defendant had a very treacherous memory, and went on with the prosecution under the impression that the plaintiff had committed perjury, yet if that was an honest impression, the result of a fallacious memory, and acting upon it, he honestly believed the plaintiff had sworn falsely, the English court of appeals held that the jury would not be justified in finding that the defendant had prosecuted the plaintiff maliciously and without probable cause; 8 Q. B. D. 174. It makes no difference how malicious may have been the private motives of the party in prosecuting; he is protected if there was probable cause; Sanders v. Palmer, 55 Fed. 217, 5 C. C. A. 77.

Whether the circumstances relied on are true is a question for the jury; but whether if true they amount to probable cause is a question of law for the court; Stevens v. Fassett, 27 Me. 266; Besson v. Southard, 10 N. Y. 240; Ash v. Marlow, 20 Ohio 119; 10 Q. B. 272; Schofield v. Ferrers, 47 Pa. 194, 86 Am. Dec. 532; Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174; 21 Can. S. C. 588; Cragin v. De Pape, 159 Fed. 691, 86 C. C. A. 559. It is said that usually the question is for the jury; Kehl v. Compress Co., 77 Miss. 762, 27 South. 641.

Evidence that the prosecution was to obtain possession of goods, is proof of want of probable cause; Schofield v. Ferrers, 47 Pa. 194, 86 Am. Dec. 532; so is evidence that the plaintiff began the prosecution for the purpose of collecting a debt. See Neufeld v. Rodeminski, 144 Ill. 83, 32 N. E. 913; Sebastian v. Cheney, 86 Tex. 497, 25 S. W. 691. Probable cause depends upon the prosecutor's belief of guilt or innocence; Miller v. Milligan, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 30; see supra; rumors are not, but representations of others are, a foundation for belief of guilt; Smith v. Ege, 52 Pa. 419. The prosecutor must believe that the accused was guilty at the time the prosecution was begun, and this is sufficient to prove probable cause; Hantman v. Hedden, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 564.

The foreman of the grand jury, who has testified that the criminal prosecution was dismissed, cannot be asked why it was dismissed, because his testimony merely proves that the prosecution is at an end and has no bearing on the question of probable cause; and evidence that the prosecution was dismissed at the instance of the defendant without the plaintiff's knowledge is irrelevant either in bar of suit or in mitigation of damages; Owens v. Owens, 81 Md. 518, 32 Atl. 247. Evidence of plaintiff's acquittal in a criminal case cannot be considered for the purpose of establishing the want of probable cause; Bekkeland v. Lyons, 96 Tex. 255, 72 S. W. 56, 64 L. R. A. 474; but where the plaintiff's acquittal was the result of a compromise, it is admissible as evidence; Carroll v. R. Co., 134 Fed. 684.

When the defendant, in instituting the prosecution, went before a magistrate with his counsel, expecting to make the complaint in writing and that the warrant would be issued in the usual manner, he is not liable for the act of the magistrate in directing the arrest of the defendant without a warrant; Poupard v. Dumas, 105 Mich. 326, 63 N. W. 301.

A warrant for the arrest of a person issued upon an affidavit which charged such person with being "guilty of lying and misrepresentation" is void as a criminal prosecution, and it has been held that it cannot serve as the basis of an action for malicious prosecution; Collum v. Turner, 102 Ga. 534, 27 S. E. 680.

Malice may be inferred from the zeal and activity of the prosecutor conducting the prosecution; Straus v. Young, 36 Md. 246; but cannot be inferred merely from the doing of an act without the ordinary prudence and discretion which persons of mature minds and sound judgment are presumed to have; Jenkins v. Gilligan, 131 Ia. 176, 108 N. W. 237, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1087.

The advice of counsel who has been fully informed of the facts is a complete justification; McClafferty v. Philp, 151 Pa. 86, 24 Atl. 1042; Holden v. Merritt, 92 Ia. 707, 61 N. W. 390; Cragin v. De Pape, 159 Fed. 691, 86 C. C. A. 559; otherwise, where it does not appear that a full disclosure of all the facts was made; Cointement v. Cropper, 41

La. Ann. 303, 6 South. 127; Norrell v. Vogel, 39 Minn. 107, 38 N. W. 705; and where the defendant acts on the advice of a magistrate or one not learned in the law; Straus v. Young, 36 Md. 246; Beihofer v. Loeffert, 159 Pa. 374, 28 Atl. 216; Rigden v. Jordan, 81 Ga. 668, 7 S. E. 857; but see Finn v. Frink, 84 Me. 261, 24 Atl. 851, 30 Am. St. Rep. 348; Holmes v. Horger, 96 Mich. 408, 56 N. W. 3. Where he acted on the advice of a public prosecuting officer, probable cause is established if he shows a disclosure to such officer of all the facts within his knowledge, or which he had reasonable ground to believe, though there were exculpatory facts which he might have ascertained by diligent inquiry; Hess v. Baking Co., 31 Or. 503, 49 Pac. 803. If fairly and fully stated to the public prosecutor, it is a complete defence; Van Meter v. Bass, 40 Colo. 78, 90 Pac. 637. See, generally, 40 Can. L. J. 276.

A waiver of preliminary examination by the defendant in a criminal prosecution raises a presumption of probable cause; Hess v. Baking Co., 31 Or. 503, 49 Pac. 803.

The advice of counsel is not, however, conclusive of absence of malice; Glasgow v. Owen, 69 Tex. 167, 6 S. W. 527; and while a full and complete statement of facts to a reputable attorney is a complete defence, yet though the facts may be established beyond doubt the question of good faith is for the jury, when different minds might draw different conclusions from the evidence; Billingsley v. Maas, 93 Wis. 176, 67 N. W. 49.

The fact that an attorney was consulted before prosecuting the plaintiff for opening his mail, is not admissible as proof of probable cause, when it also appears that the attorney gave defendant no advice, but referred him to the U. S. officers; Holden v. Merritt, 92 Ia. 707, 61 N. W. 390.

The malicious prosecution or action must be ended, and the plaintiff must show it was groundless, either by his acquittal or by obtaining a final judgment in his favor in a civil action; McCormick v. Sisson, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 715; Griffis v. Sellars, 19 N. C. 492, 31 Am. Dec. 422; Forster v. Orr, 17 Or. 447, 21 Pac. 440. But see contra, as to civil suits; Big. Torts 73; 14 East 216; because the plaintiff in a civil suit can terminate it whenever he wishes to do so. The finding by the examining court that there was probable cause to believe the plaintiff guilty and the binding him over for trial is only prima facie evidence of probable cause, and probable cause cannot be shown by admission of the plaintiff after his arrest nor by the finding of property on his premises, similar to that stolen, if that fact was not known to the defendant when he began his prosecution; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Hendricks, 13 Ind. App. 10, 40 N. E. 82, 41 N. E. 14; Flackler v. Novak, 94 Ia. 634, 63 N. W. 348. Any act which is tantamount to a discontinuance of a civil suit has the same effect; as where the plaintiff had been arrested in a civil suit, and the defendant had failed to have the writ returned, and to appear and file a declaration at the return term; Cardival v. Smith, 109 Mass. 158, 12 Am. Rep. 682.

In criminal cases also, when the prosecuting officer enters a dismissal of the proceedings before the defendant is put in jeopardy, this act, in some jurisdictions, gives no right to the prisoner against the prosecutor; for instance, where, in a prosecution for arson, the prosecuting officer enters a nolle prosequi before the jury is sworn; Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 217. See Thompson v. Rubber Co., 56 Conn. 493, 16 Atl. 554; McClafferty v. Philp, 151 Pa. 86, 24 Atl. 1042; Atwood v. Beirne, 73 Hun 547, 26 N. Y. Supp. 149; Marcus v. Bernstein, 117 N. C. 31, 23 S. E. 38. The law on this point is unsettled. But it would seem that where the entry of the nolle prosequi is the mere act of the prosecuting attorney and no action of the court is had on it, the entry will not be an end of the proceedings, and for that reason would not warrant any action which could not be had before the proceedings were at an end. But when the court enters a judgment of discharge upon a nolle prosequi it seems to be a sufficient termination of the prosecution.

A discharge by the magistrate before any evidence was introduced is not a sufficient termination of the prosecution in the plaintiff's favor; Ward v. Reasor, 98 Va. 399, 36 S. E. 470; but the dismissal of a prosecution by a justice of the peace having jurisdiction, for failure of the prosecution to introduce evidence, is; Graves v. Scott, 104 Va. 372, 51 S. E. 821, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1043, 7 Ann. Cas. 480; but there is no termination, technically, where a warrant for arrest has been issued and remains unserved without judicial termination of the proceedings; Mitchell v. Donanski, 28 R. I. 94, 65 Atl. 611, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 171, 125 Am. St. Rep. 717, 12 Ann. Cas. 1019. Where the accused fled from the jurisdiction before process could be served on him and has remained absent, there is no termination of the proceeding in his favor; Halberstadt v. Ins. Co., 194 N. Y. 1, 86 N. E. 801, 21 L. R. A. 293, 16 Ann. Cas. 1102.

The remedy for a malicious prosecution is an action on the case to recover damages for the injury sustained; Luddington v. Peck, 2 Conn. 700; Plummer v. Dennett, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 421, 20 Am. Dec. 316; Turner v. Walker, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 377, 22 Am. Dec. 329. See CASE. The elements of damage in this action are very vague. The jury may consider the natural effect of the prosecution on reputation, and feelings, the consequences of arrest, loss of time, injury to property, and expense; Parkhurst v. Masteller, 57 Ia. 474, 10 N. W. 864; Wanzer v. Bright, 52 Ill. 35; Newell, Mal. Pros. 494. If the prosecution was begun without probable cause, and persisted in for some private end, punitive damages may be given; Cooper v. Utterbach, 37 Md. 282. See full article in 21 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 281. To be relieved from an action the defendant must rebut the prima facie proof of implied malice against him, by showing honest belief, grounded on probable and reasonable cause; Cointement v. Cropper, 41 La. Ann. 303, 6 South. 127. It is sufficient if the facts or appearances are sufficient to induce a reasonable probability that the acts which constitute the crime have been done; Ex parte Morrill, 35 Fed. 261.

The defendant may explain to the jury the motives from which he acted; Heap v. Parrish, 104 Ind. 36, 3 N. E. 549; George v. Johnson, 25 App. Div. 125, 49 N. Y. Supp. 203; he may testify as to whether he was actuated by malice; Autry v. Floyd, 127 N. C. 186, 37 S. E. 208; Turner v. O'Brien, 5 Neb. 542; Sherburne v. Rodman, 51 Wis. 474, 8 N. W. 414; he may be asked whether he made the charge in good faith believing it to be true; Garrett v. Mannheimer, 24 Minn. 193; he may testify that he had no ill feeling towards the plaintiff; Vansickle v. Brown, 68 Mo. 627; so a special officer of a railroad company who arrested a boy for being unlawfully upon the cars, may show that he was not actuated by ill will; Campbell v. R. Co., 97 Md. 341, 55 Atl. 532.

MALICIOUSLY. With deliberate intent to injure. Tuttle v. Bishop, 30 Conn. 85.

MALIGNARE. To malign or slander; also to maim.

MALITIA PRÆCOGITATA. Malice aforethought.

MALLEABLE. Capable of being drawn out and extended by beating; capable of extension by hammering; reducible to laminated form by beating. Farris v. Magone (C. C.) 46 Fed. 845.

MALLUM. In Old English Law. A court of the higher kind in a county in which the more important business was dispatched by the count or earl.

MALO ANIMO. With an evil intention; with malice.

MALO GRATO. In spite; unwillingly.

MALPRACTICE. See PHYSICIAN.

MALT-TAX. An excise duty imposed upon malt in England. 1 Bla. Com. 313.

MALUM IN SE (Lat.). Evil in itself.

A crime by reason of its inherent nature. 1 McClain, Cr. L. § 23.

An offence malum in se is one which is naturally evil, as murder, theft, and the like; offences at common law are generally mala in se. An offence malum prohibitum, on the contrary, is not naturally an evil, but becomes so in consequence of its being forbidden, as playing at games which, being innocent before, have become unlawful in consequence of being forbidden. See Bacon, Abr. Assumpsit (a); 1 Kent 468; MALA PROHIBITA.

MALVEILLES. Ill will. In some ancient records this word signifies malicious practices, or crimes and misdemeanors.

MALVEIS PROCURORS. Such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice. Cowell.

MALVERSATION. In French Law. This word is applied to all punishable faults committed in the exercise of an office, such as corruptions, exactions, extortions, and larceny. Merlin, Répert.

MAN. A human being. A person of the male sex. A male of the human species above the age of puberty.

In its most extended sense the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children: examples: "of offences against man, some are more immediately against the king, others more immediately against the subject." Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 2, s. 1. "Offences against the life of man come under the general name of homicide, which in our law signifies the killing of a man by a man." Id. book 1, c. 8, s. 2.

It was considered in the civil or Roman law that although man and person are synonymous in grammar, they had a different acceptation in law; all persons were men, but all men—for example, slaves—were not persons, but things. See Barringt. Stat. 216.

MANACLE. See FETTERS.

MANAGE. Direct; control; govern; administer; oversee. Com. v. Johnson, 144 Pa. 377, 22 Atl. 703.

It must be taken in a wide sense, so as to include, if not to be equivalent to, "disposed of"; [1908] 1 Ch. 49.

MANAGEMENT. In the Harter Act, relates to management on the voyage and not to the master's acts in stowing the ship with reference to her stability and seaworthiness; The Sandfield, 92 Fed. 663, 34 C. C. A. 612.

MANAGER. A person appointed or elected to manage the affairs of another. A term applied to those officers of a corporation who are authorized to manage its affairs.

One who has the conduct or direction of anything. Com. v. Johnson, 144 Pa. 377, 22 Atl. 703.

One of the persons appointed on the part of the house of representatives to prosecute impeachments before the senate.

In banking corporations these officers are commonly called directors, and the power to conduct the affairs of the company is vested in a board of directors. In some private corporations, such as railroad companies, canal and coal companies, and the like, these officers are called managers. Being agents, when their authority is limited, they have no power to bind their principal beyond such authority; President, etc., of Salem Bank v. Bank, 17 Mass. 29, 9 Am. Dec. 111.

In England and Canada the chief executive officer of a branch bank is called a manager. His duties are those of our president and cashier combined. Sewell, Bank.

MANAGING AGENT. One who has exclusive supervision and control of some department of a corporation's business, the management of which requires of such person the exercise of independent judgment and discretion, and the exercise of such authority that it may be fairly said that service of summons upon him will result in notice to the corporation. Federal Betterment Co. v. Reeves, 73 Kan. 107, 84 Pac. 560, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460.

MANBOTE. A compensation paid the relations of a murdered man by the murderer or his friends.

MANCHE PRESENT. A bribe; a present from the donor's own hand.

MANCIPATE. To enslave; to bind up; to tie.

MANCIPATIO. In Roman Law. The legal form of conveyance and of fixing the relations between parties. Morey, R. L. 2. See MANUMISSION; MANCIPIUM.

MANCIPATORY WILL. In Civil Law. A form of testamentary disposition of property.

"The testator, in the presence of five witnesses and a libripens, mancipates (i. e. sells) his estate (familia pecuniaque) to a third party, the so-called familiæ emtor, with a view to imposing upon the latter, in solemn terms (nuncupatio), the duty of carrying out his last wishes as contained and expressed in the tabulæ testamenti. The object of the transaction is to make the familiæ emtor not the material, but only the formal owner of the estate. His actual duties consist in the carrying out of the testator's intentions and the handing over of the property to the persons named in the tabulæ testamenti, the familiæ emtor is neither more nor less than the executor of the testator." Sohm, Rom. L. 450.

This is said by the same author to be the oldest form of the Roman contract of mandatum "a juristic act validly concluded, not indeed consensu, but re (viz. by a formal conveyance of ownership), and a juristic act giving rise to a rigorously binding obligation. The mandatum and the conveyance of ownership are not mutually incompatible. The familiæ emtor is the mandatory of the testator, because he is, formally speaking, the owner of the familia." Sohm, Rom. L. 451.

MANCIPIUM. The power acquired over a freeman by the mancipatio.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater familias, viz.; the manus, or martial power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per æs et libram, of a freeman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is, that on the emancipation from the mancipium he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater familias. Si pater filium ter venum dat, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginaria quædam venditio, because in his times it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation. See 1 Ortolan 112; Morey, Rom. L. 23, 32; Sohm, Inst. R. L. 124, 390; ADOPTION; PATER FAMILIAS.

MANCOMUNAL. In Spanish Law. A term applied to an obligation when one person assumes the contract or debt of another. Schmidt, Civ. L. 120.

MANDAMIENTO. In Spanish Law. Commission; power of attorney. A bona fide contract by which one person commits his affairs to the charge of another, and the latter accepts the charge. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 12, c. 1.

MANDAMUS. This is a high prerogative writ, usually issuing out of the highest court of general jurisdiction in a state, in the name of the sovereignty, directed to any natural person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within its jurisdiction, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, and which appertains to their office or duty. 3 Bla. Com. 110; 4 Bacon, Abr. 495; per Marshall, C. J., in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. 137, 168, 2 L. Ed. 60. See State v. Burdick, 3 Wyo. 588, 28 Pac. 146. It is a common-law writ with which equity has nothing to do; Gay v. Gilmore, 76 Ga. 725.

It is an extraordinary remedy in cases where the usual and ordinary modes of proceeding are powerless to afford remedies to the parties aggrieved, and when, without its aid, there would be a failure of justice; Virginia, T. & C. Steel & Iron Co. v. Wilder, 88 Va. 942, 14 S. E. 806. It confers no new authority and the party to be coerced must have the power to perform the act; Commissioners of Taxing Dist. v. Loague, 129 U. S. 493, 9 Sup. Ct. 327, 32 L. Ed. 780. Mandamus has been termed a "criminal process relative to civil rights;" 3 Brev. 264.

Its use is defined by Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Barker, 3 Burr. 1265: "It was introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice and defect of police. Therefore it ought to be used upon all occasions when the law has established no specific remedy, and where, in justice and good government there ought to be one." "If there be a right, and no other specific remedy, this should not be denied." The same principles are declared by Lord Ellenborough, in Rex v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 8 East 219. See 6 Ad. & E. 321. The writ of mandamus is the supplementary remedy when the party has a clear right, and no other appropriate redress, in order to prevent a failure of justice. 12 Petersd. Abr. 438 (309). It is the absence of a specific legal remedy which gives the court jurisdiction; 2 Selw. N. P. Mandamus; Com. v. Common Councils, 34 Pa. 496; Baker v. Johnson, 41 Me. 15; but the party must have a perfect legal right; Williams v. Cooper Court of Common Pleas Judge, 27 Mo. 225; Board of Trustees of Franklin Tp. v. State, 11 Ind. 205; People v. Thompson, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 73; State v. Jacobus, 26 N. J. L. 135; People v. Olds, 3 Cal. 167, 58 Am. Dec. 398; and there must be a positive ministerial duty to be performed and no other appropriate remedy; State v. Knight, 31 S. C. 81, 9 S. E. 692; Shine v. R. Co., 85 Ky. 177, 3 S. W. 18; State v. Kinkaid, 23 Neb. 641, 37 N. W. 612.

Under the English system this writ acquired, and may probably be still said to retain, its prerogative character; but in the United States it is becoming more and more assimilated to an ordinary remedy, to the use of which the parties are entitled as of right. It was in this sense that Taney, C. J., characterized it in modern practice as "nothing more than an action at law between the parties"; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 66, 16 L. Ed. 717; see, also, Gilman v. Bassett, 33 Conn. 298; High, Extr. Leg. Rem. § 4. Swift v. State, 7 Houst. (Del.) 338, 6 Atl. 856, 32 Atl. 143, 40 Am. St. Rep. 127. There is a tendency, however, in some states to adhere to the prerogative idea; People v. Board of Metropolitan Police, 26 N. Y. 316; City of Ottawa v. People, 48 Ill. 240. Though in Illinois the prerogative idea seems to have been lost under the statutory use of the writ, while the discretionary character remains; People v. Weber, 86 Ill. 283. It may be said to remain in this country an extraordinary remedy at law in the same sense that injunction is an extraordinary remedy in equity; High, Extr. Leg. Rem. § 5. The injunction is preventive and conservative, its object being to preserve matters in statu quo. Mandamus is remedial, tending to compel action and redress past grievances; id. § 6, and cases cited. Mandamus cannot be used as a preventive remedy to take the place of an injunction; Legg v. City of Annapolis, 42 Md. 203.

Mandamus, being remedial, is not available to compel the performance of an act that will work public or private mischief, or to compel compliance with the strict letter of the law in disregard of its spirit, or in aid of a palpable fraud, or to evade the payment of a just portion of a tax by taking advantage of a confessed mistake; People v. Board, 137 N. Y. 201, 33 N. E. 145.

The remedy extends to the control of all inferior tribunals, corporations, public officers, and even private persons in some cases. But more generally, the English court of king's bench, from which our practice on the subject is derived, declined to interfere by mandamus to require a specific performance of a contract when no public right was concerned; 6 East 356; Bacon, Ab. Mandamus; Town of Woodstock v. Gallup, 28 Vt. 587.

Mandamus may be granted by an appellate court to require a judge of the lower court to settle and allow a bill of exceptions; Che Gong v. Stearns, 16 Or. 219, 17 Pac. 871; Poteet v. County Com'rs, 30 W. Va. 58, 3 S. E. 97; Petition of Chateaugay Ore & Iron Co., 128 U. S. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. 150, 32 L. Ed. 508. It will also lie to compel an inferior court to exercise a discretion; Citizens' Bank of Louisiana v. Webre, 44 La. Ann. 1081, 11 South. 706; but not to compel the court below to decide in a particular way, or to operate as a substitute for an appeal or writ of error, even if none is given by law; In re Rice, 155 U. S. 396, 15 Sup. Ct. 149, 39 L. Ed. 198.

It is a proper remedy to compel the performance of a specific act where the act is ministerial in its character; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 15; Roberts v. U. S., 176 U. S. 230, 20 Sup. Ct. 376, 44 L. Ed. 443; Borough of Uniontown v. Com., 34 Pa. 293; State v. Canal Co., 26 Ga. 665; State v. County Judge, 7 Ia. 186; State v. Bailey, id. 390; but where the act is of a discretionary; Brashear v. Mason, 6 How. (U. S.) 92, 12 L. Ed. 357; Barrows v. Medical Society, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 403; Auditorial Board v. Hendrick, 20 Tex. 60; Magee v. Board, 10 Cal. 376; People v. Martin, 145 N. Y. 253, 39 N. E. 960; People v. Inspectors of State Prison, 4 Mich. 187; State v. Chase, 5 Ohio St. 528; or judicial nature; Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130; Goheen v. Myers, 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 423, 7 E. & B. 366; it will lie only to compel action generally; Ex parte Mahone, 30 Ala. 49, 68 Am. Dec. 111; State v. Cramer, 96 Mo. 75, 8 S. W. 788; Satterlee v. Strider, 31 W. Va. 781, 8 S. E. 552; Ramagnano v. Crook, 85 Ala. 226, 3 South. 845; State v. Com'rs, 119 Ind. 444, 21 N. E. 1097; Shine v. R. Co., 85 Ky. 177, 3 S. W. 18; State v. Edwards, 51 N. J. L. 479, 17 Atl. 973; Com. v. McLaughlin, 120 Pa. 518, 14 Atl. 377; and where the necessity of acting is a matter of discretion, it will not lie even to compel action; Brashear v. Mason, 6 How. (U. S.) 92, 12 L. Ed. 357; State v. Floyd County Judge, 5 Ia. 380.

A class of cases in which this distinction is constantly drawn in question is where a mandamus is applied for to control the letting of public or municipal contracts, and it is the general rule that the remedy will not be applied to compel a municipal corporation to enter into a contract with one who shows himself to have been the lowest bidder; Times Pub. Co. v. City of Everett, 9 Wash.

518, 37 Pac. 695, 43 Am. St. Rep. 865. The provision that the contract shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder is mandatory, but the municipal board has a discretion in determining the question of responsibility, and their decision will not be reviewed on mandamus even though erroneous; Douglass v. Com., 108 Pa. 559; Kelly v. City of Chicago, 62 Ill. 279; Hoole v. Kinkead, 16 Nev. 217; State v. McGrath, 91 Mo. 386, 3 S. W. 846; contra, Boren v. Com'rs, 21 Ohio St. 311; People v. Com'rs of Buffalo County, 4 Neb. 150; in other cases it is held that where the contract has been entered into with another and expense incurred, a mandamus will not be issued; People v. Contracting Board, 27 N. Y. 378 (and see People v. Campbell, 72 N. Y. 496; People v. Contracting Board, 46 Barb. [N. Y.] 254); Talbot Paving Co. v. Common Council, 91 Mich. 262, 51 N. W. 933; other cases, again, hold that, the statutes being for the public benefit, the relators have not a clear legal right; State v. Board of Education, 24 Wis. 683; Madison v. Harbor Board of Baltimore City, 76 Md. 395, 25 Atl. 337; Free Press Ass'n v. Nichols, 45 Vt. 7; Welch v. Board of Sup'rs, 23 Ia. 203. The writ is also refused where the matter is left entirely to the discretion of the authorities, with no provision about the lowest bidder; Mayo v. County Com'rs of Hampden, 141 Mass. 74, 6 N. E. 757; State v. Lincoln County, 35 Neb. 346, 53 N. W. 147; Mills Pub. Co. v. Larrabee, 78 Ia. 97, 42 N. W. 593; People v. Croton Aqueduct Board, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 259. Where, before the application, the work was readvertised and the same person made a lower bid, under which he obtained the contract, a mandamus was refused; U. S. v. Lamont, 155 U. S. 303, 15 Sup. Ct. 97, 39 L. Ed. 160.

Writs of mandamus have been issued from very early times to the ecclesiastical courts to compel them to absolve an excommunicated person who wished to conform to the orders of the church; 1 Palmer 50; to compel the Dean of Arches to hear an appeal; 7 E. & B. 315; but a mandamus is refused where the judge has absolute discretion, and it is said that a mandamus has never been granted to deprive one of office; Shortt, Mand. & Pro. 289; in such cases the remedy is by quo warranto.

This remedy will be applied to compel a corporation or public officer; Baker v. Johnson, 41 Me. 15; Hamilton v. State, 3 Ind. 452; to pay money awarded against them in pursuance of a statute duty, where no other specific remedy is provided; 6 Ad. & E. 335; Com. v. Common Councils, 34 Pa. 496; or where the money is in an officer's official custody, legally subject to the payment of such demand; People v. Reis, 76 Cal. 269, 18 Pac. 309; but if debt will lie, and the party is entitled to execution, mandamus will not be allowed; Redf. Railw. § 158; 13 M. & W. 628; 1 Q. B. 288. But mandamus will not be granted to enforce a matter of contract or right upon which an action lies in the common-law courts, as to enforce the duty of common carriers; 7 Dowl. P. C. 566; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. State, 31 Fla. 482, 13 South. 103, 20 L. R. A. 419, 34 Am. St. Rep. 30; or where the proper remedy is in equity; 16 M. & W. 451. But where compensation is claimed for damages done partly under the powers of a statute and partly not, mandamus is the proper remedy; 2 Railw. & C. Cas. 1; Redf. Railw. § 158. Mandamus will not issue to compel the secretary of state to pay money in his hands to one party, which is claimed by another party, the right to which is in litigation; Bayard v. U. S., 127 U. S. 246, 8 Sup. Ct. 1223, 32 L. Ed. 116. Nor will the supreme court of the United States interfere by mandamus with the executive officers of the government in the exercise of their ordinary official duties; U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 9 Sup. Ct. 12, 32 L. Ed. 354; but it will issue where the law requires them to act, or when they refuse to perform a mere ministerial duty; U. S. v. Raum, 135 U. S. 200, 10 Sup. Ct. 820, 34 L. Ed. 105; U. S. v. Blaine, 139 U. S. 306, 11 Sup. Ct. 607, 35 L. Ed. 183. It lies to compel the performance of a statutory duty only when it is clear and indisputable and there is no other legal remedy; Bayard v. U. S., 127 U. S. 246, 8 Sup. Ct. 1223, 32 L. Ed. 116.

Mandamus will lie to compel the governor to perform a purely ministerial duty, especially where the constitution gives the court jurisdiction in mandamus as to all state officers; State v. Brooks, 14 Wyo. 393, 84 Pac. 488, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 750, 7 Ann. Cas. 1108; Traynor v. Beckham, 116 Ky. 13, 74 S. W. 1105, 76 S. W. 844, 3 Ann. Cas. 388; State v. Savage, 64 Neb. 684, 90 N. W. 898, 91 N. W. 557. To the contrary, People v. Morton, 156 N. Y. 136, 50 N. E. 791, 41 L. R. A. 231, 66 Am. St. Rep. 547, where it was held that there was no power in the courts to compel the performance of a duty imposed upon the governor by virtue of his office, whether ministerial or otherwise; State v. Governor, 25 N. J. L. 331, where mandamus was refused to compel the governor to issue a commission to the applicant as surrogate, as required by the constitution; State v. Stone, 120 Mo. 428, 25 S. W. 376, 23 L. R. A. 194, 41 Am. St. Rep. 705, where it was refused to compel the governor to pay the relator a certain sum for services as counsel on behalf of the state in the United States Supreme Court. See State v. Brooks, 14 Wyo. 393, 84 Pac. 488, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 750, 7 Ann. Cas. 1108.

Mandamus is the appropriate remedy to compel corporations to produce and allow an inspection of their books and records, at the suit of a corporator, where a controversy exists in which such inspection is material to his interests; 4 Maule & S. 162; Swift v. State, 7 Houst. (Del.) 338, 6 Atl. 856, 32 Atl.

143, 40 Am. St. Rep. 127; s. c. 25 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 594.

It lies to compel the performance by a corporation of a variety of specific acts within the scope of its duties; Com. v. Common Councils of Pittsburgh, 34 Pa. 496; State v. Canal Co., 26 Ga. 665; People v. Board of Supervisors of La Salle County, 84 Ill. 303, 25 Am. Rep. 461; State v. Ry. Co., 39 Minn. 219, 39 N. W. 153; Florida, C. & P. R. Co. v. State, 31 Fla. 482, 13 South. 103, 20 L. R. A. 419, 34 Am. St. Rep. 30; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Washington, 142 U. S. 492, 12 Sup. Ct. 283, 35 L. Ed. 1092.

It is a proper remedy to enforce the duties of a telephone company to the public; Central Union Telephone Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1, 5 N. E. 721; State v. Telephone Co., 17 Neb. 126, 22 N. W. 237, 52 Am. Rep. 404; Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. v. Telegraph Co., 66 Md. 399, 7 Atl. 809, 59 Am. Rep. 167; Commercial Union Tel. Co. v. Telephone & Telegraph Co., 61 Vt. 241, 17 Atl. 1071, 5 L. R. A. 161, 15 Am. St. Rep. 893; contra, American Rapid Tel. Co. v. Telephone Co., 49 Conn. 353, 44 Am. Rep. 237; it may also be used to compel such company to supply facilities even where the petitioner has not complied with his contract to use its telephone exclusively (the company's remedy for that default being an action for breach of contract); State v. Telephone Co., 61 S. C. 83, 39 S. E. 257, 55 L. R. A. 139, 85 Am. St. Rep. 870. It lies to compel the officers of a private corporation to issue a certificate of stock to the owner of it; Hair v. Burnell, 106 Fed. 280; against a public service corporation to compel compliance with the reasonable requirements of a city; State v. Waterworks Co., 57 Fla. 533, 48 South. 639, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680; see note in 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084; to compel school officers to admit a pupil without distinction as to race or color; Kaine v. Com., 101 Pa. 490; to enforce a right of sepulture, in the case of a colored man, though in a lot bought by a white man, but without restriction as to color; Mount Moriah Cemetery Ass'n v. Com., 81 Pa. 235, 22 Am. Rep. 743. It will not lie to compel a councilman to attend meetings; Wilson v. Cleveland, 157 Mich. 510, 122 N. W. 284, 133 Am. St. Rep. 352.

But in order to permit the use of this remedy to compel corporate action, there must be a clear legal obligation on the part of the corporation to act in the manner suggested, and the coincidence of the other conditions required to warrant the issuing of the writ, such as the absence of any other adequate legal remedy. Accordingly a mandamus has been refused to compel street car companies to operate an abandoned portion of a line where the charter did not clearly require its operation; San Antonio Street Ry. Co. v. State, 90 Tex. 520, 39 S. W. 926, 35 L. R. A. 662, 59 Am. St. Rep. 834; or to keep cars running during the whole year, as that would involve the performance of a long series of continuing acts involving personal service, and extending over an indefinite time; 28 Ont. 399. So a railroad company as purchaser of a branch railroad at a foreclosure sale, will not be compelled to maintain and operate it at a loss where the business can be otherwise handled; Sherwood v. R. Co., 94 Va. 291, 26 S. E. 943.

The general rule on this subject is, that, if the inferior tribunal or corporate body has a discretion, and acts and exercises it, this discretion cannot be controlled by mandamus; but if the inferior body refuse to act when the law requires it to act, and the party has no other legal remedy, and where in justice there ought to be one, a mandamus will lie to set them in motion, and to compel action, and in proper cases, the court will settle the legal principles which should govern, but without controlling the discretion of the subordinate jurisdiction; Dill. Mun. Corp., 4th ed. § 828; Ex parte Harris, 52 Ala. 87, 23 Am. Rep. 559. The writ may be issued where an inferior court refuses to take jurisdiction when by law it ought to do so, or where, having obtained jurisdiction, it refuses to proceed in its exercise; In re Parker, 131 U. S. 221, 9 Sup. Ct. 708, 33 L. Ed. 123; In re Parsons, 150 U. S. 150, 14 Sup. Ct. 50, 37 L. Ed. 1034.

It is the common remedy for restoring persons to corporate offices of which they are unjustly deprived; Metsker v. Neally, 41 Kan. 122, 21 Pac. 206, 13 Am. St. Rep. 269; the title to the office having been before determined by proceeding by quo warranto; but it will not lie to try the title to an office of which there is a de facto incumbent; Ex parte Harris, 52 Ala. 87, 23 Am. Rep. 559; 1 Burr. 402; Dane v. Derby, 54 Me. 95, 89 Am. Dec. 722; Biggs v. McBride, 17 Or. 640, 21 Pac. 878, 5 L. R. A. 115; see State v. Sullivan, 83 Wis. 416, 53 N. W. 677; State v. Smith, 49 Neb. 755, 69 N. W. 114; unless quo warranto does not lie; People v. City of New York, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 79; but see People v. Scrugham, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 302; Harwood v. Marshall, 9 Md. 83; People v. Kilduff, 15 Ill. 492, 60 Am. Dec. 769. And see the cases fully reviewed in Redf. Railw. § 159. It lies to restore one unlawfully deposed from a church; Hughes v. Church of East Orange, 75 N. J. L. 167, 67 Atl. 66; but see cases contra in 17 Yale L. J. 299.

Mandamus will lie to compel acceptance of municipal office by one who, possessing the requisite qualifications, has been duly appointed to the same; People v. Williams, 145 Ill. 573, 33 N. E. 849, 24 L. R. A. 492, 36 Am. St. Rep. 514. It will issue out of the supreme court to restore to his office an attorney at law illegally disbarred by a circuit court; State v. Finley, 30 Fla. 302, 11 South. 500.

This remedy must be sought at the earliest convenient time in those cases where important interests will be affected by the delay; 12 Q. B. 448. But it is often necessary to delay in order to determine definitely the rights and injuries of the several parties concerned, as until public works are completed; 4 Q. B. 877.

It is no sufficient answer to the application that the party is also liable to indictment for the act complained of; 3 Q. B. 528. And where a railway company attempted to take up their rails, they were required by mandamus to restore them, notwithstanding they were also liable to indictment, that being regarded as a less efficacious remedy; 2 B. & Ald. 646. But mandamus will always be denied when there is other adequate remedy; 11 Ad. & E. 69; 1 Q. B. 288; Redf. Railw. § 159. See State v. Hamil, 97 Ala. 107, 11 South. 892; County of San Joaquin v. Superior Court, 98 Cal. 602, 33 Pac. 482.

It is not a proper proceeding for the correction of errors of an inferior court; Judges of the Oneida Common Pleas v. People, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 79; State v. Judge of Dist. Court, 13 La. Ann. 481; 7 Dowl. & R. 334; Ex parte Oklahoma, 220 U. S. 191, 31 Sup. Ct. 426, 55 L. Ed. 431; In re Riggs, 214 U. S. 9, 29 Sup. Ct. 598, 53 L. Ed. 887; or where there is adequate remedy by appeal; Gibson v. Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 620, 57 N. W. 189; San Joaquin County v. Superior Court, 98 Cal. 602, 33 Pac. 482; Virginia v. Paul, 148 U. S. 107, 13 Sup. Ct. 536, 37 L. Ed. 386; or by certiorari; Crittenden v. Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 637, 57 N. W. 192. But mandamus, under U. S. R. S. § 688, is for the purpose of revising and correcting proceedings in a case already instituted in the courts and is part of the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court.

It will lie to compel a circuit court to remand a case to a state court where it is apparent that that court has no jurisdiction. The rule that mandamus will not lie to control the judicial discretion of an inferior court does not apply to an attempt of such court to exercise its discretion on subject-matter not within its jurisdiction; In re Winn, 213 U. S. 458, 29 Sup. Ct. 515, 53 L. Ed. 873; or where a court assumes jurisdiction on removal in a case where, on the face of the record, no jurisdiction attached; Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 449, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 51 L. Ed. 264.

It cannot perform the office of an appeal or writ of error to compel the circuit court to reverse its decision refusing to remand a case removed from a state court; In re Pollitz, 206 U. S. 323, 27 Sup. Ct. 729, 51 L. Ed. 1081; but where a court refuses to take jurisdiction when it should do so, mandamus will lie; In re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 14 Sup. Ct. 221, 37 L. Ed. 1211; State v. District Court, 38 Mont. 166, 99 Pac. 291. It lies to compel a person or officer to perform a duty imposed by law. If the duty lies in his discretion, the writ may issue to compel him to act and decide, and this applies to a judicial officer; Kimberlin v. Commission To Five Civilized Tribes, 104 Fed. 653, 44 C. C. A. 109.

It is a suit within the meaning of that term in U. S. R. S. § 709; American Express Co. v. Michigan, 177 U. S. 404, 20 Sup. Ct. 695, 44 L. Ed. 823. Where it is brought to enforce a judgment on municipal bonds it is purely ancillary to the original action and a substitute for the ordinary process of execution; Kinney v. Banking Co., 123 Fed. 297, 59 C. C. A. 586.

The writ is not demandable, as matter of right, but it is to be awarded in the discretion of the court; 1 Term 331, 396, 404, 425; People v. Croton Aqueduct Board, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 259; Wiedwald v. Dodson, 95 Cal. 450, 30 Pac. 580. But where a clear legal right to a writ is shown, the court has no discretion about granting it; Illinois Central R. Co. v. People, 143 Ill. 434, 33 N. E. 173, 19 L. R. A. 119.

A petition for a mandamus to a public officer abates by his resignation of his office; Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Smith, 165 U. S. 28, 17 Sup. Ct. 225, 41 L. Ed. 621; where it was said that this principle has for years been considered as so well settled in that court "that in some of the cases no opinion has been filed and no official report published;" The Secretary v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 298, 313, 19 L. Ed. 579. The writ does not reach the office, but is against the officer as a person; U. S. v. Boutwell, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 604, 21 L. Ed. 721.

The power of granting this writ in England seems originally to have been exercised by the court of chancery, as to all the inferior courts, but not as to the king's bench; 1 Vern. 175; Ang. & A. Corp. § 697. But see 2 B. & Ald. 646; 2 M. & S. 80; 3 Ad. & E. 416. But for a great number of years the granting of the prerogative writ of mandamus has been confined in England to the court of king's bench.

In the United States the writ is generally issued by the highest court having jurisdiction at law; Com. v. Common Councils, 34 Pa. 496; it cannot be granted in equity; Smith v. Bourbon, 127 U. S. 105, 8 Sup. Ct. 1043, 32 L. Ed. 73.

Section 234 of the Judicial Code (March 3, 1911) gives the supreme court power to issue writs of mandamus, in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law, to any courts appointed or persons holding office under the authority of the United States. The issuing of a mandamus to courts is the exercise of an appellate jurisdiction, and, therefore, constitutionally vested in the supreme court; but a mandamus directed to a public officer belongs to original jurisdiction, and by the constitution, the exercise of original jurisdiction by the supreme court is restricted to certain specified cases, which do not comprehend a mandamus. The latter clause of the above section (which is taken from the Judiciary Act of Sept. 24, 1789), authorizing this writ to be issued by the supreme court to persons holding office under the authority of the United States, was held not warranted by the constitution, and void; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 175, 2 L. Ed. 60; see Ex parte Hoyt, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 279, 10 L. Ed. 161; Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 404, 10 L. Ed. 221.

The supreme court of the United States has no power to control by mandamus the discretion of the circuit court in granting or refusing a supersedeas upon an appeal to the circuit court of appeals from an interlocutory order granting or continuing an injunction; In re Haberman Mfg. Co., 147 U. S. 525, 13 Sup. Ct. 527, 37 L. Ed. 266; nor can it compel the circuit court of appeals to receive and consider new proofs in an admiralty appeal in a cause within the legitimate jurisdiction of that court; In re Hawkins, 147 U. S. 486, 13 Sup. Ct. 512, 37 L. Ed. 251; but it will issue to compel compliance with a mandate of the supreme court of the United States, without regard to the value of the matter in dispute; City Bank v. Hunter, 152 U. S. 512, 14 Sup. Ct. 675, 38 L. Ed. 534.

The circuit courts of the United States may also issue writs of mandamus; but their power in this particular is confined exclusively to those cases in which it may be necessary to the exercise of their jurisdiction; McIntire v. Wood, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 504, 3 L. Ed. 420.

The mode of proceeding in obtaining the writ is: first, to demand of the party to perform the act. And it would seem that the party should be made aware of the purpose of the demand; 3 Ad. & E. 217, 477. The refusal must be of the thing demanded, and not of the right merely; 5 B. & Ad. 978. The refusal should be absolute and unqualified; but it may be by silence only. But the party should understand that he is required to perform the duty upon pain of the legal redress being resorted to without further delay; 4 Railw. Cas. 112. But any exception to the demand should be taken as a preliminary question; 10 Ad. & E. 531. A formal demand and refusal have been held not a necessary preliminary to the filing of a petition for mandamus to compel the performance of a public duty which the law requires to be done; People v. School Dist., 127 Ill. 613, 21 N. E. 187.

The application for a mandamus may be by motion in court, and the production of ex parte affidavits, in support of the facts alleged; in which case an alternative writ issues, as matter of course, generally, and the case is heard upon the excuse alleged in the return to the alternative writ; see Maddox v. Graham, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 56. Or the party may apply for the writ by formal petition, setting forth the grounds in detail, in which case the merits of the question are determined upon the traverse of the petition, instead of the traverse of the return to the alternative writ; State v. Union Tp., 9 Ohio St. 599. In the latter case a rule is granted to show cause why a mandamus shall not issue; upon the decision of this rule, an alternative writ would issue at common law and upon failure to obey this or make return of an adequate legal excuse, the peremptory writ followed. This practice is entirely changed by statute, see infra, but the rule to show cause is in many states the usual proceeding. And in either form, if the application prevails, a peremptory mandamus issues; the only proper or admissible return to which is a certificate of compliance with its requisitions, without further excuse or delay; 1 Q. B. 616; Chance v. Temple, 1 Ia. 179. The peremptory writ need not precisely follow the alternative writ in matters of detail; State v. Weld, 39 Minn. 426, 40 N. W. 561. The return to an alternative writ should be made with the greatest possible certainty, as at common law the return cannot be traversed; Prospect Brewing Co.'s Petition, 127 Pa. 523, 17 Atl. 1090; Johnson v. Reichert, 77 Cal. 34, 18 Pac. 858.

If the relator regards the return as insufficient in law, he should demur, or, if untrue in fact, join issue; City of Cleveland v. U. S., 127 Fed. 667, 62 C. C. A. 393. The practice varies greatly in different jurisdictions, though resting in all cases upon the same general principles, as to all which see generally, High, Extr. Leg. Rem. ch. 8.

The English practice is, if the first writ is denied, even on the ground of defects in the affidavits, not to permit a second application to be made; 8 Ad. & E. 413; so also, if it fail for other defects of form. But a more liberal practice obtains in the American courts; Redf. Railw. § 190.

By the Common-Law Procedure Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, provision is made for statutory mandamus, incidental to an action, brief in form and enforceable by attachment, which, if awarded, will issue peremptorily in the first instance. It has been held that a plaintiff could not under this act enforce specific performance of a contract; but that the act contemplated a public duty in which the plaintiff among others was interested, and not a private obligation which the plaintiff alone could enforce; but under the judicature acts, it is allowable for the court by an interlocutory order to grant a mandamus in any cases in which it shall appear just and convenient; Mozl. & W. The prerogative writ of mandamus is still retained in the English practice; but it is obvious that the foregoing statute must have very essentially abridged its use, as well as that of decrees in chancery for specific performance. See 8 E. & B. 512; Redf. Railw. § 190, pl. 8.

The proceedings are reviewable by writ of error; Carter County v. Schmalstig, 127 Fed. 126, 62 C. C. A. 78.

Controverted questions of fact, arising in the trial of applications for mandamus in the English practice, are referred to the determination of a jury; 8 El. & B. 512; 1 East 114. By the American practice, questions of fact, in applications for mandamus, are more commonly tried by the court; Maddox v. Graham, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 56. See Angell & Ames, Corp.; High, Extra. Leg. Rem.; 16 N. J. L. J. 138.

Costs rest in the discretion of the court. In the English courts they are allowed when the application fails, but not always when it prevails; Redf. Railw. § 159. The more just rule in such cases is to allow costs to the prevailing party, unless there is some special reason for denying them; and this rule now generally prevails; 8 Ad. & E. 901, 905; 5 id. 804; 1 Q. B. 536, 751; 6 E. L. & Eq. 267.

See DE PROCEDENDO AD JUDICIUM.

MANDANT. The bailor in a contract of mandate.

MANDATARY, MANDATARIUS. One who undertakes to perform a mandate. Jones, Bailm. 53. He that obtains a benefice by mandamus. Cowell.

MANDATE. A direction or request. Thus a check is a mandate by the drawer to his banker to pay the amount to the holder of the check; 1 Q. B. Div. 33.

A power of attorney to receive payment in the extinguishment of an obligation. It may be express or implied. See Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 152.

In Practice. A judicial command or precept issued by a court or magistrate, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree.

The judgment of an appellate court sent down to the court whose proceedings have been reviewed.

In some jurisdictions the court of last resort is authorized to enter final judgment upon which execution may issue without further proceedings, but neither of the federal appellate courts has such power; 1 U. S. R. S. § 701; Fost. Fed. Pr. § 495. Accordingly in these courts, and in appellate courts generally, it is the practice to send down a mandate embodying the judgment. Rule 39 of the supreme court of the United States (32 Sup. Ct. xiv) provides that the mandate shall go down at the expiration of 30 days; but for proper cause shown a special mandate may be ordered, or the mandate withheld. A mandate may be recalled from the inferior court and set aside or corrected at the term at which it is issued; Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 111 U. S. 798, 4 Sup. Ct. 697, 28 L. Ed. 593; but an application to recall and correct the mandate cannot be made after the close of the term; id.; Schell v. Dodge, 107 U. S. 629, 2 Sup. Ct. 830, 27 L. Ed. 601; Waskey v. Hammer, 179 Fed. 273, 102 C. C. A. 629.

Where there is a reversal of a judgment or decree which has been executed pending the appeal, a direction of the court below to compel restitution should be included in the mandate; Morris's Cotton, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 507, 19 L. Ed. 481; even where the reversal is for want of jurisdiction; Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Brock, 139 U. S. 216, 11 Sup. Ct. 523, 35 L. Ed. 151. Restitution may be enforced by contempt proceedings; Ex parte Morris, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 605, 19 L. Ed. 799; and it may be compelled even where a third person has received the funds or property, if he is within the jurisdiction and no superior equities in his favor have intervened; id.; but duties or charges paid by the party from whom restitution is required may be allowed; id. Restitution from the United States cannot be compelled; The Santa Maria, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 431, 6 L. Ed. 359.

Interest should be included in the mandate, otherwise it cannot be awarded after the affirmance; Boyce v. Grundy, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 275, 9 L. Ed. 127; but after affirmance the defendant is entitled to interest at the legal rate from the date of judgment until payment; 1 U. S. R. S. § 1010; Perkins v. Fourniquet, 14 How. (U. S.) 328, 14 L. Ed. 441.

When the mandate is filed in the court below, that court again acquires jurisdiction of the case. It has been held that in some cases a state court may act upon an affirmance without awaiting the mandate; In re Shibuya Jugiro, 140 U. S. 291, 11 Sup. Ct. 770, 35 L. Ed. 510; but it is clearly the better practice to have the proceedings below await the mandate, which may always be specially applied for if circumstances require it. It is held that the statute of limitations against the right of the purchaser to sue for breach of warranty of title would run from the decision of the appellate court that his title was invalid, and not from the time of filing the mandate; Nickles v. U. S., 42 Fed. 757.

The court below is bound by the decree of the appellate court as set forth in the mandate; Sibbald v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 488, 9 L. Ed. 1167; which must be interpreted according to its subject-matter, with due consideration to the decree below as well as that above; Mitchel v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 52, 10 L. Ed. 658; Mackall v. Richards, 116 U. S. 45, 6 Sup. Ct. 234, 29 L. Ed. 558. After the case has been sent back by a mandate it has been held too late to question the jurisdiction; Whyte v. Gibbes, 20 How. (U. S.) 541, 15 L. Ed. 1016; to grant a new trial; Ex parte Dubuque & P. R. Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 69, 17 L. Ed. 514 (except in ejectment; Smale v. Mitchell, 143 U. S. 99, 12 Sup. Ct. 353, 36 L. Ed. 90); to permit the filing of a supplemental answer; Re Story, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 339, 9 L. Ed. 1108; to grant leave to file a supplemental bill suggesting new defences; Mackall v. Richards, 116 U. S. 45, 6 Sup. Ct. 234, 29 L. Ed. 558; to review the case below on its merits; Durant v. Essex County, 101 U. S. 555, 25 L. Ed. 961.

"When a case has once been decided by this court on appeal, and remanded to the circuit court, whatever was before this court and disposed of by its decree is considered as finally settled. The circuit court is bound by the decree as the law of the case, and must carry it into execution, according to the mandate. That court cannot vary it, or examine it for any other purpose than execution, or give any other or further relief, or review it, even for apparent error, upon any matter decided on appeal, or intermeddle with it, further than to settle so much as has been remanded. . . . If the circuit court mistakes or misconstrues the decrees of this court, and does not give full effect to the mandate, its action may be controlled, either upon a new appeal (if involving a sufficient amount) or by a writ of mandamus to execute the mandate of this court. But the circuit court may consider and decide any matters left open by the mandate of this court; and its decisions of such matters can be reviewed by a new appeal only." In re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247, 16 Sup. Ct. 291, 40 L. Ed. 414. So, also, American Soda Fountain Co. v. Sample, 136 Fed. 857, 70 C. C. A. 415.

"The judgments of [the supreme court] are founded upon the records before it, and those judgments will be unhesitatingly enforced, except as their enforcement may be modified or restrained by events occurring subsequent to the period covered by the records. That such events may modify, and often do modify the mode and manner of enforcement, is well known to all members of the profession. The death of the parties, partial satisfaction, changes of interest subsequent to judgment, and sales upon the judgment pending the appeal, are instances where this result is frequently produced." South Fork Canal Co. v. Gordon, Fed. Cas. No. 13,189.

See LAW OF THE CASE.

In Contracts. A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward. Story, Bailm. § 137. A contract whereby one party agrees to execute gratuitously a commission received from the other. Sohm, Rom. L. 314.

In the early Roman law (before the doctrines of agency were developed), it was a trust or commission by which one person, called the mandator, requested another, the mandatarius, to act in his own name and as if for himself in a particular transaction (special mandate), or in all the affairs of the former (general mandate). The mandatarius was the only one recognized as having legal rights and responsibilities as toward third persons in the transactions involved. As between him and the mandator, however, the latter was entitled to all benefit, and bound to indemnify against losses, etc.; but the service was gratuitous. Cent. Dict.

The contract of mandate in the civil law is not limited to personal property, nor does it require a delivery of personal property when it relates to that. Pothier, de Mand. n. 1; La. Civ. Code, 2954-64. It is, however, restricted to things of a personal nature at common law, and of these there must be a delivery, actual or constructive. Story, Bailm. § 142; Lloyd v. Barden, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 343.

Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other; the distinction being that in mandates the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory; while in deposits the custody is the principal thing and the care and service are merely accessory. Story, Bailm. § 140; 2 Kent 569.

For the creation of a mandate it is necessary,—first, that there should exist something, which should be the matter of the contract; secondly, that it should be done gratuitously; and, thirdly, that the parties should voluntarily intend to enter into the contract. Pothier, Pand. l. 17, t. 1, p. 1, § 1; Pothier, de Mandat, c. 1, § 2.

There is no particular form or manner of entering into the contract of mandate prescribed either by the common law or by the civil law, in order to give it validity. It may be verbal or in writing; it may be express or implied; it may be in solemn form or in any other manner. Story, Bailm. § 160. The contract may be varied at the pleasure of the parties. It may be absolute or conditional, general or special, temporary or permanent. Wood. Civ. Law 242; 1 Domat, b. 1, t. 15, §§ 1, 6, 7, 8; Pothier, de Mandat, c. 1, § 3.

In Louisiana it is generally gratuitous, but not so when a contrary intention is implied from conduct of parties or nature of business; Succession of Fowler, 7 La. Ann. 207; a right to compensation may be inferred from nature of services without express agreement; Waterman v. Gibson, 5 La. Ann. 672.

The mandatary, upon undertaking his trust and receiving his article, is bound to perform it as agreed upon; 5 B. & Ald. 117; French v. Reed, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 308; and is responsible only for gross negligence; 2 Kent 571; 2 Ad. & E. 256; The New World v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 475, 14 L. Ed. 1019; Burk v. Dempster, 34 Neb. 426, 51 N. W. 976; Hibernia Bldg. Ass'n v. McGrath, 154 Pa. 296, 26 Atl. 377, 35 Am. St. Rep. 828; but in considering the question of negligence, regard is to be had to any implied undertaking to furnish superior skill arising from the known ability of the mandatary; Story, Bailm. §§ 177, 182. The fact that a gratuitous bailee has given bond for the faithful performance of his duties as such does not increase his liability; Hibernia Bldg. Ass'n

v. McGrath, 154 Pa. 296, 26 Atl. 377, 35 Am. St. Rep. 828. Whether a bank is liable for neglect of its agent in collecting notes, see Montgomery County Bank v. Bank, 7 N. Y. 459; Mechanics' Bank v. Earp, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 384; Warren Bank v. Bank, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 583; East-Haddam Bank v. Scovil, 12 Conn. 303; Jackson v. Bank, 6 H. & J. (Md.) 146; Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 7 L. Ed. 37; Kincheloe v. Priest, 89 Mo. 240, 1 S. W. 235, 58 Am. Rep. 117. He must render an account of his proceedings, and show a compliance with the condition of the bailment; Story, Bailm. § 191.

The dissolution of the contract may be by renunciation by the mandatary before commencing the execution of the undertaking; 2 M. & W. 145; 22 E. L. & Eq. 501; Fellowes v. Gordon, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 415; Ferguson v. Porter, 3 Fla. 38; Story, Bailm. 192; by revocation of authority by the mandator; Copeland v. Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Morgan v. Stell, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 316; 5 Term 213; by the death of the mandator; 2 V. & B. 51; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; by death of the mandatary; 2 Kent 504; 8 Taunt. 403; and by change of state of the parties; Story, Ag. § 481; and in some cases by operation of law; Story, Ag. § 500. See BAILMENT.

In Civil Law. The instructions which the emperor addressed to a public functionary, and which were to serve as rules for his conduct. These mandates resembled those of the proconsuls, the mandata jurisdictio, and were ordinarily binding on the legatees or lieutenants of the emperor of the imperial provinces, and there they had the authority of the principal edicts. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 3, § 42, n. 4.

In Canon Law. A rescript of the pope, by which he commands some ordinary collator, or precentor, to put the person there nominated in possession of the first benefice vacant in his collation. As to their abuses. 2 Hall. Mid. Ages 212.

MANDATOR. The person employing another to perform a mandate. Story, Bailm. § 138; 1 Brown, Civ. L. 382; Halif. Anal. Civ. L. 70.

MANDATORY. In the construction of statutes, this word is applied to such as require to be obeyed, under penalty of having proceedings under them declared void. Directory statutes must be obeyed, but, if not, do not invalidate the act. See STATUTE.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION. One that compels the defendant to restore things to their former condition and virtually directs him to perform an act. Bisph. Eq. § 400. See INJUNCTION, and an extended note there cited from 20 Am. Dec. 389.

MANDATORY STATUTES. A state law providing for a state live stock sanitary board and directing it to take up the work wherever it "may deem best" is mandatory; State v. McCarty, 5 Ala. App. 212, 59 South. 543. See STATUTE.

MANDATUM. See BAILMENT; MANDATE.

MANDAVI BALLIVO. In English Practice. The return made by a sheriff when he has committed the execution of a writ of a liberty to a bailiff, who has the right to execute the writ.

MANERIUM. A house against which geld is charged. Maitland, Domeday Book and Beyond 120.

MANHOOD. In Feudal Law. A term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was devenio vester homo, I become your man. 2 Bla. Com. 54; Felton v. Billups, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. C.) 585. See HOMAGE.

MANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. The most common of all forms of insanity. Consisting in a condition of exaltation which affects the emotion and intellect, and which expresses itself by increased activity, mental and physical. 3 Witth. & Beck.

A chronic affection of the brain, ordinarily without fever, characterized by the perturbation and exaltation of the sensibilities, the intelligence, and will. Esquirol.

A condition of exaltation which affects the emotions and the intellect, and expresses itself by increased activity,—mental and physical. 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 250.

A condition in which the perversion of the understanding embraces all kinds of objects and is accompanied with a general mental excitement. In re Gannon's Will, 2 Misc. 329, 21 N. Y. Supp. 960.

It is in one form mere excitement, or this may have developed into the other,—frenzy. It is the reverse of melancholia, and as well developed as the depression of the latter, is the opposite feeling which characterizes the former; id.

An insanity in which there is general exaltation of the mental, sensory, and motor functions. 1 Clevenger, Med. Jur. of Insan. 953.

Two forms or degrees are usually recognized: Mania with exaltation, and mania with frenzy; it is the exact opposite of melancholia and shows a rapid succession of ideas, never a fixed idea. Monomanias are now classed as physical degenerations and are not considered with mania proper, which is described as a functional neurosis or a disease without a pathological basis.

Manias, further, may be acute or chronic; in the former, an actual frenzy is the condition; in the latter, some more or less fixed delusion is present, the result of the previous delusional state; there being no attempt, however, in intercourse with another person, to prove the truth of the delusional beliefs.

It would appear to be of easy diagnosis, but the excitement of other forms of insanity is constantly mistaken for that of simple mania. The beginning is very gradual, and weeks, months, or even years of bad health may precede an outbreak, and the mental explosion is usually unexpected. Id.

The maniac either misapprehends the true relations between persons and things, in consequence of which he adopts notions manifestly absurd, and believes in occurrences that never did and never could take place, or his sentiments, affections, and emotions are so perverted that whatever excites their activity is viewed through a distorting medium, or, which is the most common fact, both these conditions may exist together, in which case their relative share in the disease may differ in such degree that one or the other may scarcely be perceived at all.

In mania, excepting that form of it called raving, it is not to be understood that the mind is irrational on every topic, but rather that it is the sport of vague and shifting delusions, or, where these are not manifest, has lost all nicety of intellectual discernment, and the ability to perform any continuous process of thought with its customary steadiness and correctness. It is usually accompanied by feelings of estrangement or indifference towards those who at other times were objects of affection and interest. A common feature of the disease is either more or less nervous exaltation, manifested by loquacity, turbulence, and great muscular activity, or depression, indicated by silence, gloom, painful apprehensions, and thoughts of self-destruction.

Mania is usually a growth, rather than a sudden development (though sometimes the latter), and its incipient stages are characterized by more or less of morbid depression, or, in some cases, irritability. Then follows a period of restless but undirected and unconcentrated activity. Delusions and hallucinations are common, and may extend to an entire change of personality.

The physical condition, like the mental, indicates early an appearance of vigor with excessive appetite; and the use of alcoholic stimulants, while not in itself a cause, may hasten the attack, so that in many cases which resemble alcoholic mania it is found that the mental disorder preceded the drinking. It is said that "there is always, however, finally a failure of nutrition with loss of flesh, the tongue becomes coated and the bowels are constipated. The pulse may be somewhat rapid, but frequently, even during great excitement, there is little change, it often being slow and small. Insomnia is a marked symptom, days passing without sleep despite the ceaseless activity. There is one peculiarity about this constant activity, in that there seems to be no sense of fatigue accompanying it. There is, in fact, apparently a cerebral anæsthesia. This applies also to pain perception, as exposure to cold does not seem to be recognized, and even painful operations can be carried on without apparent suffering. Acts of self-mutilation, which are especially common where sexual disturbance is associated with the mania, are often done, which are harrowing in the extreme and yet are not appreciated by the patient." 3 Withington & Beck. Med. Jur. 251.

This form of mental disorder may be acute with frenzy and raving, in which case there is entire mental confusion and delirium; or it may be chronic in which case there is usually some more or less settled delusion with periodic excitability easily aroused and liable quickly to subside. "There is almost always associated with this condition a generally happy-go-lucky state of mind. There is in fact more or less dementia (q. v.), the state toward which all cases tend which do not end in recovery." Id. 253.

With respect to the effect of this form of mental disorder, whether general or partial, upon criminal responsibility and civil incapacity, see INSANITY.

See DIPSOMANIA; EROTIC MANIA; KLEPTOMANIA; MORPHINOMANIA; PYROMANIA; MONOMANIA.

MANIA A POTU. See DELIRIUM TREMENS.

MANIFEST. A written instrument containing a true account of the cargo of a ship or a commercial vessel. It must contain a list of all packages or separate items of freight with their distinguishing marks, numbers, etc. By statute it must also designate the ports of lading and destination, and contain a description of the vessel and the designation of its owners and the names of the consignees and passengers with a list of their baggage and an account of the sea stores remaining; U. S. R. S. § 2807. The manifest should be made out, dated, and signed by the captain at places where the goods or any part of them are taken on board.

The want of a manifest where one is required and also the making a false manifest, are grave offences.

In Evidence. Clear and requiring no proof; notorious; apparent by examination; open; palpable; incontrovertible. It is synonymous with evident, visible, or plain. Hermance v. Sup'rs of Ulster County, 71 N. Y. 486.

MANIFESTO. A solemn declaration, by the constituted authorities of a nation, which contains the reasons for its public acts towards another.

On the declaration of war, a manifesto is usually issued, in which the nation declaring the war states the reasons for so doing. Vattel, l. 3, c. 4, § 64; Wolffius § 1187. It differs from a proclamation in that it is issued to the other belligerent and to neutral nations.

MANKIND. Persons of the male sex; the human species. The statute of 25 Hen. VIII. c. 6, makes it felony to commit sodomy with mankind or beast. Females as well as males are included under the term mankind. Fortescue 91; Bac. Abr. Sodomy.

MANNER. Mode of performing or exercising; method; custom; habitual practice. People v. English, 139 Ill. 629, 29 N. E. 678, 15 L. R. A. 131.

MANNER AND FORM. In Pleading. After traversing any allegation in pleading, it is usual to say, "in manner and form as he has in his declaration in that behalf alleged," which is as much as to include in the traverse not only the mere fact opposed to it, but that in the manner and form in which it is stated by the other party. These words, however, only put in issue the substantial statement of the manner of the fact traversed, and do not extend to the time, place, or other circumstances attending it, if they were not originally material and necessary to be proved as laid. See MODO ET FORMA.

MANNING. A day's work of a man. Cowell. A summoning to court. Spelman, Gloss.

MANNIRE. To cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there. Du Cange.

MANNOPUS (Lat.). An ancient word, which signifies goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief.

MANOR (French, manoir). A house, residence, or habitation. It includes not only a dwelling-house, but also lands. See Co. Litt.

58, 108; 2 Rolle, Abr. 121; Merlin, Répert, Manoir; Serg. Land Laws of Penn. 195; 11 H. L. Cas. 83.

Manor is also said to be derived originally either from Lat. manendo, remaining, or from Brit. maer, stones, being the place marked out or inclosed by stones. Webst.

In English Law. A tract of land originally granted by the king to a person of rank, part of which (terræ tenementales) was given by the grantee or lord of the manor to his followers. The rest he retained under the name of his demesnes (terræ dominicales). That which remained uncultivated was called the lord's waste, and served for public roads, and commons of pasture for the lord and his tenants. The whole fee was called a lordship, or barony, and the court appendant to the manor the court-baron. The tenants, in respect to their relation to this court and to each other were called pares curiæ; in relation to the tenure of their lands, copyholders (q. v.), as holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court.

Originally a manor was a "highly complex and organized aggregate of corporeal and incorporeal things. It usually involved the lordship over villeins and the right to seize their chattels. It was not a bare tract of land, but a complex made up of land and of a great part of the agricultural capital that worked the land, men and beasts, ploughs and carts, forks and flails." 2 Poll. & M. 143, 148.

The franchise of a manor; i. e. the right to jurisdiction and rents and services of copyholders. Cowell. No new manors were created in England after the prohibition of sub-infeudation by stat. Quia Emptores, in 1290. 1 Washb. R. P. 30.

See Pollock, Oxf. Lect. 112; 5 L. Q. R. 113; Engl. Encycl. (Manorial Jurisdiction); EXTENT.

In American Law. A manor is a tract held of a proprietor by a fee-farm rent in money or in kind, and descending to the oldest son of the proprietor, who in New York was called a patroon. People v. Van Rensselaer, 9 N. Y. 291.

MANQUELLER. In Saxon Law. A murderer.

MANSE. Habitation; farm and land. Spelman, Gloss. Parsonage or vicarage house. Paroch. Antiq. 431; Jacob, Law Dict. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict.

MANSIO. In Anglo-Saxon times the amount of land which would support a man and his family, called by various names: Mansio, familia, hide. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 54.

MANSION-HOUSE. Any house of dwelling, in the law of burglary, etc. Co. 3d Inst. 64.

The term "mansion-house," in its common sense, not only includes the dwelling-house, but also all the buildings within the curtilage, as the dairy-house, the cow-house, the stable, etc.; though not under the same roof nor contiguous. Burn, Inst. Burglary, 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 215, 216; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 558; 4 Bla. Com. 225. See Com. v. Pennock, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 199; 14 M. & W. 181; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 783.

MANSLAUGHTER. The unlawful killing of another without malice either express or implied. 4 Bla. Com. 190; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 466.

Any unlawful and wilful killing of a human being, without malice, is manslaughter, and thus defined, it includes a negligent killing which is also wilful; U. S. v. Meagher, 37 Fed. 875. See 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 737.

The distinction between manslaughter and murder consists in the following. In the former, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful, or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, either express or implied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 218; Foster 290; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711. To constitute the offense, it is necessary that the circumstances should take away every evidence of cool depravity of heart or wanton cruelty; Com. v. Paese, 220 Pa. 371, 69 Atl. 891, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 123 Am. St. Rep. 699, 13 Ann. Cas. 1081.

It also differs from murder in this, that there can be no accessaries before the fact, there having been no time for premeditation; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 437; 1 Russ. Cr. 485; but see 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. 678.

Cases of manslaughter have been divided into three classes: (1) Where there was an intent to take life and the killing would be murder but for mitigating circumstances. (2) Where death results from unintentionally doing an unlawful act. (3) Where it results from the negligent doing or omission of an act which, though not itself wrongful, was attended by circumstances which endangered life; 1 McClain, Cr. L. § 335.

There is a not uncommon division of manslaughter into two degrees, voluntary and involuntary; and these degrees are distinctly recognized by statute in several states; in other states several distinct degrees of the crime are created by statute; in some as many as four.

Involuntary manslaughter is such as happens without the intention to inflict the injury.

Voluntary manslaughter is such as happens voluntarily or with an intention to produce the injury.

It has been said that the distinction between voluntary and involuntary manslaughter is now obsolete, and unless where the terms are used in statutes defining the crimes, they are not used in indictment, verdict, or sentence. But where the distinction is made by statute, there can be no conviction of involuntary manslaughter on an indictment for voluntary; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 307. It would seem however that it is incorrect to characterize as obsolete what is literally recognized by statute in several jurisdictions. See supra. It is more accurate to say that the division is purely statutory in its origin, not entering into the common-law definitions.

Homicide may become manslaughter in consequence of provocation; mutual combat; in case of resistance to public officers, etc.; killing in the prosecution of an unlawful or wanton act; or killing in the prosecution of a lawful act improperly performed, or performed without lawful authority.

The provocation which reduces the killing from murder to manslaughter is an answer to the presumption of malice, which the law raises in every case of homicide: it is, therefore, no answer when express malice is proved; 1 Russ. Cr. 440; Foster 132; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 239. And to be available the provocation must have been reasonable and recent; for no words or slight provocation will be sufficient, and if the party has had time to cool, malice will be inferred; Shorter v. People, 2 N. Y. 193, 51 Am. Dec. 286; Preston v. State, 25 Miss. 383; McWhirt's Case, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 594, 46 Am. Dec. 196; Felix v. State, 18 Ala. 720; Ray v. State, 15 Ga. 223; 5 C. & P. 324; 6 How. St. Tr. 769; Norman v. State, 26 Tex. App. 221, 9 S. W. 606; Moore v. State, 26 Tex. App. 322, 9 S. W. 610; Collins v. U. S., 150 U. S. 62, 14 Sup. Ct. 9, 37 L. Ed. 998; Davis v. People, 114 Ill. 86, 29 N. E. 192; it is on the assumption that passion disturbs the sway of reason and makes one regardless of its admonition; Smith v. State, 83 Ala. 26, 3 South. 551. Words alone, however provoking or insulting, will not reduce killing to manslaughter; State v. Elliott, 98 Mo. 150, 11 S. W. 566; Kennedy v. State, 85 Ala. 326, 5 South. 300; Clore v. State, 26 Tex. App. 624, 10 S. W. 242; People v. Murback, 64 Cal. 369, 30 Pac. 608; State v. Sansone, 116 Mo. 1, 22 S. W. 617. Intent to kill cannot be an element of involuntary manslaughter; Jackson v. State, 76 Ga. 473. It does not necessarily follow that homicide was not murder because done in sudden passion; State v. Ashley, 45 La. Ann. 1036, 13 South. 738.

In case of mutual combat, it is generally manslaughter only, when one of the parties is killed; State v. Curry, 46 N. C. 280; 2 C. & K. 814. When death ensues from duelling, the rule is different; and such killing is murder.

The killing or assaulting of a relative is held a sufficient provocation to reduce the killing of the wrongdoer to manslaughter; Collins v. U. S., 150 U. S. 62, 14 Sup. Ct. 9, 37 L. Ed. 998; State v. Horn, 116 N. C. 1037, 21 S. E. 694.

The killing of an officer by resistance to him while acting under lawful authority is murder; Whart. Cr. L. § 413; but see State v. Scheele, 57 Conn. 307, 18 Atl. 256, 14 Am. St. Rep. 106; but if the officer be acting under a void or illegal authority, or out of his jurisdiction, the killing will be manslaughter, or excusable homicide, according to the circumstances of the case; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 80, 132; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 458; Creighton v. Com., 84 Ky. 103, 4 Am. St. Rep. 193; Jones v. State, 26 Tex. App. 1, 9 S. W. 53, 8 Am. St. Rep. 454.

Killing a person while doing an act of mere wantonness is manslaughter: as, if a person throws down stones in a coal-pit, by which a man is killed, although the offender was only a trespasser; Lew. Cr. Cas. 179; MALA PROHIBITA; or where a person in another's charge, too feeble to take care of herself, dies from lack of proper food, nursing, and medical attention, the latter is guilty of manslaughter; [1893] 1 Q. B. 450.

When death ensues from the performance of a lawful act, it may, in consequence of the negligence of the offender, amount to manslaughter. For instance, if the death had been occasioned by negligent driving; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 263; 1 C. & P. 320; 6 id. 129; or by negligently running an engine and thereby causing a collision by which a passenger is killed; State v. Dorsey, 118 Ind. 167, 20 N. E. 777, 10 Am. St. Rep. 111. Again, when death ensues from the gross negligence of a medical or a surgical practitioner, it is manslaughter.

It is no crime for any one to administer medicine; but it is a crime to administer it so rashly and carelessly, or with such criminal inattention, as to produce death; Whart. Cr. L. § 346; and in this respect there is no difference between the regular practitioner and the quack; 4 C. & P. 440; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 46; State v. Gile, 8 Wash. 12, 35 Pac. 417.

Voluntary manslaughter is an offence involving moral turpitude within the meaning of a code specifying as a ground for divorce the conviction of either party of an offence involving moral turpitude; Holloway v. Holloway, 126 Ga. 459, 55 S. E. 191, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272, 115 Am. St. Rep. 102, 7 Ann. Cas. 1164. For a definition of "moral turpitude" see DEPORTATION.

MANSTEALING. A word sometimes used synonymously with kidnapping (q. v.). The latter is more technical. 4 Bla. Com. 219.

MANTHEOFF. A horse-stealer.

MANTIPULATE. To pick pockets. Bailey.

MANTLE CHILDREN. Where the parents of children born before marriage were subsequently married, the children were, at the wedding, placed under a cloak which was spread over the parents. They were so called in Germany, France and Normandy. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 397. The custom existed in Scotland almost to our own time. Bryce, Studies in Hist. etc., Essay xvi. See PALLIO COOPERIRE; LEGITIMATION.

MAN-TRAPS. Engines to catch trespassers, now unlawful, unless set in a dwelling-house for defence between sunset and sunrise. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31.

MANU BREVI. With a short hand.

MANU FORTI (Lat. with strong hand). A term used in pleading in cases of forcible entry. No other words are of equal import. It implies greater force than the words vi et armis; State v. Ray, 32 N. C. 39; 8 Term 362; Com. v. Shattuck, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 141; Dane, Abr. c. 132, a. 6, c. 203, a. 12.

MANU LONGA. With a long hand.

MANU OPERA. See MANNOPUS.

MANUAL. That which is employed or used by the hand, of which a present profit may be made. Things in the manual occupation of the owner cannot be distrained for rent. See TOOLS.

MANUAL GIFT. A giving of movable effects accompanied by real delivery which does not require any formality. La. Civ. Code, art. 1539.

MANUALIS OBEDIENTIA. Sworn obedience or submission upon oath. Cowell.

MANUCAPTIO (Lat.). In Old English Practice. A writ which lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, and the like, who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise. Fitzh. N. B. 249.

MANUCAPTORS. Mainpernors.

MANUFACTORY. A building, the main or principal design or use of which is to be a place for producing articles as products of labor. It is something more than a place where things are made. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Brock, 57 Pa. 82. A steam flouring mill is a manufactory; Carlin v. Assur. Co., 57 Md. 515, 40 Am. Rep. 440. See FACTORY.

MANUFACTURE. To make or fabricate raw materials by hand, art, or machinery, and work into forms convenient for use; and, when used as a noun, anything made from raw materials by hand, or by machinery, or by art. People v. Wemple, 61 Hun 53, 15 N. Y. Supp. 711.

Making fish lines, ropes, etc., from raw material is a manufacture; City of New Orleans v. Arthurs, 36 La. Ann. 98; as is the making of cordage, rope, and twine; Waterbury v. Cordage Co., 42 La. Ann. 723, 7 South. 783. Cutting ice and storing it in a building is not; Hittinger v. Inhabitants of Westford, 135 Mass. 258.

The manufacturer of artificial ice is a manufacturing company under Pennsylvania tax acts.

As to its signification in patent law, see PATENT.

MANUFACTURED ARTICLES. Kindling wood produced by machinery from green slabs of wood, kiln dried and compressed into a bundle, is manufactured. People v. Roberts, 20 App. Div. 514, 47 N. Y. Supp. 122. India rubber made into shapes suitable for use as shoes is manufactured within the meaning of the tariff act; Lawrence v. Allen, 7 How. (U. S.) 795, 12 L. Ed. 914; also animal charcoal and bone black; Schriefer v. Wood, 5 Blatch. 215, Fed. Cas. No. 12,481; coral cut into the form of a cameo but not set; Bailey v. Schell, 5 Blatch. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 745; reeds; Foppes v. Magone, 40 Fed. 570; shingles; Stockwell v. U. S., 3 Cliff. 284, Fed. Cas. No. 13,466; gun blocks planed on the sides; U. S. v. Windmuller, 42 Fed. 292; split timbers; U. S. v. Quimby, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 408, 18 L. Ed. 397; pieces of wood cut or sawed into size or shape to be put together into boxes; Wasburn v. City of New Orleans, 43 La. Ann. 226, 9 South. 37; and door sashes, and blinds; Carre v. City of New Orleans, 41 La. Ann. 996, 6 South. 893.

Wool is not a manufactured article under the revised statutes; Frazee v. Moffitt, 20 Blatch. 267, 18 Fed. 584; nor are wool tops prepared for spinning and broken up into small fragments; U. S. v. Patton, 46 Fed. 161; nor copper plates turned up and raised at the edges by labor, to fit them for subsequent use in the manufacture of copper vessels; U. S. v. Potts, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 284, 3 L. Ed. 102; nor marble cut into blocks for transportation; Hunt, Merch. Mag. 167; nor firewood; Correio v. Lynch, 65 Cal. 273, 3 Pac. 889.

MANUFACTURER. One engaged in the business of working raw materials into wares suitable for use. People v. Dock Co., 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 453.

A cooper; City of New Orleans v. Le Blanc, 34 La. Ann. 596; a pork packer; Engle v. Sohn, 41 Ohio St. 691, 52 Am. Rep. 103; a gas company; Com. v. Gas-Light Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 75; Nassau Gas-Light Co. v. City of Brooklyn, 89 N. Y. 409; one who prepares for market and sells lumber which is the growth of his own land; In re Chandler, 1 Low. 478, Fed. Cas. No. 2,591; a publisher of a newspaper; 6 Bankr. Reg. 238 (contra, In re Capital Pub. Co., 3 McArth. [D. C.] 405); are manufacturers. An ice cream confectioner is not; City of New Orleans v. Mannessier, 32 La. Ann. 1075; nor is one engaged in cutting and making coats and trousers out of cloth which is already manufactured by another; Cohn v. Parker, 41 La. Ann. 894, 6 South. 718; or a dry-dock company; People v. Dock Co., 92 N. Y. 487; or an aqueduct corporation; Dudley v. Aqueduct Corp., 100 Mass. 183; or a mining company; Byers v. Coal Co., 106 Mass. 131.

MANUFACTURING CORPORATION. A corporation engaged in the production of some article, thing or object, by skill or labor, out of raw material, or from matter which has already been subjected to artificial forces, or to which something has been added to change its natural condition. People v. Ice Co., 99 N. Y. 181, 1 N. E. 669. The term does not include a mining corporation; Byers v. Coal Co., 106 Mass. 135; nor one engaged in mixing teas and in roasting, mixing, and grinding coffee. People v. Roberts, 145 N. Y. 375, 40 N. E. 7. See MANUFACTURE.

MANUMISSION. The act of releasing from the power of another. The act of giving liberty to a slave.

The modern acceptation of the word is the act of giving liberty to slaves. But in the Roman law it was a generic expression, equally applicable to the enfranchisement from the manus, the mancipium, the dominica potestas, and the patria potestas. Manumittere signifies to escape from a power,—manus. Originally, the master could only validly manumit his slave when he had the dominium jure Quiritium over him: if he held him merely in bonis, the manumission was null, according to the civil law; but by the jus honorarium the slave was permitted to enjoy his liberty de facto, but whatever he acquired belonged to his master. The status of these quasi-slaves was fixed by the Lex Junia Norbana under which they became Latini Juniani, both which titles see. At first there were only three modes of manumission, viz.: 1. vindicta; 2. census; and, 3. testamentum. The vindicta consisted in a fictitious suit, in which the assertor libertatis, as plaintiff, alleged that the slave was free; the master not denying the claim, the prætor rendered a decision declaring the slave free. In this proceeding figured a rod,—festuca vindicta,—a sort of lance (the symbol of property), with which the assertor libertatis touched the slave when he claimed him as free: hence the expression vindicta manumissio. Census, the second mode, was when the slave was inscribed at the instance of his master, by the censor, in the census as a Roman citizen. Testamento was when the testator declared in express terms that the slave should be free,—servus meus Cratinus liber esto,—or by a fideicommissum, —heres meus rogo te ut Sanum vicini mei servum manumittas, fideicommitto heredis mei ut iste eum servum manumittat.

Afterwards, manumission might take place in various other ways: In sacrosanctis ecclesiis. Justinian required the letter containing the manumission to be signed by five witnesses. Inter amicos, a declaration made by the master before his friends that he gave liberty to his slave: five witnesses were required, and an act was drawn up in which it was stated that they had heard the declaration. Per codicillum, by a codicil, which required to be signed by five witnesses. There were many other modes of manumission, which were enumerated in a Constitution of Justinian. C. 76, 3-12; 1 Ortolan 35; 1 Etienne 78; Lagrange 101. See Hunter, Rom. L. 171; Sohm, Rom. L. by Ledlie 173.

The manumitted slave of a Roman followed the condition of his mother. 17 L. Q. R. 275.

Direct manumission may be either by deed or will, or any other act of notoriety done with the intention to manumit. A variety of these modes are described as used by ancient nations.

Indirect manumission was either by operation of law, as the removal of a slave to a non-slaveholding state animo morandi, or by implication of law, as where the master by his acts recognized the freedom of his slave.

Manumission being merely the withdrawal of the dominion of the master, in accordance with the principles of the common law the right to manumit existed everywhere, unless forbidden by law. No formal mode or prescribed words were necessary to effect manumission; it could be by parol; and any words were sufficient which evinced a renunciation of dominion on the part of the master; Lewis v. Simonton, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 189; Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275. No one but the owner could manumit; Ferguson v. Sarah, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 103; Wallingsford v. Allen, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 583, 9 L. Ed. 542; and the effect was simply to make a freeman, not a citizen. But mere declarations of intention were insufficient unless subsequently carried into effect; Coxe 259; In re Mickel, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 324; Petry v. Christy, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 53. Manumission could be made to take effect in future; Coxe 4; Geer v. Huntington, 2 Root (Conn.) 364. In the meantime the slaves were called statu liberi.

As to the emancipation of slaves in the United States by proclamation of the president, see BONDAGE. See Cobb, Law of Slavery.

MANURE. Manure made upon a farm in the ordinary manner, from the consumption of its products, is a part of the realty; 1 Washb. R. P. 18; Chase v. Wingate, 68 Me. 204, 28 Am. Rep. 36; Middlebrook v. Corwin, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 169; Fay v. Muzzey, 13 Gray (Mass.) 53, 74 Am. Dec. 619; Parsons v. Camp, 11 Conn. 525; Perry v. Carr, 44 N. H. 120; see Heller v. Magone, 38 Fed. 911. As such a tenant has no right to remove it; Brigham v. Overstreet, 128 Ga. 447, 57 S. E. 484, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552, 11 Ann. Cas. 75; Bonnell v. Allen, 53 Ind. 130. It has been also held under some circumstances to be personalty; Ruckman v. Outwater, 28 N. J. L. 581; Smithwick v. Ellison, 24 N. C. 326, 38 Am. Dec. 697; especially if it be made from hay purchased and brought upon the land by the tenant; Corey v. Bishop, 48 N. H. 147; and where a teamster owning a house and stable sold them with a small lot on which they stood, it was held that manure in the stable was personalty; Proctor v. Gilson, 49 N. H. 62. Manure in heaps has been held to be personalty; Parsons v. Camp, 11 Conn. 525; and where the owner of land gathered manure into heaps and sold it, and then the land, the manure did not pass with the land; French v. Freeman, 43 Vt. 93; Strong v. Doyle, 110 Mass. 94. In 1 Cr. & M. 809, a custom for a tenant to receive compensation for manure left by him on the farm was recognized. Manure dropped in the street belongs originally to the owners of the animals that dropped it, but, if abandoned by them, the first taker has a right to it; Haslem v. Lockwood, 37 Conn. 500, 9 Am. Rep. 350. See EMBLEMENTS.

MANUS (Lat. hand), anciently, signified the person taking an oath as a compurgator. The use of this word probably came from the party laying his hand on the New Testament.

Manus signifies, among the civilians, power, and is frequently used as synonymous with potestas. Lec. El. Dr. Rom. § 94. Manus mariti, marital power. Manus injectio, an executory judgment.

MANUS MARRIAGE. A form of marriage in early Rome; it formed a relation called manus (hand) and brought the wife into the husband's power, placing her as to legal rights in the position of a daughter. Bryce, Marr. & Divorce, in 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 787.

MANUSCRIPT. An unpublished writing. A writing of any kind as distinguished from any thing that is printed. Cent. Dict. The term does not include pictures and paintings; Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 537, Fed. Cas. No. 10,784. See LITERARY PROPERTY.

MANUTENENTIA. A writ which lay against persons for the offense of maintenance. Reg. Orig. 182.

MANY. Denotes multitude, but not majority. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 87 Ala. 708, 6 South. 277, 4 L. R. A. 710, 13 Am. St. Rep. 84.

MAP. A transcript of the region which it portrays, narrowed in compass so as to facilitate an understanding of the original. Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 103 (Gil. 46).

When a deed conveys a lot as indicated on a recorded plat, the latter may be consulted in aid of the description in the deed; City of St. Louis v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 114 Mo. 13, 21 S. W. 202. A map in a deed should be treated as a part of the description, when evidently intended to be so treated, though it is not expressly referred to therein; Murray v. Klinzing, 64 Conn. 78, 29 Atl. 244.

Where the owner of land lays it out in lots and streets, and in the map thereof filed with the public records designates certain portions as a park and afterwards conveys lots with reference to such map, it operates as a dedication of the land for a park; Steel v. City of Portland, 23 Or. 176, 31 Pac. 479. The mere recording by public authority of a map of a proposed system of highways does not of itself entitle the owner of the land to damages; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 966, 42 L. Ed. 270; so with reference to the streets on such a map; Western Ry. of Alabama v. R. Co., 96 Ala. 272, 11 South. 483, 17 L. R. A. 474; Wolfe v. Town of Sullivan, 133 Ind. 331, 32 N. E. 1017; Winter v. Payne, 33 Fla. 470, 15 South. 211; but see People v. Kellogg, 67 Hun 546, 22 N. Y. Supp. 490. Maps and surveys are not competent evidence unless their accuracy is shown by other evidence; Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black (U. S.) 209, 17 L. Ed. 117; as by the testimony of the surveyors who prepared them; Curtiss v. Ayrault, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 611; but a map of public land, made by a public surveyor and duly certified and filed in a public office under a statute, is admissible for that purpose; People v. Denison, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 312; and so are ancient maps to show matters of public and general right; Missouri v. Kentucky, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 395, 20 L. Ed. 116; but an ancient map of partition among private owners is not evidence; Jackson v. Witter, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 180.

In an action for the recovery of real estate, a map not dated or signed but shown to have been made in 1818 by a skilful surveyor long since dead, as to which other surveyors testified that they had tested it in their own work and that it was the earliest known survey of the district in question, and which was shown to have related to an actual transaction, was held admissible as an ancient map. Other maps made in 1820 and 1823 by the same surveyor and showing in detail certain of the lots in the vicinity of those in dispute were admissible as showing accuracy of the ancient map. The testimony of other surveyors as to the use of the map in their own work was admissible for the purpose of showing general accuracy of the map and deeds executed shortly after the map was made conveying the tracts described therein were admissible as ancient deeds to show that the map was made in an actual transaction; Whitman v. Shaw, 166 Mass. 451, 44 N. E. 333.

A map or plan of land referred to in making conveyances thereof is evidence to show boundaries or location, or to explain the contract; Clark v. Trust Co., 64 N. Y. 33; and so in dedicating land to the public; Town of Derby v. Alling, 40 Conn. 410.

Filing a map and profile of a proposed railroad line is a sufficient inchoate appropriation to prevent its appropriation by another company; Southern Ind. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 168 Ind. 360, 81 N. E. 65, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197.

MARAUDER. One who, while employed in the army as a soldier, commits a larceny or robbery in the neighborhood of the camp, or while wandering away from the army. Merlin, Répert. See Halleck, Int. Laws; Lieber, Guerrilla Parties.

MARC-BANCO. The name of a coin. The marc-banco of Hamburg, as money of account, at the custom-house, is deemed and taken to be of the value of thirty-five cents. Act of March 3, 1843.

MARCHERS. In Old English Law. Nobles who lived on the Marches, and had their own laws, and power over life and death, as if they were petty princes. Camden; Jacob, Law Dict. Abolished by stat. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, 1 Edw. VI. c. 10, and 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 15. They were also called Lords Marchers (q. v.).

MARCHES. Limits; confines; borders. Especially used of the limits between England and Wales and between England and Scotland. Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 4.

MARCHETA. Maiden rents (q. v.).

MARE. See HORSE.

MARE CLAUSUM. The sea closed. During the 15th and 16th centuries international law recognized the claim of certain states to exercise sovereignty over certain portions of the open sea beyond the maritime belt surrounding their coasts. Thus Great Britain exercised sovereignty over the North Sea, and Venice over the Adriatic; while an extravagant assertion of such sovereignty is to be found in the division of the new world between Spain and Portugal in accordance with the Bulls of Alexander VI promulgated in 1493. These claims were repudiated by Grotius in 1609 in the treatise entitled "Mare Liberum" (q. v.), but were defined by other writers, notably Selden, in his "Mare Clausum" in 1618. By the first decade of the 19th century the principle of the freedom of the open sea was universally recognized.

Lakes and locked seas, when enclosed by the land of a single state, are part of the territory of that state. When enclosed by the land of several states, they are generally regarded as belonging to the states in question. An exception is to be found in the case of the Black Sea, which was formerly mare clausum when surrounded by Turkish territory, but which lost that character when Russia became a littoral state, and was finally internationalized by the Treaty of Paris of 1856, which declared it open to the merchantmen of all nations. 1 Opp. §§ 179–181.

MARE LIBERUM. The sea free. The title of a work by Grotius opposing the Portuguese claims to an exclusive trade to the Indies through the South Atlantic and Indian oceans. 1 Kent 27. See MARE CLAUSUM.

MARESCALLUS (fr. Germ. march, horse, and schalch, master. Du Cange). A groom of the stables, who also took care of the diseases of the horse. Du Cange.

An officer of the imperial stable; magister equorum. Du Cange.

A military officer, whose duty it was to keep watch on the enemy, to choose a place of encampment, to arrange or marshal the army in order of battle, and, as master of the horse, to commence the battle. This office was second to that of comes stabuli or onstable. Du Cange.

An officer of the court of exchequer. 51 Hen. III. 5.

An officer of a manor, who oversaw the hospitalities (mansionarius). Du Cange; Fleta, lib. 2, 74.

Marescallus aulæ. An officer of the royal household, who had charge of the person of the monarch and the peace of the palace. Du Cange.

MARETUM (Lat.). Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers. Co. Litt. 5.

MARGARINE. See OLEOMARGARINE.

MARGIN. A sum of money, or its equivalent, placed in the hands of a stock broker, by the principal, or person on whose account a purchase of stock or commodities is to be made, as a security to the former against losses to which he may be exposed by a subsequent depression in the market value of the stock. See Markham v. Jaudon, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 462.

A sale on margin is a sale on time of stock retained as security and not delivered until final payment is made. If the stock falls in value before the time of final payment, the buyer is called upon to advance more margin. The effect of the contract is that the broker, upon the performance of certain conditions by the customer, will buy and hold a certain number of shares, and in case any advance accrues and is realized by a sale, made under the authority of the customer, he shall enjoy the benefit of it, and in case a loss ensues, the broker having performed the contract on his part, the customer shall bear it; Markham v. Jaudon, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 464; Baker v. Drake, 66 N. Y. 518, 23 Am. Rep. 80.

Stock purchased on a margin instantly becomes the property of the customer, with all future dividends and earnings, and the client is entitled to the possession of it upon paying the purchase money with commissions; Markham v. Jaudon, 41 N. Y. 235, 247, 257, 258; Baker v. Drake, 53 N. Y. 211, 216, 13 Am. Rep. 507. It was settled in New York by the leading case of Markham v. Jaudon that a purchase of stock on margin by brokers to be carried for the customer in their own name and with their own funds, creates the legal relation of pledgor and pledgee, and that a sale, not judicial, or upon notice and demand for payment of advances and commissions is a wrongful conversion. This doctrine was finally distinctly reaffirmed in New York; Gruman v. Smith, 81 N. Y. 25; and in other states; Baltimore Marine Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 25 Md. 269; Esser v. Linderman, 71 Pa. 76; and apparently in England; 5 Bligh N. S. 165, affirming 3 Sim. 153. See Dos Passos, Stock Brokers 112, where many other cases are cited. The pledgee is not liable for neglect to sell the stock where it depreciates in his hands or even becomes worthless, if he has not been requested to sell or refused to transfer the stock for that purpose; O'Neill v. Whigham, 87 Pa. 394; Howard v. Brigham, 98 Mass. 133; nor is he liable if the pledge be stolen without negligence on his part; Abbett v. Frederick, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 68; and a stock broker is not liable where spurious securities are purchased for a customer in the regular course of business, if he sells such and in consequence refunds the purchase money, he can recover it from his customer; 15 M. & W. 308, 486; 8 C. B. 373. It thus appears that one purchasing stock on a margin is in all essential parts the owner of the stock, entitled to the advantages and subject to the responsibilities of that relation.

A speculative contract for the purchase and sale of stocks on margin is not invalid as a gambling transaction; Richter v. Poe, 109 Md. 20, 71 Atl. 420, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174; Rice v. Winslow, 180 Mass. 500, 62 N. E. 1057; Post v. Leland, 184 Mass. 601, 69 N. E. 361; Peters v. Grim, 149 Pa. 163, 24 Atl. 192, 34 Am. St. Rep. 599; Hallet v. Aggergaard, 21 S. D. 554, 114 N. W. 696, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1251; even though the buyer had not the means of paying for such stocks.

if he availed himself of the broker's credit and facilities for borrowing on the stocks themselves; Winward v. Lincoln, 23 R. I. 476, 51 Atl. 106, 64 L. R. A. 160. An intention by the parties to engage in a gambling transaction may be inferred where the party making the purchase never calls upon the party ordering the purchase for the purchase money, but only for margins; Jamieson v. Wallace, 167 Ill. 388, 47 N. E. 763, 59 Am. St. Rep. 302.

The provision of the California constitution invalidating contracts for the sale of futures is held to apply to a sale of stock on margin; Cashman v. Root, 89 Cal. 373, 26 Pac. 883, 12 L. R. A. 511, 23 Am. St. Rep. 482. See FUTURES; STOCK; WAGER.

MARGINAL NOTE. An abstract of a reported case; a summary of the facts, or brief statement of the principle decided which is prefixed to the report of the case.

The marginal notes which appear in the statute books have not the authority of the legislature, and cannot alter the interpretation of the text; L. R. 3 C. P. 522; 22 Ch. D. 573.

MARINARIUS (L. Lat.). An ancient word which signified a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitaneus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

MARINE. Belonging to the sea; relating to the sea; naval.

A soldier employed, or liable to be employed, on vessels of war, under the command of an officer of marines, who acts under the direction of the commander of the ship. See MARINE CORPS.

It is also used as a general term to denote the whole naval power of a state or country.

MARINE CONTRACT. One which relates to business done or transacted upon the sea and in seaports, and over which the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law. See Parsons, Marit. Law; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398; Fed. Cas. No. 3,776; MARITIME CONTRACT.

MARINE CORPS. A body of officers and soldiers under an organization separate and distinct from that of the army, and intended for service, in detached portions, on board of ships of war.

A military body primarily, belonging to the navy under the control of the secretary of the navy, but liable to be ordered to service in connection with the army. U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U. S. 249, 7 Sup. Ct. 507, 30 L. Ed. 667.

This body is not a part of the navy; McCalla v. Facer, 144 Fed. 61, 75 C. C. A. 219. It is, however, subject to the laws and regulations of the navy, except when on army service, and then to the rules and articles of the army.

Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant are filled from graduates of the Naval Academy and meritorious non-commissioned officers of the Corps (in both cases between 21 and 27 years of age), and from civil life.

MARINE COURT OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK. A local court originally established for the determination of controversies between seamen, but now a court of record, possessing general jurisdiction of controversies involving not more than $2,000, and special jurisdiction of civil actions for injuries to person or character, without regard to the amount of damages claimed. Rap. & L. Law Dict.

The name of this court was changed to city court by Laws 1883, ch. 26.

MARINE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

MARINE INTEREST. A compensation paid for the use of money loaned on bottomry or respondentia. Provided the money be loaned and put at risk, there is no fixed limit to the rate which may be lawfully charged by the lender; but courts of admiralty, in enforcing the contract, will mitigate the rate when it is extortionate and unconscionable. See BOTTOMRY; MARITIME LOAN; RESPONDENTIA.

MARINE LEAGUE. A measure equal to the twentieth part of a degree of latitude. Boucher, Inst. n. 1845. It is generally conceded that a nation has exclusive territorial jurisdiction upon the high seas for a marine league from its own shores. It is claimed that the breadth of this maritime belt, which in the 18th century was fixed at a marine league as being the range of existing artillery, should now be extended owing to the greater range of artillery of the present day. 1 Kent 29. See The Franconia, 2 Ex. Div. 63; TERRITORIAL WATERS; SEA; MARITIME BELT.

MARINE RISK. See INSURANCE; RISKS AND PERILS.

MARINER. One whose occupation it is to navigate vessels upon the sea. Surgeons, engineers, clerks, stewards, cooks, porters, and chambermaids, on passenger-steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship or crew, are also deemed mariners, and permitted as such to sue in the admiralty courts for their wages. 1 Conkl. Adm. 107. See Spinetti v. S. S. Co., 80 N. Y. 71, 36 Am. Rep. 579; 1 Hagg. Adm. 187.

The term includes masters, mates, sailors, surveyors, carpenters, coopers, stewards, cooks, cabin boys, kitchen boys, engineers, pilots, firemen, deck hands, and waiters—women as well as men. Bened. Adm. § 278. Those employed upon a vessel in any capacity, however humble, and whose labor contributes in any degree, however slight, to the accomplishment of the main object in which the vessel is engaged, are clothed by the law with the legal rights of mariners, "no matter what be their sex, character, station, or profession;" Saylor v. Taylor, 77 Fed. 476, 23 C. C. A. 343. See Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7

How. (U. S.) 89, 12 L. Ed. 618; Spinetti v. S. S. Co., 80 N. Y. 80, 36 Am. Rep. 579. Mariners who receive for their wages a share in the profits of the voyage are not thereby made partners either as to rights or liabilities; Chapline v. Conant, 3 W. Va. 507, 100 Am. Dec. 766. See SEAMEN; LIEN; SHIPPING ARTICLES.

MARITAGIO AMISSO PER DEFALTAM. An obsolete writ for the tenant in frank marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

MARITAGIUM (Lat.). A marriage portion given by a man, usually to his daughter, or near relative. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 95. See FEUDAL LAW.

MARITAGIUM HABERE. To have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

MARITAL. That which belongs to marriage; as marital rights, marital duties. See HUSBAND; MARRIED WOMAN.

MARITAL PORTION. The name given to that part of a deceased husband's estate to which the widow is entitled. Abercrombie v. Caffray, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 1.

MARITAL RIGHTS. See HUSBAND; MARRIED WOMAN.

MARITIMA ANGLIÆ. Profits and emoluments received by the king from the sea. They were anciently collected by sheriffs but were afterwards granted to the Lord High Admiral; Par. 8 Hen. III. m. 4.

MARITIMA INCREMENTA. Lands gained from the sea. See ALLUVION.

MARITIME. Pertaining to navigation or commercial intercourse upon the seas, great lakes, and rivers.

"The word maritime is also to have its appropriate meaning relating to the sea. The words admiralty and maritime, as they are used in the constitution and acts of congress, are by no means synonymous, although able lawyers, on the bench, as well as at the bar, seem sometimes to have so considered them. They were evidently both inserted to preclude a narrower construction which might be given to either word, had it been used alone. The English admiralty had jurisdiction of all cases arising beyond sea, although not maritime in their character. These are excluded by the use of both terms." Bened. Adm. § 40.

MARITIME BELT. That part of the sea which, in contradistinction to the open sea, is under the sway of the riparian states. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U. S. 1, 26 Sup. Ct. 408, 571, 50 L. Ed. 913.

MARITIME CAUSE. A cause arising from a maritime contract, whether made at sea or on land.

In all cases of contract the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts depends upon the nature or subject-matter of the contract; but in cases of maritime tort and salvage their jurisdiction depends upon the place in which the cause of action accrued; 1 Conkl. Adm. 19, 32. In general, the courts of common law have a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of admiralty in those cases which are prosecuted on the instance side of the court. But the admiralty also has jurisdiction of prize cases, and that jurisdiction is exclusive, except where affected by special statutes; Union Ins. Co. v. U. S., 6 Wall. (U. S.) 759, 18 L. Ed. 879. See PRIZE COURTS. The jurisdiction of the district courts in civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction is exclusive of all others; nor can a state legislature confer jurisdiction upon a state court; The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 411, 18 L. Ed. 397; The Belfast, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 624, 19 L. Ed. 266.

The admiralty jurisdiction has been held not to extend to preliminary contracts, merely leading to the execution of maritime contracts; Andrews v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 6, Fed. Cas. No. 374; The Tribune, 3 Sumn. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 14,171; nor to trusts, although they may relate to maritime affairs; Davis v. Child, Daveis 71, Fed. Cas. No. 3,628; nor to enforcing a specific performance of a contract relating to maritime affairs; nor to a contract not maritime in its character, although the consideration for it may be maritime services; Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mas. 380, Fed. Cas. No. 11,233; nor to questions of possession and property between owner and mortgagee; Bogart v. The John Jay, 17 How. (U. S.) 399, 15 L. Ed. 95; nor to contracts of affreightment from one port of the great lakes to another port in the same state; Allen v. Newberry, 21 How. (U. S.) 244, 16 L. Ed. 110. In the following cases (cited in Bened. Adm. § 214 a) actions have been sustained in admiralty: On an insurance policy; The Blackwall, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 19 L. Ed. 870; against an owner of cargo in general average; The San Fernando v. Jackson, 12 Fed. 341; for weighing, inspecting, and measuring cargo; Constantine v. The River Queen, 2 Fed. 731; for coopering cargo; The E. A. Baisley, 13 Fed. 703; for compressing cargo; The Wivanhoe, 26 Fed. 927; for the services of a watchman; The Erinagh, 7 Fed. 235; a diver; The Murphy Tugs, 28 Fed. 429; an average adjuster; Coast Wrecking Co. v. Ins. Co., 7 Fed. 236; for the use of a dry dock; The Vidal Sala, 12 Fed. 207; for removing ballast; Roberts v. The Windermere, 2 Fed. 722; for lockage in a river; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. The Bob Connell, 1 Fed. 218; for wharfage; Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 75, 24 L. Ed. 373; for insurance premiums; The Daisy Day, 40 Fed. 603; for launching a vessel which had been driven ashore; The Ella, 5 Hughes 125, 48 Fed. 569; for repairing a scow; Endner v. Greco, 3 Fed. 411; on a contract to supply nets to a fishing vessel; The Hiram R. Dixon, 33 Fed.

297; for the charter of a vessel yet to be built; The Baracoa, 44 Fed. 102; for services as watchman; The Maggie P., 32 Fed. 300; actions to try the title to a ship; Bened. Adm. § 276; but not to enforce a merely equitable title; The Eclipse, 135 U. S. 599, 10 Sup. Ct. 873, 34 L. Ed. 269.

The following cases are not being within the maritime jurisdiction: For storage of sails; Hubbard v. Roach, 2 Fed. 393 (contra, Ex parte Lewis, 2 Gall. 483, Fed. Cas. No. 8,310); for services of a ship broker; The Thames, 10 Fed. 848; for wharfage while laid up in the winter; The Murphy Tugs, 28 Fed. 429; for receiving and storing cargo on board a vessel during the winter; The Pulaski, 33 Fed. 383; for obtaining a concession to dig guano; Wenberg v. A Cargo of Mineral Phosphate, 15 Fed. 285; for lease of a "bar" on board a vessel; The Illinois, 2 Flipp. 427, Fed. Cas. No. 7,005; on a contract to navigate a raft; Raft of Cypress Logs, 1 Flipp. 543, Fed. Cas. No. 11,527; a contract to store wheat for the winter; The Pulaski, 33 Fed. 383; a contract by a master to carry cargo, sell it, and account for the proceeds; Krohn v. The Julia, 37 Fed. 369; for services in purchasing a vessel; Doolittle v. Knobeloch, 39 Fed. 40.

As to passengers, it has been a question whether contracts for their transportation were within the jurisdiction; Brackett v. The Hercules, Gilp. 184, Fed. Cas. No. 1,762; but the contrary view is now established; The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 411, 18 L. Ed. 397.

Stevedores were formerly not considered as rendering marine services, but the contrary view appears now to obtain; Bened. Adm. § 285; The Gilbert Knapp, 37 Fed. 209; Danace v. The Magnolia, 37 Fed. 367; The Main, 51 Fed. 954, 2 C. C. A. 569.

As to jurisdiction over foreign ships, all persons in time of peace have the right to resort to the tribunals of the nation where they may happen to be, for the protection of their rights, unless the jurisdiction is excluded by treaty, though sometimes, as in the case of foreign seamen, they will refuse, from considerations of expediency, to exercise their jurisdiction; Bened. Adm. § 282; thus, admiralty jurisdiction does not apply to claims of bad treatment suffered by an American serving as a seaman on a Norwegian vessel; The Welhaven, 55 Fed. 80.

As to the jurisdiction of the Lord High Admiral of England, see "A Water Court," 22 L. Mag. & Rev. 142, by Sir S. Baker; "The Water Court of Saltash"; 20 L. Mag. & Rev. 195.

MARITIME CODES. See CODE. Much learning in relation thereto and certain lesser maritime codes not referred to under that title will be found in Bened. Adm. ch. xi.

MARITIME CONTRACT. One which relates to the business of navigation upon the sea, or to business appertaining to commerce or navigation to be transacted or done upon the sea, or in sea-ports, and over which courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law.

Such contracts, according to civilians and jurists, include, among others, charter-parties, bills of lading, and other contracts of affreightment, marine hypothecations, contracts for maritime service in building, repairing, supplying, and navigating ships or vessels, contracts and quasi contracts respecting averages, contributions, and jettisons. See De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776, where Judge Story gave a very elaborate opinion on the subject; Hale v. Ins. Co., 2 Sto. 176, Fed. Cas. No. 5,916; Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, 2 Curt. C. C. 322, Fed. Cas. No. 5,487; Cutler v. Rae, 7 How. (U. S.) 729, 12 L. Ed. 890.

The contract for building a vessel is not a maritime contract; Roach v. Chapman, 22 How. (U. S.) 129, 16 L. Ed. 294; contra, 21 Law Rep. 281.

The fact that contracts of affreightment are personal contracts between the shipper and ship owner does not prevent them from being maritime contracts on which a libel in rem against the ship may be maintained; The Queen of the Pacific, 61 Fed. 213, 860. See MARITIME CAUSE; ADMIRALTY.

MARITIME COURT. See ADMIRALTY.

MARITIME INTEREST. See MARINE INTEREST.

MARITIME LAW. That system of law which particularly relates to the affairs and business of the sea, to ships, their crews and navigation, and to the marine conveyance of persons and property.

Whilst the general maritime law is the basis of the maritime law of the United States, as well as of other countries, it is only so far operative in this, or any country, as it is adopted by the laws and usages thereof. It has no inherent force of its own; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558, 22 L. Ed. 654.

In particular matters, especially such as approach a merely municipal character, the received maritime law may differ in different countries without affecting the integrity of the system as a harmonious whole.

The general system of maritime law which was familiar to the lawyers and statesmen of this country when the constitution was adopted, was intended, and referred to, when it was declared in that instrument that the judicial power of the United States shall extend "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." Thus adopted, it became the maritime law of the United States, operating uniformly in the whole country.

The question as to the true limits of maritime law and admiralty jurisdiction is exclusively a judicial question, and no state law or act of congress can make it broader or narrower than the judicial power may determine those limits to be. But what the law is within those limits, assuming the general maritime law to be the basis of the system, depends on what has been received as law in the maritime usages of this country, and on such legislation as may have been competent to effect it.

The decisions of this court illustrative of these sources, and giving construction to the laws and constitution, are especially to be considered; and when these fail us, we must resort to the principles by which they have been governed.

The maritime law is a law common to all nations which are engaged in maritime commerce; it consists of certain principles of equity and usages of trade which general convenience and a common sense of justice have established in all the commercial countries of the world, to regulate the dealing and intercourse of merchants and mariners, in matters relating to the sea. Bened. Adm. § 214 a.

"This maritime law does not in the least depend upon the court in which it is to be administered, but furnishes the proper rule of decision in cases to which it applies, no matter in what court they may be brought; and it has, in fact, been administered in different countries, in different courts, each constituted in its own manner. In England, the court of admiralty and the court of chancery especially enforced it, while truth was required in pleading; but when, by the use of a fictitious venue, the facts might be laid as occurring in London, the king's bench took jurisdiction and prohibited the admiralty; and thus, in the king's bench more than in the court of admiralty, and especially under Lord Mansfield, the maritime law was built up and extended." Bened. Adm. § 42.

"The jurisdiction of the admiral, and the administration of the admiralty law proper—the local maritime law,—as it became a judicial function, has thus passed into the hands of the courts, and they now administer the admiralty law and the maritime law, both of which are sometimes called the admiralty law, sometimes the maritime law, and sometimes the admiralty and maritime law; and cases arising under them are cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." Bened. Adm. § 43. See De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776.

The law of limited liability was enacted by congress as a part of the maritime law of the United States, and, in its operation, extends wherever public navigation extends; Butler v. Steamship Co., 130 U. S. 527, 9 Sup. Ct. 612, 32 L. Ed. 1017; the act of congress of 1886, § 4, extending the limited liability act to vessels used on a river in inland navigation, is a constitutional and valid law; In re Garnett, 141 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 840, 35 L. Ed. 631. See ABANDONMENT; SHIP ADMIRALTY; MARITIME CAUSE, and the various titles in regard to which information is sought; VESSEL.

MARITIME LIEN. See LIEN.

MARITIME LOAN. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred. Emerigon, Mar. Loans, c. 1, s. 2. See BOTTOMRY; MARINE INTEREST; RESPONDENTIA.

MARITIME PROFIT. A term used by French writers to signify any profit derived from a maritime loan.

MARITIME SERVICE. A service rendered upon water in connection with some vessel, the preservation of her cargo or crew. Cope v. Dry Dock Co., 16 Fed. 924.

MARITIME TORT. A tort which by reason of the place where it is committed is within the jurisdiction of admiralty.

A tort committed upon water and which comes within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. The Arkansas, 17 Fed. 387.

Admiralty courts have always had jurisdiction of torts committed upon the high seas, and there is also no question as to injuries upon waters of the sea where the tide ebbs and flows, but in the United States, where that is not the test, the jurisdiction would extend to any waters which for other purposes are held to be within the general admiralty jurisdiction. Civil jurisdiction of torts has been said to depend solely upon the place where the cause of action arises; The Commerce, 1 Black. (U. S.) 574, 17 L. Ed. 107; but a doubt is suggested whether it does not also "depend upon the relation of the parties to a ship or vessel, embracing only those tortious violations of maritime right and duty which occur in vessels, to which the admiralty jurisdiction in cases of contract applies." Bened. Adm. § 308. This maritime jurisdiction of civil injuries has been held to extend to all cases of personal injuries committed by the master or his officers against passengers or seamen; id. § 309. The jurisdiction has been held not to survive the death of the person injured even if aided by a state statute enabling an administrator to sue for such injuries in ordinary cases; Crapo v. Allen, 1 Sprague 184, Fed. Cas. No. 3,360. It was held that no action would lie for the death of a person killed by a marine tort; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 7 Sup. Ct. 140, 30 L. Ed. 358, where the decisions are collected. See DEATH. In that case the question whether an action in rem would lie was left undetermined. A personal action in such case has been maintained against the owner at common law; McDonald v. Mallory, 77 N. Y. 546, 33 Am. Rep. 664; and also in admiralty; The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. 98.

Every violent dispossession of property at sea is prima facie a maritime tort; The L'Invincible, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 238, 4 L. Ed. 80. An injury to a vessel from negligence in operating a drawbridge is a maritime tort, and a suit in admiralty will lie against the town therefor; Greenwood v. Town of Westport, 60 Fed. 560; Hill v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 45 Fed. 260; Edgerton v. The Mayor, 27 Fed. 230; City of Boston v. Crowley, 38 Fed. 202.

In actions for torts arising from negligence, courts of admiralty do not confine themselves within the limits of mere municipal law, but deal with the question of damage upon enlarged principles of justice, to the extent of dividing the damages in cases of mutual fault; Greenwood v. Town of Westport, 60 Fed. 560, 578; The Max Morris, 137 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 29, 34 L. Ed. 586. See MARITIME CAUSE.

MARITUS. A husband; a married man.

MARK. A sign, traced on paper or parchment, which stands in the place of a signature; usually made by persons who cannot write.

The use of the mark in ancient times was not confined to illiterate persons; among the Saxons the mark of the cross, as an attestation of the good faith of the person signing, was required to be attached to the signature of those who could write, as well as to stand in the place of the signature of those who could not write. It was the symbol of an oath. It is most often the sign of the cross, made in a little space left between the Christian name and surname; 2 Bla. Com. 305; Zacharie v. Franklin, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 9 L. Ed. 1035; 2 Ves. Sen. 455; 1 V. & B. 362.

Before the reign of Stephen, the cross was used, even by the king, in formal documents, and was even considered more sacred than a seal. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 223.

The word his is usually written above the mark, and the word mark below it; Schoul. Wills 303, 305. But it is not essential that these words shall be attached to the mark made or adopted by a person unable to write, in the execution of a deed, as it is sufficient if it appears that he in fact made the mark or adopted it; Sellers v. Sellers, 98 N. C. 13, 3 S. E. 917. A mark is a signature; Zacharie v. Franklin, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 9 L. Ed. 1035; Willoughby v. Moulton, 47 N. H. 205; State v. Byrd, 93 N. C. 624; Foye v. Patch, 132 Mass. 105. And it may be proved as handwriting: by one who has seen the person make his mark; Strong's Ex'rs v. Brewer, 17 Ala. 706; Fogg v. Dennis, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 47; Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144, 4 Am. Dec. 330; contra, Shinkle v. Crock, 17 Pa. 159. A mark is now held to be a good signature though the party was able to write; 8 Ad. & E. 94; 3 Curt. 752; Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144, 4 Am. Dec. 330; In re Flannery's Will, 24 Pa. 502; St. Louis Hospital Ass'n v. William's Adm'r, 19 Mo. 609; Horton v. Johnson, 18 Ga. 396; Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 102. The signature of a subscribing witness to a deed may be made by a cross mark; Devereux v. McMahon, 102 N. C. 284, 9 S. E. 635.

It is not necessary that the person executing, if unable to write, touch the pen while the person authorized signs his name; Kennedy v. Graham, 9 Ind. App. 624, 35 N. E. 925, 37 N. E. 25. See SIGNATURE.

It is considered settled that the fact that a person can write does not invalidate a signature by mark, or where the signer holds the pen while it is guided by another; In re Pope's Will, 139 N. C. 484, 52 S. E. 235, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193, 111 Am. St. Rep. 813, 4 Ann. Cas. 635; Main v. Ryder, 84 Pa. 217; Stevens v. Vancleave, 4 Wash. C. C. 262, Fed. Cas. No. 13,412; 8 Ad. & El. 94; though a few cases seem to hold otherwise; 6 Notes of Cases 15; but this case is of course disposed of by the later decisions under subsequent statutes. Nor is such a signature invalidated by the absence of attestation, though the proof of execution might be thereby made more difficult; Bickley v. Keenan, 60 Ala. 295; Truman v. Lore's Lessee, 14 Ohio St. 144; Frost v. Deering, 21 Me. 156; Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 145.

As to signature by mark, generally, see 22 L. R. A. 370, note.

A cross mark opposite the seal, made by a grantor of a deed immediately under a clause containing his name and stating that he has signed his name and affixed his seal, constitutes a sufficient signature, and may be construed as an adoption of the name in such clause as a signature; Devereux v. McMahon, 108 N. C. 134, 12 S. E. 902, 12 L. R. A. 205.

Where the testating witnesses are all dead, proof of their signatures is sufficient to probate a will signed by mark; Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144, 4 Am. Dec. 330; Lyons v. Holmes, 11 S. C. 429, 32 Am. Rep. 483; but it is not sufficient when the witness, after 25 years, merely states that he certainly saw the testatrix sign the paper or he would not have put his name there, but that he is unable to recall the circumstances; Wienecke v. Arbin, 88 Md. 182, 40 Atl. 709, 44 L. R. A. 142.

Where a statute requires the name to be written near the mark in order to make a valid signature, the name of a testator written at the beginning of the will is sufficiently near his mark at the end if the intention that the mark should represent the testator's name clearly appears; In re Will of Guilfoyle, 96 Cal. 598, 31 Pac. 553, 22 L. R. A. 370, note, where the cases are collected of signatures by mark to different classes of instruments.

See also notes on signature by mark of both party and witness; 35 L. R. A. 350; 44 L. R. A. 142.

It seems to be held that any mark the making or distinctive character of which is susceptible of proof, is a sufficient signature; Devereux v. McMahon, 108 N. C. 134, 12 S. E. 902, 12 L. R. A. 205, where a witness signed D. S. C. his name being Solomon Davis, "D. S. for Davis, C. for Solomon, that's the way I sign it."

The sign, writing, or ticket put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others; 3 B. & C. 541; also to indicate the price; and if one use the mark of another to do him damage, an action on the case will lie, or an injunction may be had from chancery; 2 Cro. 47. This mark may consist of the name of the manufacturer, printed, branded, or stamped in a mode peculiar to itself, or a seal, a letter, a cipher, a monogram, or any sign or symbol, to so distinguish it as his product; Adams v. Heisel, 31 Fed. 280. See TRADE-MARKS; UNION LABEL LAWS.

By the act of July 8, 1870, patentees are required to mark patented articles with the word patented and the day and year when the patent was granted, and in any suit for infringement by the party failing so to mark, no damages can be recovered by the plaintiff, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement, and continued, after such notice, to make, use, or vend the article patented.

Marks and brands are admissible in evidence to prove the ownership of animals, whether recorded or not, unless prohibited by statute; Thompson v. State, 26 Tex. App. 466, 9 S. W. 760.

MARK (spelled, also, Marc). A weight used in several parts of Europe, and for several commodities, especially gold and silver. When gold and silver are sold by the mark, it is divided into twenty-four carats. A money of accounts in England, and in some other countries a coin. The English mark is two-thirds of a pound sterling, or 13*s.* 4*d.*; and the Scotch mark is of equal value in Scotch money of account. Encyc. Amer. As to its early history, see Seebohm, Tribal Customs in Anglo-Sax. L.

MARK MOOT. The ancient German mark was divided into the village, the arable lands, and the common lands; the arable lands were allotted among the householders and the waste lands held in common. In the mark moot was transacted all the business that arose out of the system of common cultivation and out of the employment of common rights. Taylor, Jurispr. 199.

But Maitland (Domesday Book 354) points out that the German village was not a mark community. The mark lands belonged to no village. In later days some large piece of the wild agricultural territory was found to be under the control of a "mark-community," whose members dwell here and there in many different villages and exercised rights over the land that belonged to no village but constituted the mark. Traces of what may perhaps have become the "mark system" may perhaps be found in England.

MARKET. A public place and appointed time for buying and selling. A public place, appointed by public authority, where all sorts of things necessary for the subsistence or for the convenience of life are sold. All fairs are markets, but not vice versa; Bract. l. 2, c. 21; Co. Litt. 22; Co. 2d Inst. 401; Co. 4th Inst. 272. Markets are generally regulated by local laws. A city may establish public markets and confine the sale of commodities therein, where the regulations are reasonable and in consideration of public health; Ex parte Byrd, 84 Ala. 17, 4 South. 397, 5 Am. St. Rep. 328; Trustees of Rochester v. Pettinger, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 265; State v. Garibaldi, 44 La. Ann. 809, 11 South. 36; State v. Leiber, 11 Ia. 407; and ordinances are valid, prohibiting sales in markets by non-producers without license; In re Nightingale, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 168; requiring a small fee for stalls; City of Cincinnati v. Buckingham, 10 Ohio 257; prohibiting produce wagons from standing within the limits of a market; Com. v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 355; or the keeping a private market within six squares of a public market (where the ordinance was authorized by statute); State v. Natal, 41 La. Ann. 887, 6 South. 722; Natal v. Louisiana, 139 U. S. 621, 11 Sup. Ct. 636, 35 L. Ed. 288; and prohibiting the sale of specified provisions except at a public market; Newson v. City of Galveston, 76 Tex. 559, 13 S. W. 368, 7 L. R. A. 797; City of St. Louis v. Weber, 44 Mo. 549; Village of Buffalo v. Webster, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 100; State v. Pendergrass, 106 N. C. 664, 10 S. E. 1002; Ash v. People, 11 Mich. 347, 83 Am. Dec. 740; Badkins v. Robinson, 53 Ga. 613. See 24 L. R. A. 584, note.

The franchise in England by which a town holds a market, which can only be by royal grant or immemorial usage.

By the term market is also understood the demand there is for any particular article: as, the cotton market in Europe is dull. See 15 Viner, Abr. 41; Com. Dig. Market; MARKET STALLS; FAIRS.

MARKET OVERT. An open or public market; that is, a place appointed by law or custom for the sale of goods and chattels at stated times in public. "An open, public, and legally constituted market." Jervis, C. J., 9 J. Scott 601; 18 C. B. 599. As to what is a legally constituted market overt, see 5 C. B. N. S. 299. In 5 B. & S. 313, the doctrine of market overt was much discussed by Cockburn, C. J., and the opinion expressed that a sale could not be considered as made in market overt, "unless the goods were exposed in the market for sale, and the whole transaction begun, continued, and completed in the open market; so as to give the fullest opportunity to the man whose goods have been taken to make pursuit of them, and prevent their being sold."

The market-place was the only market overt out of the city of London, but in London every shop was a market overt; 5 Co. 83; F. Moore 300. Where a sale took place in a showroom above a store, access to which was only obtainable by special permission, it was not a sale in market overt; [1892] 1 Q. B. 25. In London, every day except Sunday was market-day. In the country, particular days were fixed for market-days by charter or prescription; 2 Bla. Com. 449.

All contracts for any thing vendible, made in market overt, shall be binding; and sales pass the property, though stolen, if it be an open and proper place for the kind of goods, there be an actual sale for valuable consideration, no notice of wrongful possession, no collusion, parties able to contract, a contract originally and wholly in the market overt, toll be paid, if requisite, by statute, and the contract be made between sun and sun; 5 Co. 83 b. But sale in market overt does not bind the king, though it does infants, etc.; Co. 2d Inst. 713; 2 Bla. Com. 449; Com. Dig. Market (E); Bacon, Abr. Fairs and Markets (E); 5 B. & Ald. 624. A sale by sample is not a sale in market overt; 5 B. & S. 313; but a sale to a shopkeeper in London is; 11 Ad. & E. 326; but see 5 B. & S. 313.

The English Sales of Goods Act of 1893 provides: "Where goods are sold in market overt according to the usage of the market, the buyer acquires a title to the goods provided he buys them in good faith and without notice of any defect or want of title on the part of the seller."

A market overt is a public market or fair, legally held by grant from the crown or by prescription or by authority of parliament. By the custom of London every shop in the city in which goods are publicly offered for sale is market overt on all days of the week except Sundays and holidays from sunrise to sunset. The sale must take place in that part of the shop in which the public are ordinarily admitted; [1892] 1 Q. B. 25.

If the goods be stolen and the thief is prosecuted to conviction by the owner, the property revests in him notwithstanding an intermediate sale in market overt. But if the purchaser parts with the goods or consumes them before such conviction, the owner has no cause of action against him, even though he does so with notice of the theft. But where possession of the goods has been obtained from the owner by fraud or other wrongful means, not amounting to theft, the property will not revest in the owner by reason only of the conviction of the offender.

Under statute, where horses are sold in market overt to a bona fide purchaser for value, the horses must have been exposed in the open market for one hour between 10 A. M. and sunset, and a minute description of the purchaser, etc., entered in the shopkeeper's book; and the owner can recover the horse within six months of the sale by tendering the purchaser the price which he paid for it. 1 Odgers, Com. Law 19. An auction room is not a shop within the meaning of the custom of the city of London, according to which a sale in a shop in that city of such goods as are usually sold in it is a sale in market overt; [1911] 2 K. B. 1031 (C. A.), where market overt is dealt with historically by Scrutton, J.; see 45 Am. L. Rev. 890.

There is no law recognizing the effect of a sale in market overt in the United States; Easton v. Worthington, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 130; Wheelwright v. Depeyster, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 480, 3 Am. Dec. 345; Bryant v. Whitcher, 52 N. H. 158; Coombs v. Gorden, 59 Me. 111; Dame v. Baldwin, 8 Mass. 521; Roland v. Gundy, 5 Ohio 203; Heacock v. Walker, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 341; Ventress v. Smith, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 161, 9 L. Ed. 382; 2 Kent 324; 2 Tud. Lead. Cas. 734, where the subject is fully treated.

MARKET PRICE. See MARKET VALUE.

MARKET QUOTATIONS. A collection of market quotations is a species of property which a court of equity will protect by injunction; [1896] 1 Q. B. 147; Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Commission Co., 103 Fed. 902; Board of Trade of Chicago v. Hadden-Krull Co., 109 Fed. 705; Illinois Commission Co. v. Telegraph Co., 119 Fed. 301, 56 C. C. A. 205; even though communicated to many persons in confidential relations to the board of trade owning such collection; Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Stock Co., 198 U. S. 251, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031. This property right is not surrendered by permitting subscribers to whom they are communicated to post such quotations upon blackboards in their places of business; McDearmott Commission Co. v. Board of Trade, 146 Fed. 961, 77 C. C. A. 479, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889, 8 Ann. Cas. 759. Even if the information concerned illegal acts, it is entitled to the protection of the court; Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Grain & Stock Co., 198 U. S. 251, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031; Board of Trade of

City of Chicago v. L. A. Kinsey Co., 130 Fed. 507, 64 C. C. A. 669, 69 L. R. A. 59.

MARKET STALLS. The right acquired by a purchaser of a market stall is in the nature of an easement in, not a title to, a freehold in the land, and such right or easement is limited in duration to the existence of the market, and is to be understood as acquired subject to such changes and modifications in the market during its existence, as the public needs may require. The purchase confers an exclusive right to occupy the particular stalls, with their appendages, for the purposes of the market, and none other, and subject to the regulation of the market. So held in a case in 2 Md. Law Rec. 81, a case of a public market in Baltimore. In Wartman v. City of Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 202, the court refused to enjoin the city of Philadelphia from demolishing the old market house with a view to building a new one on other property. See, also, Gall v. City of Cincinnati, 18 Ohio St. 563; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 9.

MARKET VALUE. A price established by public sales, or sales in the way of ordinary business, as of merchandise. Murray v. Stanton, 99 Mass. 348; Wehle v. Haviland, 69 N. Y. 448.

The market value is to be determined by the general market value of goods without regard to special advantages which the importer may enjoy; and in ascertaining that value, it is proper in some instances to consider the cost of production, including such items of expense as designs, salary of buyer, clerk hire, rent, interest, and percentage on the aggregate cost of the business in tariff law cases; Muser v. Magone, 155 U. S. 240, 15 Sup. Ct. 77, 39 L. Ed. 135.

When referring to the value of an article at the place of exportation, it means the price at which such articles are sold and purchased, clear of every charge, but such as is laid upon it at the time of sale. Goodwin v. U. S., 2 Wash. C. C. 499, Fed. Cas. No. 5,554.

"Reasonable value," used in a sale, is equivalent to market value; Wagoner Undertaking Co. v. Jones, 134 Mo. App. 101, 114 S. W. 1049.

It was much considered in L. R. [1914] A. C. 71.

MARKETABLE TITLE. A title which a reasonable purchaser, well informed as to the facts and their legal bearings, willing and anxious to perform his contract, would in the exercise of that prudence which business men ordinarily bring to bear in such transactions, be willing and ought to accept; and which one is entitled to have. Todd v. Savings Institution, 128 N. Y. 636, 28 N. E. 504. A title by adverse possession for forty years is a marketable title; Tewksbury v. Howard, 138 Ind. 103, 37 N. E. 355; as is a title ripened under the statute of limitations. In equity a marketable title is one in which there is no doubt involved, either as law or fact; Herman v. Somers, 158 Pa. 424, 27 Atl. 1050, 38 Am. St. Rep. 851.

A title to real estate is not marketable when it is so defective as to affect the value of the land or interfere with its sale; Howe v. Coates, 97 Minn. 385, 107 N. W. 397, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1110, 114 Am. St. Rep. 723.

See TITLE.

MARLBRIDGE, STATUTE OF. An important English statute, 52 Hen. III. (1267), relating to wrongful distress. It derived its name from the town in Wiltshire in which parliament sat when it was enacted, now known as Marlborough. See 6 Chitty, Eng. Stat.; 2 Reeve, Hist. E. L. 62; Crabb, Com. Law 156; 1 Soc. Eng. 410.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

MARQUIS. A title of nobility. In England the rank of a marquis is below that of a duke and above an earl. It is also a title of dignity in France, Italy, Japan, and Germany.

MARRIAGE. A contract made in due form of law, by which a man and woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives, and to discharge towards each other the duties imposed by law on the relation of husband and wife. For the laws of the Hebrews and Romans and the canon or ecclesiastical law of the Middle Ages on the subject of marriage, see Fulton's Laws of Marriage.

Besides the full lawful marriage of Roman citizens, there were two other recognized relations of the sexes. One was the so called "natural" marriage or matrimonium juris gentium, between a full citizen and a half citizen or an alien. It was a legal union and the children were legitimate. As Roman citizenship extended to all the subjects of the empire its importance vanished. Bryce, Stud. in Hist. etc. The other relation was concubinatus (q. v.).

Marriage, in our law, as distinguished from the agreement to marry and from the act of becoming married, is the civil status of one man and one woman united in law for life, for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on those whose association is founded on the distinction of sex. 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 9.

It does not mean a mere temporary agreement to dwell together for a time for the gratification of sexual desires, but it is essential that the contract be entered into with a view to its continuance through life and then be followed by celebration and cohabitation, with the apparent object of continuing such cohabitation through life; Olson v. Peterson, 33 Neb. 358, 50 N. W. 155.

The better opinion appears to be that marriage is something more than a mere civil contract. It has been variously said by different writers to be a status, or a relation, or an institution. This view is supported by the following: Story, Confl. Laws § 108 n.; Schoul. Husb. & W. § 12; Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87; Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 37; 3 P. D. 1; Mag. & Rev. 4 ser. 26. But see contra, McCreery v. Davis, 44 S. C. 195, 22 S. E. 178, 22 L. R. A. 655, 51 Am. St. Rep. 794. In New York it has been held to be merely a civil contract; Hynes v. McDermott, 7 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 98. It is both a civil relation and a contract; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366; but is not a contract within the federal constitutional provision as to impairment of contracts; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654.

All persons are able to contract marriage unless they are under the legal age, or unless there be other disability. The age of consent at common law is fourteen in males and twelve in females; 2 Kent 78; Governor v. Rector, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 61; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 119; Beggs v. State, 55 Ala. 111. This is still the rule in the older states; but in Ohio, Indiana, and other western states, the age of consent is raised to eighteen for males, and fourteen for females; Schoul. Husb. & W. § 24. When a person under the age marries, such person can, when arrived at lawful age, avoid the marriage, or, if the other is of legal age, confirm it. It has been held that the one who is of legal age may also disaffirm the marriage; Co. Litt. 79; East, P. C. 468; but see People v. Slack, 15 Mich. 193. The disaffirmance may be either with or without a judicial sentence; 1 Bish. Marr. & D. § 150. If either of the parties is under seven, the marriage is void; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 436; Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49.

If a marriage of a minor takes place after she has reached a legal marriageable age, the parent cannot sue to annul it, and the statute fixing the age of consent does not alter the common law permitting girls under that age to marry without the consent of their parents; In re Hollopeter, 52 Wash. 41, 100 Pac. 159, 21 L. R. A. 847, 132 Am. St. Rep. 952, 17 Ann. Cas. 91; Fisher v. Bernard, 65 Vt. 663, 27 Atl. 316.

As to the age for contracting marriage in different countries, see 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. App.

If either party is non compos mentis, or insane, the marriage is void. See INSANITY.

If either party has a husband or wife living the marriage is void; Fenton v. Reed, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 53, 4 Am. Dec. 244; Martin's Heirs v. Martin, 22 Ala. 86; 1 Bla. Com. 438; Monnier v. Contejean, 45 La. Ann. 419, 12 South. 623; although the woman may have thought her first husband was dead; Thomas v. Thomas, 124 Pa. 646, 17 Atl. 182. See McCaffrey v. Benson, 40 La. Ann. 10, 3 South. 393; Rawson v. Rawson, 156 Mass. 578, 31 N. E. 653; INTENT.

A man may contract marriage before entry of a decree declaring his former marriage to have been void; Eichhoff's Estate, 101 Cal. 600, 36 Pac. 11. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

Consanguinity and affinity within the rules prescribed by law in this country render a marriage void. In England they rendered the marriage liable to be annulled by the ecclesiastical courts; Sutton v. Warren, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 451; 2 Bla. Com. 434. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Marriage with a deceased wife's sister, including a sister of the half blood, was legalized in England in 1907. No clergyman is required to solemnize such a marriage, but he can permit his church to be used by another clergyman.

If either party acts under compulsion, or is under duress, the marriage is voidable; Anderson v. Anderson, 74 Hun 56, 26 N. Y. Supp. 492; 12 P. & D. 21; [1891] P. 369. Where one of the parties answers "no" to every question of the magistrate which should have been answered "yes," and thereafter refused to cohabit with the man, the marriage is not valid; Roszel v. Roszel, 73 Mich. 133, 40 N. W. 858, 16 Am. St. Rep. 569.

The parties must each be willing to marry the other. Where a woman silently withholds her consent to a formal marriage, but subsequently treats it as a good marriage, she is estopped from saying it was not real and binding on her; Everett v. Morrison, 69 Hun 146, 23 N. Y. Supp. 377. Where one of the parties is mistaken in the person of the other, the requisite of consent is wanting. But a mistake in the qualities or character of the other party will not avoid the marriage; Poynt. Marr. & D. c. 9. If a man marries the woman he intends to marry, the marriage is valid, though she passes under an assumed name; 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 204; 3 Curt. Ec. 185; see Burke's Trials 63.

If the apparent willingness is produced by fraud, the marriage will be valid till set aside by a court of chancery or by a decree of divorce; Scott v. Shufeldt, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 43. See Harrison v. Harrison, 94 Mich. 559, 54 N. W. 275, 34 Am. St. Rep. 364; Keyes v. Keyes, 6 Misc. 355, 26 N. Y. Supp. 910. A ceremony of marriage without license and performed by an unauthorized person, and imposed on a woman by false pretences, but believed by her to be lawful and bona fide, is valid for all civil purposes, unless and until avoided by the deceived person; Farley v. Farley, 94 Ala. 501, 10 South. 646, 33 Am. St. Rep. 141. Fraud is sometimes said to render a marriage void; but this is incorrect, as it is competent for the party injured to waive the tort and affirm the marriage. Impotency in one of the parties is sometimes laid down as rendering the marriage void, as being a species of fraud on the other party; but it is only a ground for annulling the contract by a court, or for a divorce. Schoul. Husb. & W. § 22.

Marriage contracts are not avoided by fraud which merely induces consent, but by fraud which procures the appearance, without the reality, of consent; [1897] P. 269. The kind and degree of fraud which will permit the annulment of the marriage, will be determined by the law of the forum, although the proceeding is instituted in accordance with the law of the state where the marriage was performed; Lyon v. Lyon, 230 Ill. 366, 82 N. E. 850, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996, 12 Ann. Cas. 25; with note collecting cases on the subject of misrepresentation as the ground of annulment. A representation by an epileptic that she has not had an attack for eight years is not, although false, such fraud as will nullify a marriage with her, entered into in reliance thereon, under a provision of a statute that a marriage may be annulled that was obtained by fraud; id. And see an article on "Nullity of Marriage" by F. G. Fessenden, 13 Harv. L. Rev. 110. And for an extended article on the question of a marriage with a deceased wife's sister, see 41 Can. L. J. 345, where among other things it is said that in the conflict of laws, that cause of invalidity does not differ from any other.

A prohibition, imposed by the laws of a state against a subsequent marriage by a husband against whom a decree of divorce has been rendered, can have no extra-territorial effect; and therefore such person may contract a subsequent marriage in another state where the law imposes no such prohibition; Wilson v. Holt, 83 Ala. 528, 3 South. 321, 3 Am. St. Rep. 768; but at his death the second wife is not entitled to letters of administration on his estate, in the state which imposed the prohibition against his re-marriage; In re Stull's Estate, 183 Pa. 625, 39 Atl. 16, 39 L. R. A. 539, 63 Am. St. Rep. 776.

Dr. Wharton (Confl. Laws) gives three distinct theories as to the law which is to determine the question of matrimonial capacity. It is determined by the law of the place of solemnization of the marriage. This view is supported by Judge Story (Confl. Laws §§ 110, 112), and Mr. Bishop (Mar. & D. § 390); 76 Ga. 177; but this theory is usually subject to exceptions which destroy its applicability to the majority of litigated cases. Thus marriages by our law incestuous, are not validated by being performed in another land, where they would be lawful, and so the converse is true, that the marriage, in England, of an American with his deceased wife's sister, would be recognized as valid in such of our states as hold such a marriage to be legal, nor is it believed that an American court will ever hold a marriage of American citizens, solemnized abroad, to be illegal, simply because the consent of parents was withheld or because one of the parties, though of age at home, was a minor at the place of celebration. Further, to make the lex loci celebrationis supreme enables parties to acquire for themselves any kind of marital capacity they want, by having the marriage solemnized in a state where this kind of marital capacity is sanctioned by law. See Pennegar v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, 10 S. W. 305, 2 L. R. A. 703, 10 Am. St. Rep. 648; In re Lum Lin Ying. 59 Fed. 682.

A second theory of matrimonial capacity is that it is determined by the lex domicilii; Wheat. Int. Law 172; 4 Phill. Int. Law 284; 2 Cl. & F. 488; 9 H. L. C. 193. There are two serious objections to this theory. First it would make the validity of the marriages in the United States of natives of other countries depend upon the question whether such persons had acquired a domicil in the United States; for if they had not, they would be governed by the laws of their foreign domicil. Few aliens, who marry in this country, could be sure they were legally married. Second, it would be necessary upon this theory to sustain the polygamous marriages of Chinese; see, as sustaining this theory, L. R. 2 P. & M. 440; 4 P. D. 13; 3 P. D. 1; 29 L. J. P. & M. 97; Westl. 56; but see Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241. According to Savigny all questions of capacity are to be determined by the husband's domicil, which, as the true seat of the marriage absorbs that of the wife. It has been conceded that the law of domicil does not extend to the direction of the ceremonial part of the marriage rite, and that the lex domicilii is the law of the country in which the parties are domiciled at the time of the marriage, and in which their matrimonial residence is contemplated; Lord Campbell in 9 H. L. C. 193.

The third theory is that matrimonial capacity is a distinctive national policy, as to which judges are obliged to enforce the rules of the state of which they are the officers. So far as concerns the United States, our national policy in this respect is to sustain the matrimonial capacity in all classes of persons arrived at puberty, and free from the impediments of prior ties. This view is approved by Dr. Wharton, Confl. Laws § 160. See 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 76, 219; 31 Am. L. Rev. 524.

At common law, no particular form of words or ceremony was necessary. Mutual assent to the relation of husband and wife was sufficient. Any words importing a present assent to being married to each other were sufficient evidence of the contract.

Consent alone was all that was necessary to make a marriage valid; 1 Bla. Com. 439. The House of Lords was equally divided upon this point in Reg. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & F. 534; but historical inquiry tends to confirm the views of Lord Stowell (2 Hagg. 54) that the presence of a clergyman was not essential; Bryce, Marr. & Div. in 8 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 814. Both of these judgments are very elaborate.

If the words imported an assent to a future marriage, followed by consummation, this established a valid marriage by the canon law, but not by the common law; 10 Cl. & F. 534; Cheney v. Arnold, 15 N. Y. 345, 69 Am. Dec. 609; 2 Rop. Husb. & W. 445; Jewell v. Jewell, 1 How. (U. S.) 219, 11 L. Ed. 108; Town of Londonderry v. Town of Chester, 2 N. H. 268, 9 Am. Dec. 61. But a bethrothal followed by copulation does not make the common law marriage per verba de futuro cum copula when the parties looked forward to a formal ceremony, and did not agree to become husband and wife without it; Peck v. Peck, 12 R. I. 485, 34 Am. Rep. 702. An agreement made per verba de præsenti between a man and a woman to become husband and wife, followed by consummation thereof, either secret or public, is a valid marriage and is not invalidated by an agreement of one of the parties not to make the marriage known until a specified time, unless with the consent of the other; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 Pac. 345; 17 Wash. L. Rep. 328.

Where one knowingly having a wife living married again (the second wife not knowing of the first marriage), and during cohabitation under such second marriage the first wife died, but the husband never knew of her death, it was held by a divided court that there was a common law marriage after the death of the first wife; In re Fitzgibbons' Estate, 162 Mich. 416, 127 N. W. 313, 139 Am. St. Rep. 570.

A common law marriage was held as sufficient to support an indictment for bigamy; State v. Thompson, 76 N. J. L. 197, 68 Atl. 1068; and see 20 Harv. L. Rev. 576; such marriage contracted in another state was held valid, not only in that state, but also in Pennsylvania; In re McCausland's Estate, 213 Pa. 189, 62 Atl. 780, 110 Am. St. Rep. 540; and also in Illinois; Heymann v. Heymann, 218 Ill. 636, 75 N. E. 1079; Geiger v. Ryan, 123 App. Div. 722, 108 N. Y. Supp. 13; and for other cases see 15 Yale L. J. 378. Such a marriage was recognized as valid under the laws of Nebraska, notwithstanding the fact that it was not "solemnized" in accordance with the provisions of the statute or by any officer authorized to marry or any minister of the gospel; Reaves v. Reaves, 15 Okl. 240, 82 Pac. 490, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353, and note collecting cases on the validity of such marriage.

Where a man and woman were married and entered into matrimonial relations in good faith believing that the woman's husband was dead, whereas he was in fact alive, and after the divorce, the husband, representing that the woman was his legal wife and that no further ceremony was necessary, thereby induced her to remain with him for over twenty years, it was held that he was estopped to deny that he had intended to enter into marriage relations with her, and that she was his lawful wife after the divorce; Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 68 N. J. Eq. 736, 62 Atl. 680, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 111 Am. St. Rep. 658, 6 Ann. Cas. 483.

Mere cohabitation, even with repute of marriage, is not enough; but if, in addition, it appears that there were mutual admissions, recognition of offspring, etc., these are vouchers that the parties have accepted the duties of marriage; In re Craig's Estate, 22 Pa. Dist. R. 233, per Gest, J.

Where the parties had lived together and were reputed to be married, and the children to be their lawful children, but there was no record of any marriage, it was held that they had been husband and wife; 94 L. T. 431. Where it is done at a registration office under false name, it is still valid; [1907] 2 Ch. 592.

Where a man and woman intend to marry and live together as husband and wife, but their intent is frustrated by the existence of some unknown impediment, when the impediment is removed, and the same intent continues, their relations are lawful; Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 68 N. J. Eq. 736, 62 Atl. 680, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245, 111 Am. St. Rep. 658, 6 Ann. Cas. 483, affirming 68 N. J. Eq. 414, 59 Atl. 813.

All the presumptions of validity attach on proof of a formal ceremony and cohabitation under the belief of lawful marriage, and the burden is on those who attack it to show invalidity by clear, distinct and satisfactory proof; Murchison v. Green, 128 Ga. 339, 57 S. E. 709, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702. In the case of remarriage of a woman whose husband was not heard from for three years, the presumption of innocence will overcome the presumption of his continued life; Smith v. Fuller, 138 Ia. 91, 115 N. W. 912, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, with note on the presumption flowing from the marriage ceremony. Every presumption is in favor of the validity of the marriage where the marital relations have continued uninterruptedly for more than forty years without any question being raised by any one claiming under an earlier marriage of one of the parties until more than ten years after the death or five years after the distribution of the property of that party; Sy Joc Lieng v. Sy Quia, 228 U. S. 335, 33 Sup. Ct. 514, 57 L. Ed. 862.

Where parties whose marriage under the state law would have been invalid went to sea beyond the three mile limit and were married by the captain of the vessel, it was still held invalid; Norman v. Norman, 121 Cal. 620, 54 Pac. 143, 42 L. R. A. 343, 66 Am. St. Rep. 74. As to marriages at sea, see 17 L. Q. R. 283, where the conclusion is reached that, independent of the English Foreign Marriage Act, at common law, a marriage on board a man of war or merchant ship in the presence of a person in holy orders is valid, and that it might be held valid without the presence of such person; and so it has been held in England; [1896] P. 116.

At common law the consent might be given in the presence of a magistrate or of any other person as a witness, or it might be found by a court or jury from the subsequent acknowledgment of the parties, or from the proof of cohabitation, or of general reputation resulting from the conduct of the parties. In the original states the common-law rule prevails, except where it has been changed by legislation; Hantz v. Sealy, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 405; Fenton v. Reed, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 52, 4 Am. Dec. 244. See Clark v. Clark, 10 N. H. 383, 34 Am. Dec. 165; 4 Burr. 2058; Jewell v. Jewell, 1 How. (U. S.) 219, 234, 11 L. Ed. 108; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 119; Ligonia v. Buxton, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 102, 11 Am. Dec. 46.

In civil cases a marriage can generally be proved by showing that the parties have held themselves out as husband and wife, and by general reputation founded on their conduct. This is sufficient, too, for purposes of administration; Renholm v. Public Adm'r, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 456. There is an exception, however, in the case of such civil suits as are founded on the marriage relation, such as actions for the seduction of the wife, where general reputation and cohabitation will not be sufficient; Clayton v. Wardell, 4 N. Y. 230; Durning v. Hastings, 183 Pa. 210, 38 Atl. 627; State v. Roswell, 6 Conn. 446; Taylor v. Robinson, 29 Me. 323.

Declarations of a person since deceased that he was not married, being wholly in his own interest and not a part of the res gestæ, are hearsay and inadmissible; Drawdy v. Hesters, 130 Ga. 161, 60 S. E. 451, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 190, and note on the admissibility of declarations of a deceased person against his or her marriage, the conclusion of which is that the courts are about equally divided on the subject. Such declarations are held admissible in Topper v. Perry, 197 Mo. 531, 95 S. W. 203, 114 Am. St. Rep. 777; Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251; Succession of Hubee, 20 La. Ann. 97; though considered of little weight; Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. 352; Henderson v. Cargill, 31 Miss. 367. They were held inadmissible in Hull v. Rawls, 27 Miss. 471; In re Moore's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 338; Thompson v. Nims, 83 Wis. 261, 53 N. W. 502, 17 L. R. A. 847.

Marriage may be proved by the witnesses to its solemnization, by presumption, from a record, or from cohabitation and repute, and by declaration, or admissions of the parties to it, when against their interest or a part of the res gestæ, or by conduct from which such admission may be implied; Wallace's Case, 49 N. J. Eq. 530, 25 Atl. 260; or by circumstantial evidence; Matter of Hamilton's Will, 76 Hun 200, 27 N. Y. Supp. 813. Eyewitnesses and records are not essential; Miles v. U. S., 103 U. S. 311, 26 L. Ed. 481.

Documentary evidence is not the best proof of marriage; a witness who swears to having seen a marriage ceremony performed, intended to be in good faith, by a person acting as a clergyman or magistrate, testifies to a valid marriage, unless it is clearly illegal by statute; People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184, 40 N. W. 425.

In most of the states, the degrees of relationship within which marriages may not be contracted are prescribed by statute. This limit in cases of consanguinity is generally, though not always, that of first cousins. In some of the states, a violation of the rule renders, by statute, the marriage absolutely void. In others, no provision of this kind is made.

Various statutes have been passed to guard against abuse of the marriage ceremony. Such of them as require a license, or the publication of bans, or the consent of parents or guardians, are regarded as directory, and, unless explicitly declaring the marriage to be void, if not complied with, do not render it void. See State v. Ross, 26 Mo. 260; Rodebaugh v. Sanks, 2 Watts (Pa.) 9; State v. Bittick, 103 Mo. 183, 15 S. W. 325, 11 L. R. A. 587, 23 Am. St. Rep. 869; Campbell's Adm'r v. Gullatt, 43 Ala. 57; Askew v. Dupree, 30 Ga. 173; Hayes v. People, 25 N. Y. 390, 82 Am. Dec. 364. But see Grisham v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 589; Norcross v. Norcross, 155 Mass. 425, 29 S. E. 506; Beverlin v. Beverlin, 29 W. Va. 732, 3 S. E. 36; 9 H. L. C. 274.

Where a marriage was properly performed by a priest, it was held valid though no license had been obtained; Landry v. Bellanger, 120 La. 962, 45 South. 956, 14 Ann. Cas. 952, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, with note collecting cases which seem to establish the general rule as stated that the requirement of a license is directory and the marriage is valid without it.

In England, Lord Hardwicke's Act, 1753, nullified all marriages (except those of Quakers and Jews) celebrated otherwise than in a church and according to the rites of the church of England, and this continued to be the law up to the passing of the Marriage Act, 1836, by which provisions were made for civil marriages at a register office, and for legalizing all marriages in duly registered dissenting places of worship, if celebrated in the presence of a civil official called a registrar of marriages.

Marriages were not solemnized by priests until the time of Innocent III.

Foreign marriages are regulated in England by the act of 1892. See LEX LOCI, as to foreign marriages. As to the marriage laws of various countries, see Burge's Col. Laws by Renton & Phillimore.

A contract to marry is not void as being in restraint of marriage, although restrain-ing the parties thereto from marriage with any other parties; Brown v. Odill, 104 Tenn. 250, 56 S. W. 840, 52 L. R. A. 660, 78 Am. St. Rep. 914; and a contract for the resumption of the marriage relation, providing that if the husband shall desert the wife, or fail to support her, she shall immediately become vested with her dower interest in his realty is not against public policy but in harmony with it; Sommer v. Sommer, 87 App. Div. 434, 84 N. Y. Supp. 444. See RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

As to rights of married women, see HUSBAND; MARRIED WOMAN.

See WEDDING; IMPEDIMENTS; IN FACIE ECCLESIÆ; Burge, Colonial Laws, by Renton & Phillimore, for the laws of various countries.

MARRIAGE ACT, ROYAL. An act of 12 Geo. III. c. 1 (1772), by which members of the royal family are forbidden to marry without the king's consent, or except on certain onerous conditions.

MARRIAGE ARTICLES. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, in accordance with which the marriage settlement is afterwards to be drawn up; they are to be binding in case of marriage. They must be in writing, by the Statute of Frauds; Burt. R. P. 484; Crabb, R. P. § 1809; 4 Cruise, Dig. 274, 323.

MARRIAGE BROKERAGE. The act by which a person interferes, for a consideration to be received by him, between a man and a woman, for the purpose of promoting a marriage between them. The money paid for such service is also known by this name.

Such contracts are illegal at common law; Show. P. C. 76; 3 P. Wms. 76; and in equity they are utterly void, as against public policy; 1 Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 4, 10, note s; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 263; 1 Ves. 503; Morrison v. Rogers, 115 Cal. 252, 46 Pac. 1072, 56 Am. St. Rep. 95; Johnson's Adm'r v. Hunt, 81 Ky. 321; Hellen v. Anderson, 83 Ill. App. 506; In re Grobe's Estate, 127 Ia. 121, 102 N. W. 804; and a contract to hasten an intended marriage is as much a marriage brokerage contract as one to bring about a marriage between strangers; Jangraw v. Perkins, 76 Vt. 127, 56 Atl. 532, 104 Am. St. Rep. 917.

It is said that such contracts were good at the civil law and that "matchmakers (proxenetæ) were allowed to receive a reward for their services." Bisph. Eq. § 224.

MARRIAGE LICENSE. See MARRIAGE.

MARRIAGE PORTION. That property which is given to a woman on her marriage. See DOWER.

MARRIAGE, PROMISE OF. See PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. An agreement made by the parties in contemplation of marriage, by which the title to certain property is changed, and the property to some extent becomes inalienable. See Fadeley v. Weatherby's Ex'rs, 8 Leigh (Va.) 29; 1 D. & B. Eq. 389; Paine v. Hollister, 139 Mass. 144, 29 N. E. 541; Magniac v. Thompson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 348, 8 L. Ed. 709; In re Pulling's Estate, 93 Mich. 274, 52 N. W. 1116; Carr v. Lackland, 112 Mo. 442, 20 S. W. 624. See Atherly, Marr. Settl.

Such settlements are valid, the marriage being at law a valuable consideration; Sneed v Russell (Tenn.) 42 S. W. 213; White v. White, 20 App. Div. 560, 47 N. Y. Supp. 273; and payments made in pursuance thereof cannot be set aside by creditors; Sneed v. Russell (Tenn.) 42 S. W. 213. The property covered passes, on the death of the wife, to her devisees under the settlement; White v. White, 20 App. Div. 560, 47 N. Y. Supp. 273; and is free from any claim by the husband to curtesy; White v. White, 20 Misc. 481, 46 N. Y. Supp. 658. It is sufficient to change the course of inheritance and authorize each party to dispose of his or her own property by deed or devise without consent of the other; Brown v. Weld, 5 Kan. App. 341, 48 Pac. 456. See Jacobs v. Jacobs, 42 Ia. 600. It is not affected by a subsequent statute respecting married women; Smith v. Turpin, 109 Ala. 689, 19 South. 914.

An infant feme, who upon the eve of her marriage unites with her future husband in settling real estate upon herself and the issue of the marriage, may disaffirm the settlement when the disability of infancy and coverture have been removed, if she has done no act to affirm the settlement; Smith v. Smith's Ex'r, 107 Va. 112, 57 S. E. 577, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1184, 122 Am. St. Rep. 831, 12 Ann. Cas. 857. Such settlement is binding if she failed to repudiate it within a reasonable time after the termination of her infancy; [1899] 2 Ch. 569. Such a settlement will be construed by the law of the matrimonial domicil; 18 L. Q. R. 342.

As to the enforcement of an agreement relating to the disposition of property by will in consideration of the marriage, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

See ANTENUPTIAL CONTRACT; JOINTURE; VITAL STATISTICS.

MARRIED WOMAN. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MARSHAL. An officer of the United States, whose duty it is to execute the process of the courts of the United States. His duties within the district for which he is appointed are very similar to those of a sheriff. See Burr's Trial 365; Burke v. Trevitt, 1 Mas. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 2,163; Anonymous, 2 Gall. 101, Fed. Cas. No. 445; The Collector, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 194, 5 L. Ed. 239. He is authorized to protect a federal judge from assault and murder; Cunningham v. Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55. See JUDGE.

A marshal who has process in his hands against one person and seizes the goods of another, is liable by virtue of his office and his sureties are bound; Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 4 Sup. Ct. 286, 28 L. Ed. 337; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 181, 4 Sup. Ct. 355, 28 L. Ed. 390; though the authorities differ; National Bank of Redemption v. Rutledge, 84 Fed. 409. He is liable in damages where he refuses to surrender property which he has taken unlawfully; Gumbel v. Pitkin, 124 U. S. 131, 8 Sup. Ct. 379, 31 L. Ed. 374.

MARSHAL. To arrange; put in proper order; e. g. "the law will marshal words, ut res magis valeat." Hill, B., Hardr. 92.

MARSHAL OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH. An officer who had the custody of the queen's bench prison. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22 and an officer called keeper of the queen's prison substituted.

MARSHALLING ASSETS. An equitable principle upon which the legal rights of creditors are controlled in order to accomplish an equitable distribution of funds in accordance with the superior equities of different parties entitled to share therein. It springs from the principle that one who is entitled to satisfaction of his demand from either of two funds shall not so exercise his election as to exclude a party who is entitled to resort to only one of the funds. For example, where one creditor has a mortgage upon two parcels of land upon one of which there is a junior incumbrance not otherwise secured, the first mortgagee may be compelled to exhaust in the first instance that parcel of land which is otherwise unencumbered in order that the security of the junior incumbrancer may not be entirely destroyed. In such case, however, the indisposition of equity to interfere with the legal rights of a creditor results in working out the equity of the junior incumbrancer through a substitution to the right of the paramount mortgagee as against the other property; Bisph. Eq. § 27, 340.

Marshalling assets is a pure equity; it does not rest at all upon contract, and will not be enforced to the prejudice of either the dominant creditor or third persons, or even so as to do an injustice to the debtor; Gilliam v. McCormack, 85 Tenn. 597, 4 S. W. 521. See Bruner's Appeal, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 269; 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 260; Norfolk State Bank v. Schwenk, 51 Neb. 146, 70 N. W. 970; Hunter v. Whitfield, 89 Ill. 229; Kent v. Williams, 114 Cal. 537, 46 Pac. 462.

The doctrine applies only when both funds are in the hands of a common debtor; Perry's Adm'r v. Elliott, 101 Va. 709, 44 S. E. 919. It will not be applied if the doubly charged security is precarious, or where its application would delay or injure the senior creditor; Kendig v. Landis, 135 Pa. 612, 19 Atl. 1058; Butler v. Elliott, 15 Conn. 187; Evertson v. Booth, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 486. It is said that the right is an equity against the debtor himself to prevent his getting the fund singly charged free from both debts by throwing both creditors on the fund doubly charged, and is not a right of the inferior against the paramount creditor; Benedict v. Benedict, 15 N. J. Eq. 150; Pope v. Harris, 94 N. C. 62.

The equity of marshalling seems capable of being carried into effect in one of two ways: either, first, by restraining the parties against whom it exists from using a security to the injury of another; or, secondly, by giving the party entitled to the protection of this equity the benefit of another security in lieu of the one of which he has been disappointed. In other words, the right might be enforced either by injunction against the paramount creditor, or by subrogation in favor of the junior creditor. In practice, however, the latter of these two methods is the one usually employed, and the sounder doctrine seems to be that the first of the two ought not to be resorted to except under very peculiar circumstances. But there are decisions to the contrary; 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 280. Of course, when both funds are in court or under its immediate control, the case is different.

One whose securities have been re-hypothecated by a pledgee, together with securities belonging to the latter, has a right to compel the application of the latter securities to the payment of the debt before resort is had to those wrongfully re-hypothecated; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Schiff, 78 Fed. 216.

A common application of this doctrine is where mortgaged real property is subject to sale under the mortgage in the inverse order of alienation. The leading English case was Barnes v. Racster, 1 Y. & C. Ch. 401, and the rule in that country has been termed the rule of ratable contribution; Sto. Eq. Jur. § 1233; while the American rule was first settled by Kent, Ch., in Clowes v. Dickenson, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 235, where the doctrine of exoneration in the inverse order of conveyance was adopted. It has been noted that in this case a statement in fact obiter has been generally adopted and followed in the United States. See a valuable article by J. M. Gest in 27 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 739, for a critical view of the English and American cases.

The rule was held not to apply to a purchase merely of the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged premises so as to relieve the purchaser upon taking an assignment of the mortgage from his proportion of it and entitling him to enforce the law against the remaining portion; Parkey v. Veatch, 68 Mo. App. 67. See Carpenter v. Koons, 20 Pa. 222; Lovelace v. Webb, 62 Ala. 271. It is said that on a sale of a part of mortgaged lands the unsold portion is primarily liable to the mortgage debt; Ellis v. Fairbanks, 38 Fla. 257, 21 South. 107.

A trustee in bankruptcy is in the same position as the mortgagor himself. The court in marshalling will adjust the rights of the respective assignees of the mortgagor by directing the claim of the paramount creditor to be apportioned between the assignees of the various properties according to their values; 22 L. Q. Rev. 307.

The term marshalling liens has been used to express the application of the particular equity just referred to, being said to mean "the ranking or ordering of several estates or parcels of land, for the satisfaction of a judgment or mortgage to which all are liable, though successively conveyed away by the debtor." 1 Black, Judgm. § 440. It would seem, however, that the phrase is not an apt one in the application made of it, as the case put is the most ordinary one of marshalling assets, though as a matter of course there is always a marshalling of liens, in a certain sense, whenever a fund is distributed to lien creditors, as, even in an ordinary case of the application of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale. This is not, however, to be confused with the great equitable doctrine under consideration.

Another phrase, sometimes used, is marshalling securities, which is an expression for the same practice of equity to secure a class of creditors having but one fund available from having their security exhausted by another class who have two.

This equitable doctrine cannot be invoked as against those who have superior equities, and in this light the right of a wife to her own property is superior to that of her husband's creditors; Ayres v. Husted, 15 Conn. 504; Johns v. Reardon, 11 Md. 465; nor is it applied in favor of a creditor of the debtor; Dorr v. Shaw, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 17; Wise v. Shepherd, 13 Ill. 41; 17 Ves. 520; unless the creditor is a mere surety; Wise v. Shepherd, 13 Ill. 41; but it does not apply where the exclusive fund is the property of the surety for the debt for which such fund is bound; Mason v. Hull, 55 Ohio St. 256, 45 N. E. 632. The doctrine cannot be made available to create a fund, the two must exist; L. R. 3 Eq. 668; but once existing, it cannot be affected by the intervention of subsequent creditors; Ziegler v. Long, 2 Watts (Pa.) 205; Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 407, 50 Am. Dec. 78. A mortgagee having double security for his debt is not required by the existence of subsequent judgments against the mortgagor, of which he has no knowledge, to shape his action in the collection of his demand in accordance with the principle of marshalling the assets; Annan v. Hays, 85 Md. 505, 37 Atl. 20.

The doctrine of marshalling is applied to an infinite variety of cases, and is liable to be resorted to wherever there is necessity for the distribution of two funds among creditors, some of whom have claims on both. In the settlement of decedents' estates, five classes of persons are sometimes mentioned to whom it may be applied: (1) Creditors, (2) Legatees, (3) Between creditors and legatees, (4) Between legatees and vendors, (5) Between widows and legatees.

As to its application in cases of successive purchasers, see 27 Am. L. Reg. 739; partnership; 20 id. 465; 21 id. 800; 24 Alb. L. J. 305; 34 id. 344, 364; devisees and legatees; 24 Ir. L. T. 239; homestead cases; 16 W. Jurist 28; 9 Ins. L. J. 677. See generally, 2 Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. Eq. 228; Bisph. Eq. §§ 341–350 and cases cited; Tied. Eq. Jur. 532. See ASSETS; LIEN.

Marshalling is applied to mortgage liens; thus where there is an unrecorded first (chattel) mortgage, a second mortgage recorded but with notice of the first and a recorded third mortgage, the third mortgagee receives so much of the proceeds of a foreclosure sale as would be applicable on his mortgage after satisfying the second mortgagee's prior lien, and the latter is entitled to so much as would be applicable to his debt after satisfying the prior lien of the first, leaving the third mortgage out of the question. The first mortgagee is then entitled to the residue; Day v. Munson, 14 Ohio St. 488.

In New Jersey where a first mortgage had priority over a second but was subordinate to a third, which was subordinate to the second, the proceeds go: First, to the third mortgagee to the amount secured by the first mortgage; second, to the second mortgagee, third, to the residue of the third mortgage and lastly to the first mortgagee; Hoag v. Sayre, 33 N. J. Eq. 552.

MARTIAL LAW. That military rule and authority which exists in time of war, and is conferred by the laws of war, in relation to persons and things under and within the scope of active military operations, in carrying on the war, and which extinguishes or suspends civil rights and the remedies founded upon them, for the time being, so far as it may appear to be necessary in order to the full accomplishment of the purposes of the war. Prof. Joel Parker, in N. A. Rev., Oct. 1861.

Martial law is not mentioned by that name in the constitution or statutes of the United States; practically the essence of martial law is the suspension of the privilege of habeas corpus, and the two have been practically regarded as the same thing. See 1 Halleck, Int. L. 549; HABEAS CORPUS.

The instructions for the government of the United States army, 1863, define martial law as "simply military authority exercised in accordance with the laws and usages of war." It is proclaimed by the presence of a hostile army, and is the immediate and direct effect of occupation or conquest; suspending the civil and criminal law and the domestic government of the occupied place.

It supersedes all civil proceedings which conflict with it; Benet, Mil. Law; but does not necessarily supersede all such proceedings.

It extends, at least, to the camp, environs, and near field of military operations; Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 83, 12 L. Ed. 581; Johnson v. Duncan, 3 Mart. O. S. (La.) 530, 6 Am. Dec. 675; 6 Am. Arch. 186; and see, also, 2 H. Bla. 165; 1 Term 549; 1 Knapp, P. C. 316; Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. (U. S.) 115, 14 L. Ed. 75; but does not extend to a neutral country; People v. McLeod, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 328; People v. McLeod, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 483, 512, n., 37 Am. Dec. 328. Nor in time of insurrection can it be applied to citizens in states in which the courts are open and their process unobstructed; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 2, 18 L. Ed. 281. It is founded on paramount necessity, and imposed by a military chief; 1 Kent 377, n. For any excess or abuse of the authority, the officer ordering and the person committing the act are liable as trespassers; Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. (U. S.) 115, 14 L. Ed. 75; 1 Cowp. 180.

Martial law must be distinguished from military law. The latter is a rule of government for persons in military service only, but the former, when in force, is indiscriminately applied to all persons whatsoever; De Hart, Mil. Law 17.

This distinction has not been observed and is not observed in the definition of Prof. Parker, above quoted. Sir F. Pollock, in a letter to the London Times, reprinted in 64 Alb. L. J. 207, and in 18 L. Q. R. 152, after pointing out that "martial law," in the earlier books, down to the end of the 17th century, if not later, is what is now called "military law"—the rules of the governance of armies in the field and other persons within their lines or included in the region of their active operations—points out that it is the duty of all lawful men to defend the state against the king's enemies whenever and wherever there is a state of war within the realm and, in doing so, to do various acts which would otherwise be trespasses. This duty is not specifically vested in military officers; its exercise requires to be justified on every occasion by the necessity of the case, which is a question, after the restoration of peace, for the ordinary courts of justice; and, as in every common-law justification, the burden of proof is on the person justifying. He gives the following as his conclusions: Martial law, as distinct from military law, is the justification by the common law of acts done by necessity for the defence of the commonwealth when there is war within the realm. Such acts are not necessarily acts of force and restraint. They may be preventive as well as punitive The justification of any particular act done in a state of war is ultimately examinable in the ordinary courts, and the question of whether there was a state of war at a given time and place is a question of fact. There may be a state of war at any place where aid and comfort can be effectually given to the enemy, having regard to the modern conditions of warfare and means of communication.

Martial law exists wherever the militant arm of the government is called into service to suppress disorder. When a governor calls out the militia for this purpose in a district affected by a strike, it is a declaration of qualified martial law. It is qualified in that it only extends to the preservation of peace, and not to the ascertainment of private rights or other functions of government. The ordinary civil officers who preserve order are subordinated to the military arm, which is governed by military law, and as to which there is no limit but the necessities of the situation. In this respect there is no difference between a public war and domestic insurrection. The paramount law of self defence has established the rule that whatever force is necessary is lawful; Com. v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165, 55 Atl. 952, 98 Am. St. Rep. 759, 65 L. R. A. 193, with a full note of historical value.

In case of insurrection and rebellion, the governor or military officer in command may suspend the writ of habeas corpus and disregard it if issued; the proclamation of the governor declaring a county in a state of rebellion and calling United States military forces to his aid, puts in force martial law therein; In re Boyle, 6 Idaho 609, 57 Pac. 706, 45 L. R. A. 832, 96 Am. St. Rep. 286.

A military officer called to aid the civil authorities has no power to act independently of them. The military, in such case, are armed police only, subject to the absolute control of the magistrates and other civil officers. The colonel of a regiment, as a colonel, has no more a public office than any soldier or member of a sheriff's posse; State v. Colt, 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 62; 85 Pa. 462.

In the leading case of King v. Pinney, 3 B. & Ad. 947, it was held that a magistrate, who called upon soldiers to suppress a riot, was not bound to go with them in person.

See as to martial law, 18 L. Q. R. p. 117, by Holdsworth; p. 133, by Richards; p. 152, by Sir F. Pollock; Dicey on the Constitution.

In the report of a committee appointed by the Prime Minister in 1893, of which Lord

Bowen and Mr. Robert B. (now Lord Chancellor) Haldane were two of the three members, it was said: "Officers and soldiers are under no special privileges and subject to no special responsibilities as regards this principle of the law. A soldier, for the purpose of establishing civil order, is only a citizen armed in a particular manner. He cannot, because he is a soldier, excuse himself if without necessity he takes human life."

In Steph. Dig. Crim. Law, this position is taken: "In all cases in which force is used against the person of another, both the person who orders such force to be used and the person using that force is responsible for its use, and neither of them is justified by the circumstance that he acts in obedience to orders given him by a civil or military superior; but the fact that he did so act, and the fact that the order was apparently lawful, are in all cases relevant to the question whether he believed, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, in the existence of a state of facts which would have justified what he did apart from such orders, or which might justify his superior officer in giving such orders." In a note, the author states that such acts as shooting peaceable people wantonly, or a child of four years old intentionally, even in a riot, would be murder in a soldier as well as in his officer, could not be doubted; a soldier is bound to disobey an order in such case. This principle is "essential to the maintenance of the supremacy of the common law over military force."

MARYLAND. One of the thirteen original states of the Union.

The territory of Maryland was included in the grants previously made to companies formed for the settlement of Virginia. Out of these Virginia grants Maryland was granted by Charles the First, on the 20th of June, 1632, to Cecilius Calvert, Baron of Baltimore. The first settlement under the authority of Lord Baltimore was made on the 27th of March, 1634, in what is now St. Mary's county. Some settlements were previously made on Kent Island, under the authority of Virginia.

During its colonial period, Maryland was governed, with slight interruptions, by the lord proprietary, under its charter.

In Cromwell's time the government of Maryland was assumed by commissioners acting under the commonwealth of England; but in a few years Lord Baltimore was restored to his full powers, and remained undisturbed until the revolution of 1688, when the government was seized by the crown, and not restored to the proprietary till 1715. From this period there was no interruption to the proprietary rule until the revolution.

The territorial limits of Maryland were somewhat obscurely described in the charter; and long disputes arose about the boundaries, in the adjustment of which this state was reduced to her present limits.

The lines dividing Maryland from Pennsylvania and Delaware were fixed under an agreement between Thomas and Richard Penn and Lord Baltimore. See DELAWARE.

By this agreement, the rights of grantees under the respective proprietaries were saved, and provision made for confirming the titles by the government in whose jurisdiction the lands granted were situated. The boundary between Maryland and Virginia has never been finally settled. Maryland claimed to the south branch of the Potomac; but Virginia has held to the north branch, and exercised jurisdiction up to that line. The rights of the citizens of the respective states to fish and navigate the waters which divide Maryland and Virginia were fixed by compact between the two states in 1785.

The first constitution of this state was adopted on the eighth day of November, 1776. Subsequent constitutions were adopted in 1851 and 1864. The present constitution was adopted in 1867 and went into operations on the fifth of October in that year. An amendment adopted in 1912 authorized the legislature to abolish the punishment of voters who sell their votes, and to place the penalty on the vote buyer only.

MASON AND DIXON'S LINE. The boundary line between Pennsylvania on the north and Maryland on the south, celebrated before the extinction of slavery as the line of demarcation between the slave and the free states. It was run by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, commissioners in a dispute between the Penn Proprietors and Lord Baltimore. The line was carried 244 miles from the Delaware river where it was stopped by Indians. A resurvey was made in 1849, and in 1900 a new survey was authorized by the two states.

MASSACHISM. The state of sexual perversion in a man whose greatest sexual enjoyment is to feel subjugated and even to be maltreated and beaten by a woman. 2 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 739.

MASSACHUSETTS. One of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

The first important settlement on the territory of Massachusetts was made by the sect of Brownists or Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth in 1620. On March 4, 1628, Charles I. granted a charter to the Puritans under the name of "The Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in New England." This charter did not include the Plymouth colony which remained separate until 1691. The charter of 1628 continued till 1684, when it was adjudged forfeited. From this time till 1691, governors appointed by the king ruled the colony. In 1691, William and Mary granted a new charter, by which the colonies of Massachusetts Bay and New Plymouth, the province of Maine, and the territory called Nova Scotia, and the tract lying between Nova Scotia and Maine were incorporated into one government, by the name of the Province of Massachusetts Bay. 1 Story, Const. § 71. This charter, amended in 1726, continued until the adoption of the state constitution in 1780, which was drafted by John Adams. 4 Adams, Life and Works 213. It contained a provision for calling a convention for its revision or amendment in 1795, if two-thirds of the voters at an election held for this purpose should be in favor of it. Const. Mass. c. 6, art. x. But at that time a majority of the voters opposed any revision; Bradford's Hist. Mass. 294; and the constitution continued without amendment till 1820, when a convention was called for revising or amending it. Mass. Stat. 1820, c. 15. This convention proposed fourteen amendments, nine of which were accepted by the people. Since then, sixteen additional articles of amendment have been adopted at different times, making twenty-five in all. In 1853, a second convention for revising the constitution was held, which prepared an entirely new draft of a constitution. This draft, upon submission to the people, was rejected. In 1912 an amendment gave power to the General Court to develop and conserve the forestry resources of the state.

The constitution, as originally drafted, consists of two parts, one entitled A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the other The Frame of Government.

The name of the state is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

MASSES. Religious ceremonials or observances of the Roman Catholic Church.

A bequest for masses comes within the religious uses which are upheld as public charities; In re Schouler, 134 Mass. 427; Seibert's Appeal, 6 Atl. 105, 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 276; contra, Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 316, 16 N. E. 305, 2 Am. St. Rep. 420; in England, such a bequest is void; 15 Ch. D. 596; to the same effect, Festorazzi v. Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 18 South. 394, 25 L. R. A. 360, 53 Am. St. Rep. 48. In Ireland, if the trustee is willing to comply with the testator's direction, no one can interfere to prevent him; Ames, Lect. in Leg. Hist. 294, citing 7 Ir. Eq. 34, n.

See CHARITABLE USES; 7 Yale L. J. 363.

MASTER. In Scotland, the title of the eldest son of a viscount or baron. Cent. Dict.

MASTER AND SERVANT. The relation of master and servant exists between one who not only prescribes to the workman the end of his work, but directs, or at any moment may direct the means also, or retains the power of controlling the work; 4 E. & B. 570; 24 L. J. Q. B. 138; and one who is engaged, "not merely in doing work or service for him, but who is in his service, usually upon or about the premises of his employer, and subject to his direction and control therein, and who is, generally, liable to be dismissed;" Heygood v. State, 59 Ala. 51; for misconduct or disobedience of orders; Wadsworth Howland Co. v. Foster, 50 Ill. App. 513.

Where the hiring is for a definite term of service the master is entitled to the labor of the servants during the whole term, and may recover damages against any one who entices them away or harbors them knowing them to be in his service; Scidmore v. Smith, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 322; 2 E. & B. 216; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555. See ENTICE.

A master may justify an assault in defence of his servant and a servant of his master; the master because he has an interest in his servant not to be deprived of his service; the servant because it is a part of his duty, for which he receives his wages, to stand by and defend his master; 1 Bla. Com. 429; Lofft 215. Formerly it was said that a master might give moderate corporal punishment to his menial servant while under age; 2 Kent 261. See ASSAULT; APPRENTICESHIP; CORRECTION.

The master may dismiss a servant before the expiration of the term for which he is hired, for immoral conduct, wilful disobedience, or habitual neglect, and the servant will not in such case be entitled to his wages; Matthews v. Park Bros. & Co., 159 Pa. 579, 28 Atl. 435; Beggs v. Fowler, 82 Mo. 599; Leatherberry v. Odell, 7 Fed. 642; 11 Q. B. 742; Railey v. Lanahan, 34 La. Ann. 426; Dieringer v. Meyer, 42 Wis. 311, 24 Am. Rep. 415; Newman v. Reagan, 63 Ga. 755; but if the dismissal be without reasonable cause, the servant may recover damages from his master therefor, to such an amount as will indemnify him for the loss of wages during the time necessarily spent in obtaining new employment, and for the loss of the excess of any wages contracted for above the usual rate; 2 H. L. 607; Markham v. Markham, 110 N. C. 356, 14 S. E. 963; see Peterson v. Mayer, 46 Minn. 468, 49 N. W. 245, 13 L. R. A. 72. Any adequate cause for the dismissal of an employé known to the employer at the time thereof will justify the same, whether assigned or not, or though a different cause is assigned; Sterling Emery Wheel Co. v. Magee, 40 Ill. App. 340; or the cause may not have been known at the time of discharge; Odeneal v. Henry, 70 Miss. 172, 12 South. 154. The statute 5 Eliz. c. 4, required a master, in certain cases, to satisfy two justices of the peace that he had reasonable and sufficient cause for putting away his servant. It was repealed by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, s. 17.

Where a servant, after being discharged, sues for a breach of the contract of hiring before the termination of the period covered thereby, he can recover damages, up to, but not after, the time of the trial; Mt. Hope Cemetery Ass'n v. Weidenmann, 139 Ill. 67, 28 N. E. 834; see Darst v. Alkali Work, 81 Fed. 284; and such recovery will be a bar to any subsequent action upon the same contract; Booge v. R. R., 33 Mo. 212, 82 Am. Dec. 160.

When a servant becomes disabled from performing the duties of his contract, such contract is dissolved and the master may discharge him; Prior v. Flagler, 13 Misc. 115, 34 N. Y. Supp. 152; Johnson v. Walker, 155 Mass. 253, 29 N. E. 522, 31 Am. St. Rep. 550. An express agreement in the contract of employment that the work must be done to the satisfaction of the master, entitles him to discharge the servant for bad work at his discretion and constitutes the master the sole judge of the sufficiency or the quality of the work; Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496, 54 N. W. 157; Frary v. Rubber Co., 52 Minn. 264, 53 N. W. 1156, 18 L. R. A. 644; Allen v. Compress Co., 101 Ala. 574, 14 South. 362; and the testimony of the master that he is dissatisfied is decisive against evidence that he should be satisfied; Bush v. Koll, 2 Colo. App. 48, 29 Pac. 919; but see Klingenberg v. Werner, 16 N. Y. Supp. 853. The retention of the servant after his work becomes unsatisfactory is not a condonation and will not prevent a subsequent discharge for the same cause; Alexis Stoneware Mfg. Co. v. Young, 59 Ill. App. 226; and where such improperly performed services are accepted by the master as not in full compliance with the contract, but as the best he can get toward a performance, he may in a subsequent action by the employé for services recoup damages for breach of the contract; Ewing v. Janson, 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430. The question whether such services are accepted as a full compliance with the contract is for the jury; id.; as is the question whether the discharge of the servant is for a reasonable cause; Stover Mfg. Co. v. Latz, 42 Ill. App. 230. Where the servant was discharged for conduct which did not justify his dismissal, but there was other sufficient ground therefor, not known to the master at the time, it was held that the dismissal could be justified by proof of the after-discovered fact; 39 Ch. Div. 339.

Where the facts are undisputed, the right of the master to discharge his servant is a question of law; Edgecomb v. Buckhout, 83 Hun 168, 31 N. Y. Supp. 655. A contract of employment for an indefinite period may be terminated by either party at any time; Greenburg v. Early, 4 Misc. 99, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1009; but one employed for a definite period cannot be discharged through a mere caprice, but only on fair and reasonable grounds; Jackson v. Hospital, 3 Misc. 622, 23 N. Y. Supp. 119; Hand v. Coal Co., 143 Pa. 408, 22 Atl. 709; Morris v. Taliaferro, 44 Ill. App. 359. Merely because business was dull was held not to be a just cause for dismissal when the services were properly performed; Hydecker v. Williams, 18 N. Y. Supp. 586; nor were slight deviations from the master's instructions in immaterial matters after the master had retained his servant for a considerable length of time thereafter without complaint; Hamilton v. Love (Ind.) 43 N. E. 873; nor was the destruction by fire of the master's factory; 63 L. T. 756. Where a servant was illegally discharged and voluntarily sent in a written resignation which was accepted by his employer, it was held that he could not afterwards sue on the contract of service, even though his resignation were solely because of his illegal discharge; Wharton v. Christie, 53 N. J. L. 607, 23 Atl. 258. One cannot by a decree of court be compelled to retain another in his service; Reid Ice Cream Co. v. Stephens, 62 Ill. App. 334; and equity will not compel a master to keep a servant in his employment who for any cause is not acceptable to him, nor will it compel employés to continue in the employment of their master; Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 310, 11 C. C. A. 209, 24 U. S. App. 239, 25 L. R. A. 414.

When the employment contract requires notice before leaving, under penalty of forfeiture of wages, the return of the employé on the day following does not oblige the master to restore the employment and will not enable the servant to recover the forfeited wages; Tennessee Mfg. Co. v. James, 91 Tenn. 154, 18 S. W. 262, 15 L. R. A. 211, 30 Am. St. Rep. 865; and the master has been held entitled to substantial damages for a refusal of his servants to perform their duties under a contract providing for two weeks' notice on either side; 70 L. T. R. 116.

Where four partners agreed to employ the plaintiff as manager for a certain time and before the end of the period two of the partners retired and the other two were not willing to continue the employment, it was held that the dissolution of the partners amounted to a wrongful dismissal of the servant but that he was only entitled to nominal damages; [1895] 2 Q. B. 253.

The master is bound to provide necessaries for an infant servant unable to provide for himself; 2 Campb. 650; 1 Bla. Com. 427, n.; but not to furnish him with medical attendance and medicines during the illness; 4 C. & P. 80; Clark v. Waterman, 7 Vt. 76, 29 Am. Dec. 150.

The master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed by him in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved; L. R. 2 Ex. 259. Such liability springs out of the relation itself and does not depend on the stipulations of their contract. Within the scope of his authority, the servant may be said to be the medium through which the master acts; it follows, as a general rule, that for the tortious acts of the servant, the master is liable; Ward v. Young, 42 Ark. 542; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 6 Sup. Ct. 590, 29 L. Ed. 755; Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush (Ky.) 465; Sawyer v. Martins, 25 Ill. App. 521; 40 E. L. & Eq. 329; Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178; Colvin v. Peabody, 155 Mass. 104, 29 N. E. 59; Electric Power Co. v. Telegraph Co., 75 Hun 68, 27 N. Y. Supp. 93; Brunner v. Telephone Co., 160 Pa. 300, 28 Atl. 690; Ritchie v. Waller, 63 Conn. 155, 28 Atl. 29, 27 L. R. A. 161, 38 Am. St. Rep. 361; although contrary to his express orders, if not done in wilful disobedience of those orders; Southwick v. Estes, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 385; Armstrong v. Cooley, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 509; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 132 U. S. 518, 10 Sup. Ct. 175, 33 L. Ed. 440.

The reason for this rule has been expounded by Shaw, C. J., in the leading American case on this subject: "Every man, in the management of his own affairs, whether by himself or by his agents or servants, shall so conduct them as not to injure another; and if he does not, and another thereby sustains damage, he must answer for it." Farwell v. Railroad Corp., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339; followed in 3 Macq. 316. But this case was decided on another point involving the question of the liability of a master for the negligence of a fellow servant, as to which see infra.

The master is not liable for acts committed out of the course of his employment; Church v. Mansfield, 20 Conn. 284; Smith v. Spitz, 156 Mass. 319, 31 N. E. 5; Louisville, N. O. & T. Ry. Co. v. Douglass, 69 Miss. 723, 11 South. 933, 30 Am. St. Rep. 582; Gregory's Adm'r v. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 606, 16 S. E. 819; 16 E. L. & Eq. 448; Wyllie v. Palmer, 63 Hun 8, 17 N. Y. Supp. 434; nor for the wilful trespasses of his servants; 1 East 106; Thames Steamboat Co. v. R. Co., 24 Conn. 40, 63 Am. Dec. 154; unless committed by his command or with his assent; Sloan v. State, 8 Ind. 312; 2 Stra. 885.

The master is bound to furnish suitable means and resources to accomplish the work; Stephenson v. Duncan, 73 Wis. 406, 41 N. W. 337, 9 Am. St. Rep. 806; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. Ry. Co. v. Roesch, 126 Ind. 445, 26 N. E. 171; Wormell v. R. Co., 79 Me. 404, 10 Atl. 49, 1 Am. St. Rep. 321; Ford v. R. Co., 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Baker v. R. Co., 95 Pa. 211, 40 Am. Rep. 634; Kain v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 376; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 31 Ohio St. 479; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Delahunty, 53 Tex. 206; Long v. Pacific Railroad, 65 Mo. 225; Union Pac. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 16 Sup. Ct. 618, 40 L. Ed. 766; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 24 Sup. Ct. 24, 48 L. Ed. 96; 37 E. L. & Eq. 281; to exercise ordinary care to provide his servants a reasonably safe place for work; Heckman v. Mackey, 35 Fed. 353; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Fox, 31 Kan. 586, 3 Pac. 320; Hulehan v. R. Co., 68 Wis. 520, 32 N. W. 529; Kelly v. Telephone Co., 34 Minn. 321, 25 N. W. 706; Smith v. Car Works, 60 Mich. 501, 27 N. W. 662, 1 Am. St. Rep. 542; Porter v. Coal Co., 84 Wis. 418, 54 N. W. 1019; to use ordinary care to keep machinery in a safe condition, and he is not relieved from that obligation by delegating the management of a machine to a servant; Moynihan v. Hills Co., 146 Mass. 586, 16 N. E. 574, 4 Am. St. Rep. 348. But it has been held that he is only bound to furnish means and resources which to his own knowledge are not defective; 16 C. B. N. S. 669; and that he is not bound to furnish the newest, safest, and best appliances for the use of his employés, nor is he an insurer of their safety; he may furnish such appliances as are ordinarily sufficient for the purpose intended, and such as can, with reasonable care, be used without danger; Wormell v. R. Co., 79 Me. 404, 10 Atl. 49, 1 Am. St. Rep. 321; Wilson v. Linen Co., 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. McCormick, 74 Ind. 440; Lyttle v. Ry. Co., 84 Mich. 289, 47 N. W. 571; Carlson v. Bridge Co., 132 N. Y. 278, 30 N. E. 750; Dooner v. Canal Co., 171 Pa. 581, 33 Atl. 415; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Avery, 109 Ill. 314; Lawless v. R. Co., 136 Mass. 1. He is not liable for hidden defects of which he had no knowledge; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Scheuring, 4 Ill. App. 533; nor for known defects, unless they are such as, by the exercise of due care, he might have known to be dangerous; Morris v. Gleason, 1 Ill. App. 510; and the mere fact of injury received by the servant raises no presumption of negligence on the part of the master; Knight v. Cooper, 36 W. Va. 232, 14 S. E. 999; but it has been held that an employé has a right to suppose that his master has used reasonable care in guarding against defects in appliances furnished for his use; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Nunnally's Adm'r, 88 Va. 546, 14 S. E. 367; and see Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Co. v. Hayes, 128 Pa. 294, 18 Atl. 387, 5 L. R. A. 441, 15 Am. St. Rep. 680, where it was held that though better machinery existed, yet, if the machine by which the servant was injured was in general use and if reasonably safe when prudently used, the master was not liable; Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Sentmeyer, 92 Pa. 276, 37 Am. Rep. 684. In order to hold an employer liable for injuries caused by the dangerous condition of a building, the servant must allege distinctly both that the master knew of the danger and the servant was ignorant of it; 13 Q. B. D. 259; 18 id. 685; 56 L. J. Q. B. 340.

The rule that an employé has a right to assume that a reasonably safe place has been secured for him to work in is subject to the exception that where there exists a defect known to him or plainly observable, he cannot recover for an injury caused by it; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 18 Sup. Ct. 777, 42 L. Ed. 1188; and where there is reasonable ground for difference of opinion as to whether the defect was plainly observable by him, it is a question for the jury, otherwise the court may direct a verdict; Lindsay v. R. Co., 112 Fed. 384, 50 C. C. A. 298.

In an action by an employé for damages resulting from the negligence of his employer in furnishing defective appliances, it is no defence to show that he might have been injured in the same manner if the appliances had been in good condition; Denver, T. & Ft. W. R. Co. v. Smock, 23 Colo. 456, 48 Pac. 681. If the servant knows that he is running a risk, through defective machinery or otherwise, he cannot recover for injuries; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Orr, 59 Ill. App. 260; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S.

377, 5 Sup. Ct. 184, 28 L. Ed. 787; Dixon v. Telégraph Co., 71 Fed. 143; Knisley v. Pratt, 148 N. Y. 372, 42 N. E. 986, 32 L. R. A. 367; Stuart v. Mfg. Co., 15 Ind. App. 184, 43 N. E. 961; Wood v. Heiges, 83 Md. 257, 34 Atl. 872; Dehning v. Iron Works, 46 Neb. 556, 65 N. W. 186; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Spellman (Tex.) 34 S. W. 298; Greene v. Telegraph Co., 72 Fed. 250; Content v. R. Co., 165 Mass. 267, 43 N. E. 94; Quigley v. Thomas G. Plant Co., 165 Mass. 368, 43 N. E. 205; Hazen v. Lumber Co., 91 Wis. 208, 64 N. W. 857; Evansville & R. R. Co. v. Henderson, 142 Ind. 596, 42 N. E. 216; Windover v. R. Co., 4 App. Div. 202, 38 N. Y. Supp. 591; Reed v. Stockmeyer, 74 Fed. 186, 20 C. C. A. 381; but see 21 Can. S. C. R. 581; Seaboard Mfg. Co. v. Woodson, 98 Ala. 378, 11 South. 733. An employé assumes the ordinary risks of his employment; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGinnis, 49 Neb. 655, 68 N. W. 1058; Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills v. Wilson, 89 Ga. 318, 15 S. E. 322; and also risks arising from unsafe premises which are known to him or apparent and obvious to persons of his experience and understanding if he voluntarily enters into the employment or after he enters makes no complaint or objection; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGinnis, 49 Neb. 655, 68 N. W. 1058.

The common tools doctrine. Where tools are so simple that their mechanism, structure, and defects, if they have any, are as obvious to the workman as to the master, then and upon this account he assumes the risks attending the use of them; Vanderpool v. Partridge, 79 Neb. 165. But this rule can have no application where the appliance is of such character as that it cannot be classified as a single tool or implement in mechanical use. In such a case the ordinary rule applies that the workman assumes such risks as are open and obvious while pursuing his work, and he assumes no risks that are not apparent to the senses in that way; Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., 206 Fed. 157, 163, 124 C. C. A. 223, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123.

Under the federal employers' liability act of 1908, the doctrine of the assumption of risk was abolished in all cases where it appears that the employer has failed to furnish safety appliances as required by the act; the doctrine remains in other cases.

In England mere knowledge of a dangerous defect in the plant or system of work, whether existing at the time of employment or supervening thereafter, does not debar the servant from recovery; [1899] Q. B. 630. He may waive the protection of the employers' liability act by express consent; 9 Q. B. Div. 357. Continuance in an employment with like knowledge of supervening defects, and a complaint of the same to the employer, is an assumption of the risk; Lamson v. Tool Co., 177 Mass. 145, 58 N. E. 585, 83 Am. St. Rep. 267; Birmingham Railway & Electric Co. v. Allen, 99 Ala. 374, 13 South. 8, 20 L. R. A. 457.

Where a statute has imposed upon a master the duty of taking some particular precaution to protect his servants, and the servant continues in the employment with knowledge that the statutory precaution was not afforded, he does not thereby assent to the breach of duty; 19 Q. B. Div. 423; contra, Knisley v. Pratt, 148 N. Y. 372, 42 N. E. 986, 32 L. R. A. 367; but a servant may, by his own contributory negligence, be precluded from a recovery; Schlemmer v. R. Co., 207 Pa. 198, 56 Atl. 417. This case (on the federal safety appliance act) was reversed in 205 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 51 L. Ed. 681, as based on an erroneous view of the act. Though the employé assumes all the risks incident to the service, he does not assume those created by the negligence of the master, and assumes only such risks as he knows to exist, or may know by ordinary care; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Touhey, 67 Ark. 209, 54 S. W. 577, 77 Am. St. Rep. 109. A servant by continuing in the employment without complaint assumes the risks of defects and dangers which arise during the service to the same extent that he assumes those which existed when he entered the service; St. Louis Cordage v. Miller, 126 Fed. 495, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551. The decisions are quite irreconcilable as to whether a servant assumes risks which result from breaches of statutory or ordinance provisions; Rector v. Mill Co., 41 Wash. 556, 84 Pac. 7; Hailey v. Ry. Co., 113 La. 533, 37 South. 131. As to the incompetency or negligence of fellow servants, see supra; EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS.

When a miner was engaged by order of his foreman in excavating a place which the foreman assured him was safe, he had a right to rely on such assurance, and did not assume the risk incident to the surroundings; Faulkner v. Min. Co., 23 Utah 437, 66 Pac. 799. The employé only assumes such risks as are ordinary and usual. "Usual" is that which is common, frequent, customary; "ordinary" is that which is often recurring; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Leach, 208 Ill. 198, 70 N. E. 222, 100 Am. St. Rep. 216. A master is only bound to furnish his servant a reasonably safe place in which to do the work required, viewed from the nature and dangers of the employment, and, to the extent that the dangers of the employment cannot be reasonably expected to be guarded against, the risk is assumed by the servant. Kentucky Freestone Co. v. McGee, 118 Ky. 306, 80 S. W. 1113. The servant does not assume the risk of the master's failure to provide a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe appliances; Middle Georgia & A. Ry. Co. v. Barnett, 104 Ga. 582, 30 S. E. 771; Montgomery Coal Co. v. Barringer, 218 Ill. 327, 75 N. E. 900. A lineman, engaged in climbing telegraph poles, assumes the risk incident to the decayed and unsound condition of the poles; Ewald v. R. Co., 107 Ill. App. 294; the risk of being injured by an electric wire imperfectly insulated was not assumed by a workman engaged in carrying rails for the reconstruction of overhead electric lines; Thompson v. R. Co., 108 La. 52, 32 South. 177. Where the deceased, a line inspector, was killed by coming in contact with a live wire improperly insulated, there can be no recovery for his death based on his master's negligence, for it resulted from a risk incident to the employment which he assumed; Bowers v. Electric Co., 100 Va. 533, 42 S. E. 296. The risk of injury to a servant from defective machinery is primarily on the master, and remains on him unless the servant voluntarily assumes it; Dempsey v. Sawyer, 95 Me. 295, 49 Atl. 1035. Reasonable care and precaution must be used to furnish safe appliances, and in keeping them in good order, and the servant does not assume the risk of danger from the use of unsafe machinery, unless the defects are so obvious that a reasonably prudent man would not attempt to use them; Bender v. Ry. Co., 137 Mo. 240, 37 S. W. 132. A servant assumes the risk of using a machine after the removal of a hood and blowpipe with which it had previously been covered; Erickson v. Mfg. Co., 140 Mich. 434, 103 N. W. 828. A brakeman on a freight train assumes the risks which inclement weather conditions add to his employment; Martin v. R. Co. (Iowa) 87 N. W. 654. A section hand on a railway assumes the risk of injury from such sparks and cinders as may be thrown off by the engines in the ordinary operation of the road, while he is necessarily standing beside the track as trains pass; Duree v. Ry. Co., 118 Ia. 640, 92 N. W. 890. When a servant enters upon an employment which is from its nature necessarily hazardous, he assumes all the usual risks and perils incident to the service; Railsback v. Turnpike Co., 10 Ind. App. 622, 38 N. E. 221. The rule that a master must provide a safe place for his servant to work does not apply where the servant is engaged in making a dangerous place safe, and the dangers incident to the employment are assumed; Jennings v. Ingle, 35 Ind. App. 153, 73 N. E. 945. Where an employé, having opportunity of becoming acquainted with the risks of his situation, accepts them, he cannot complain if subsequently injured by such exposure; Auburn v. Tube Works Co., 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 568; Ames v. Ry. Co., 135 Ind. 363, 35 N. E. 117. Servants are expected to use reasonable care in examining their surroundings; Batterson v. Ry. Co., 53 Mich. 125, 18 N. W. 584. A servant who, knowing of a danger not within the scope of his assumed risk, nevertheless risks its consequences, if injured, cannot hold the master liable therefor; Kentucky Freestone Co. v. McGee, 118 Ky. 306, 80 S. W. 1113. A servant does not assume the risk resulting from the employment of an incompetent fellow servant unless he has notice of such incompetency; Metropolitan West Side Elevated Ry. Co. v. Fortin, 203 Ill. 454, 67 N. E. 977.

The doctrine of assumption of known risks is applicable to minors, where there is positive evidence that the risk in question was understood; Williams v. Coke Co., 55 W. Va. 84, 46 S. E. 802. An employé may take the risk of an obvious danger, although the fear of losing his place is one of the motives for taking it; Lamson v. Tool Co., 177 Mass. 144, 58 N. E. 585, 83 Am. St. Rep. 267.

Where a servant of inferior rank is directed to do work in a manner which the superior giving the order knew to be dangerous, and which resulted in injury, the doctrine of assumption of risk does not apply; Rogers v. Overton, 87 Ind. 410. The risk of the negligence of a fellow servant is assumed, but not that of the master; Jenkins v. Min. Co., 24 Utah 513, 68 Pac. 845.

In Choctaw, O. & G. R. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 68, 24 Sup. Ct. 24, 48 L. Ed. 96 (arising under safety appliance acts), it was said: "The question of assumption of risk is quite apart from that of contributory negligence. The servant has the right to assume that the master has used due diligence to provide suitable appliances in the operation of his business, and he does not assume the risk of the employer's negligence in performing such duties. The employé is not obliged to pass judgment upon the employer's methods of transacting his business, but he may assume that reasonable care will be used in furnishing the appliances necessary for its operation. This rule is subject to the exception that where a defect is known to the employé, or is so patent as to be readily observed by him, he cannot continue to use the defective apparatus in the face of knowledge and without objection, without assuming the hazard incident to such a situation. In other words, if he knows of a defect, or it is so plainly observable that he may be presumed to know of it, and continues in the master's employ without objection, he is taken to have made his election to continue in the employ of the master, notwithstanding the defect, and in such case cannot recover."

Under sections 3 and 4 of the federal employers' liability act, 35 Stat. at Large, 65, the question of assumption of risk is immaterial; Johnson v. R. Co., 178 Fed. 643, 102 C. C. A. 89; Wright v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 94.

"The adult servant is presumed to possess ordinary intelligence, judgment, and discretion to appreciate such dangers incident to his employment as are open and obvious, and knowledge of them on his part will be presumed or imputed to him as matter of law; Luebke v. Mach. Works, 88 Wis. 442, 60 N. W. 711, 43 Am. St. Rep. 913; and the master is not bound to warn him of such danger;" Gaertner v. Schmitt, 21 App. Div. 403, 47 N. Y. Supp. 521.

This presumption is strengthened when the servant is also an expert in his employment; Goltz v. R. Co., 76 Wis. 136, 44 N. W. 752; where the whole subject is considered and the authorities collected. An employé who under such circumstances is injured by reason of a defect in a tube easily discoverable, is guilty of contributory negligence; Luebke v. Mach. Works, 88 Wis. 442, 60 N. W. 711, 43 Am. St. Rep. 913; if he have a thorough knowledge of the risk and voluntarily undertakes it; 63 L. T. 287.

Where a person without fault is placed in a situation of danger, he is not to be held to the exercise of the same care and caution that prudent persons would exercise where no danger was present, nor is he guilty of contributory negligence because he fails to make the most judicious choice between hazards presented; the question is not what a careful person would do under ordinary circumstances, but what he might reasonably be expected to do in the presence of the peril, and is for the jury; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Snyder, 55 Ohio St. 342, 45 N. E. 559, 60 Am. St. Rep. 700; as is the question of contributory negligence and of whether one had assumed the risk who is injured whilst obeying the order of a foreman; 12 U. S. App. 534.

The doctrine of the assumption of risk is that the servant assumes the risk of dangers incident to the business, but not of the master's negligence; Hough v. Ry. Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Wabash Ry. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 2 Sup. Ct. 932, 27 L. Ed. 605; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 6 Sup. Ct. 590, 29 L. Ed. 755; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 14 Sup. Ct. 978, 38 L. Ed. 958.

The question of such assumption of risk is quite apart from that of contributory negligence, and it applies only where the defect is known to the employé or is so patent as to be readily observed by him, and, unless it is clearly established by the evidence, the question should be left to the jury; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 24 Sup. Ct. 24, 48 L. Ed. 96.

The mere knowledge and assent of an immediate superior, to a violation by an employé of a known rule of a company, will not as a matter of law relieve the employé from the consequences of such violation; 19 U. S. App. 586. See Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley, 63 Fed. 231, 12 C. C. A. 595; but one obeying orders of a superior does not assume the risk of the latter's negligence; Woodward Iron Co. v. Andrews, 114 Ala. 243, 21 South. 440. If the servant, knowing a defect existed, gave notice to his employer of it, and was promised that it would be remedied, and continued his work in reliance on this promise, he is not, in law, guilty of contributory negligence; Hough v. Ry. Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Liehe, 17 Colo. 280, 29 Pac. 175; New Jersey & N. Y. R. Co. v. Young, 49 Fed. 723, 1 C. C. A. 428, 1 U. S. App. 96; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 51 Fed. 562, 2 C. C. A. 380, 7 U. S. App. 359; Chicago & G. W. R. Co. v. Travis, 44 Ill. App. 466. See Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 10 Sup. Ct. 1044, 34 L. Ed. 235; St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Kelton, 55 Ark. 483, 18 S. W. 933.

Fellow Servant. The relation of the fellow servant has been defined thus: "Those who engage in the same common pursuit under the same general control." Cooley, Torts 541, n. 1. All who serve the same master; work under the same control; derive authority and compensation from the same common source; are engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades or departments of it. L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 326; Warner v. Ry. Co., 39 N. Y. 468; 2 Thomp. Negl. 1026. "All servants in the employ of the same master, subject to the same general control, paid from a common fund, and engaged in promoting or accomplishing the same common object." Beach, Contrib. Neg. 338. Those who have in view a general common object. L. R. 1 Q. B. 149, 155; 35 L. J. Q. B. 23. By the Texas act of 1893 the essential requirements are: 1, That they be engaged in the common service; 2, in the same grade of employment; 3, be working together at the same time and place; 4, be working for a common purpose.

Where a master uses due diligence in the selection of competent and trusty servants, and furnishes them with suitable means to perform the service in which he employs them, he is not answerable to one of them for an injury received by him in consequence of the carelessness of another while both are engaged in the same service; Farwell v. Railroad Corp., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 39 Am. Dec. 339; 3 M. & W. 1; Hough v. Ry. Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Barlow v. Casting Co., 154 Pa. 130, 26 Atl. 12; Murphy v. R. Co., 88 N. Y. 146, 42 Am. Rep. 240; Deehan v. The Bolvia, 59 Fed. 626; Casey's Adm'r v. R. Co., 84 Ky. 79; Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Rhodes, 56 Ga. 645; Riley v. Ry. Co., 27 W. Va. 145; Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Marcelles, 59 Tex. 334; Brown v. Sennett, 68 Cal. 225, 9 Pac. 74, 58 Am. Rep. 8; Young v. Railroad, 168 Mass. 219, 46 N. E. 624; Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Ogden, 3 Colo. 499. The reasons for the rule have been thus stated: "In considering the rights and obligations arising out of particular relations, it is competent for courts of justice to regard considerations of policy and general convenience, and to draw from them such rules as will, in their practical application, best promote the safety and security of all parties concerned. Where several persons are employed in the conduct of one common enterprise or undertaking, and the safety of each depends to a great extent on the care and skill with which each other shall perform his appropriate duty, each is generally an observer of the conduct of the others, can give notice of any misconduct, incapacity, or neglect of duty, and leave the service if the common employer will not take such precautions and employ such agents as the safety of the whole party may require. By these means the safety of each will be more effectually secured than could be done by a resort to the common employer for indemnity in case of loss by the negligence of each other." Farwell v. Railroad Corp., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 39 Am. Dec. 339. The rule does not extend to the exemption of the servants from liability to a fellow servant for his negligence; Griffiths v. Wolfram, 22 Minn. 185; Hinds v. Harbow, 58 Ind. 121; Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102, 39 Am. Rep. 437; 11 Ex. 832; L. R. 3 Exch. D. 341. See Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 5 Sup. Ct. 184, 28 L. Ed. 787, for a review of the origin of the doctrine as to fellow servants.

If the master is negligent, the concurring negligence of a fellow servant is no defence; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Eberhart (Tex.) 40 S. W. 1060. Where the employer knew, or ought to have known, that a servant was incompetent, the former is liable to a fellow servant for the negligence of the incompetent servant; Huntsinger v. Trexler, 181 Pa. 497, 37 Atl. 574.

Vice Principal. If the master entrusts the entire supervision of his business, or of a distinct department, to his employé, such an employé may be termed a general vice principal, for whose negligence the master is liable; but if he entrusts only the discharge of his absolute personal duties, such as to employ competent co-workers, to an employé, the latter may be termed a special vice principal, for whose negligence only in the discharge of these absolute personal duties the master becomes liable; City of Minneapolis v. Lundin, 58 Fed. 525, 7 C. C. A. 344, 19 U. S. App. 245.

The "shift boss" in a mine whose business it is to direct miners where to work, when performing that duty, acts in the capacity of master or vice principal and if he knows of a concealed danger, such as an unexploded blast, at the place where he sets a miner to work, of the existence of which the latter is ignorant and unable with ordinary care to ascertain and does not inform him thereof, the master is liable; McMahon v. Mining Co., 95 Wis. 308, 70 N. W. 478, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117.

The test in determining what is a vice principal seems to be not from the grade or rank of the service, but from the character of the act performed; Flike v. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Ford v. R. Co., 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; McKenney, Fellow Serv. § 23. It has been held by some courts that a servant who is a vice principal, or who acts in the place of the master, is not a fellow servant with those beneath him, or, in other words, that the master is responsible to inferior servants for the act of their superiors; City of Minneapolis v. Lundin, 58 Fed. 525, 7 C. C. A. 344, 19 U. S. App. 245; Hoke v. Ry. Co., 88 Mo. 360; East T. & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Collins, 85 Tenn. 227, 1 S. W. 883; Cowles v. R. Co., 84 N. C. 309, 37 Am. Rep. 620; Lake S. & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Lavalley, 36 Ohio St. 221; Moon's Adm'r v. R. Co., 78 Va. 745, 49 Am. Rep. 401; Atlanta Cotton Factory Co. v. Speer, 69 Ga. 137, 47 Am. Rep. 750; Cooper v. Central R., 44 Ia. 134; Sullivan's Adm'r v. Bridge Co., 9 Bush (Ky.) 81; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 93 Ill. 302, 34 Am. Rep. 168; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Phelps, 90 Va. 665, 19 S. E. 652; Clyde v. R. Co., 59 Fed. 394; Morrisey v. Hughes, 65 Vt. 553, 27 Atl. 205; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Callaghan, 56 Fed. 988, 6 C. C. A. 205; Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Danielson, 57 Fed. 915, 6 C. C. A. 636; Hough v. Ry. Co., 100 U. S. 214, 25 L. Ed. 612; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 5 Sup. Ct. 184, 28 L. Ed. 787; Woods v. Lindvall, 48 Fed. 62, 1 C. C. A. 37; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 51 Fed. 182, 2 C. C. A. 157. On the other hand this broad doctrine has been denied in some jurisdictions; Conley v. Portland, 78 Me. 217, 3 Atl. 658; Keystone Bridge Co. v. Newberry, 96 Pa. 246, 42 Am. Rep. 543; Holden v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 268, 37 Am. Rep. 343; Kelley v. Ryus, 48 Kan. 120, 29 Pac. 144; L. R. 1 Sc. App. 326; L. R. 10 Q. B. 62; O'Connell v. R. Co., 20 Md. 212, 83 Am. Dec. 549; Brazil & C. Coal Co. v. Cain, 98 Ind. 282; Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 34, 3 N. W. 240; Fraker v. R. Co., 32 Minn. 54, 19 N. W. 349; McLean v. Mining Co., 51 Cal. 255. Another rule, established in some jurisdictions, is that in any extensive business, divided into distinct departments, a laborer in one department is not a fellow servant with a laborer in another and separate department; Cooper v. Mullins, 30 Ga. 150, 76 Am. Dec. 638; Nashville & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 37; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 77 Ill. 391. And this rule has also been denied by some courts, except in cases where the master has surrendered the oversight of the department and put it in the hands of an agent; Holden v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 268, 37 Am. Rep. 343; New York, L. E. & W. R. R. Co. v. Bell, 112 Pa. 400, 4 Atl. 50; Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 438, 5 Atl. 338; Quincy Mining Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 34, 3 N. W. 240; Foster v. Ry. Co., 14 Minn. 360 (Gil. 277). If the master has carefully selected the subordinate, the vice principal cannot recover; McGrory v. R. Co., 90 Ark. 210, 118 S. W. 710, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301, 134 Am. St. Rep. 24; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Howard, 97 Tex. 513, 80 S. W.

229. A full note on the vice principal rule will be found in 51 L. R. A. 513.

The rule as to fellow servants depends on the law of the place where the accident occurs; Boston & M. R. Co. v. McDuffey, 79 Fed. 934, 25 C. C. A. 247; Borgman v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 667; but see Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 51 Fed. 182, 2 C. C. A. 157. The decisions on the whole subject are said to be in inextricable confusion; 30 Am. L. Rev. 840.

Who are fellow servants. The following are held to be fellow servants: Baggage master and switch tender; Roberts v. R. Co., 33 Minn. 218, 22 N. W. 389; boatswain and stevedore; The Furnessia, 30 Fed. 878; brakeman and car inspector; St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. v. Gaines, 46 Ark. 555; brakeman and conductor taking engineer's place on a locomotive; Rodman v. R. Co., 55 Mich. 57, 20 N. W. 788, 54 Am. Rep. 348; laborer in a tunnel and an employé who provided him with tools; McAndrews v. Burns, 39 N. J. L. 117; brakeman and fireman; Henry v. Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 497, 13 N. W. 832; director of brakeman and brakeman; Rains v. Ry. Co., 71 Mo. 164, 36 Am. Rep. 459; brakeman and station master; Hodgkins v. R. Co., 119 Mass. 419; brakeman and station agent; Toner v. Ry. Co., 69 Wis. 188, 31 N. W. 104, 33 N. W. 433; fireman and switch tender; Harvey v. R. Co., 88 N. Y. 481; brakeman and train despatcher; Robertson v. R. Co., 78 Ind. 77, 41 Am. Rep. 552; brakeman and conductor; Lawless v. R. Co., 136 Mass. 1 (contra, Clark v. Hughes, 51 Neb. 780, 71 N. W. 776); International & G. N. R. Co. v. Moore, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 41 S. W. 70; mate and common sailor; Benson v. Goodwin, 147 Mass. 237, 17 N. E. 517; captain and the crew; [1892] 1 Q. B. 58; snow shoveller and conductor; Howland v. Ry. Co., 54 Wis. 226, 11 N. W. 529; tunnel repairer and trainman; Capper v. Ry. Co., 103 Ind. 305, 2 N. E. 749; agent and manager of express company and an ordinary employé; Dwyer v. Exp. Co., 55 Wis. 453, 13 N. W. 471; mine boss and a driver boy; Waddell v. Simoson, 112 Pa. 567, 4 Atl. 725; mine boss and miner; Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 72, 3 Atl. 813; runner of an hoisting engine and men in shaft; Buckley v. Min. Co., 14 Fed. 833; engineer and brakeman; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Rush, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 145; brakeman on a regular train and the conductor on a wild train; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Poirier, 167 U. S. 48, 17 Sup. Ct. 741, 42 L. Ed. 72; a winchman and a man working in the hold of a vessel; The Peninsular, 79 Fed. 972; conductor and engineer of a railroad train and an employé of the same company riding on a hand car; Wright v. Ry. Co., 80 Fed. 260; conductor and train hand; Jackson v. R. Co., 43 W. Va. 380, 27 S. E. 278, 31 S. E. 258, 46 L. R. A. 337; a section hand unloading ties from a train and a section foreman temporarily in charge of a train; Morch v. Ry. Co., 113 Mich. 154, 71 N. W. 464; gang boss on a railroad and those employed under him; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 16 Sup. Ct. 843, 40 L. Ed. 994 (reversing id., 51 Fed. 182, 2 C. C. A. 157, Fuller, C. Where a mining corporation is under the control of a manager, and is divided into three departments, each with a superintendent under the general manager, and in one of the departments there are several gangs of workmen, the foreman of one of these gangs, whether he has or has not authority to engage and discharge the men under him, is a fellow servant with them; Alaska Treadwell Gold Min. Co. v. Whelan, 168 U. S. 86, 18 Sup. Ct. 40, 42 L. Ed. 390.

The following have been held not to be fellow servants: Wheel-inspector and baggage man and train hands; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 34 Fed. 616; engineer and boiler repairer; Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Mason, 109 Pa. 296, 58 Am. Rep. 722; brakeman and road master; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 31 Kan. 197, 1 Pac. 644; brakeman and track repairer; Torians v. R. W. 447; the trainmen of a railroad company and the employés of another company over whose road the train is run; Tierney v. R. Co., 85 Hun 146, 32 N. Y. Supp. 627; the conductor of a train and trainmen; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 5 Sup. Ct. 184, 28 L. Ed. 787; conductor and engineer; id., Bradley, Matthews, Gray, and Blatchford, JJ., dissenting.

The sending of one's servant to work for another and to be under the immediate control of the latter's foreman, does not thereby make him a fellow servant of the other employés, and he can have no recovery for injuries occasioned by their negligence; Murray v. Dwight, 15 App. Div. 241, 44 N. Y. Supp. 234.

MASTER IN CHANCERY. An officer of a court of chancery, who acts as an assistant to the chancellor. Stewart v. Turner, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 458; Brush v. Blanchard, 19 Ill. 31.

A master in chancery is an officer appointed by a court to assist it in various proceedings incidental to the progress of the case before it, and is usually employed to take and state accounts, to take and report testimony, and to perform such duties as require computation of interest, the value of annuities, the amount of damages in particular cases, the auditing and ascertaining of liens upon property involved, and similar services. The information which he may communicate by his findings in such cases, upon the evidence presented to him, is merely advisory to the court, which it may accept and act upon, or disregard in whole or in part, according to its own judgment as to the weight of the evidence; Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 26 L. Ed. 800.

The masters were originally clerks associated with the chancellor, to discharge some of the more mechanical duties of his office. They were called collaterales, socii and preceptores, and gradually increased in number until there were twelve of them. They obtained the title of masters in the reign of Edw. III. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 360-367; Whipple v. Brown, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 436; In re Gibbes, 1 Des. Ch. (S. C.) 587. They originally superintended the issue of original writs; acted occasionally as the king's secretary; attended the House of Lords without writs; and assisted the Council and Chancery. Later, their chief duty was to assist the Chancellor in hearing cases, and he could delegate to them the duty of hearing and reporting upon certain parts of a case. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 212. As to the early history of masters, see Scrutton, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 215. The office was abolished in England by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80. At present each of the three groups of puisne judges in the Chancery Division has four masters, who deal with any matter which they are directed by a judge to investigate. The judges in the King's Bench Division are assisted by nine masters, who must have been practising barristers or special pleaders or solicitors of five years' standing. The central office of the Supreme Court is under their superintendence and they can transact all such interlocutory business and exercise such authority as a judge in chambers, except in certain specified cases.

In the United States, officers of this name exist in many of the states, with similar powers to those exercised by the English masters, but variously modified, restricted, and enlarged by statute, and in some of the states similar officers are called commissioners and by other titles.

The master's office is a branch of the court and he has power to control the proceedings of parties before him; Stewart v. Turner, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 458.

In Com. v. Archbald, 195 Pa. 317, 46 Atl. 5, it is pointed out that a practice had grown up in the equity courts of Pennsylvania prior to 1860 by which the "instrumentalities of equity were not infrequently applied to matters not within their province by the established practice of the English chancery." The office of master outgrew its position as a mere executive or administrative arm of the court, and usurped, or had imposed upon it, functions which were strictly judicial. The office of master "is a necessary part of the equipment of a court of chancery, extending back at least to the time of Edward III"; Bennet, Master's Office in the Court of Chancery, 1.

It is not within the general province of a master to pass upon all the issues in an equity case, nor is it competent for the court to refer the entire decision of a case to him without the consent of the parties. It cannot, of its own motion, or upon the request of one party, abdicate its duty to determine by its own judgment the controversy presented, and devolve that duty upon any of its officers; Field, J., in Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U. S. 524, 9 Sup. Ct. 355, 32 L. Ed. 764. But when the parties consent to the reference of a case to a master to hear and decide all the issues therein and such reference is entered as a rule of the court, the determinations of the master are not subject to be set aside and disregarded at the mere discretion of the court. A reference by consent of parties of an entire case, though not strictly a submission of the controversy to arbitration—a proceeding which is governed by special rule—is a submission of the controversy to a tribunal of the parties' own selection, to be governed in its conduct by the rules applicable to the administration of justice in tribunals established by law. Its findings, like those of an independent tribunal, are to be taken as presumptively correct, to be reviewed under the reservation contained in the consent and order of the court when there has been manifest error in the consideration given to the evidence, or in the application of the law, but not otherwise; id.

The reference of a whole case to a master has become in late years a matter of more common occurrence than formerly, though it has always been within the power of a court of chancery, with the consent of both parties, to order such a reference. The power is incident to all courts of superior jurisdiction, and is covered in most of the states by statutes; Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U. S. 525, 9 Sup. Ct. 355, 32 L. Ed. 764, followed in Furrer v. Ferris, 145 U. S. 132, 12 Sup. Ct. 821, 36 L. Ed. 649. Under the equity rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, of February 1, 1913 (33 Sup. Ct. xix), a reference of an equity case to a master is exceptional save in matters of account; it is made only on cause shown. Rules 59 to 67 regulate the practice. Rule 68 authorizes the district judge to appoint standing masters and masters pro hac vice in any particular case.

In most jurisdictions, where an action is properly in equity, the court has a right to refer it to a master, without consent of parties; State v. Orwig, 25 Ia. 280; and such was the regular practice in Pennsylvania until new rules, made by the supreme court, required equity cases to be tried by the judges in open court on viva voce testimony. A case cannot be referred to a master to report as to law and facts on evidence taken before another master; Coel v. Glos, 232 Ill. 142, 83 N. E. 529, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 213.

The duties of the masters are, generally; first, to take accounts and make computations; Ransom v. Winn, 18 How. (U. S.) 295, 15 L. Ed. 388; Merriam v. Barton, 14 Vt. 501; second, to make inquiries and report facts; Mason v. Crosby, 3 W. & M. 258, Fed. Cas. No. 9,236; In re Hemiup, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 305; Izard v. Bodine, 9 N. J. Eq. 309; Sparhawk v. Wills, 5 Gray (Mass.) 423; third, to perform some special ministerial acts, directed by the court, such as the sale of property; Morton v. Sloan, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 278; Ryan v. Dox, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 440; settlement of deeds; see Woodcock v. Bennet, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 711, 13 Am. Dec. 568; appointment of new trustees, and the like; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 468; fourth, to discharge such duties as are specially charged upon them by statute.

In the federal courts the judges are prohibited by statute from appointing as masters any relation within the degree of first cousin; Kerosene Lamp Heater Co. v. Fisher, 1 Fed. 91; or except when special reasons exist therefor, a clerk of a federal court; 20 Stat. L. ch. 415; but consent of parties is held to be sufficient special reason; Union Sugar Refinery v. Mathiesson, 3 Cliff. 146, Fed. Cas. No. 14,398; Kerosene Lamp Heater Co. v. Fisher, 1 Fed. 91.

Cases in which reference to the master should be ordered are: Where inquiries as to compensation or damages do not involve such complexity of facts or amounts as to require an issue; Springle's Heirs & Adm'rs v. Shields, 17 Ala. 295; to ascertain what are "usual covenants" according to local usages; Wilson v. Wood, 17 N. J. Eq. 216, 88 Am. Dec. 231; where plaintiff in a bill for specific performance shows his right to a conveyance, but the defendant by sale or otherwise, has put it out of his power to convey; Woodcock v. Bennet, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 711, 13 Am. Dec. 568; to settle the account in cases involving mixed questions of law and fact; Samble v. Ins. Co., 1 Hall (N. Y.) 617; to inquire into the true value of the property at the time of sale, where an application was to reform a deed made by trustees in relation to trust property where the rights of infants were concerned; Saltus v. Pruyn, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 512; to ascertain the damages suffered by defendant by reason of an injunction, where the plaintiff failed to maintain his cause or discontinued it; Taaks v. Schmidt, 19 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 413; to ascertain whether property given to a child on marriage was intended as an advancement in marriage, or as payment of a legacy; Myers v. Myers, 2 McCord Ch. (S. C.) 268, 16 Am. Dec. 648; to ascertain the intention of the parties where the main issue was a latent ambiguity in a lease of coal lands, and a decree was reversed after but little inquiry below upon this point; Midlothian Coal Min. Co. v. Finney, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 304. Where a controversy in equity turns upon facts and involves a variety of circumstances, it should be referred to a master to sift the testimony and collate and report the facts; Appeal of Backus, 58 Pa. 186; and a court of chancery ought not to decide upon accounts mutually existing and controverted between the parties without reference to a master; Bland v. Wyatt, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 543.

A court of chancery may direct the reference of a case to the master with authority to examine the defendant on oath, and such an examination will have the effect of an answer; Templeman v. Fauntleroy, 3 Rand. (Va.) 434.

Cases which should not be referred to a master are: Where, on the settlement of a long account between the parties, the court has facts enough before it to strike the true balance, and both parties do not agree to or ask for reference; Jewett v. Cunard, 3 Woodb. & M. 277, Fed. Cas. No. 7,310; where the evidence is all written, and a decree can be rendered without difficulty; Levert v. Redwood, 9 Port. (Ala.) 79; where it was sought to charge the heirs with a debt of their father, and it was necessary to decide whether the heirs had received assets; Byrd's Adm'r v. Belding's Heirs, 18 Ark. 118; to ascertain the amount due on a promissory note; Savage v. Berry, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 545; where the issue is distinctly raised by the pleadings and testimony taken; Morton v. Hudson, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 312; on a bill for a specific performance of a contract of sale where the nature of the title distinctly appears; Willbanks v. Duncan, 4 Dessaus. (S. C.) 536.

Orders of reference to a master should specify the principles on which the accounts are to be taken, or the inquiry proceeds, so far as the court shall have decided thereon; and the examinations before the master should be limited to such matters within the order as the principles of the decree or order shall render necessary; Remsen v. Remsen, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 495. In an order of reference to a master, the defendant may be directed to produce before the master "all books, papers and writings, in his custody or power," and may be examined on oath upon such interrogatories as the master may direct, relative to the subject-matters of the reference; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 513. Where upon an order to deliver over books, papers, etc., the court intends to permit it to be done upon his own ex parte affidavit merely, he is directed, generally, "to produce and deliver the same on oath," but when the party is directed to produce and deliver them on oath "before a master" or "under the direction of a master," it is that all parties interested may examine as to the full and fair compliance with the order; Hallett v. Hallett, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 432. And the master should, in such a case, afford reasonable time for such examination to be made, and interrogatories to the party to be framed; id. Where an order of reference to make preliminary inquiries preparatory to a hearing upon the merits is not an order of course, under some rule of court, and is not assented to by all parties interested, such order can be obtained only by special application to the court upon due notice to all parties who have appeared and have an interest in the subject-matter; Corning v. Baxter, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 178.

Where a case has been referred to a master, the consent of parties will not confer upon him authority to examine into a matter not charged in the bill; Gordon v. Hobart, 2 Sto. 243, Fed. Cas. No. 5,608; and if he report as to a matter not referred to him the report quoad hoc is a nullity; White v. Walker, 5 Fla. 478.

It is his duty to report the facts, and not the mere evidence of facts, it being the province of the court to apply the law to the facts found and not to draw inferences of facts from the evidence; Goodman v. Jones, 26 Conn. 264. A master appointed to report the sum due on a mortgage is not authorized to decide on the title; Howe v. Russell, 36 Me. 115.

A report of a master on facts submitted to him will be presumed to be true, and will not be reconsidered or set aside for an alleged mistake or abuse of authority, unless it is clearly shown and the correction is required in equity; Howe v. Russell, 36 Me. 115.

It is improper for a master to perform any official act, as master, in a cause in which he is solicitor or a partner of the solicitor; Brown v. Byrne, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 453. Where a question before the master is as to the value of certain property, he should form an independent judgment of his own, and the method of taking an average of estimates as a conclusion is tolerated only from necessity; Pilkington v. Cotton, 55 N. C. 238.

A master cannot reopen a cause for further testimony after the closing of the proofs and the submission of his draft report to the parties, without special order from the court, which will be granted only on the ground of surprise, and under the same circumstances that would induce the court to make such an order before the hearing; Burgess v. Wilkinson, 7 R. I. 31. Where a master has reported back a case in which he was ordered to take testimony, it is res adjudicata and the case will not be recommitted unless specific errors can be designated; Russell v. McLellan, 3 Woodb. & M. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 12,158.

After the report is prepared, it is proper for the master to hear exceptions and correct his report, or if he disallows them, to report them to the court with the evidence; Brockman v. Aulger, 12 Ill. 277; but he need not report all the testimony where the decretal order under which he acts does not require it; Bailey v. Myrick, 52 Me. 132; Simmons v. Jacobs, id. 147. It is said that the master's conclusions of law need not be first excepted to; Gay Mfg. Co. v. Camp, 68 Fed. 67, 15 C. C. A. 226, citing 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1314.

A court of equity is not bound by the report of a master, but may confirm, modify, or reject it, as the issues in the suit must be decided by the court itself; Black v. Gunn, 60 Fed. 151, 8 C. C. A. 534, 19 U. S. App. 477; but this finding both of fact and of law will be presumed to be correct; Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S. 631, 15 Sup. Ct. 237, 39 L. Ed. 289; and will stand unless there is some obvious error in the application of the law or serious mistake in the consideration of the evidence; Crawford v. Neal, 144 U. S. 585, 12 Sup. Ct. 759, 36 L. Ed. 552; Fry v. Feamster, 36 W. Va. 454, 15 S. E. 253.

There is a distinction between the findings of a master in the usual form to report testimony and his findings when he has been appointed by consent of parties. In the latter case his findings of fact are attended by a presumption of correctness similar to that in the case of a finding by a referee, the special verdict of a jury, the findings of a circuit court in a case tried by the court under R. S. § 469, or in an admiralty cause appealed to the supreme court. In neither of these cases is the finding absolutely conclusive; but so far as it depends upon conflicting testimony, or upon the credibility of witnesses, or so far as there is any testimony consistent with the finding, it must be treated as unassailable; Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S. 631, 15 Sup. Ct. 237, 39 L. Ed. 289.

In practice it is not usual for the court to reject the report of a master, with his findings upon the matter referred to him, unless exceptions are taken to them and brought to its attention, and, upon examination, the findings are found unsupported or defective in some essential particular; Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 9 Sup. Ct. 177, 32 L. Ed. 547.

The court will not interfere with a report of a master upon a question of fact depending upon the credibility of witnesses, unless an error is clearly made to appear; Izard v. Bodine, 9 N. J. Eq. 309; Sinnickson v. Bruere, id. 659; the report has not the position of a verdict on a motion for a new trial at law, but on exceptions on a question of fact it is only necessary to review and weigh the evidence; Holmes v. Holmes, 18

N. J. Eq. 144; and it will not be overruled because the evidence is vague and conflicting, unless the conclusion is unwarranted by the evidence; id. The theory that it stands as a verdict obtains only when the findings are deductions from incorporated facts; McConomy v. Reed, 152 Pa. 42, 25 Atl. 176.

MASTER OF A SHIP. The commander or first officer of a merchant-ship; a captain.

Under the English Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, the term master includes "every person (except a pilot) having command or charge of any ship."

A distinction is noted between the twofold duties and functions of the master, those in which as shipmaster he is entrusted with the management and navigation of the ship, either as the co-partner of the owners or their confidential agent; Maclachlan, Merch. Ship. 134; and those in which as master mariner he is the officer in command on board; id. 203.

The master of an American ship must be a citizen of the United States; 1 Stat. L. 287; and a similar requirement exists in most maritime states. In some countries their qualifications in point of skill and experience must be attested by examination by proper authorities. This is provided for in England under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, but in the United States the civil responsibility of the owners for his acts is deemed sufficient, although a license is required for the master of a steam vessel; U. S. R. S. § 438.

A vessel sailing without a competent master is deemed unseaworthy, and the owners are liable for any loss of cargo which may occur, but cannot recover on a policy of insurance in case of disaster; The Niagara v. Cordes, 21 How. (U. S.) 7, 23, 16 L. Ed. 41; Draper v. Ins. Co., 21 N. Y. 378. One to whom the navigation, discipline, and control of a vessel is entrusted, must be considered as master, although another is registered as such; The Hattie Thomas, 59 Fed. 297. The owner of one half the legal title of a steamboat, who is the master in possession, and who is by written agreement entitled to such possession as master, is not liable to removal from his position as master; The Eclipse, 135 U. S. 599, 10 Sup. Ct. 873, 34 L. Ed. 269.

The master is selected by the owners and is their confidential agent; The Aurora, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 96, 4 L. Ed. 45; in case of his death or disability during the voyage, the mate succeeds; if he also dies in a foreign country, the consignee of the vessel, or the consul of the nation, may, in a case of necessity and in the absence of other authority, appoint a master; The Giles Loring, 48 Fed. 463. The master himself may, in similar circumstances of necessity and distance from the owners, appoint a substitute; The Sarah Ann, 2 Sumn. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 12,342; id. 13 Pet. (U. S.) 387. During a temporary absence of the master, the mate succeeds; U. S. v. Taylor, 2 Sumn. 588, Fed. Cas. No. 16,442.

He must, at the commencement of the voyage, see that his ship is seaworthy and fully provided with the necessary ship's papers, and with all the necessary and customary requisites for navigation, as well as with a proper supply of provisions, stores, etc.; Coleman v. Harriett, Bee, 80, Fed. Cas. No. 2,982; Elizabeth v. Rickers, 2 Paine, 291, Fed. Cas. No. 4,353; The Mary, 1 Ware, 454, Fed. Cas. No. 9,191; for the voyage; Dixon v. Cyrus, 2 Pet. Adm. 407, Fed. Cas. No. 3,930; U. S. v. Staly, 1 W. & M. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 16,374. He must also make a contract with the seamen, if the voyage be a foreign one from the United States; 1 U. S. Stat. at L. 131; 2 id. 203. He must store safely under deck all goods shipped on board, unless by well-established custom or by express contract they are to be carried on deck; and he must stow them in the accustomed manner in order to prevent liability in case of damage. In respect to the lading or carriage of goods shipped as freight, he is required to use the greatest diligence; and his responsibility attaches from the moment of their receipt, whether on board, in his boat, or at the quay or beach; 3 Kent 206. He should acquaint himself with the laws of the country with which he is trading; Howland v. Greenway, 22 How. (U. S.) 491, 16 L. Ed. 391.

He must proceed on the voyage in which his vessel may be engaged by direction of the owners, must obey faithfully his instructions, and by all legal means promote the interest of the owners of the ship and cargo; Hannay v. Eve, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 242, 2 L. Ed. 427. On his arrival at a foreign port, he must at once deposit, with the United States consul, vice consul, or commercial agent, his ship's papers, which are returned to him when he receives his clearance; U. S. R. S. § 4309. This does not apply, however, to those vessels merely touching for advice; Harrison v. Vose, 9 How. (U. S.) 372, 13 L. Ed. 179. He must govern his crew and prevent improper exercise of authority by his subordinates; Thomas v. Lane, 2 Sumn. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 13,902; U. S. v. Taylor, 2 Sumn. 584, Fed. Cas. No. 16,442. He must take all possible care of the cargo during the voyage, and, in case of stranding, shipwreck, or other disaster, must do all lawful acts which the safety of the ship and the interest of the owners of the ship and cargo require; Fland. Shipp. 190; New England Ins. Co. v. The Sarah Ann, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 387, 10 L. Ed. 213. It is proper, but not indispensable, in case of an accident, to note a protest thereof at the first port afterwards reached; Hunt v. Cleveland, 6 McLean 76, Fed. Cas. No. 6,885; and to give information to the owners of the loss of the vessel as soon as he reasonably can; Ruggles v. Ins. Co., 4 Mas. 74, Fed. Cas. No. 12,119. After stranding he must take all possible care of the cargo; The Portsmouth, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 682, 19 L. Ed. 754. In a port of refuge, he is not authorized to sell the cargo as damaged unless necessity be shown; but where it is so much injured as to endanger the ship, or will become utterly worthless, it is his duty to sell it at the place where the necessity arises; Miston v. Lord, 1 Blatch. 357, Fed. Cas. No. 9,655; Jordan v. Ins. Co., 1 Sto. 342, Fed. Cas. No. 7,524. When possible, he is bound to notify the owners before selling; Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302, 61 Am. Dec. 248; but he cannot sell after the completion of the voyage, when the owners of the cargo can be communicated with or readily reached; Moore v. Hill, 38 Fed. 330. He may contract for definite salvage in case of emergency; The G. W. Jones, 48 Fed. 925. And under certain circumstances he may even sell the vessel where she is in danger of destruction; Hall v. Ins. Co., 37 Fed. 371; but vessel and cargo can only be sold in case of urgent necessity; 13 Moo. P. C. 144; L. R. 6 C. P. 319. He should consult the owners if possible; failing that he should consult disinterested persons of skill and experience whose advice to sell would be strong evidence in justification of a sale; The Amelie, 6 Wall. 27, 18 L. Ed. 806. While the master of a stranded vessel may, in case of urgent necessity, throw overboard or otherwise sacrifice his cargo to obtain the release of his vessel, he has no right to give it away; if he does, the donee takes no title to the property, but is liable therefor as bailee, and is bound to surrender it upon demand; The Albany, 44 Fed. 431.

In time of war, he must avoid acts which will expose his vessel and cargo to seizure and confiscation, and must do all acts required for the safety of the vessel and cargo and the interests of their owners. In case of capture, he is bound to remain by the vessel until condemnation, or until recovery is hopeless; Willard v. Dorr, 3 Mas. 161, Fed. Cas. No. 17,680. He must bring home from foreign ports destitute seamen; R. S. § 4578; and must retain from the wages of his crew hospital-money; R. S. § 4585. He is personally liable to seamen for their wages; Temple v. Turner, 123 Mass. 125.

He is liable to the owners, and he and they to all others whose interests are affected by his acts, for want of reasonable skill, care, or prudence in the navigation or management of the vessel; Stone v. Ketland, 1 Wash. C. C. 142, Fed. Cas. No. 13,483; including injuries done to the cargo by the crew; Spurr v. Pearson, 1 Mas. 104, Fed. Cas. No. 13,268; and this rule includes the improper discharge of a seaman; Hutchinson v. Coombs, 1 Ware 65, Fed. Cas. No. 6,955.

His authority on shipboard is very great; Bangs v. Little, 1 Ware 506, Fed. Cas. No. 839; but is of a civil character. He has a right to control and direct the efforts of the crew, and to use such force as may be necessary to enforce obedience to his lawful commands. He may even take life, if necessary, to suppress a mutiny. He may degrade officers: The Elizabeth Frith, 1 Blatchf. & H. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 4,361; The Exchange, 1 Blatchf. & H. 366, Fed. Cas. No. 4,594; Atkyns v. Burrows, 1 Pet. Adm. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 618; Thompson v. Busch, 4 Wash. C. C. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 13,944; 2 C. Rob. 261. He may punish acts of insolence, disobedience, and insubordination, and such other offences, when he is required to do so for the safety and discipline of the ship. Flogging is, however, prohibited on merchant vessels; R. S. § 4611; and for any unreasonable, arbitrary, or brutal exercise of authority towards a seaman or passenger he is liable, criminally and in a civil suit; 4 U. S. Stat. L. 776, 1235. In all cases which will admit of the proper delay for inquiry, due inquiry should precede the act of punishment; 1 Hagg. 274, per Lord Stowell. He has a right to exact from his officers and crew not only a strict observance of all his lawful orders, but also a respectful demeanor towards himself; The Superior, 22 Fed. 927. He may also restrain or even confine a passenger who refuses to submit to the necessary discipline of the ship; Chamberlain v. Chandler, 3 Mas. 242, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575; but, without conferring with the officers and entering the facts in the log-book, he can inflict no higher punishment on a passenger than a reprimand; Krauskopp v. Ames, 7 Pa. L. J. 77; 6 C. & P. 472; Dunn v. Church, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119.

If the master has not funds for the necessary supplies, repairs, and uses of his ship when abroad, he may borrow money for that purpose on the credit of his owners; Crawford v. The William Penn, 3 Wash. C. C. 484, Fed. Cas. No. 3,373; and if it cannot be procured on his and their personal credit, he may take up money on bottomry, or in extreme cases may pledge his cargo; The Packet, 3 Mas. 255, Fed. Cas. No. 10,654. His authority to act as the owner's agent is based on necessity and ceases when the latter is within reach of instructions; [1893] A. C. 38; Botsford v. Plummer, 67 Mich. 264, 34 N. W. 569. He cannot bind owners to pay for repairs done at the home port without special authority; Dyer v. Snow, 47 Me. 254; nor when they or their agents are so near that communication can be had with them without delay; Woodruff & Beach Iron Works v. Stetson, 31 Conn. 51; 3 Kent 49. The extent of his contracts must be confined to the necessities of the case; The Clan MacLeod, 38 Fed. 447. He has no authority to execute bottomry or any express hypothecation of the ship for differences in freights in favor of the charterer, or for his advances of charter money; The Serapis, 37 Fed. 436; The Lykus, 36 id. 919. See BOTTOMRY; RESPONDENTIA.

Generally, when contracting within the ordinary scope of his powers and duties, he is personally responsible, as well as his owners, when they are personally liable. On bottomry loans, however, there is ordinarily no personal liability in this country or in England, beyond the funds which comes to the hands of the master or owners from the subject of the pledge; The Irma, 6 Ben. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 7,064; Abb. Sh. 90; Story, Ag. §§ 116, 123, 294. See The Serapis, 37 Fed. 436.

In most cases, too, the ship is bound for the performance of the master's contract; The Paragon, 1 Ware 322, Fed. Cas. No. 10,708; but all contracts of the master in chartering or freighting his vessel do not give such a lien; Vandewater v. Mills, 19 How. (U. S.) 82, 15 L. Ed. 54.

Where the master of a ship is without fault during a period of detention resulting from seizure of the ship by legal process against the owner, he is entitled to wages on the terms of his contract, unless it stipulate to the contrary; Swift v. Tatner, 89 Ga. 660, 15 S. E. 842, 32 Am. St. Rep. 101.

See FLAG, LAW OF; LIEN; SHIP.

MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE. The queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of queen's bench, who prosecutes at the relation of some private person or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. Stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20.

MASTER OF THE FACULTIES. See COURT OF ARCHES.

MASTER OF THE HORSE. The third great officer of the royal household of England. He has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the royal stables.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. In English Law. An officer of chancery, who has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the great seal and the records of the chancery. He formerly exercised extensive judicial functions in a chancery court ranking next to that of the lord chancellor.

An officer with this title existed in the time of the Conqueror. He had from most ancient times an office in chancery, with distinct clerks. In early times no judicial authority was conferred by an appointment as master of the rolls. In the reigns of Hen. VI. and Edw. IV. he was found sitting in a judicial capacity, and from 1623 to 1873, had the regulation of some branches of the business of the court. He was the chief of the masters in chancery; and his judicial functions, except those specially conferred by commission, appear to have properly belonged to him in this character. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 100, 357.

In the Middle Ages he was styled Clerk or Curator of the Rolls. He was not called Master of the Rolls in any statute till 11 Henry VII. c. 18. Originally differing from the other masters in chancery only in degree, he came, in Coke's time, to bear cases and make orders in the absence of the Chancellor. It is uncertain whether he exercised his powers by virtue of his position of a master or of the special commission addressed to him, but this was settled by 3 Geo. II. c. 30, which directed that his orders (except such as the Chancellor alone could make) should be valid, subject to an appeal to the Chancellor. He sat as a deputy of the Chancellor, 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 214.

All orders and decrees made by him, except those appropriate to the great seal alone, were valid, unless discharged or altered by the lord chancellor; but had to be signed by him before enrolment; and he was especially directed to hear motions, pleas, demurrers, and the like. Stat. 3 Geo. II. c. 30; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 94; 3 Bla. Com. 442.

Under the Judicature Acts, the court of the master of the rolls has been abolished, but he is a judge of the high court, and sits as the head of one of the divisions of the court of appeal. He is no longer, of necessity, a chancery lawyer.

MASTER OF THE TEMPLE. The founder of the order of the Templars, and all his successors were so called. Cowell.

MASTERS AT COMMON LAW. Officers of the superior courts at common law, whose duty is to tax costs, compute damages, take affidavits and the like. They are five in number in each court. See stat. 7 Will. IV., and 1 Vict. c. 30.

MATE. The officer next in rank to the master on a merchant vessel.

In such vessels there is always one mate, and sometimes a second, third, and fourth mate, according to the vessel's size and the trade in which she may be engaged. When the word mate is used without qualification, it always denotes the first mate; and the others are designated as above. On large ships the mate is frequently styled first officer, and the second and third mates, second and third officers. Parish, Sea Off. Man. 83.

The mate, as well as the inferior officers and seamen, is a mariner, and entitled to sue in admiralty for his wages; and he has a lien on the vessel for his security. Even when he acts as master in consequence of the death of the appointed master, he can sue in the admiralty for his proper wages as mate, but not for the increased compensation to which he is entitled as acting master. And he is entitled, when sick, to be cured at the expense of the ship. The mate should possess a sufficient knowledge of navigation to take command of the ship and carry on the voyage in case of the death of the master; and it may well be doubted whether a vessel be seaworthy for a long voyage at sea when only the master is competent to navigate her; Blount, Com. Dig. 32; Dana, Seaman's Friend 146; Curtis, Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen 96, note. It is the special duty of the mate to keep the log-book. The mate takes charge of the larboard watch at sea, and in port superintends the storage and breaking out of the cargo.

The mate succeeds, of course, to the station, rights, and authorities of the captain or master on the death of the latter, and he also has command, with the authority required by the exigencies of the case, during the temporary absence of the master. See MASTER OF A SHIP.

MATELOTAGE. The hire of a ship or boat.

MATER FAMILIAS. In Civil Law. The mother of a family; the mistress of a family.

A chaste woman, married or single. Calvinus, Lex.

MATERIAL MEN. Persons who furnish materials to be used in the construction or erection of ships, houses, or buildings. See LIEN.

The term is used in connection with those who furnished supplies to railroad companies, as to which see RECEIVERS.

MATERIALITY. The property of substantial importance or influence, especially as distinguished from formal requirement. Capability of properly influencing the result of the trial.

The materiality of evidence defines the status of the proposition in a case at large, while admissibility defines the relation of an evidentiary fact to some proposition. The two problems are wholly distinct, and yet the inaccuracy of our usage tends constantly to confuse them. Wigm. Evid. See EVIDENCE.

MATERIALS. Matter which is intended to be used in the creation of a mechanical structure; Moyer v. Slate Co., 71 Pa. 293; Hundhausen v. Bond, 36 Wis. 29. The physical part of that which has a physical existence.

The general property in materials furnished to a workman remains in the bailor where the contract is merely one for the employment of labor and services; otherwise where it is a sale. See BAILMENT; MANDATE; TROVER; TRESPASS.

MATERNA MATERNIS (Lat. from the mother to the mother's). In French Law. A term denoting the descent of property of a deceased person derived from his mother to the relations on the mother's side.

MATERNAL. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother: as, maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line. See LINE.

MATERNAL PROPERTY. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock. Domat, Liv. Prél. t. 3, s. 2., n. 12.

MATERNITY. The state or condition of a mother.

It is either legitimate or natural. The former is the condition of the mother who has given birth to legitimate children; while the latter is the condition of her who has given birth to illegitimate children. Maternity is always certain; while the paternity is only presumed.

MATERTERA. A mother's sister.

MATERTERA MAGNA. A grandmother's sister.

MATERTERA MAJOR. A great-grandmother's sister.

MATERTERA MAXIMA. A great-great-grandmother's sister.

MATHEMATICAL EVIDENCE. That evidence which is established by a demonstration. It is used in contradistinction to moral evidence.

MATIMA. A godmother.

MATRICIDE. The murder of one's mother.

MATRICULA. In Civil Law. A register in which are inscribed the names of persons who become members of an association or society. Dig. 50. 3. 1. In the ancient church there was matricula clericorum, which was a catalogue of the officiating clergy, and matricula pauperum, a list of the poor to be relieved: hence, to be entered in a university is to be matriculated.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In the English ecclesiastical courts there are five kinds of causes which are classed under this head, viz.: causes for a malicious jactitation; suits for nullity of marriage, on account of fraud, incest, or other bar to the marriage; 2 Hagg. Cons. 423; suits for restitution of conjugal rights; suits for divorce on account of cruelty or adultery, or causes which have arisen since the marriage; suits for alimony.

Matrimonial causes were formerly a branch of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. By the Divorce Act of 1857, they passed under the cognizance of the court for divorce and matrimonial causes created by that act. The jurisdiction is now vested in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACTS. A series of English statutes relating to divorce and matrimonial causes. See Brett, Eng. Com. 958; 4 Chitty, Stat.

MATRIMONIAL DOMICIL. See DOMICIL; ALIEN; DIVORCE; and also 20 Law Mag. & Rev. 330; 2 Brett, Com. 957.

MATRIMONIUM. In Civil Law. A legal marriage. A marriage celebrated in conformity with the rules of the civil law was called justum matrimonium; the husband vir, the wife uxor. It was exclusively confined to Roman citizens, and to those to whom the connubium had been conceded. It alone produced the paternal power over the children, and the marital power—manus—over the wife. The farreum, the coemptio, or the usus, was indispensable for the formation of this marriage. See PATERFAMILIAS.

MATRIMONY. Marriage; the nuptial state. See MARRIAGE.

MATRIX ECCLESIA. The mother church.

MATRON. A married woman.

MATRONS, JURY OF. See JURY OF WOMEN.

MATTER. As used in law, a fact or facts constituting the whole or a part of a ground of action or defence. Nelson v. Johnson, 18 Ind. 332.

MATTER IN CONTROVERSY, or IN DISPUTE. The subject of litigation, in the matter for which a suit is brought and upon which issue is joined. Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 337, 17 L. Ed. 557. See CAUSE OF ACTION; JURISDICTION; MATTER IN ISSUE.

To ascertain the matter in dispute we must recur to the foundation of the original controversy; the thing demanded, not the thing found; Wilson v. Daniel, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 405, 1 L. Ed. 655.

MATTER IN DEED. Such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. Co. Litt. 320; Steph. Pl. 197.

MATTER IN ISSUE. That matter upon which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts by his pleadings. King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 9, 41 Am. Dec. 675; Kerr v. Blair, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 349, 118 S. W. 791; Vaughan v. Morrison, 55 N. H. 582. That ultimate fact or state of facts in dispute upon which the verdict or finding is predicated. Smith v. Town of Ontario, 4 Fed. 386.

See MATTER IN CONTROVERSY.

MATTER IN PAIS (literally, matter in the country). Matter of fact, as distinguished from matter of law or matter of record.

MATTER OF FACT. In Pleading. Matter, the existence or truth of which is determined by the senses or by reasoning based upon their evidence. The decision of such matters is referred to the jury. Hob. 127; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49.

MATTER OF FORM. That which relates merely to the form of an instrument or to its language, arrangement, or technicality, without affecting its substance.

MATTER OF LAW. In Pleading. Matter, the truth or falsity of which is determined by the established rules of law or by reasoning based upon them. The decision of such matters is referred to the court. Where special pleading prevails, it is a rule that matter of law must be pleaded specially. The phrase here means matter which, if established as true, goes to defeat the plaintiff's charges by the effect of some rule of law, as distinguished from that which operates as a direct negative. See Lovinier v. Pearce, 70 N. C. 167.

MATTER OF RECORD. Those facts which may be proved by the production of a record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty.

MATTER OF SUBSTANCE. That which goes to the merits of a cause.

MATURITY. The time when a bill or note becomes due.

In its application to bonds and other similar instruments maturity applies to the time fixed for their payment, which is the termination of the period they have to run. In wills the term has been construed in different senses according to the testator's intent. The word may well be held to import maturity of mind and character; Condict's Ex'rs v. King, 13 N. J. Eq. 380; or it may be the equivalent of lawful age; Carpenter v. Boulden, 48 Md. 129.

Questions as to the exact time of maturity of commercial instruments may arise in determining whether an action upon it has been brought prematurely; Whitwell v. Brigham, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 117; whether an action is barred by the statute of limitations; Dawley v. Wheeler, 52 Vt. 574; whether judgment has been prematurely entered under a warrant of attorney to confess judgment; Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. 495, 45 Am. Dec. 615; whether a paper has been presented for payment and notice of dishonor given at the proper time; Commercial Bank v. Barksdale, 36 Mo. 563; whether it has been transferred before maturity, so as to give the holder the position of a bona fide purchaser; Baucom v. Smith, 66 N. C. 537; whether a bill was prematurely paid by an accommodation acceptor or surety; Whitwell v. Brigham, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 117; and in other cases; substantially the same principles determine the time of maturity for all these purposes.

MAXIM. An established principle or proposition. A principle of law universally admitted as being just and consonant with reason.

Maxims are said to have been of comparatively late origin in the Roman law. There are none in the Twelve Tables, and they appear but rarely in Gaius and the ante-Justinian fragments, or in the older English text-books and reports. The word maximum or maxima does not occur in the Corpus Juris in any meaning resembling that now borne by it; the nearest word in classical Roman law is regula; Fortescue identifies the two terms, and Du Cange defines maxima as recepta sententia, regula, vulgo nostris et Anglis maxime. Doctor and Student defines maxims as "the foundations of the Law and the conclusions of reason, and therefore they ought not to be impugned, but always to be admitted." Coke says they are "a sure foundation or ground of art and a conclusion of reason, so sure and uncontrolled that they ought not to be questioned," and that a maxim is so called "quia maxima ejus dignitas et certissima authoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur." Co. Litt. 11 a. He says in another place: "A maxime is a proposition to be of all men confessed and granted without proofe, argument, or discourse." See 20 L. Quart. & Rev. 283.

Regula appears not to be quite the same thing as maxim. The Digest makes the line between regula, definitio, and sententia a narrow one. Sententia is used in several texts as equivalent to regula. Definitio, in Labeo, is really a rule of law. In Papinius it is more like responsa prudentis. In some editions of the Corpus Juris maxims are given under the name of Regulæ et Sententiæ Juris. See 20 L. Mag. & Rev. 283.

Maxims in law are said to be somewhat like axioms in geometry. 1 Bla. Com. 68. They are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or common law of the land, and are of the same strength as acts of parliament, when the judges have determined what is a maxim. This determination belongs to the court and not the jury; Termes de la Ley; Doct. & Stud. Dial. 1, c. 8; they prove themselves; id. Maxims of the law are holden for law, and all other cases that may be applied to them shall be taken for granted; Co. Litt. 11, 67. See Plowd. 27 b.

The alteration of any of the maxims of the common law is dangerous; 2 Inst. 210.

See the introduction by W. F. Cooper to Barton's Maxims.

Later writers place less value on maxims; thus: "It seems to me that legal maxims in general are little more than pert headings of chapters. They are rather minims than maxims, for they give not a particularly great, but a particularly small, amount of information. As often as not the exceptions and qualifications to them are more important than the so-called rules." 2 Steph. Hist. of Cr. L. 94.

"We believe that not a single law maxim can be pointed out which is not obnoxious to objection." Towns. Sl. & Lib. § 88.

"Many of the sayings that are dignified by the name of maxims are nothing but the obiter dicta of ancient judges who were fond of sententious phrases, and sometimes sacrificed accuracy of definition to terseness of expression; and some . . . have no definite meaning at all." E. Q. Keasbey, in 3 N. J. L. J. 160.

"Maxims are not all of equal value; some ought to be amended and others discarded altogether; they are neither definitions nor treatises; they require the test of careful analysis; they are in many instances merely guide-posts pointing to the right road, but not the road itself." Prof. Jeremiah Smith, in 9 Harv. L. Rev. 26.

Salmond (Jurisprudence, p. 638) gives a list of 39 of the "more important and familiar maxims" with brief comments and references. He considers that "maxims are not without their uses, though they are much too absolute to be taken as trustworthy guides to the law. They are a sort of legal shorthand, useful to the lawyer, but dangerous to any one else."

"I need hardly repeat that I detest the attempt to fetter the law by maxims. They are almost invariably misleading; they are for the most part so large and general in their language that they always include something which really is not intended to be included in them." Lord Esher, M. R., in 19 Q. B. D. 653.

Maxims have been divided, as to their origin, into three classes: Roman, Roman modified, and indigenous; 20 L. Mag. & Rev. 283. They are mostly derived from the civil law, either literally or by adaptation, and most of those which are not to be found in the Roman sources are the invention of medieval jurists. Salmond, Jurispr. 638.

The application of the maxim to the case before the court is generally the only difficulty. The true method of making the application is to ascertain how the maxim arose, and to consider whether the case to which it is sought to be applied is of the same character, or whether it is an exception to an apparently general rule. This requires extended discussion, which it has received (so far as the more important maxims are concerned) in the able treatise on Legal Maxims by Broom.

Non ex regula jus sumatur, sed ex jure quod est regula fiat. The law should not be taken from maxims, but maxims from the law; 9 Jurid. Rev. 307.

The earliest work on maxims appears to have been that of Bacon (1630), followed by Noy (1641), Wingate (1658), Heath (Pleading, 1694), Francis (1728), Grounds and Rudiments of Law and Equity (anonymous, 1751, of which Francis was the author), Branch (1753), Lofft (1776, in his Reports). In the last century, Broom (1845), Trayner (1872, 1883), Cotterell (1881, 1894), and Wharton's Dictionary (1848, 1892), Lawson (1883), Bell's Dictionary (Scotch, 1890), Peloubet (New York, 1880), Barton, Stimson, Morgan, Tayler, Hening, Halkerston, Jackson (Law Latin), and Hughes. See the various Law Dictionaries; also 15 West. Jur. 337; 13 Cr. L. Mag. 832; 5 L. Quart. Rev. 444; 35 Amer. L. Rev. 529.

The following list comprises, it is believed, all the legal maxims, commonly so called, together with some that are in reality nothing more than legal phrases, accompanied by a translation, and, in most cases, a reference to one or more authorities which are intended to show the origin or application of the rule. It is obvious that many of them are of slight value and that more of them are open to objections, so far as they can be considered to be statements of principles of law.

A communi observantia non est recedendum. There should be no departure from common observance (or usage). Co. Litt. 186; Wing. Max. 203; 2 Co. 74.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et resolutio. The denomination and explanation ought to be derived from the more worthy. Wing. Max. 265; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 12.

A justitia (quasi a quodam fonte) omnia jura emanant. From justice, as a fountain, all rights flow. Brac. 2 b.

A l'impossible nul n'est tenu. No one is bound to do what is impossible.

A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessarie negative, licet non affirmative. From impossibility to non-existence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative. Hob. 336.

A piratis aut latronibus capti liberi permanent. Those captured by pirates or robbers remain free. Dig. 49, 15, 192; Grot. lib. 3, c. 3, s. 1.

A piratis et latronibus capta dominium non mutant. Things captured by pirates or robbers do not change their ownership. 1 Kent 108, 184; 2 Woodd. Lect. 258, 259.

A rescriptis valet argumentum. An argument from rescripts [i. e. original writs in the register] is valid. Co. Litt. 11 a.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus neque auxilium. From the highest remedy to an inferior action there is no return or assistance. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; Brac. 104 a, 112 b; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 193, 194.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. From the words of the law there should be no departure. Broom, Max. 622; Wing. Max. 25; 5 Co. 119.

Ab abusu ad usum non valet consequentia. A conclusion as to the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid. Broom, Max. xvii.

Ab assuetis non fit injuria. No injury is done by things long acquiesced in. Jenk. Cent. Introd. vi.

Abbreviationum ille numerus et sensus accipiendus est, ut concessio non sit inanis. Such number and sense is to be given to abbreviations that the grant may not fail. 9 Co. 48.

Absentem accipere debemus eum qui non est eo loco in quo petitur. We must consider him absent who is not in that place in which he is sought. Dig. 50. 60. 199.

Absentia ejus qui reipublicæ causa abest, neque ei neque aliis damnosa esse debet. The absence of him who is employed in the service of the state ought not to be prejudicial to him nor to others. Dig. 50. 17. 140.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. A simple proposition needs no expositor. 2 Inst. 533.

Abundans cautela non nocet. Abundant caution does no harm. 11 Co. 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 1; 6 Wheat. 108.

Accessorium non ducit sed sequitur suum principale. The accessory does not draw, but follows, its principal. Co. Litt. 152 a, 389 a; 5 E. & B. 772; Broom, Max. 491; Lindl. Part. 1036.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis. An accessory follows the nature of his principal. 3 Inst. 139; 4 Bla. Com. 36; Broom, Max. 497.

Accipere quid ut justitiam facias, non est tam accipere quam extorquere. To accept anything as a reward for doing justice, is rather extorting than accepting. Lofft 72.

Accusare nemo debet se, nisi coram Deo. No one is obliged to accuse himself, unless before God. Hardr. 139.

Accusator post rationabile tempus non est audiendus, nisi se bene de omissione excusaverit. An accuser is not to be heard after a reasonable time, unless he excuse himself satisfactorily for the omission. F. Moore 817; Bart. Max. 29.

Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta. Outward acts indicate the inward intent. Broom, Max. 301; 8 Co. 146 b; 1 Sm. L. Cas. 261.

Acta in uno judicio non probant in alio nisi inter eosdem personas. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it be between the same parties. Trayner, Max. 11.

Actio non datur non damnificato. An action is not given to one who is not injured. Jenk. Cent. 69.

Actio non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make one guilty, unless the intention be bad. Lofft 37. See Actus non, etc.

Actio personalis moritur cum persona. A personal action dies with the person. Noy, Max. 14; Broom, Max. 904; 13 Mass. 455; 21 Pick. 252; Bart. Max. 30; 38 Fed. 80; 40 W. N. C. (Pa.) 345; 3 Am. & Eng. Rul. Cas. N. S. 309. See ACTIO PERSONALIS.

Actio quælibet it sua via. Every action proceeds in its own course. Jenk. Cent. 77.

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved. Lofft 460.

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit, non est audiendus. A pleader ought not to be heard who advances a proposition contrary to the rules of law.

Actor sequitur forum rei. The plaintiff must follow the forum of the thing in dispute. Home, Law Tr. 232; Story, Confl. L. § 325 k; 2 Kent 462.

Actore non probante, reus absolvitur. If the plaintiff does not prove his case, the defendant is absolved. Hob. 103.

Actori incumbit onus probandi. The burden of proof lies on the plaintiff. Hob. 103; 100 Mass. 490. See Dig. 22. 3. 2.

Acts indicate the intention. 8 Co. 146 b; Broom, Max. 301.

Actus curiæ neminem gravabit. An act of the court shall prejudice no man. Jenk. Cent. 118; Broom, Max. 122; 1 Str. 426; 1 Sm. L. C., notes to Cumber v. Wane; 12 C. B. 415.

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. The act of God does wrong to no one (that is, no one is responsible in damages for inevitable accidents). 2 Bla. Com. 122; Broom, Max. 230; 1 Co. 97 b; 5 id. 87 a; Co. Litt. 206 a; 4 Taunt. 309; 1 Term 33. See ACT OF GOD.

Actus inceptus cujus perfectio pendet ex voluntate partium, revocari potest; si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiæ personæ, vel ex contingenti, revocari non potest. An act already begun, whose completion depends upon the will of the parties, may be recalled; but if it depend on consent of a third person, or on a contingency, it cannot be recalled. Bacon, Max. Reg. 20. See Story, Ag. § 424.

Actus judiciarius coram non judice irritus habetur; de ministeriali autem a quocunque provenit ratum esto. A judicial act before one not a judge is void; as to a ministerial act, from whomsoever it proceeds, let it be valid. Lofft 458.

Actus legis nemini est damnosus. An act of the law shall prejudice no man. 2d Inst. 287; Broom, Max. 126; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 380; 3 Co. 87 a; Co. Litt. 264 b; 5 Term 381, 385; 2 H. Bla. 324; 1 Prest. Abs. of Tit. 346; 6 Bacon, Abr. 559.

Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. The act of the law does no one wrong. Broom, Max. 127, 409; 2 Bla. Com. 123.

Actus legitimi non recipiunt modum. Acts required by law admit of no qualification. Hob. 153; Branch, Pr.

Actus me invito factus, non est meus actus. An act done by me against my will is not my act. Brac. 101 b.

Actus non reum facit nisi mens sit rea. An act does not make a person guilty unless his intention be guilty also. (This maxim applies only in criminal cases; in civil matters it is otherwise.) Broom, Max. 306, 367, 807, n.; 7 Term 514; 3 Bingh. N. C. 34, 463; 5 M. & G. 639; 3 C. B. 229; 5 id. 380; 9 Cl. & F. 531; 4 N. Y. 159, 163; L. R. 2 C. C. R. 160 (a very full case). It has been said that this is "the foundation of all criminal justice;" 8 Cox, Cr. Cas. 477, per Cockburn, C. J.; but it has also been said to be "an unfortunate phrase and actually misleading;" L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 185; and to be "somewhat uncouth;" id. 181; also that "the expression (mens rea) is unmeaning;" 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 95. See IGNORANCE; INTENTION; MENS REA; Salmond, Jurispr. 638.

Actus repugnans non potest in esse produci. A repugnant act cannot be brought into being (i. e. cannot be made effectual). Plowd. 355.

Actus servi in iis quibus opera ejus communiter adhibita est, actus domini habetur. The act of a servant in those things in which he is usually employed, is considered the act of his master. Lofft 227.

Ad ea quæ frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur. The laws are adapted to those cases which occur more frequently. 2 Inst. 137; Wing. Max. 216; Dig. 1. 3. 3; 19 How. St. Tr. 1061; 3 B. & C. 178, 183; 2 C. & J. 108; 7 M. & W. 599, 600; Vaugh. 373; 6 Co. 77 a; 11 Exch. 476; 11 id. 628; 12 How. (U. S.) 312, 13 L. Ed. 996; 7 Allen (Mass.) 227; Broom, Max. 43.

Ad officium justiciariorum spectat, unicuique coram eis placitanti justitiam exhibere. It is the duty of justices to administer justice to every one pleading before them. 2 Inst. 451.

Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio, nisi impediatur sententia. A relative is to be referred to the next antecedent, unless the sense would be thereby impaired. Broom, Max. 680; Noy, Max., 9th ed. 4; 2 Exch. 479; 17 Q. B. 833; 2 H. & N. 625; 3 Bingh. N. C. 217; 13 How. (U. S.) 142, 14 L. Ed. 75.

Ad quæstiones facti non respondent judices; ad quæstiones legis non respondent juratores. The judges do not answer to questions of fact; the jury do not answer to questions of law. Co. Litt. 295; 8 Co. 155 a; Vaugh. 149; 5 Gray (Mass.) 211, 219, 290; Broom, Max. 102.

Ad quæstiones juris respondent judices; ad quæstionem facti respondent juratores. See JURY.

Ad quæstiones legis judices, et non juratores, respondent. Judges, and not jurors, decide questions of law. 7 Mass. 279. See JURY.

Ad recte docendum oportet, primum inquirere nomina, quia rerum cognitio a nominibus rerum dependet. In order rightly to comprehend a thing, inquire first into the names, for a right knowledge of things depends upon their names. Co. Litt. 68.

Ad vim majorem vel ad casus fortuitos non tenetur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenerit. No one is held to answer for the effects of a superior force, or of accidents, unless his own fault has contributed. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 16.

Additio probat minoritatem. An addition proves inferiority. That is, if it be said that a man has a fee tail, it is less than if he has the fee. 4 Inst. 80; Wing. Max. 211, Max. 60; Littleton § 293; Co. Litt. 189 a.

Adjuvari quippe nos, non decipi, beneficio oportet. For we ought to be helped by a benefit, not destroyed by it. Dig. 13. 6, 17. 3; Broom, Max. 392.

Adversus extraneos vitiosa possessio prodesse solet. Prior possession is a good title of ownership against all who cannot show a better. D. 41. 2. 53; Salmond, Jurispr. 638.

Ædificare in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat. It is not lawful to build upon one's own land what may be injurious to another. 3 Inst. 201; Broom, Max. 369.

Ædificatum solo, solo cedit. That which is built upon the land goes with the land. Co. Litt. 4 a; Inst. 2. 1. 29; Dig. 47. 3. 1.

Ædificia solo cedunt. Buildings pass by a grant of the land. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 12.

Æquior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is more impartial than that of man. 8 Co. 152 a.

Æquitas agit in personam. Equity acts upon the person. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3733.

Æquitas est correctio legis generaliter latæ qua parte deficit. Equity is the correction of law, when too general, in the part in which it is defective. Plowd. 375; Bart. Max. 135.

Æquitas ignorantiæ opitulatur, oscitantiæ non item. Equity assists ignorance, but not carelessness.

Æquitas non facit jus, sed juri auxiliatur. Equity does not make law, but assists law. Lofft 379.

Æquitas nunquam contravenit legem. Equity never contradicts the law.

Æquitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64; 3 Woodd. Lect. 479, 482; Branch, Max. 8; 2 Bla. Com. 330; Gilb. 136; 2 Eden 316; 10 Mod. 3; 15 How. (U. S.) 299, 14 L. Ed. 696; 7 Allen (Mass.) 503; 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 277, 282.

Æquitas supervacua odit. Equity abhors superfluous things. Lofft 282.

Æquum et bonum est lex legum. What is just and right is the law of laws. Hob. 224.

Æstimatio præteriti delicti ex postremo facto nunquam crescit. The estimation of a crime committed never increases from a subsequent fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 8; Dig. 50, 17. 139.

Affectio tua nomen imponit operi tuo. Your motive gives a name to your act. Bract. 2 b, 101 b.

Affectus punitur licet non sequatur effectus. The intention is punished although the consequence do not follow. 9 Co. 57 a; see ATTEMPT.

Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinis. A connection (i. e. by marriage) of my connection is not a connection of mine. Shelf. Marr. & D. 174.

Affirmanti, non neganti, incumbit probatio. The proof lies upon him who affirms, not on him who denies. See Phill. Ev. 493.

Affirmantis est probare. He who affirms must prove. 9 Cush. (Mass.) 535.

Agentes et consentientes pari pœna plectentur. Acting and consenting parties are liable to the same punishment. 5 Co. 80 a.

Aliena negotia exacto officio gerunter. The business of another is to be conducted with particular attention. Jon. Bailm. 83.

Alienatio licet prohibeatur, consensu tamen omnium in quorum favorem prohibita est potest fieri, et quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. Although alienation be prohibited, yet, by the consent of all in whose favor it is prohibited, it may take place, for it is in the power of any man to renounce a right introduced for his own benefit. Co. Litt. 98; 9 N. Y. 291.

Alienatio rei præfertur juri accrescendi. Alienation is favored by the law rather than accumulation. Co. Litt. 185 a, 381 a, note; Broom, Max. 442, 458; Wright, Ten. 154; 1 Cruise, Dig. 77; 11 Ves. Jr. 112, 149; 10 L. T. N. S. 682.

Alienation pending a suit is void. 2 P. Wms. 482; 2 Atk. 174; 3 id. 392; 11 Ves. 194; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 566, 580. See LIS PENDENS.

Aliquid conceditur ne injuria remaneat impunita, quod alias non concederetur. Something is conceded lest a wrong should remain unpunished which otherwise would not be conceded. Co. Litt. 197.

Aliquis non debet esse judex in propria causa, quia non potest esse judex et pars. A person ought not to be judge in his own cause, because he cannot act both as judge and party. Co. Litt. 141 a; Broom, Max. 117; Littleton § 212; 13 Q. B. 327; 17 id. 1; 15 C. B. 769; 1 C. B. N. S. 329. SEE JUDGE; INCOMPETENCY.

Aliud est celare, aliud tacere. To conceal is one thing, to be silent another. 3 Burr. 1910. See 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 176, 6 L. Ed. 23; 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 631, 6 L. Ed. 174; 3 Bingh. 77; 4 Taunt. 851; 2 C. & P. 341; 18 Pick. (Mass.) 420; 22 id. 53; Broom, Max. 782; [1895] 2 Ch. 205.

Aliud est distinctio, aliud separatio. Distinction is one thing, separation another. Bacon's arg. Case of Postnati of Scotland, Works iv. 351.

Aliud est possidere, aliud esse in possessione. It is one thing to possess, it is another to be in possession. Hob. 163; Bract. 206.

Aliud est vendere, aliud vendenti consentire. To sell is one thing, to give consent to him who sells another. Dig. 50. 17. 160.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus. One making contradictory allegations is not to be heard. Jenk. Cent. 16; Broom, Max. 169, 294; 4 Term. 211; 3 Exch. 446, 527, 678; 3 E. & B. 363; 5 C. B. 195, 386; 10 Mass. 163; 70 Pa. 274; 4 Inst. 279.

Allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus. One alleging his own infamy is not to be heard. 4 Inst. 279; 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 339; 13 Ch. Div. 696.

Allegari non debuit quod probatum non relevat. That ought not to have been alleged which, if proved, would not be relevant. 1 Ch. Cas. 45.

Allegatio contra factum non est admittenda. An allegation contrary to a deed is not admissible. See ESTOPPEL.

Alterius circumventio alii non prœbet actionem. Dig. 50. 17. 49. A deception practised upon one person does not give a cause of action to another.

Alternativa petitio non est audienda. An alternative petition is not to be heard. 5 Co. 40 a.

Ambigua responsio contra proferentem est accipienda. An ambiguous answer is to be taken against the party who offers it. 10 Co. 59 a.

Ambiguis casibus semper præsumitur pro rege. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king.

Ambiguitas contra stipulatorem est. Doubtful words will be construed most strongly against the party using them. See INSURANCE.

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur. A latent ambiguity may be supplied by evidence; for an ambiguity which arises out of a fact may be removed by proof of the fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 23; 8 Bingh. 247. See 1 Pow. Dev. 477; Bart. Max. 39; 2 Kent 557; Broom, Max. 608; 13 Pet. (U. S.) 97, 10 L. Ed. 72; 1 Gray (Mass.) 138; 100 Mass. 60; 8 N. J. L. 71. Said to be "an unprofitable subtlety; inadequate and uninstructive." Prof. J. B. Thayer in 6 Harv. L. 417. See LATENT AMBIGUITY.

Ambiguitas verborum patens nulla verificatione excluditur. A patent ambiguity is never holpen by averment. Lofft 249; Bacon, Max. 25; 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 651; 1 Tex. 377. See PATENT AMBIGUITY.

Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem. An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it. Co. Litt. 303 b; Broom, Max. 601; Bacon, Max. Reg. 3; 2 H. Bla. 531; 2 M. & W. 444.

Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitæ supremum exitum. A will is ambulatory until the last moment of life. Broom, Max. 503; 2 Bla. Com. 502; Co. Litt. 322 b; 3 E. & B. 572; 1 M. & K. 485.

Angliæ jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem. The laws of England are favorable in every case to liberty. Halkers. Max. 12.

Animus ad se omne jus ducit. It is to the intention that all law applies.

Animus hominis est anima scripti. The intention of the party is the soul of the instrument. 3 Bulstr. 67; Pitman, Princ. & Sur. 26.

Anniculus trecentesimo sexagesimo-quinto die dicitur, incipiente plane non exacto die, quia annum civiliter non ad momenta temporum sed ad dies numeramur. We call a child a year old on the three hundred and sixty-fifth day, when the day is fairly begun but not ended, because we calculate the civil year not by moments, but by days. Dig. 50. 16. 134; id. 132; Calvinus, Lex. See AGE.

Annua nec debitum judex non separat ipse. Even the judge apportions not annuities or debt. 8 Co. 52. See Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 480, 517; 1 Salk. 36, 65.

Annus est mora motus quo suum planeta pervolvat circulum. A year is the duration of the motion by which a planet revolves through its orbit. Dig. 40. 7. 4. 5; Calvinus, Lex.; Bract. 359 b.

Annus inceptus pro completo habetur. A year begun is held as completed. Said to be of very limited application. Trayner, Max. 45.

Apices juris non sunt jura. Legal niceties are not law. Co. Litt. 304. Legal principles must not be carried to their extreme consequences, regardless of equity and good sense. Salmond, Jurispr. 639. See 3 Scott 773; 10 Co. 126; Broom, Max. 188. See APEX JURIS.

Applicatio est vita regulæ. The application is the life of a rule. 2 Bulstr. 79.

Baratriam committit qui propter pecuniam justitiam baractat. He is guilty of barratry who for money sells justice. Bell, Dict. (Barratry at common law has a different signification. See BARRATRY.)

Bastardus non potest habere hæredem nisi de corpore suo legitime procreatum. A bastard can have no heir unless it be one lawfully begotten of his own body. Trayner, Max. 51.

Bello parta cedunt reipublicæ. Things acquired in war go to the state. Cited 2 Russ. & M. 56; 1 Kent 101; 5 C. Rob. 155, 163.

Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione. Blessed is the exposition when the thing is saved from destruction. 4 Co. 26 b.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et quælibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est. Liberal interpretations are to be made of deeds, so that they may rather stand than fall; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor. 4 Mass. 134; 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 268; compare id. 275, 277; 78 Pa. 219.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire. Construction should be liberal on account of the ignorance of the laity, so that the subject-matter may stand rather than fall; and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words. Co. Litt. 36 a; Broom, Max. 540, 565, 645; 11 Q. B. 852, 856, 868, 870; 4 H. L. Cas. 556; 2 Bla. Com. 379; 1 Bulstr. 178; 1 Whart. (Pa.) 315.

Benignior sententia in verbis generalibus seu dubiis est preferenda. The more favorable construction is to be placed on general or doubtful expressions. 4 Co. 15; Dig. 50. 17. 192. 1; 2 Kent 557.

Benignius leges interpretandæ sunt quo voluntas earum conservetur. Laws are to be more favorably interpreted, that their intent may be preserved. Dig. 1. 3. 16.

Between equal equities the law must prevail. See EQUITY. This is hardly of general application.

Bis dat qui cito dat. He pays twice who pays promptly.

Bis idem exigi bona fides non patitur, et in satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. Good faith does not suffer the same thing to be exacted twice; and in making satisfaction, it is not permitted that more should be done after satisfaction is once made. 9 Co. 53; Dig. 50. 17. 57.

Bona fide possessor facit fructus consumptos suos. By good faith a possessor makes the fruits consumed his own. Trayner, Max. 57.

Bona fides exigit ut quod convenit fiat. Good faith demands that what is agreed upon shall be done. Dig. 19. 20. 21; id. 19. 1. 50; id. 50. 8. 2. 13.

Bona fides non patitur ut bis idem exigatur. Good faith does not allow us to demand twice the payment of the same thing. Dig. 50. 17. 57; Broom, Max. 338, n.; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 143.

Bonæ fidei possessor in id tantum quod ad se pervenerit tenetur. A bona fide possessor is bound for that only which has come to him. 2 Inst. 285; Gro. de J. B. lib. 2, c. 10, § 3 et seq.

Boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem (or justitiam). See 1 Burr. 304. It is the part of a good judge to enlarge his jurisdiction; that is, his remedial authority. Broom, Max. 79, 80, 82; Chanc. Prec. 329; 1 Wils. 284; 9 M. & W. 818; 1 C. B. N. S. 255; 4 Bingh. N. C. 233; 4 Scott N. R. 229.

Boni judicis est causas litium dirimere. It is the duty of a good judge to remove causes of litigation. 2 Inst. 306.

Boni judicis est judicium sine dilatione mandare executioni. It is the duty of a good judge to cause execution to issue on a judgment without delay. Co. Litt. 289 b.

Boni judicis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oritur, et interest reipublicæ ut sint fines litium. It is the duty of a good judge to prevent litigations, that suit may not grow out of suit, and it concerns the welfare of a state that an end be put to litigation. 4 Co. 15 b; 5 id. 31 a; Bart. Max. 191.

Bonum necessarium extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum. A thing good from necessity is not good beyond the limits of the necessity. Hob. 144.

Bonus judex secundum æquum et bonum judicat, et æquitatem stricto juri præfert. A good judge decides according to justice and right, and prefers equity to strict law. Co. Litt. 24; 4 Term 344; 2 Q. B. 837; Broom, Max. 80.

Both law and equity favor the diligent creditor.

Breve judiciale debet sequi suum originale, et accessorium suum principale. A judicial writ ought to follow its original, and an accessory its principal. Jenk. Cent. 292.

Breve judiciale non cadit pro defectu formæ. A judicial writ fails not through defect of form. Jenk. Cent. 43.

By an acquittance for the last payment all other arrearages are discharged. Noy 40.

Carcer ad homines custodiendos, non ad puniendos, dari debet. A prison ought to be used for the custody, not the punishment, of persons. Co. Litt. 260. See Dig. 48. 19. 8. 9.

Casus fortuitus non est sperandus, et nemo tenetur divinare. A fortuitous event is not to be foreseen, and no person is held bound to foretell it. 4 Co. 66.

Casus fortuitus non est supponendus. A fortuitous event is not to be presumed. Hardr. 82, arg.

Consilia multorum requiruntur in magnis. The advice of many persons is requisite in great affairs. 4 Inst. 1.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicuique nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisque sedes et tabulas haberet, suarumque rerum constitutionem fecisset. It is settled that that is to be considered the home of each one of us where he may have his habitation and account-books, and where he may have made an establishment of his business. Dig. 50. 16. 203.

Constructio legis non facit injuriam. The construction of the law does not work an injury. Co. Litt. 183; Broom, Max. 603.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta, potius usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called an usurpation than a custom. Co. Litt. 113; Bart. Max. 109.

Consuetudo debet esse certa. A custom ought to be certain. Dav. 33.

Consuetudo debet esse certa, nam incerta pro nullius habetur. Custom ought to be fixed, for if variable it is held as of no account. Trayner, Max. 96.

Consuetudo est altera lex. Custom is another law. 4 Co. 21.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum. Custom is the best expounder of the law. 2 Inst. 18; Dig. 1. 3. 37; Jenk. Cent. 273.

Consuetudo et communis assuetudo vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis. Custom and common usage overcome the unwritten law, if it be special; and interpret the written law if the law be general. Jenk. Cent. 273.

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem. Custom observed by reason of a certain and reasonable cause supersedes the common law. Co. Litt. 33*b*. See Broom, Legal Max. 919.

Consuetudo, licet sit magnæ auctoritatis, nunquam tamen præjudicat manifestæ veritati. A custom, though it be of great authority, should never, however, be prejudicial to manifest truth. 4 Co. 18.

Consuetudo loci observanda est. The custom of the place is to be observed. Broom, Max. 918; 4 Co. 28 b; 6 id. 67; 10 id. 139; 4 C. B. 48.

Consuetudo neque injuria oriri, neque tolli protest. A custom can neither arise, nor be abolished, by a wrong. Lofft 340.

Consuetudo non habitur in consequentiam. Custom is not to be drawn into a precedent. 3 Keble 499.

Consuetudo præscripta et legitima vincit legem. A prescriptive and lawful custom overrides the law. Co. Litt. 113.

Consuetudo regni Angliæ est lex Angliæ. The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England. Jenk. Cent. 119.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest amplius induci. A custom once disallowed cannot again be set up. Dav. 33; Grounds & Rud. of Law 53.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem. Custom overrules common law. 1 Rop. H. & W. 351; Co. Litt. 33 b.

Consuetudo volentes ducit, lex nolentes trahit. Custom leads the willing, law drags the unwilling. Jenk. Cent. 274.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege. A contemporaneous exposition is the best and most powerful in the law. 2 Inst. 11; 3 Co. 7; Broom, Max. 682.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictarios. An issue requires terms of contradiction (that is, there can be no issue without an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other). Jenk. Cent. 117.

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibit; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit. He acts contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; but he acts in fraud of the law who, the letter of the law being inviolate, uses the law contrary to its intention. Dig. 1. 3. 29.

Contra negantem principia non est disputandum. There is no disputing against one who denies principles. Co. Litt. 43; Grounds & Rud. of Law 57.

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit præscriptio. No prescription runs against a person unable to act. Broom, Max. 903; Evans Pothier 451.

Contra veritatem lex nunquam aliquid permittit. The law never suffers anything contrary to truth. 2 Inst. 252. (But sometimes it allows a conclusive presumption in opposition to truth.)

Contractatio rei alienæ animo furandi, est furtum. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft. Jenk. Cent. 132.

Datur digniori. It is given to the more worthy. 2 Ventr. 263.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quæstio, sed de scientia sive sit error juris sive facti. The good faith and honesty of purpose of a judge cannot be questioned, but his decision may be impugned for error either of law or of fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 17; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 291; 1 N. Y. 45; Broom, Max. 97.

De jure judices, de facto juratores, respondent. The judges find the law, the jury the facts. See Co. Litt. 295; Broom, Max. 99.

De majori et minori non variant jura. Concerning greater and less laws do not vary. 2 Vern. 552.

De minimis non curat lex. The law does not notice or concern itself with trifling matters. Broom, Max. 142; 2 Inst. 306; 97 Mass. 83; 118 id. 175; 5 Hill (N. Y.) 170; 12 Can. L. J. 105, 130; 57 Mo. App. 142; 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 60. See Salmond, Jurispr. 640.

De morte hominis nulla est cunctatio longa When the death of a human being is concerned, no delay is long. Co. Litt. 134. (When the question is concerning the life or death of a man no delay is too long to admit of inquiring into facts.)

De nomine proprio non est curandum cum in substantia non erretur; quia nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles. As to the proper name, it is not to be regarded when one errs not in substance; because names are changeable, but things are immutable. 6 Co. 66.

De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio. The law is the same respecting things which do not appear and things which do not exist. 28 N. C. 61; 12 How. (U. S.) 253, 13 L. Ed. 974; 5 Co. 6; 6 Bingh. N. C. 453; 7 Cl. & F. 872; 5 C. B. 53; 8 id. 286; 1 Term 404; 4 Mass. 685; 8 id. 401; Broom, Max. 163, 166.

De nullo, quod est sua natura indivisibile et divisionem non patitur, nullam partem habebit vidua, sed satisfaciat ei ad valentiam. A widow shall have no part from that which in its own nature is indivisible, and is not susceptible of division; but let [the heir] satisfy her with an equivalent. Co. Litt. 32.

De similibus ad similia eadem ratione procedendum est. From similars to similars we are to proceed by the same rule. Branch, Princ.

De similibus idem est judicium. Concerning similars the judgment is the same. 7 Co. 18.

Debet esse finis litium. There ought to be an end of litigation. Jenk. Cent. 61.

Debet quis juri subjacere ubi delinquit. Every one ought to be subject to the law of the place where he offends. 3 Inst. 34; Finch, Law, 14, 36; Wing. Max. 113; 3 Co. 231; 8 Scott N. R. 567.

Debet sua cuique domus esse perfugium tutissimum. Every man's house should be a perfectly safe refuge. 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 31, 54.

Debile fundamentum fallit opus. Where there is a weak foundation, the work falls. Broom, Max. 180, 182.

Debita sequuntur personam debitoris. Debts follow the person of the debtor. Story, Confl. Laws § 362; 2 Kent 429; Halkers. Max. 13.

Debitor non præsumitur donare. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift. See 1 Kames, Eq. 212; Dig. 50. 16. 108; 1 P. Wms. 239; Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. Eq. 378; see PAYMENT.

Debitorum pactionibus, creditorum petitio nec tolli nec minui potest. The right of creditors to sue cannot be taken away or lessened by the contracts of their debtors. Bart. Max. 115; Pothier, Obl. 108; Broom, Max. 697.

Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci. Debt and contract are of no particular place. 7 Co. 61; 7 M. & G. 1019, n.

Deceptis non decipientibus, jura subveniunt. The laws help persons who are deceived, not those deceiving. Trayner, Max. 149.

Decipi quam fallere est tutius. It is safer to be deceived than to deceive. Lofft 396.

Deficiente uno sanguine, non potest esse hæres. One blood being wanted, one cannot be heir. 3 Co. 41.

Delegata potestas non potest delegari. A delegated authority cannot be delegated. Broom, Max. 839; 2 Inst. 597; 5 Bingh. N. C. 310; Story, Ag. § 13; 11 How. (U. S.) 233, 13 L. Ed. 676; 15 Gray (Mass.) 403. See DELEGATION. This is said to be an extension of a judice judex delegatus judicis dandi potestatem non habet, which, in that form, applied to officers whose duties were judicial, but in the English law the maxim has been applied to agency. See 20 L. Mag. & Rev. 293.

Delegatus non potest delegare. A delegate (or deputy) cannot appoint another. Story, Ag. § 13; Broom, Max. 840, 842; 9 Co. 77; 2 Scott N. R. 509; 12 M. & W. 712; 6 Exch. 156; 8 C. B. 627.

Delicatus debitor est odiosus in lege. A delicate debtor is hateful in the law. 2 Bulstr. 148.

Delinquens per iram provocatus puniri debet mitius. A delinquent provoked by anger ought to be punished more mildly. 3 Inst. 55.

Derivativa potestas non potest esse major primitiva. The power which is derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived. Wing. Max. 36; Finch. Law, b. 1, c. 8, p. 11.

Designatio unius est exclusio alterius, et expressum facit cessare tacitum. The appointment or designation of one is the exclusion of the other; and that which is expressed prevails over that which is implied. Co. Litt. 210.

Deus solus hæredem facere potest, non homo. God alone, and not man, can make an heir. Co. Litt. 7 b; cited 5 B. & C. 440, 454; Broom, Max. 516.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus. Sunday is not a judicial day. Co. Litt. 135 a; 2 Saund. 291; Broom, Max. 21; Finch, Law 7; Noy, Max. 2; Plowd. 265; 3 D. & L. 328; 13 Mass. 327; 17 Pick. (Mass.) 109. See SUNDAY.

Dies inceptus pro completo habetur. A day begun is held as complete.

Dies incertus pro conditione habetur. A day uncertain is held as a condition. Bell, Dict. Computation of Time.

Dilationes in lege sunt odiosæ. Delays in law are odious. Branch, Princ.

Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum. Discretion is to discern through law what is just. 5 Co. 99. 100; 10 id. 140; Broom, Max. 84, n.; Inst. 41; 1 W. Bla. 152; 1 Burr. 570; 2 id. 25; 3 Bulstr. 128; 6 Q. B. 700; 5 Gray (Mass.) 204. See DISCRETION

Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum. Discretion consists in knowing what is just in law. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 352, 356.

Disparata non debent jungi. Dissimilar things ought not to be joined. Jenk. Cent. 24.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, because it wounds a common right. Dav. 69; Branch, Princ.

Disseisinam satisfacit, qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commode, licet omnino non expellat. He makes disseisin who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less useful, although he does not expel him altogether. Co. Litt. 331; Bract. lib. 4, tr. 2.

Dissimilium dissimilis est ratio. Of dissimilars the rule is dissimilar. Co. Litt. 191 a.

Dissimulatione tollitur injuria. Injury is wiped out by reconciliation. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, tit. 4, § 108.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; aliud est facere, aliud perficere. Times must be distinguished; it is one thing to do a thing, another to complete it. 8 Leon. 243; Branch, Princ. See 1 Co. 16 a; 2 Pick. (Mass.) 327.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; distingue tempora, et concordabis leges. Times are to be distinguished; distinguish time, and you will harmonize laws. 1 Co. 24.

Divinatio non interpretatio est, quæ omnino recedit a litera It is a guess, not interpretation, which altogether departs from the letter. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3, p. 47.

Dolosus versatur in generalibus. A deceiver deals in generalities. 2 Co. 34; 2 Bulstr. 226; Lofft 782; 1 Rolle 157; Wing. Max. 636; Broom, Max. 289.

Dolum ex indiciis perspicuis probari convenit. Fraud should be proved by clear proofs. Code 2. 21. 6; 1 Story, Contr. § 625.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori. The fraud of a predecessor does not prejudice the successor.

Dolus circuitu non purgatur. Fraud is not purged by circuity. Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Noy, Max. 9, 12; Broom, Max. 228; 6 E. & B. 948.

Dolus et fraus nemini patrocinentur (patrocinari debent). Deceit and fraud shall excuse or benefit no man (they themselves need to be excused). Year B. 14 Hen. VIII. 8; Story, Eq. Jur. § 395; 3 Co. 78; 2 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 2, ch. 6, § 3.

Dolus latet in generalibus. Fraud lurks in generalities. Trayner, Max. 162.

Dolus versatur in generalibus. Fraud deals in generalities. Trayner, Max. 162.

Dominium non potest esse in pendenti. The right of property cannot be in abeyance. Halkers. Max. 39.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium. Every man's house is his castle. 5 Co. 91, 92; 90 Ill. 229; Broom, Max. 432; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 481; Foster, Hom. 320; 8 Q. B. 757; 16 id. 546, 556; 19 How. St. Tr. 1030. See ARREST; SELF-DEFENCE; DEFENCE; Dig. 50. 17. 103.

Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum. The habitation of each one is an inviolable asylum for him. Dig. 2. 4, 18.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa. Clandestine gifts are always suspicious. 3 Co. 81; Noy, Max., 9th ed. 152; 4 B. & C. 652; 1 M. & S. 253; Broom, Max. 289, 290.

Donari videtur quod nullo jure cogente conceditur. That is considered to be given which is granted when no law compels. Dig. 50. 17. 82.

Donatio non præsumitur. A gift is not presumed. Jenk. Cent. 109.

Donatio perficitur possessione accipientis. A gift is rendered complete by the possession of the receiver. See 2 Leigh (Va.) 837; 2 Kent 438.

Donationum alia perfecta, alia incepta et non perfecta; ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ac traditio nondum fuerit subsecuta. Some gifts are perfect, others incipient and not perfect as if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed. Co. Litt. 56.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere antequam donatarius incipiat possidere. A donor never ceases to have possession until the donee obtains possession. Dyer 281; Bract. 41 b.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur. Laws sometimes sleep, but never die. 2 Inst. 161.

Dos de dote peti non debet. Dower ought not to be sought from dower. 4 Co. 122; Co. Litt. 31; 4 Dane, Abr. 671; 1 Washb. R. P. 209; 13 Allen (Mass.) 459.

Doti lex favet; præmium pudoris est, ideo parcatur. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity, therefore let it be preserved. Co. Litt. 31; Branch, Princ.

Droit ne done pluis que soit demande. The law gives no more than is demanded. 2 Inst. 286.

Droit ne poet pas morier. Right cannot die. Jenk. Cent. 100.

Duas uxores eodem tempore habere non licet. It is not lawful to have two wives at one time. Inst. 1. 10. 6; 1 Bla. Com. 436.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere. Two cannot possess one thing each in entirety. Co. Litt. 368; 1 Preston, Abstr. 318; 2 id. 86, 326; 2 Dod. 157; 2 Carth. 76; Broom, Max. 465, n.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confirmandas aut impugnandas, ratio et auctoritas. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning every thing, reason and authority. 8 Co. 16.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessio esse non potest. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot be in two persons of the same thing. Dig. 13, 6. 5. 15; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law 245, § 236; Brac. 28 b.

Duplicationem possibilitatis lex non patitur. The law does not allow a duplication of possibility. 1 Rolle 321.

Ea est accipienda interpretatio, quæ vitio careat. That interpretation is to be received which is free from fault. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3, b. 47.

Ea quæ commendandi causa in venditionibus dicuntur, si palam appareant venditorem non obligant. Those things which, by way of commendation, are stated at sales, if they are openly apparent, do not bind the seller. Dig. 18. 43. n.; Broom, Max. 783.

Ea quæ dari impossibilia sunt, vel quæ in rerum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur. Those things which cannot be given, or which are not in existence, are held as not expressed. Dig. 50. 17. 135.

Ea quæ in curia nostra rite acta sunt, debitæ executioni demandari debent. Whatever is properly done in a court should be reduced to a judgment. Co. Litt. 289 b.

Ea quæ raro accidunt, non temere in agendis negotiis computantur. Those things which rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business without sufficient reason. Dig. 50. 17. 64.

Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex. The same reason, the same law. 7 Pick. (Mass.) 493.

Eadem mens præsumitur regis quæ est juris et quæ esse debet, præsertim in dubiis. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be coincident with that of the law, and with that which ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters. Hob. 154; Broom, Max. 54.

Ecclesia ecclesiæ decimas solvere non debet. It is not the duty of the church to pay tithes to the church. Cro. Eliz. 479.

Ecclesiæ magis favendum est quam personæ. The church is more to be favored than an individual. Godb. 172.

Effectus sequitur causam. The effect follows the cause. Wing. Max. 226.

Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat. The burden of the proof lies upon him who affirms, not him who denies. Dig. 22. 3. 2; 1 Phill. Ev. 194; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 3 La. 83; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 408.

Ei nihil turpe cui nihil satis. Nothing is base to whom nothing is sufficient. 4 Inst. 53.

Ejus est interpretari cujus est condere. It belongs to him to interpret who enacts. Trayner, Max. 174.

Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle. He may consent tacitly who may consent expressly. Dig. 50. 17. 3.

Ejus est periculum cujus est dominium aut commodum. He has the risk who has the right of property or advantage. Bart. Max. 33.

Ejus nulla culpa est cui parere necesse sit. No guilt attaches to him who is compelled to obey. Dig. 50. 17. 169; Broom, Max. 12, n.

Electa una via, non datur recursus ad alteram. He who has chosen one way cannot have recourse to another. 10 Toull. n. 170.

Electio est intima [interna], libera, et spontanea separatio unius rei ab alia, sine compulsione, consistens in animo et voluntate. Election is an internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will. Dyer 281.

Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum, non patitur regressum. An election once made, and the intent shown, cannot be recalled. Co. Litt. 146. See ELECTION.

Elections fiant rite et libere sine interruptione aliqua. Election should be made in due form and freely, without any interruption. 2 Inst. 169.

Emptor emit quam minimo potest; venditor vendit quam maximo potest. The buyer buys for as little as possible; the vender sells for as much as possible. 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 256.

En eschange il covient que les estates soient égales. In an exchange it is necessary that the estates be equal. Co. Litt. 50; 2 Hill. R. P. 298.

Enumeratio infirmat regulam in casibus non enumeratis. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius. Specification of one thing is an exclusion of the other.

Eodem modo quo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur. It is discharged in the same way in which it is created. Bacon, Abr. Release; Cro. Eliz. 697; 2 Wms. Saund. 48, p. 1; 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 28; 5 Watts (Pa.) 155.

Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, eodem modo destruitur. In the same way in which anything is constituted, in that way is it destroyed. 6 Co. 53.

Equality is equity. Francis, Max., Max. 3; 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3725; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64; 165 U. S. 394, 17 Sup. Ct. 411, 41 L. Ed. 760. See EQUITY.

Equitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 277, 282. Cas. temp. Talb. 52; 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 64. Of this maxim it has been said: "Operative only within a very narrow range." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 427. The reverse is quite as sound a maxim; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 18. "The main business of equity is avowedly to correct and supplement the law." Phelps, Jurid. Eq. § 237. The English Judicature Act, 1873, provides that when law and equity conflict equity shall prevail.

Equity delights to do justice, and that not by halves. 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 277, 280; Story, Eq. Pl. § 72.

Equity follows the law. See Equitas sequitur legem, supra.

Equity looks upon that as done, which ought to be done. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3729; 1 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, ch. 6, s. 9, note; 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 563, 4 L. Ed. 460.

Equity suffers not a right without a remedy. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3726.

Equity will not require that to be done which if done would be useless. 67 Ill. App. 31.

Error fucatus nuda veritate in multis est probabilior; et sæpenumero rationibus vincit veritatem error. Error artfully colored is in many things more probable than naked truth; and frequently error conquers truth by argumentation. 2 Co. 73.

Error juris nocet. Error of law is injurious. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 139. n.

Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat. Mistake in the name never injures, if the identity of the thing is clear. 1 Duer, Ins. 171.

Error qui non resistitur approbatur. An error not resisted is approved. Doct. & St. c. 70.

Error scribentis nocere non debet. An error made by a clerk ought not to injure. 1 Jenk. Cent. 324.

Errores ad sua principia referre, est refellere. To refer errors to their origin is to refute them. 8 Inst. 15.

Erubescit lex filios castigare parentes. The law blushes when children correct their parents. 8 Co. 116.

Est autem jus publicum et privatum, quod ex naturalibus præceptis aut gentium, aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliæ rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural precepts, on the one hand of nations, on the other of citizens; and that which in the civil law is called jus, in the law of England is said to be right. Co. Litt. 558.

Est boni judicis ampliare jurisdictionem. It is the part of a good judge to extend the jurisdiction. Gilb. 14.

Eum qui nocentem infamat, non est æquum et bonum ob eam rem condemnari; delicta enim nocentium nota esse oportet et expedit. It is not just and proper that he who speaks ill of a bad man should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the crimes of bad men should be known. Dig. 47. 10. 17; 1 Bla. Com. 125.

Eventus varios res nova semper habet. A new matter always produces various events. Co. Litt. 379.

Every man is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own voluntary acts. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 18; 9 East. 277; 9 B. & C. 643; 3 Maule & S. 11; Webb, Poll. Torts 35.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from antecedents and consequents. 2 Pars. Contr. 12, n. (r); Broom, Max. 577; 2d Inst. 317; 2 Bla. Com. 379; 1 Bulstr. 101; 15 East 541.

Ex diuturnitate temporis omnia præsumuntur solenniter esse acta. From length of time, all things are presumed to have been done in due form. Co. Litt. 6 Broom, Max 942; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 20; Best, Ev. § 43.

Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. A right of action cannot arise out of fraud. Broom, Max. 297, 729; Cowp. 343; 2 C. B. 501; 5 Scott N. R. 558; 10 Mass. 276; 38 Fed. 800. See VOID; CONTRACT; VOIDABLE.

Ex facto jus oritur. The law arises out of the fact. 2 Inst. 479; 2 Bla. Com. 329; Broom, Max. 102.

Ex frequenti delicto augetur pœna. Punishment increases with increasing crime. 2 Inst. 479.

Ex maleficio non oritur contractus. A contract cannot arise out of an illegal act. Broom, Max. 734; 1 Term 734; 3 id. 422; 1 H. Bla. 324; 5 E. & B. 999, 1015.

Ex malis moribus bonæ leges natæ sunt. Good laws arise from evil manners. 2 Inst. 161.

Ex multitudine signorum, colligitur identitas vera. From the great number of signs true identity is ascertained. Bacon, Max. Reg. 25; Broom, Max. 638.

Ex nihilo nihil fit. From nothing nothing comes. 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 178, 221; 18 id. 257, 301.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. No action arises on a contract without a consideration. Noy, Max. 24; Broom, Max. 745; 3 Burr. 1670; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 445; Chitty, Contr. 11th Am. ed. 24; 1 Story, Contr. § 525. In Paulus, Sent. II. 14. 1, it is ex nudo pacto inter cives Romanos actio non nascitur. See NUDUM PACTUM. In the civil law it meant that no contract is binding unless it falls within one of the recognized classes of valid contracts.

Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio. From an illicit contract no action arises. Broom, Max. 742; 7 Cl. & F. 729.

Ex procedentibus et consequentibus optima fit interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from things proceeding and following (i. e. the context). 1 Rolle 375.

Ex tota materia emergat resolutio. The construction or explanation should arise out of the whole subject-matter. Wing. Max. 238.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. No action arises out of an immoral consideration. Broom, Max. 730; Selw. N. P. 63; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 7 L. Ed. 508; 118 Mass. 299; 38 Fed. 800.

Ex turpi contractu non oritur actio. No action arises on an immoral contract. Dig. 2. 14, 27. 4; 2 Kent 466; 1 Story, Contr. § 592; 22 N. Y. 272.

Exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio nulla est. A plea of that matter the solution of which is the object of the action is of no effect. Jenk. Cent. 37.

Exceptio falsi est omnium ultima. The exception of falsehood is last of all. Trayner, Max. 198.

Exceptio firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis. An exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium. An exception proves an opposite rule. See exceptio probat regulam. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio nulla est versus actionem quæ exceptionem perimit. There can be no plea against an action which entirely destroys the plea. Jenk. Cent. 106.

Exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis. An exception proves a rule concerning things not excepted. 11 Co. 41; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 371; 22 id. 112. See exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium. The exception proves the rule means that the exception itself constitutes a rule.

Exceptio quæ firmat legem exponit legem. An exception which confirms the law, expounds the law. 2 Bulstr. 189.

Exceptio quoque regulam declarat. The exception also declares the rule. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio semper ultima ponenda est. An exception is always to be put last. 9 Co. 53.

Excessus in jure reprobatur. Excessus in re qualibet jure reprobatur communi. Excess in law is reprehended. Excess in anything is reprehended by common law. 11 Co. 44.

Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. That excuses or extenuates a wrong in capital causes which does not have effect in civil suits. Bacon, Max. Reg. 7; Broom, Max. 324.

Executio est executio juris secundum judicium. An execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment. 3 Inst. 212.

Executio est finis et fructus legis. An execution is the end and the fruit of law. Co. Litt. 289 b.

Executio legis non habet injuriam. An execution cannot work an injury. Co. Litt. 289 b.

Expedit reipublicæ ne sua re quis male utatur. It is for the interest of the state that a man should not use his own property improperly. Inst. 1. 8. 2; Broom, Max. 365-6; 8 Allen (Mass.) 329. This maxim belongs to the law of all countries: 1 Phill. Int. L. 553.

Expedit reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. It is to the advantage of the state that there should be an end of litigation. Co. Litt. 303 b; 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 568. See interest reipublicæ, etc.

Experientia per varios actus legem facit. Experience by various acts makes laws. Co. Litt. 60; Branch, Princ.

Expositio, quæ ex visceribus causæ nascitur, est aptissima et fortissima in lege. That exposition which springs from the vitals of a cause is the fittest and most powerful in law. 10 Co. 24.

Expressa nocent, non expressa non nocent. Things expressed may be prejudicial; things not expressed are not. Calvinus, Lex; Dig. 50. 17. 195.

Expressa non prosunt quæ non expressa proderunt. Thing expressed may be prejudicial which when not expressed will profit. 4 Co. 73.

Expressio eorum quæ tacite insunt nihil operatur. The expression of those things which are tacitly implied operates nothing. Broom, Max. 669, 753; 2 Pars. Contr. 28; 4 Co. 73; 5 id. 11; Andr. Steph. Pl. 366: Hob. 170; 8 Atk. 138; 11 M. & W. 569; 7 Exch. 28.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Co. Litt. 210; Broom, Max. 607, 651; 3 Bingh. N. C. 85; 8 Scott N. R. 1013; 12 M. & W. 761; 16 id. 244; 6 Mass. 84; 11 Cush. (Mass.) 328; 98 Mass. 29; 117 id. 448; 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 110; 5 Watts (Pa.) 156; 36 Fed. 880; 104 U. S. 25, 26 L. Ed. 637. It is a rule of construction; 222 U. S. 513, 32 Sup. Ct. 117, 56 L. Ed. 291.

Expressum facit cessare tacitum. That which is expressed puts an end to (renders ineffective) that which is implied. Broom, Max. 607, 651; 5 Bingh. N. C. 185; 6 B. & C. 609; 2 C. & M. 459; 2 E. & B. 856; 7 Mass. 106; 9 Allen (Mass.) 306; 24 Me. 374; 7 Watts (Pa.) 361; 1 Doug. (Mich.) 330; 36 Fed. 880.

Impossibilium nulla obligatio est. There is no obligation to perform impossible things. Dig. 50. 18. 185; 1 Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 4, § 3; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 763; Broom, Max. 249.

Impotentia excusat legem. Impossibility is an excuse in the law. Broom, Max. 243, 251.

Impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquenti. Impunity offers a continual bait to a delinquent. 4 Co. 45.

Impunitas semper ad deteriora invitat. Impunity always invites to greater crimes. 5 Co. 109.

In æquali jure melior est conditio possidentis. When the parties have equal rights, the condition of the possessor is the better. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 215; Jer. Eq. Jur. 285; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 170; Dig. 50. 17. 128; Broom, Max. 713; Plowd. 296.

In alta proditione nullus potest esse accessorius sed principalis solummodo. In high treason, no one can be an accessory; all are principals. 3 Inst. 138; see 4 Cra. (U. S.) 75, 2 L. Ed. 554; 4 Cra. (U. S.) 146, 2 L. Ed. 576. See ACCESSORY.

In alternativis electio est debitoris. In alternatives, the debtor has the election.

In ambigua voce legis ea potius accipienda est significatio, quæ vitio caret; præsertim cum etiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligi possit. In an ambiguous law that interpretation shall be preferred which is most consonant to equity, especially where it is in conformity with the general design of the legislature. Dig. 1. 3, 19; Broom, Max. 576; Bacon Max. Reg. 3; 2 Inst. 173.

In ambiguis orationibus maxime sententia spectanda est ejus qui eas protulisset. When there are ambiguous expressions, the intention of him who uses them is especially to be regarded. (This maxim of Roman law was confined to wills.) Dig. 50. 17. 96; Broom, Max. 567.

In ambiguo sermone non utrumque dicimus sed id duntaxat quod volumus. When the language we use is ambiguous, we do not use it in a double sense, but in the sense in which we mean it. Dig. 34. 5. 3; 2 De G. M. & G. 313.

In Anglia non est interregnum. There can be no interregnum in England. Jenk. Cent. 205.

In atrocioribus delictis punitur affectus licet non sequatur effectus. In more atrocious crimes, the intent is punished though the effect does not follow. 2 Rolle 89. But see ATTEMPT.

In casu extremæ necessitatis omnia sunt communia. In cases of extreme necessity, everything is in common. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 54; Broom, Max. 2 n.

In civilibus ministerium excusat, in criminalibus non item. In civil matters agency (or service) excuses, but not so in criminal matters. Lofft 228; Trayner, Max. 243.

In commodato hæc pactio, ne dolus præstetur, rata non est. If in a contract for a loan there is inserted a clause that fraud should not be accounted of, such clause is void. Dig. 13. 7. 17.

In conjunctivis oportet utramque partem esse veram. In conjunctives each part must be true. Wing. Max. 13.

In consimili casu, consimile debet esse remedium. In similar cases, the remedy should be similar. Hardr. 65.

In consuetudinibus non diuturnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. In customs, not the length of time but the strength of the reason should be considered. Co. Litt. 141.

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. In contracts, the interpretation or construction should be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal. Co. Litt. 112 a.

In contractibus tacite insunt quæ sunt moris et consuetudinis. In contracts, those things which are of custom and usage are tacitly implied. Broom, Max. 842; 3 Bingh. N. C. 814, 818; Story, Bills § 143; 3 Kent 260.

In contrahenda venditione, ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est. In negotiating a sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller. Dig. 50. 17. 172; 18. 1. 21.

In conventionibus contrahentium voluntatem potius quam verba spectari placuit. In agreements, the rule is to regard the intention of the contracting parties rather than their words. Dig. 50. 16. 219; 2 Kent 555; Broom, Max. 551; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 150.

In criminalibus, probationes debent esse luce clariores. In criminal cases, the proofs ought to be clearer than the light. 3 Inst. 210.

In criminalibus sufficit generalis malitia intentionis cum facto paris gradus. In criminal cases, a general malice of intention is sufficient, with an act of corresponding degree. Bacon, Max. Reg. 15; Broom, Max. 323.

In criminalibus voluntas reputabitur pro facto. In criminal acts, the will will be taken for the deed. 3 Inst 106.

In disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram. In disjunctives, it is sufficient if either part be true. Wing. Max. 13; Broom, Max. 592; Co. Litt. 225 a; 10 Co. 50; Dig. 50. 17. 110.

In dubiis benigniora præferenda sunt. In doubtful matters, the more favorable are to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56; 2 Kent 557.

In dubiis magis dignum est accipiendum. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be taken. Branch, Princ.

In dubiis non præsumitur pro testamento. In doubtful cases, there is no presumption in favor of the will. Cro. Car. 51.

In dubio hæc legis constructio quam verba ostendunt. In a doubtful case, that is the construction of the law which the words indicate.

In dubio pars mitior est sequenda. In doubt, the gentler course is to be followed.

In dubio, pro lege fori. In a doubtful case, the law of the forum is to be preferred. "A false maxim." Meili, Int. L. 151.

In dubio sequendum quod tutius est. In doubt, the safer course is to be adopted.

In eo quod plus sit semper inest et minus. The less is always included in the greater. Dig. 50. 17. 110.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible. 6 Co. 39; 2 Pars. Contr. 26.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum magis de bona quam de malo lex intendit. In a deed which may be considered good or bad, the law looks more to the good than to the bad. Co. Litt. 78 b.

In favorabilibus magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet. In things favored, what does good is more regarded than what does harm. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12; Bart. Max. 151.

In favorem vitæ, libertatis, et innocentiæ omnia præsumuntur. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence, all things are to be presumed. Lofft 125.

In fictione juris semper æquitas existit. A legal fiction is always consistent with equity. 11 Co. 51;

Broom, Max. 127, 130; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 348; 3 Bla. Com. 43.

In fictione juris semper subsistit æquitas. In a legal fiction equity always exists. 2 Pick. (Mass.) 495, 627.

In generalibus versatur error. Error dwells in general expressions. 1 Cush. (Mass.) 292.

In genere quicunque aliquid dicit, sive actor sive reus, necesse est ut probat. In general, whoever alleges anything, whether plaintiff or defendant, must prove it. Best, Ev. § 252.

In hæredes non solent transire actiones quæ pœnales ex maleficio sunt. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs. 2 Inst. 442.

In his enim quæ sunt favorabilia animæ, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extentio statuti. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made. 10 Co. 101.

In his quæ de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alicujus patriæ vel loci non est allegandа. In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular country or place is not to be alleged. 11 Co. 85.

In judiciis minori ætati succurritur. In judicial proceedings infancy is favored. Jenk. Cent. 46.

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. In law, no one is credited unless he is sworn. Cro. Car. 64.

In jure non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur. In law, the proximate and not the remote cause is to be looked to. Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Broom, Max. 216, 228, 853, n.; 12 Mass. 234; 12 Metc. (Mass.) 387. See 3 Pars. Con. 455; CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR.

In majore summa continetur minor. In the greater sum is contained the less. 5 Co. 115.

In maleficiis voluntas spectatur non exitus. In offences, the intention is regarded, not the event. Dig. 48. 8. 14; Bacon, Max. Reg. 7; Broom, Max. 324.

In maleficio ratihabitio mandato comparatur. In a tort, ratification is equivalent to authority. Dig. 50. 17. 152. 2.

In maxima potentia minima licentia. In the greatest power there is the least liberty. Hob. 159.

In mercibus illicitis non sit commercium. There should be no commerce in illicit goods. 3 Kent 262, n.

In novo casu novum remedium apponendum est. In a new state of facts a new legal remedy must be applied. 2 Inst. 3.

In obscuris inspici solere quod verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet. Where there is obscurity, we usually regard what is probable or what is generally done. Dig. 50. 17. 114.

In obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases, we follow that which is least so. Dig. 50. 17. 9.

In odium spoliatoris omnia præsumuntur. All things are presumed against a wrongdoer. Broom, Max. 939; 1 Vern. 19; 1 P. Wms. 731; 1 Ch. Cas. 292.

In omni actione ubi duæ concurrunt districtiones, videlicet in rem et in personam, illa districtio tenenda est quæ magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses concur, that is in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly. Bract. 372; Fleta, l. 6, c. 14, § 28.

In omni re nascitur res quæ ipsam rem exterminat. In every thing, the thing is born which destroys the thing itself. 2 Inst. 15.

In omnibus contractibus, sive nominatis sive innominatis, permutatio continetur. In every contract, whether nominate or innominate, there is implied an exchange, i. e. a consideration.

In omnibus obligationibus, in quibus dies non ponitur, præsenti die debetur. In all obligations, when no time is fixed for the performance, the thing is due immediately. Dig. 50. 17. 14.

In omnibus pœnalibus judiciis, et ætati et imprudentiæ succurritur. In all trials for penal offences, allowance is made for youth and lack of discretion. Dig. 50. 17. 108; Broom, Max. 314.

In omnibus quidem maxime tamen in jure æquitas spectanda sit. In all affairs indeed, but principally in those which concern the administration of justice, equity should be regarded. Dig. 50. 17. 90.

In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet. When two parties have equal rights, the advantage is always in favor of the possessor. Dig. 50. 17. 128; Broom, Max. 714.

In pari causa potior est conditio possidentis. When two parties have equal rights, the advantage is in favor of the one having possession.

In pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis. When the parties are equally in the wrong, the condition of the possessor is better. 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258, 6 L. Ed. 468; 3 Cra. (U. S.) 244, 2 L. Ed. 427; Cowp. 341; Broom, Max. 325; 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3724.

In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis (et possidentis). Where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable. L. R. 7 Ch. 473; 11 Mass. 376; 101 Mass. 150; Broom, Max. 290, 721; 38 Fed. 191.

In pœnalibus causis benignius interpretandum est. In penal cases, the more favorable interpretation is to be made. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 2; Plowd. 86 b; 2 Hale, P. C. 365.

In præparatoriis ad judicium favetur actori. In things preparatory before trial, the plaintiff is favored. 2 Inst. 57.

In præsentia majoris potestatis, minor potestas cessat. In the presence of the superior power, the minor power ceases. Jenk. Cent. 214; Hardw. 28; 13 How. (U. S.) 142, 14 L. Ed. 75; 13 Q. B. 740. See Broom, Max. 111, 112.

In pretio emptionis et venditionis naturaliter licet contrahentibus se circumvenire. In the price of buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to overreach each other. 1 Story, Contr. 606.

In propria causa nemo judex. No one can be judge in his own cause. 12 Co. 13.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus. In whatever thing one offends, in that he is rightfully to be punished. Co. Litt. 233 b.

In re communi neminem dominorum jure facere quicquam, invito altero, posse. One co-proprietor can exercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. Dig. 10. 3. 28.

In re dubia benigniorem interpretationem sequi, non minus justius est, quam tutius. In a doubtful case, to follow the milder interpretation is not less the more just than it is the safer course. Dig. 50. 17. 192. 2; 28. 4. 3.

In re dubia magis infitiatio quam affirmatio intelligenda. In a doubtful matter, the negative is to be understood rather than the affirmative. Godb. 37; Bart. Max. 127.

In re lupanari, testes lupanares admittentur. In a matter concerning brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 320, 324.

In re pari, potiorem causam esse prohibentis constat. Where a thing is owned in common, it is agreed that the cause of him prohibiting (its use) is the stronger. Dig. 10. 3. 28; 3 Kent 45; Pothier, Traité du Con. de Soc. n. 90; 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 491.

In re propria iniquum admodum est alicui licentiam tribuere sententiæ. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

In rebus manifestis errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. He errs who alleges the authorities of law in things manifest; because obvious truths need not be proved. 5 Co. 67.

In republica maxime conservanda sunt jura belli. In the state, the laws of war are to be especially observed. 2 Inst. 58; 8 Allen (Mass.) 484.

In restitutionem, non in pœnam, hæres succedit. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not the penalty. 2 Inst. 198.

In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. The most favorable construction is to be made in restitutions. Co. Litt. 112.

In satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all. 9 Co. 53.

In stipulationibus cum quæritur quid actum sit, verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. In contracts, when the question is what was agreed upon, the terms are to be interpreted against the party offering them. Dig. 41. 1. 38. 18. (Chancellor Kent remarks that the true principle appears to be "to give the contract the sense in which the person making the promise believes the other party to have accepted it, if he in fact did so understand and accept it." 2 Kent 721.) 2 Day (Conn.) 281; 1 Duer, Ins. 159, 160; Broom, Max. 599.

In stipulationibus id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus. In agreements, reference is had to the time at which they were made. Dig. 50. 17. 144. 1.

In suo quisque negotio hebetior est quam in alieno. Every one is more dull in his own business than in that of another. Co. Litt. 377.

In testamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutamur. In testaments, we should seek diligently the will of the testator. (But, says Doddridge, C. J., "this is to be observed with these two limitations: 1st, his intent ought to be agreeable to the rules of the law; 2d, his intent ought to be collected out of the words of the will." 3 Bulstr. 103.) Broom, Max. 555.

In testamentis plenius voluntates testantium interpretantur. In testaments, the will of the testator should be liberally construed. Dig. 50. 17. 12; Cujac. ad loc. cited 3 Pothier, Pand. 46; Broom, Max. 568.

In toto et pars continetur. A part is included in the whole. Dig. 50. 17. 113.

In traditionibus scriptorum (chartarum) non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum (factum) est, inspicitur. In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said but what is done is to be considered. 9 Co. 137; Leake, Contr. 4.

In veram quantitatem fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certa quantitate accessit. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity unless he agree for a certain quantity. 17 Mass. 597.

In verbis non verba sed res et ratio quærenda est. In words, not the words, but the thing and the meaning is to be inquired into. Jenk. Cent. 132.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur. In discourses, it is to be considered not from what, but to what, it is advanced. Ellesmere, Postn. 62.

Incendium ære alieno non exuit debitorem. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt. Code 4. 2. 11.

Incerta pro nullis habentur. Things uncertain are held for nothing. Dav. 33.

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act. 1 Rolle 465.

Incivile est, nisi tota lege prospecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare vel respondere. It is improper, unless the whole law has been examined, to give judgment or advice upon a view of a single clause of it. Dig. 1. 3. 24. See Hob. 171 a.

Incivile est, nisi tota sententia inspecta, de aliqua parte judicare. It is improper to pass an opinion on any part of a passage without examining the whole. Hob. 171 a.

Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. 11 Co. 58; 3 Mont. 312.

Incolas domicilium facit. Residence creates domicil. 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 363, 366. See DOMICIL.

Incommodum non solvit argumentum. An inconvenience does not solve an argument.

Incorporalia bello non adquiruntur. Things incorporeal are not acquired by war. 6 Maule & S. 104.

Inde datæ leges ne fortior omnia posset. Laws were made lest the stronger should have unlimited power.

Indefinitum æquipollet universali. The undefined is equivalent to the whole. 1 Ventr. 368.

Indefinitum supplet locum universalis. The undefined supplies the place of the whole. 4 Co. 77.

Independenter se habet assecuratio a viaggio navis. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship. 3 Kent 318, n.

Index animi sermo. Speech is the index of the mind. Broom, Max. 622.

Inesse potest donationi, modus, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause; as (ut), introduces a manner; if (si), a condition; because (quia), a cause. Dyer 138.

Infans non multum a furioso distat. An infant does not differ much from a lunatic. Bract. l. 3, c. 2, § 8; Dig. 50. 17. 5. 40; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 223, 224, 242.

Infinitum in jure reprobatur. That which is infinite is reprehensible in law. 9 Co. 45.

Iniquissima pax est anteponenda justissimo bello. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war. 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 257, 305.

Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others. 3 Inst. 181.

Iniquum est aliquem rei sui esse judicem. It is unjust for any one to be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke 13.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem. It is against equity for freemen not to have the free disposal of their own property. Co. Litt. 223.

Injuria fit ei cui convicium dictum est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum. An injury is done to him of whom a reproachful thing is said, or concerning whom an infamous song is made. 9 Co. 60; Bart. Max. 179.

Injuria non excusat injuriam. A wrong does not excuse a wrong. Broom, Max. 270, 387, 395; 11 Exch. 822; 15 Q. B. 276; 6 E. & B. 76; Branch, Princ.

Injuria non præsumitur. A wrong is not presumed. Co. Litt. 232.

Injuria propria non cadet beneficium facientis. No one shall profit by his own wrong.

Injuria servi dominum pertingit. The master is liable for injury done by his servant. Lofft 229.

Injustum est, nisi tota lege inspecta, de una aliqua ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere. It is unjust to give judgment or advice concerning any particular clause of a law without having examined the whole law. 3 Co. 117 b.

Insanus est qui, abjecta ratione, omnia cum impetu et furore facit. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does everything with violence and rage. 4 Co. 128.

Instans est finis unius temporis et principium alterius. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another. Co. Litt. 185.

Intentio cæca mala. A hidden intention is bad. 2 Bulstr. 179.

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni. Intentions ought to be subservient to the laws, not the laws to intentions. Co. Litt. 314.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo. My intent gives a name to my act. Hob. 123.

Inter alios res gestas aliis non posse præjudicium facere sæpe constitutum est. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice. Code 7. 60. 1. 2.

Inter arma silent leges. In time of war the laws are silent. Cicero, pro Milone. It applies as between the state and its external enemies; and also in cases of civil disturbance where extrajudicial force may supersede the ordinary process of law. Salmond, Jurispr. 641.

Interdum venit ut exceptio quæ prima facie justa videtur, tamen inique noceat. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems prima facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal. Inst. 4. 14; 4. 14; 1. 2.

Interest reipublicæ ne maleficia remaneant impunita. It concerns the commonwealth that crimes do not remain unpunished. Jenk. Cent. 30, 31.

Interest reipublicæ ne sua quis male utatur. It concerns the commonwealth that no one misuse his property. 6 Co. 36.

Interest reipublicæ quod homines conserventur. It concerns the commonwealth that men be preserved. 12 Co. 62.

Interest reipublicæ ut carceres sint in tuto. It concerns the commonwealth that prisons be secure. 2 Inst. 587.

Interest reipublicæ ut pax in regno conservetur, et quæcunque paci adversentur provide declinentur. It benefits the state to preserve peace in the kingdom, and prudently to decline whatever is adverse to it. 2 Inst. 158.

Interest reipublicæ ut quilibet re sua bene utatur. It concerns the commonwealth that every one use his property properly. 6 Co. 37.

Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. It concerns the commonwealth that there be a limit to litigation. Broom, Max. 331, 343, 893 n.; Co. Litt. 303; 7 Mass. 432; 16 Gray (Mass.) 27; 88 Pa. 506.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To interpret and reconcile laws so that they harmonize is the best mode of construction. 8 Co. 169.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Such a construction is to be made that the subject may have an effect rather than none. Broom, Max. 543; Jenk. Cent. 198; 78 Pa. 219. See CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION.

Interpretatio talis in ambiguis semper fienda est, ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum. In ambiguous things, such a construction should be made, that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided. 4 Inst. 328.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit præscriptionem semel obtentam. Repeated interruptions do not defeat a prescription once obtained. 2 Inst. 654.

Intestatus decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit aut non jure fecit, aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est, aut nemo ex eo hæres exstitit. He dies intestate who either has made no will at all or has not made it legally, or whose will which he had made has been annulled or become ineffectual, or to whom there is no living heir. Inst. 3. 1. pr.; Dig. 38. 16. 1; 50. 16. 64.

Inutilis labor, et sine fructu, non est effectus legis. Useless labor and without fruit is not the effect of law. Co. Litt. 127; Wing. Max. 38.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corrumpens punitur. He who finds a libel and does not destroy it, is punished. F. Moore 813.

Invito beneficium non datur. No one is obliged to accept a benefit against his consent. Dig. 50. 17. 69; Broom, Max. 699 n.; Salmond. Jurispr. 642. (But if he does not dissent, he will, in many cases, be considered as assenting. See ASSENT.)

Ipsæ leges cupiunt ut jure regantur. The laws themselves desire that they should be governed by right. Co. Litt. 174 b, quoted from Cato; 2 Co. 25 b.

Ira furor brevis est. Anger is a short insanity. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 336, 355.

Ita lex scripta est. The law is so written. 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 374, 380; 18 Pa. 306. See 22 Pick. (Mass.) 389.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the relation be so made that the disposition may stand. 6 Co. 76.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. A way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage. Co. Litt. 56 a; Inst. 2. 3. pr.; 1 Mack. Civ. Law 343, § 314.

Judex æquitatem semper spectare debet. A judge ought always to regard equity. Jenk. Cent. 45.

Judex ante oculos æquitatem semper habere debet. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes. Jenk. Cent. 58.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat, nec propositione domesticæ voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronunciet. A good judge should do nothing from his own arbitrary will, or from the dictates of his private wishes; but he should pronounce according to law and justice. 7 Co. 27 a.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur. The judge is condemned when the guilty are acquitted.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex est lex loquens. The judge is the speaking law. 7 Co. 4 a.

Judex habere debet duos sales, salem sapientiæ, ne sit insipidus, et salem conscientiæ, ne sit diabolus. A judge should have two salts: The salt of wisdom, lest he be foolish; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish. 3 Inst. 147; Bart. Max. 189.

Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause. 4 Inst. 279. See JUDGE.

Judex non potest injuriam sibi datum punire. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself. 12 Co. 114.

Judex non reddit plus quam quod petens ipse requirit. The judge does not give more than the plaintiff demands. 2 Inst. 286, case 84.

Judicandum est legibus non exemplis. We are to judge by the laws, not by examples. 4 Co. 33 b; 4 Bla. Com. 405.

Judices non tenentur exprimere causam sententiæ suæ. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their judgments. Jenk. Cent. 75.

Judici officium suum excedenti non paretur. To a judge who exceeds his office (or jurisdiction) no obedience is due. Jenk. Cent. 139.

Judici satis pœna est quod Deum habet ultorem. It is punishment enough for a judge that he is responsible to God. 1 Leon. 295.

Judicia in curia regis non adnihilentur, sed stent in robore suo quousque per errorem aut attinctam adnullentur. Judgments in the king's court are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attaint. 2 Inst. 360.

Judicia in deliberationibus crebro maturescunt, in accelerato processu nunquam. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberation, never by hurried process. 3 Inst. 210.

Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora. The later decisions are stronger in law. 8 Co. 97.

Judicia sunt tanquam juris dicta, et pro veritate accipiuntur. Judgments are, as it were, the dicta or sayings of the law, and are received as truth. 2 Inst. 537.

Judiciis posterioribus fides est adhibenda. Faith or credit is to be given to the later decisions. 13 Co. 14.

Judicis est in pronuntiando sequi regulam, exceptione non probata. The judge in his decision ought to follow the rule, when the exception is not proved.

Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. A judge ought to decide according to the allegations and proofs. Dyer 12 a; Halkers. Max. 73.

Judicis est jus dicere, non dare. It is the duty of a judge to declare the law, not to enact it. Lofft 42.

Judicis officium est opus diei in die suo perficere. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day. Dyer 12.

Judicis officium est ut res ita tempora rerum quærere; quæsito tempore tutus eris. It is the duty of a judge to inquire the times of things, as well as into things; by inquiring into the time you will be safe. Co. Litt. 171.

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. A judgment given by an improper judge is of no force. 10 Co. 76 b; 2 Q. B. 1014; 13 id. 143; 14 M. & W. 124; 11 Cl. & F. 610; Broom, Max. 93.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum. Judgment is as it were a saying of the law. Co. Litt. 168.

Judicium non debet esse illusorium, suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory, it ought to have its proper effect. 2 Inst. 341.

Judicium redditur in invitum, in præsumptione legis. In presumption of law, a judgment is given against inclination. Co. Litt. 248 b, 314 b.

Judicium semper pro veritate accipitur. A judgment is always taken for truth. 2 Inst. 380; 17 Mass. 237.

Juncta juvant. Things joined have effect. 11 East 220.

Jura sanguinis nullo jure civili dirimi possunt. The right of blood and kindred cannot be destroyed by any civil law. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Bacon, Max. Reg. 11; Broom, Max. 533; 14 Allen (Mass.) 562.

Juramentum est indivisibile, et non est admittendum in parte verum et in parte falsum. An oath is indivisible; it is not to be held partly true and partly false. 4 Inst. 274.

Jurare est Deum in testum vocare, et est actus divini cultus. To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion. 3 Inst. 165. See Bart. Max. 232; 1 Benth. Ev. 376, 371, note.

Juratores debent esse vicini, sufficientes et minus suspecti. Jurors ought to be neighbors, of sufficient estate, and free from suspicion. Jenk. Cent. 141.

Juratores sunt judices facti. Jurors are the judges of the facts. Jenk. Cent. 68.

Juratur creditur in judicio. He who makes oath is to be believed in judgment. 3 Inst. 79.

Jure naturæ æquum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem. According to the laws of nature, it is just that no one should be enriched with detriment and injury to another (i. e. at another's expense). Dig. 50. 17. 200.

Juri non est consonum quod aliquis accessorius in curia regis convincatur antequam aliquis de facto fuerit attinctus. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before any one has been attainted of the fact. 2 Inst. 183.

Juris effectus in executione consistit. The effect of a law consists in the execution. Co. Litt. 289 b.

Juris ignorantia est, cum jus nostrum ignoramus. It is ignorance of the law when we do not know our own rights.

Juris præcepta sunt hæc, honeste vivere, alterum non lædere, suum cuique tribuere. These are the precepts of the law, to live honorably, to hurt nobody, to render to every one his due. Inst. 1. 1. 3; Sharsw. Bla. Com. Introd. 40.

Juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti verum ignorantiam non nocere. Ignorance of fact prejudices no one, ignorance of law does. Dig. 22. 6. 9.

Jurisdictio est potestas de publico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice. 10 Co. 73 a.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia; justi atque injusti scientia. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human; the science of the just and the unjust. Dig. 1. 1. 10. 2; Inst. 1. 1. 1; Bract. 3.

Jurisprudentia legis communis Angliæ est scientia socialis et copiosa. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science sociable and copious. 7 Co. 28 a.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet, pro beneficio commercii. The right of survivorship does not exist among merchants, for the benefit of commerce. Co. Litt. 182; Broom, Max. 455; Lindl. Part., 4th ed. 664.

Jus accrescendi præfertur oneribus. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances. Co. Litt. 185.

Jus accrescendi præfertur ultimæ voluntati. The right of survivorship is preferred to a last will. Co. Litt. 185 b.

Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit. The civil law is what a people establishes for itself. Inst. 1. 2. 1; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 424, 426.

Jus descendit, et non terra. A right descends, not the land. Co. Litt. 345.

Jus dicere, et non jus dare. To declare the law, not to make it. 7 Term 696; Arg. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 566; 7 Exch. 543; 2 Eden 29; 4 C. B. 560, 561; Broom, Max. 140.

Jus est ars boni et æqui. Law is the science of what is good and just. Dig. 1. 1. 1. 1.

Jus est norma recti; et quicquid est contra normam recti est injuria. The law is the rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury. 3 Bulstr. 313.

Jus et fraus nunquam cohabitant. Right and fraud never live together. 10 Co. 45.

Jus ex injuria non oritur. A right cannot arise from a wrong. 4 Bingh. 639; Broom, Max. 738, n.

Jus in re inhærit ossibus usufructuarii. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

Law respecteth possibility of things. Wing. Max. 140; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 40.

Law respecteth the bonds of nature. Wing. Max. 78; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 29.

Lawful things are well mixed, unless a form of law oppose. Bacon, Max. Reg. 23. (The law giveth that favor to lawful acts, that although they be executed by several authorities, yet the whole act is good. Ibid.)

Le contrat fait la loi. The contract makes the law.

Le ley de Dieu et ley de terre sont tout un, et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land. Keilw. 191.

Le ley est le plus haut inheritance que le roy ad, car par le ley, il mesme et touts ses sujets sont rules, et si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul inheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Le salut du peuple est la suprême loi. The safety of the people is the highest law. Montes. Esp. Lois 1. xxvii. ch. 23; Broom, Max. 2, n.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est. It is contrary to the law of nations to do violence to ambassadors. Branch, Princ.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione sola. A legacy is confirmed by the death of the testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone. Dyer 143.

Legatus regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur, et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills. 12 Co. 17.

Legem enim contractus dat. The contract makes the law.

Legem terræ amittentes perpetuam infamiæ notam inde merito incurrunt. Those who do not preserve the law of the land, then justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy. 3 Inst. 221.

Leges Angliæ sunt tripartitæ: jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. The laws of England are threefold: common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

Leges figendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima. The custom of making and unmaking laws is a most dangerous one. 4 Co. pref.

Leges humanæ nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Co. 25; 2 Atk. 674; 11 C. B. 767; 1 Bla. Com. 89.

Leges naturæ perfectissimæ sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. Leges humanæ nascuntur, vivunt, moriuntur. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Co. 25.

Leges non verbis sed rebus sunt impositæ. Laws are imposed on things, not words. 10 Co. 101.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. Subsequent laws repeal prior conflicting ones. Broom, Max. 27, 29; 2 Rolle 410; 11 Co. 626, 630; 12 Allen (Mass.) 434.

Leges suum ligent latorem. Laws should bind the proposers of them. Fleta, b. 1, c. 17, § 11.

Leges vigilantibus, non dormientibus subveniunt. The laws aid the vigilant, not the negligent. 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 142, 144.

Legibus sumptis desinentibus, lege naturæ utendum est. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature. 2 Rolle 298.

Non definitur in jure quid sit conatus. What an attempt is, is not defined in law. 6 Co. 43. See ATTEMPT.

Non differunt quæ concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem. Those things which agree in substance, though not in the same words, do not differ. Jenk. Cent. 70.

Non dubitatur, etsi specialiter venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evicta, ex empto competere actionem. It is certain that although the vendor has not given a special guarantee, an action ex empto lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted. Code, 8. 45. 6. But see Doct. & Stud. b. 2, c. 47; Broom, Max. 768.

Non efficit affectus nisi sequatur effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless some effect follows. 1 Rolle 226.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum. There is no stronger link among men than an oath. Jenk. Cent. 126.

Non est certandum de regulis juris. There is no disputing about rules of law.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. There is no disputing against a man denying principles. Co. Litt. 343.

Non est justum aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum, qui toto tempore vitæ suæ pro legitimo habebatur. It is not just to make an elder-born a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate. Bart. Max. 49; 12 Co. 44.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahantur. It is not a new thing that prior statutes shall give place to later ones. Dig. 1. 3. 26; 1. 1. 4; Broom, Max. 28.

Non est recedendum a communi observantia. There should be no departure from a common observance. 2 Co. 74.

Non est regula quin fallat. There is no rule but what may fail. Off. Ex. 212.

Non est reus nisi mens sit rea. One is not guilty unless his intention be guilty. This maxim is much criticised. See actus non reum facit, etc.; MENS REA.

Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. Names of things ought to be understood according to common usage, not according to the opinions of individuals. Dig. 33. 10. 7. 2.

Non exemplis sed legibus judicandum est. Not by the facts of the case, but by the law must judgment be made. Dig. 7. 45. 13. (called by Alberícus Gentilis lex aurea).

Non facias malum ut inde veniat bonum. You are not to do evil that good may come of it. 11 Co. 74 a.

Non impedit clausula derogatoria, quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituuntur. A derogatory clause does not prevent things from being dissolved by the same power by which they were originally made. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19; Broom, Max. 27; 5 Watts (Pa.) 155.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo leges consistunt. The laws consist, not in being read, but in being understood. 8 Co. 167.

Non jus ex regula, sed regula ex jure. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim), but the rule from the law. Fleta vi. 14; Trayner, Max. 384.

Non jus, sed seisina facit stipitem. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock (from which the inheritance must descend). Fleta, l. 6, cc. 14, 2, § 2; Noy, Max., 9th ed. 72, n. (b); Broom, Max. 525; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 209; 1 Steph. Com. 365, 368, 394; 4 Kent 388; 4 Scott N. R. 468.

Non licet quod dispendio licet. That which is permitted only at a loss is not permitted to be done. Co. Litt. 127.

Non nasci, et natum mori, paria sunt. Not to be born, and to be dead-born, are the same.

Non obligat lex nisi promulgata. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

Non observata forma, infertur adnullatio actus. When the form is not observed, it is inferred that the act is annulled. 12 Co. 7.

Non officit conatus nisi sequatur effectus. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follow. 11 Co. 98.

Non omne damnum inducit injuriam. Not every loss produces an injury (i. e. gives a right of action). See 3 Bla. Com. 219; 1 Sm. L. C. 131; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 2211.

Non omne quod licet honestum est. It is not everything which is permitted that is honorable. Dig. 50. 17. 144; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 121.

Non omnium quæ a majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest. A reason cannot always be given for the institutions of our ancestors. 4 Co. 78; Broom, Max. 157; Branch, Princ.

Notitia dicitur a noscendo; et notitia non debet claudicare. Notice is named from knowledge; and notice ought not to halt (i. e. be imperfect). 6 Co. 29.

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non præteritis. A new enactment ought to impose form upon what is to come, not upon what is past. 2 Inst. 292; Broom, Max. 34, 37; T. Jones 108; 2 Show. 16; 6 M. & W. 285; 7 id. 536; 2 Mass. 122; 10 id. 439; 2 N. Y. 245; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 503.

Novatio non præsumitur. A novation is not presumed. Halkers. Max. 104; Bart. Max. 231.

Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat. Novelty benefits not so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty. Jenk. Cent. 167.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum. A new judgment does not make a new law, but declares the old. 10 Co. 42.

Noxa caput sequitur. The injury (i. e. liability to make good an injury caused by a slave) follows the head or person (i. e. attaches to his master). It extends to an animal or instrument. Holmes, Com. Law 7; Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. l. 4, t. 8, § 1231.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit. A naked promise does not create an obligation. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; Code 4. 65. 27; Broom, Max. 746; Brisson, Nudus.

Nudo ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem. Naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor. Fleta, l. 2, c. 60, § 25.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa præter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem. Nudum pactum is where there is no consideration besides the agreement; but when there is a consideration, an obligation is created and an action arises. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; Sharsw. Bla. Com. 445; Broom, Max. 745; 1 Pow. Contr. 330; 3 Burr. 1670; Vin. Abr. Nudum Pactum (A). This is explained under CONSIDERATION.

Nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises. Code 2. 3. 10; 5. 14. 1; Broom, Max. 676; Bart. Max. 231.

Nul ne doit s'enrichir aux depens des autres. No one ought to enrich himself at the expense of others.

Nul prendra advantage de son tort demesne. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Broom, Max. 290.

Nulla curia quæ recordum non habet potest imponere finem, neque aliquem mandare carceri; quia ista spectant tantummodo ad curias de recordo. No court which has not a record can impose a fine, or commit any person to prison; because those powers belong only to courts of record. 8 Co. 60.

Nulla emptio sine pretio esse potest. There can be no sale without a price. 4 Pick. (Mass.) 189.

Nulla impossibilia aut inhonesta sunt præsumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilia. No impossible or dishonorable things are to be presumed; but things true, honorable, and possible. Co. Litt. 78.

Nulla pactione effici potest ne dolus præstetur. By no agreement can it be effected that there shall be no accountability for fraud. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 3; Broom, Max. 696, 118, n.; 5 M. & S. 466.

Nulle régle sans faute. There is no rule without a fault.

Nulle terre sans seigneur. No land without a lord. Guyot, Inst. Feod. c. 28.

Nulli enim res sua servit jure servitutis. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Dig. 8. 2. 26.

Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit. The authority of no man ought to avail with us, that we should not follow better [opinions] should any one present them. Co. Litt. 383 b.

Nullum crimen majus est inobedientia. No crime is greater than disobedience. Jenk. Cent. 77.

Nullum exemplum est idem omnibus. No example is the same for all purposes. Co. Litt. 212 a.

Nullum iniquum est præsumendum in jure. Nothing unjust is to be presumed in law. 4 Co. 72.

Nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. No marriage, no dower. 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 192.

Nullum simile est idem. Nothing which is like another is the same, i. e. no likeness is exact identity. Story, Partn. 90; Co. Litt. 3 a; 2 Bla. Com. 162; 6 Binn. (Pa.) 506.

Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit. No simile runs upon four feet (or, as ordinarily expressed, "on all fours"). Co. Litt. 3 a; Eunomus, Dial. 2, p. 155; 6 Binn. (Pa.) 506.

Nullum tempus occurrit regi. Lapse of time does not bar the right of the crown. 2 Inst 273; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 247; Broom, Max. 65; Hob. 347; 2 Steph. Com. 504; 1 Mass. 355; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 227; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 139; 13 Am. L. Reg. 465.

Nullum tempus occurrit reipublicæ. Lapse of time does not bar the commonwealth. 11 Gratt. (Va.) 572; 16 Tex. 305; 19 Mo. 667.

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Co. Litt. 148 b; Broom, Max. 279; 4 Bingh. N. C. 395; 4 B. & A. 409; 10 M. & W. 309; 11 id. 680; 12 Gray (Mass.) 493.

Nullus debet agere de dolo, ubi alia actio subest. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo. 7 Co. 92.

Nullus dicitur accessorius post feloniam sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et comfortavit. No one is called an accessory after the fact but he who knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him. 3 Inst. 138.

Nullus dicitur felo principalis nisi actor, aut qui præsens est, abettans aut auxilians actorem ad feloniam faciendam. No one is called a principal felon except the party actually committing the felony, or the party present aiding and abetting in its commission. 3 Inst. 138.

Nullus idoneus testis in re sua intelligitur. No one is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause. Dig. 22. 5. 10.

Nullus jus alienum forisfacere potest. No man can forfeit another's right. Fleta, l. 1, c. 28, § 11.

Nullus recedat e curia cancellaria sine remedio, No one ought to depart out of the court of chancery without a remedy. Bisp. Eq. 8; Year B. 4 Hen. VII. 4.

Nullus videtur dolo facere qui suo jure utitur. No man is to be esteemed a wrong-doer who avails himself of his legal right. Dig. 50. 17. 55; Broom, Max. 130; 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 399, 492. See [1898] Ch. 1.

Nunquam crescit ex post facto præteriti delicti æstimatio. The quality of a past offence is never aggravated by that which happens subsequently. Dig. 50. 17. 138. 1; Bacon, Max. Reg. 8; Broom, Max. 42.

Nunquam fictio sine lege. There is no fiction without law.

Nunquam nimis dicitur quod nunquam satis dicitur. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much. Co. Litt. 375.

Nunquam præscribitur in falso. There is never prescription in case of falsehood. Bell, Dict.

Nunquam res humanæ prospere succedunt ubi negliguntur divinæ. Human things never prosper when divine things are neglected. Co. Litt. 95; Wing. Max. 2.

Nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit. Not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage. Dig. 50. 17. 30; Co. Litt. 33; Broom, Max. 506, n.

Obedientia est legis essentia. Obedience is the essence of the law. 11 Co. 100.

Obtemperandum est consuetudini rationabili tanquam legi. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed like law. 4 Co. 38.

Occupantis fiunt derelicta. Things abandoned become the property of the (first) occupant.

Odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege præsumenda. Odious and dishonest acts are not presumed in law. Co. Litt. 78; 18 N. Y. 295.

Odiosa non præsumuntur. Odious things are not presumed. Burr. Sett. Cas. 190.

Officers may not examine the judicial acts of the court.

Officia judicialia non consedantur antequam vacent. Judicial offices ought not to be granted before they are vacant. 11 Co. 4.

Officia magistratus non debent esse venalia. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold. Co. Litt. 234.

Officit conatus si effectus sequatur. The attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows. Jenk. Cent. 55.

Officium nemini debet esse damnosum. An office ought to be injurious to no one. Bell, Dict.

Omissio eorum quæ tacite insunt nihil operatur. The omission of those things which are silently implied is of no consequence. 2 Bulstr. 131.

Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum. Every act is to be estimated by the intention of the doer. Branch, Princ.

Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit. Drunkenness inflames and reveals every crime. Co. Litt. 247; Broom, Max. 17; Whart. Cr. L. § 48.

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit, aut firmavit consuetudo. All law has been derived from consent, established by necessity, or confirmed by custom. Dig. 1. 3. 40; Broom, Max. 690, n.

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, quamvis minus dignum sit antiquius. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, though the latter be more ancient. Co. Litt. 355.

Omne magnum exemplum habet aliquid ex iniquo, quod publica utilitate compensatur. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by its public utility. Hob. 279.

Omne majus continet in se minus. The greater contains in itself the less. 5 Co. 115 a; Wing. Max. 206; Story, Ag. § 172; Broom, Max. 174; 15 Pick. (Mass.) 397; 1 Gray (Mass.) 336.

Omne majus dignum continet in se minus dignum. The more worthy contains in itself the less worthy. Co. Litt. 143.

Omne majus minus in se complectitur. Every greater embraces in itself the minor. Jenk. Cent. 208.

Omne principale trahit ad se accessorium. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory. 17 Mass. 425; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 580.

Omne quod solo inædificatur solo cedit. Every thing belongs to the soil which is built upon it. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 10; 47. 3. 1; Inst. 2. 1. 29; Broom, Max. 401; Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, § 12.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientia. Every oath ought to be founded on certain knowledge. 4 Inst. 279.

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est. Every will is consummated by death. 3 Co. 29 b; 4 id. 61 b; 2 Bla. Com. 500; Shep. Touch. 401; Broom Max. 503.

Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora habent limitationem. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods. Bract. 52.

Omnes licentiam habere his quæ pro se indulta sunt, renunciare. All have liberty to renounce those things which have been established in their favor. Code 2. 3. 29; 1. 3. 51; Broom, Max. 699.

Omnes prudentes illa admittere solent quæ probantur iis qui in arte sua bene versati sunt. All prudent men are accustomed to admit those things which are approved by those who are well versed in the art. 7 Co. 19.

Omnia delicta in aperto leviora sunt. All crimes committed openly are considered lighter. 8 Co. 127.

Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. All things are presumed against a wrong-doer. Broom, Max. 938; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 37.

Omnia præsumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved. Co. Litt. 232; Broom, Max. 948; 59 Pa. 68.

Omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta. All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done. Co. Litt. 232 b; Broom, Max. 165, 942; 12 C. B. 788; 3 Exch. 191; 6 id. 716.

Omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to have been done regularly and with due formality until the contrary is proved. Broom, Max. 944; 5 B. & Ad. 550; 12 M. & W. 251; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 69, 6 L. Ed. 552; 6 Binn. (Pa.) 447.

Omnia quæ jure contrahuntur, contrario jure pereunt. Obligations contracted under a law are destroyed by a law to the contrary. Dig. 50. 17. 100.

Omnia quæ sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri. All things which are the wife's belong to the husband. Co. Litt. 112; 2 Kent 130, 143.

Omnia rite esse acta præsumuntur. All things are presumed to have been done in due form. Co. Litt. 6; Broom, Max. 944, n; 11 Cush. (Mass.) 441; 13 Allen (Mass.) 397; 108 Mass. 425; 2 Ohio St. 246; 6 id. 293.

Omnis conclusio boni et veri judicii sequitur ex bonis et veris præmissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment arises from good and true premises, and the verdicts of jurors. Co. Litt. 226.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. Every consent removes error. 2 Inst. 123.

Omnis definitio in jure civili periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown. (There is no rule in the civil law which is not liable to some exception; and the least difference in the facts of the case renders its application useless.) Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Woodd. Lect. 196.

Omnis exceptio est ipsa quoque regula. An exception is in itself also a rule. This is the real meaning of the common aphorism: "The exception proves the rule."

Omnis indemnatus pro innoxis legibus habetur. Every uncondemned person is held by the law as innocent.

Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest. Every innovation disturbs more by its novelty than it benefits by its utility. 2 Bulstr. 338; 1 Salk. 20; Broom, Max. 147; 62 Pa. 381.

Omnis interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. The interpretation of instruments is to be made, if they will admit of it, so that all contradictions may be removed. Jenk. Cent. 96.

Omnis interpretatio vel declarat, vel extendit, vel restringit. Every interpretation either declares, extends, or restrains.

Omnis nova constitutio futuris temporibus formam imponere debet, non præteritis. Every new statute ought to set its stamp upon the future, not the past. Bract. 228; 2 Inst. 95.

Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim. Every person is a man, but not every man a person. Calvinus, Lex.

Omnis privatio præsupponit habitum. Every privation presupposes former enjoyment. Co. Litt. 339.

Omnis querela et omnis actio injuriarum limitata est infra certa tempora. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within certain times. Co. Litt. 114.

Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori æquiparatur. Every subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a prior command. Co. Litt. 207 a; Story, Ag., 4th. ed. 102; Broom, Max. 757, 867; 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 363, 5 L. Ed. 631; 7 Exch. 726; 9 C. B. 532, 607; 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 256; 52 Me. 82. See RATIFICATION; 9 Harv. L. R. 60.

Omnis regula suas patitur exceptiones. Every rule of law is liable to its own exceptions.

Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est. What is given for all shall be compensated for by the contribution of all. 4 Bingh. 121; 2 Marsh. 309.

Omnium rerum quarum usus est, potest esse abusus, virtute solo excepta. There may be an abuse of everything of which there is a use, virtue only excepted. Dav. 79.

Once a fraud, always a fraud. 13 Vin. Abr. 539.

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage. 1 Hill. R. P. 378; Bisph. Eq. § 153; 7 Watts (Pa.) 375; 67 Pa. 104; 22 Ind. 62. See MORTGAGE.

Once a recompense, always a recompense. 19 Vin. Abr. 277.

Once quit and cleared, ever quit and cleared. Skene de Verb. Sign., iter ad fin.

One may not do an act to himself.

Opinio quæ favet testamento est tenenda. That opinion is to be followed which favors the will.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium. A thing, to be brought to judgment, must be certain or definite. Jenk. Cent. 84; Bract. 15 b.

Oportet quod certa sit res quæ venditur. A thing, to be sold, must be certain or definite. Bract. 61.

Optima enim est legis interpres consuetudo. Usage is the best interpreter of law. 2 Inst. 18; Broom, Max. 931.

Optima est lex, quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis, optimus judex qui minimum sibi. That is the best law which confides as little as possible to the discretion of the judge; he is the best judge who takes least upon himself. Bacon, Aph. 46; Broom, Max. 84.

Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpretress of a statute is (all the separate parts being considered) the statute itself. 8 Co. 117; Wing. Max. 239, max. 68.

Optimam esse legem, quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; id quod certitudo ejus præstat. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty. Bacon, Aph. 8.

Optimus interpres rerum usus. Usage is the best interpreter of things. 2 Inst. 282; Broom, Max. 917, 930.

Optimus interpretandi modus est sic leges interpretare ut leges legibus accordant. The best mode of interpreting laws is to make them accord. 8 Co. 169.

Optimus judex, qui minimum sibi. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion. Bacon, Aph. 46; Broom, Max. 84.

Optimus legum interpres consuetudo. Usage is the best interpreter of laws. 4 Inst. 75; 2 Pars. Con., 8th ed. *541; Broom, Max. 685.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. The order of pleading being preserved, the law is preserved. Co. Litt. 303; Broom, Max. 188.

Origine propria neminem posse voluntate sua eximi manifestum est. It is manifest that no one by his own will can renounce his origin (put off or discharge his natural allegiance). Code 10. 34. 4. See 1 Bla. Com. c. 10; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 313; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 7 L. Ed. 617; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 246, 7 L. Ed. 666; Broom, Max. 77.

Origo rei inspici debet. The origin of a thing ought to be inquired into. 1 Co. 99.

Pacta conventa quæ neque contra leges, neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Contracts which are not illegal, and do not originate in fraud, must in all respects be observed. Code 2. 3. 29; Broom, Max. 698, 732.

Pacta dant legem contractui. Agreements give the law to the contract. Halkers. Max. 118.

Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt.

Private contracts cannot derogate from the public law. 7 Co. 23.

Pacta quæ contra leges constitutionesque vel contra bonos mores fiunt nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. It is indubitable law that contracts against the laws, or good morals, have no force. Code 2. 3. 6; Broom, Max. 695.

Pacta quæ turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Contracts founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 7 L. Ed. 508; Broom, Max. 732.

Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur. Private contracts do not derogate from public law. Broom, Max. 695; per Dr. Lushington, Arg. 4 Cl. & F. 241; Arg. 3 id. 621.

Pacto aliquid licitum est, quod sine pacto non admittitur. By a contract something is permitted, which, without it, could not be admitted. Co. Litt. 166.

Par in parem imperium non habet. An equal has no power over an equal. Jenk. Cent. 174. Example: One of two judges of the same court cannot commit the other for contempt.

Parens est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis. Parent is a general name for every kind of relationship. Co. Litt. 80; Littleton § 108; Mag. Cart. Joh. c. 50.

Parentum est liberos alere etiam nothos. It is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate. Lofft 222.

Paria copulantur paribus. Similar things unite with similar.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur. When opinions are equal, a defendant is acquitted. 4 Inst. 64.

Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum. An integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. 8 Co. 41.

Partus ex legitimo thoro non certius noscit matrem quam genitorem suum. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father. Fortescue, c. 42.

Partus sequitur ventrem. The offspring follow the condition of the mother. Inst. 2. 1. 19. (This is the law in the case of slaves and animals; but with regard to freemen, children follow the condition of the father.) Broom, Max. 516, n.; 13 Mass. 551; 18 Pick. (Mass.) 222.

Parum est latam esse sententiam, nisi mandetur executioni. It is not enough that judgment should be given unless it be committed to execution. Co. Litt. 289 b.

Parum proficit scire quid fieri debet si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum. It avails little to know what ought to be done, if you do not know how it is to be done. 2 Inst. 503.

Pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. The father is he whom the marriage points out. Bart. Leg. Max. 151; 1 Bla. Com. 446; 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 548, 553; Dig. 2. 4. 5; Broom, Max. 516. See ACCESS.

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses. Jenk. Cent. 6.

Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate consistere. Paternal power should consist in affection, not in atrocity.

Peccata contra naturam sunt gravissima. Offences against nature are the most serious. 3 Inst. 20.

Peccatum peccato addit qui culpæ quam facit patrocinium defensionis adjungit. He adds one offence to another, who, when he commits a crime, joins to it the protection of a defence. 5 Co. 49.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur. During a litigation nothing should be changed. Co. Litt. 344. See 20 How. (U. S.) 106, 15 L. Ed. 833; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 406; 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441; 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 33. See LIS PENDENS.

Per alluvionem id videtur adjici, quod ita paulatim adjicitur ut intelligere non possumus quantum quoque momento temporis adjiciatur. That is said to be added by alluvion which is so added little by little that we cannot tell how much is added at any one moment of time. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 1; Hale, de Jur. Mar. pars. 1, c. 4; Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, § 6.

Per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem. By reasoning we come to legal reason. Littleton § 386.

Per rerum naturam, factum negantis nulla probatio est. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Per varios actus, legem experientia facit. By various acts experience frames the law. 4 Inst. 50.

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suæ perfectionis vel naturæ modum. That is perfect which wants nothing according to the measure of its perfection or nature. Hob. 151.

Periculosum est res novas et inusitatas inducere. It is dangerous to introduce new and unaccustomed things. Co. Litt. 379.

Periculum rei venditæ, nondum traditæ, est emptoris. The purchaser runs the risk of the loss of a thing sold, though not delivered. 2 Kent 498, 499; 4 B. & C. 481, 941.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. They are perjured who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it. 3 Inst. 166.

Perpetua lex est, nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quæ abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human or positive law can be perpetual; and a clause in a law which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19; Broom, Max. 27.

Perpetuities are odious in law and equity.

Persona conjuncta æquiparatur interesse proprio. The interest of a personal connection is sometimes regarded in law as that of the individual himself. Bacon, Max. Reg. 18; Broom, Max. 533, 537.

Personalia personam sequuntur. Personal things follow the person. 10 Cush. (Mass.) 516.

Perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Plain truths need not be proved. Co. Litt. 16; 18 Pa. Dist. Rep. 638.

Pirata est hostis humani generis. A pirate is an enemy of the human race. 3 Inst. 113.

Placita negativa duo exitum non faciunt. Two negative pleas do not form an issue. Lofft 415.

Plena et celeris justitia fiat partibus. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties. 4 Inst. 67.

Pluralis numerus est duobus contentus. The plural number is contained in two. 1 Rolle 476.

Pluralities are odious in law.

Plures cohæredes sunt quasi unum corpus, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Several co-heirs are as one body, by reason of the unity of right which they possess. Co. Litt. 163.

Plures participes sunt quasi unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent. Several part-owners are as one body, by reason of the unity of their rights. Co. Litt. 164.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent. Examples hurt more than offences.

Plus peccat auctor quam actor. The instigator of a crime is worse than he who perpetrates it. 5 Co. 99.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis, quam auriti decem. One eye-witness is better than ten ear-witnesses. 4 Inst. 279.

Plus vident oculi quam oculus. Several eyes see more than one. 4 Inst. 160.

Pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes. Punishment to few, dread or fear to all.

Pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. If punishment be inflicted on a few, a dread comes to all.

Pœna ex delicto defuncti hæres teneri non debet. The heir ought not to be bound in a penalty inflicted for the crime of the ancestor. 2 Inst. 198.

Pœna non potest, culpa perennis erit. Punishment cannot be, crime will be, perpetual. 21 Vin. Abr. 271.

Pœna tolli potest, culpa perennis erit. The punishment can be removed, but the crime remains. 1 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 241. See PARDON.

Pœnæ potius molliendæ quam exasperandæ sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated. 3 Inst. 220.

Pœnæ sint restringendæ. Punishments should be restrained. Jenk. Cent. 29.

Pœnæ suos tenere debet actores et non alios. Punishment ought to be inflicted upon the guilty, and not upon others. Bract. 380 b; Fleta, l. 1, c. 38, § 12; l. 4, c. 17, § 17.

Politæ legibus non leges politiis adaptandæ. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics. Hob. 154.

Ponderantur testes, non numerantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted. 1 Stark. Ev. 554; Best, Ev. 426, § 389; 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 105, 109.

Posito uno oppositorum negatur alterum. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied. 3 Rolle 422.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot. 3 Co. 42.

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. An accessory follows its principal. Broom, Max. 491. (For a definition of res accessoria, see Mack. Civ. Law 155.)

Res denominatur a principaliori parte. A thing is named from its principal part. 5 Co. 47.

Res est misera ubi jus est vagum et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain. 2 Salk. 512.

Res generalem habet significationem, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis naturæ sive speciei, comprehendit. The word things has a general signification, because it comprehends as well corporeal as incorporeal objects, of whatever sort, nature, or species. 3 Inst. 482; 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 415.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. Things done between strangers ought not to injure those who are not parties to them. Co. Litt. 132; Broom, Max. 954, 967; 11 Q. B. 1028; 57 N. H. 369; Freem. Judg. § 154.

Res inter alios judicatæ nullum aliis præjudicium faciunt. Matters adjudged in a cause do not prejudice those who were not parties to it. Dig. 44. 2. 1.

Res ipsa loquitur. See RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

Res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. A thing adjudged makes white, black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 840.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. A thing adjudged must be taken for truth. Dig. 50. 17. 207; Co. Litt. 103; Broom, Max. 328, 333, 945; 2 Kent 120; 13 M. & W. 679; 59 Pa. 68. See RES JUDICATA.

Res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis. A thing which has no owner naturally belongs to the first finder. See FINDER.

Res per pecuniam æstimatur, et non pecunia per res. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to things. 9 Co. 76.

Res periit domino suo. The destruction of the thing is the loss of its owner. Hare, Contr. 88; Story, Bailm. 426; 2 Kent 591; Broom, Max. 238; 14 Allen (Mass.) 269. This maxim is said to be quoted chiefly in cases to which it did not apply in the Roman Law; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 106. See RES PERIIT DOMINO; SALE.

Res propria est quæ communis non est. A thing is private which is not common. 8 Paige (N. Y.) 261, 270.

Res quæ intra præsidia perductæ nondum sunt, quanquam ab hostibus occupatæ, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things which have not yet been introduced within the enemy's lines, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed. Grotius, de Jur. Bell. l. 3, c. 9, § 16; l. 3, c. 6, § 3.

Res sacra non recipit æstimationem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation. Dig. 1. 8. 9. 5.

Res sua nemini servit. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Trayner, Max. 541.

Res transit cum suo onere. The thing passes with its burden. Fleta, l. 3, c. 10, § 3.

Reservatio non debet esse de proficuis ipsis quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficua. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase. Co. Litt. 142.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous relinquishment of one's own right. Godb. 284.

Resoluto jure concedentis, resolvitur jus concessum. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished. Mack. Civ. Law 179; Broom, Max. 467.

Respiciendum est judicanti, nequid aut durius aut remissius constituatur quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiæ gloria affectanda est. It is a matter of import to one adjudicating that nothing should be either more severely or more leniently construed than the cause itself demands; for the glory neither of severity nor clemency should be affected. 3 Inst. 220.

Respondeat raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward. Hob. 99.

Respondeat superior. Let the principal answer, Broom, Max. 7, 62, 268, 369, n. 843; 4 Inst. 114; 4 Maule & S. 259; 10 Exch. 656; 98 Mass. 221, 571.

Responsio unius non omnino auditur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 260. (This is a maxim of the civil law, where everything must be proved by two witnesses.)

Reus excipiendo fit actor. The defendant by a plea becomes plaintiff. Bannier, Tr. des preuves, §§ 152, 320; Best, Evid. 294, § 252.

Reus læsæ majestatis punitur, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish. 4 Co. 124.

Rex non debet esse sub homine sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law. Broom, Max. 47, 117; Bract. 5.

Rex non potest fallere nec falli. The king cannot deceive or be deceived. Grounds & Rud. of Law 438.

Rex non potest peccare. The king can do no wrong. 2 Rolle 304; Jenk. Cent. 9, 308; Broom, Max. 52; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 246.

Rex nunquam moritur. The king never dies, Broom, Max. 50; Branch, Max. 5th ed. 197; 1 Bla. Com. 249.

Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of river-banks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself. Dig. 1. 8. 5. pr.; Fleta, l. 3, c. 1, § 5; Loccenius de Jur. Mar. l. 1, c. 6, § 12; 3 Kent 425.

Roy n'est lie per ascun statute, si il ne soit expressement nosme. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named. Jenk. Cent. 307; Broom, Max. 72.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites, veritatem, justitiam et judicium: veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et judicium in judice. An oath has in it three component parts—truth, justice, and judgment: truth in the party swearing, justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath. 3 Inst. 160.

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury. 2 Inst. 167.

Sacrilegus omnium prædonum cupiditatem et scelerem superat. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupidity and wickedness of all other robbers. 4 Co. 106.

Sæpe constitutum est, res inter alios judicatas aliis non præjudicare. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties. Dig. 42. 1. 63.

Sæpe viatorem nova non vetus orbita fallit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, which deceives the traveller. 4 Inst. 34.

Sæpenumero ubi proprietas verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Frequently where the propriety of words is attended to, the meaning of truth is lost. 7 Co. 27.

Salus populi est suprema lex. The safety of the people is the supreme law. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12; Broom, Max. 1, 10, 237, n.; 13 Co. 139; 8 Metc. (Mass.) 465; 12 id. 82; 116 Mass. 260. See 39 Am.

L. Rev. 911. The correct reading is given as: Salus populi suprema lex esto.

Salus reipublicæ suprema lex. The safety of the state is the supreme law. 4 Cush. (Mass.) 71; 1 Gray (Mass.) 386; Broom, Max. 366.

Salus ubi multa consilia. In many counsellors there is safety. 4 Inst. 1.

Sanguinis conjunctio benevolentia devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes men through benevolence and family affection.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise man begins with the last, and what is first in intention is last in execution. 10 Co. 25.

Sapiens omnia agit cum consilio. A wise man does everything advisedly. 4 Inst. 4.

Sapientia legis nummario pretio non est æstimanda. The wisdom of the law cannot be valued by money. Jenk. Cent. 168.

Sapientis judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the duty of a wise judge to think so much only permitted to him as is committed and intrusted to him. 4 Inst. 163.

Satisfaction should be made to that fund which has sustained the loss. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3731.

Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos. It is better to seek the fountain than to follow rivulets. 10 Co. 118.

Scienti et volenti non fit injuria. A wrong is not done to one who knows and assents to it. Bract. 20.

Scientia sciolorum est mixta ignorantia. The knowledge of smatterers is mixed ignorance. 8 Co. 159.

Scientia utrinque par pares contrahentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal. 3 Burr. 1910; L. R. 2 Q. B. 589; Broom, Max. 772, 792, n.

Scire debes cum quo contrahis. You ought to know with whom you deal. 11 M. & W. 405, 632; 13 id. 171.

Scire et scire debere æquiparantur in jure. To know a thing, and to be bound to know it, are regarded in law as equivalent. Trayner, Max. 551.

Scire leges, non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws, is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

Scire proprie est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing by its cause and in its reason. Co. Litt. 183.

Scribere est agere. To write is to act. 2 Rolle 89; 4 Bla. Com. 80; Broom, Max. 312, 967.

Scriptæ obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are dissolved by writing, and the obligations of a naked agreement by a naked agreement to the contrary.

Secta est pugna civilis, sicut actores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (e contra) muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle, as the plaintiffs are armed with actions and as it were girt with swords, so on the other hand the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended as it were by shields. Hob. 20; Bract. 339 b.

Secta quæ scripto nititur a scripto variari non debet. A suit which relies upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing. Jenk. Cent. 65.

Secundum naturam est, commoda cujusque rei eum sequi, quem sequentur incommoda. It is natural that he who bears the charge of a thing should receive the profits. Dig. 50. 17. 10.

Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Business intrusted to several speeds best, and several eyes see more than one. 4 Co. 46.

Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Bla. Com. 209; Broom, Max. 525, 528; 1 Steph. Com. 367; 4 Kent 388, 389; 13 Ga. 238.

Semel civis semper civis. Once a citizen always a citizen. Trayner, Max. 555.

Semel malus semper præsumitur esse malus in eodem genere. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same degree. Cro. Car. 317.

Semper in dubiis benigniora præferenda sunt. In dubious cases the more liberal constructions are always to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56.

Semper in dubiis id agendum est, ut quam tutissimo loco res sit bona fide contracta, nisi quum aperte contra leges scriptum est. Always in doubtful cases that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the greatest safety, except when its provisions are clearly contrary to law. Dig. 34. 5. 21.

Semper in obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases we always follow that which is least obscure. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Broom, Max. 687, n.; 3 C. B. 962.

Semper in stipulationibus et in cæteris contractibus id sequimur quod actum est. In stipulations and other contracts we always follow that which was agreed. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Semper ita fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail. 6 Co. 76.

Semper necessitas probandi incumbit ei qui agit. The claimant is always bound to prove (the burden of proof lies on him).

Semper præsumitur pro legitimatione puerorum, et filiatio non potest probari. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy, for filiation cannot be proved. Co. Litt. 126. See 5 Co. 98 b.

Semper præsumitur pro negante. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies. See 10 Cl. & F. 534; 3 E. & B. 723; 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 400.

Semper præsumitur pro sententia. Presumption is always in favor of a judgment. 3 Bulstr. 42.

Semper qui non prohibet pro se intervenire, mandare creditur. He who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is supposed to authorize it. 2 Kent 616; Dig. 14. 6. 16; 43. 3. 12. 4.

Semper sexus masculinus etiam femininum continet. The male sex always includes the female. Dig. 32, 62; 2 Brev. 9.

Semper specialia generalibus insunt. Special clauses are always comprised in general ones. Dig. 50. 17. 147.

Senatores sunt partes corporis regis. Senators are part of the body of the king. Staunf. 72 E; 4 Inst. 53, in marg.

Sensus verborum est anima legis. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law. 5 Co. 2.

Sensus verborum est duplex, mitis et asper, et verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiore sensu. The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are to be received in their milder sense. 4 Co. 13.

Sensus verborum ex causa dicendi accipiendus est, et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject-matter. 4 Co. 14.

Sententia a non judice lata nemini debet nocere. A judgment pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one. Fleta, l. 6, c. 6, § 7.

Sententia contra matrimonium nunquam transit in rem judicatam. A sentence against marriage never passes into a judgment (conclusive upon the parties). 7 Co. 43.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The judgment makes the law, and the interpretation has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth. Ellesm. Postn. 55.

Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, definitiva non potest. An interlocutory order may be revoked, but not a final one. Bacon, Max. Reg. 20.

Sententia non fertur de rebus non liquidis. Judgment is not given upon a thing which is not clear.

Sequi debet potentia justitiam, non præcedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it. 2 Inst. 454.

Sermo index animi. Speech is an index of the mind. 5 Co. 118.

Serpanda est consuetudo loci ubi causa agitur.

The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed.

Servitia personalia sequuntur personam. Personal services follow the person. 2 Inst. 374; Fleta, l. 3, c. 11, § 1.

Si a jure discedas, vagus eris et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander without a guide, and everything will be in a state of uncertainty to every one. Co. Litt. 227.

Si alicujus rei societas sit et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 489.

Si aliquid ex solemnibus deficiat, cum æquitas poscit subveniendum est. If anything be wanting from required forms, when equity requires it will be aided. 1 Kent 157.

Si assuetis mederi possis nova non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. 10 Co. 142.

Si duo in testamento pugnantia reperientur, ultimum est ratum. If two conflicting provisions are found in a will, the last is observed. Lofft 251.

Si judicas, cognosce. If you judge, understand.

Si meliores sunt quos ducit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If those are better who are led by love, those are the greater number corrected by fear. Co. Litt. 392.

Si non appareat quid actum est, erit consequens ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est frequentatur. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Si nulla sit conjectura quæ ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense. 2 Kent 555.

Si plures conditiones ascriptæ fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulative requiritur quod utraque pars sit vera, si divisim, quilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. If several conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly: if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true. Co. Litt. 225.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole. Inst. 3. 20. 4.

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas singuli debent. If any thing is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes. Dig. 3. 4. 7; 1 Bla. Com. 484; Lindl. Part. *5.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prænomine, agnomine legatarii testator erraverit, cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, prænomen, or title of the legatee, whenever the person is rendered certain, the legacy is nevertheless valid. Inst. 2. 20. 29; Broom, Max. 645; 2 Domat b. 2, 1, s. 6, §§ 10, 19.

Si quis cum totum petiisset partem petat, exceptio rei judicatæ vocet. If a party, when he should have sued for an entire claim, sues only for a part, the judgment is res judicata against another suit; 2 Mart. O. S. (La.) 83.

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian behave fraudulently to his ward, he shall be removed from the guardianship. Jenk. Cent. 39.

Si quis prægnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered as having died childless.

Si quis unum percusserit, cum alium percutere vellet, in felonia tenetur. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony. 3 Inst. 51.

Si suggestio non sit vera, literæ patentes vacuæ sunt. If the suggestion of a patent is false, the patent itself is void. 10 Co. 113.

Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat. Every one ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbors. 3 Kent 441.

Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may have an effect. 3 Inst. 80.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. So use your own as not to injure another's property. 1 Bla. Com. 306; Broom, Max. 268, 365; Webb, Poll. Torts 153; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 2379; 9 Co. 59; 5 Exch. 797; 12 Q. B. 739; 4 A. & E. 384; El., Bl. & El. 643; 17 Mass. 334; 4 McCord (S. C.) 472. Various comments have been made on this maxim: "Mere verbiage"; El. B. & E. 643. "No help to decision"; L. R. 2 Q. B. 247. "Utterly useless as a legal maxim;" 9 N. Y. 445. It is a mere begging of the question; it assumes the very point in controversy; 13 Lea 507. See 2 Aust. Jurisp. 795, 829; Expedit reipublicæ ne sua re quis male utatur, supra.

Sicut natura nil facit per saltum, ita nec lex. As nature does nothing by a bound or leap, so neither does the law. Co. Litt. 238.

Sigillum est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed because wax without an impression is not a seal. 3 Inst. 169. But see SEAL.

Silence shows consent. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 28, 35.

Silent leges inter arma. Laws are silent amidst arms. 4 Inst. 70.

Similitudo legalis est casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. Dissimilium, dissimilis est ratio. Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar. Co. Litt. 191; Benj. Sales 379.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. A simple recommendation does not bind. Dig. 4. 3. 37; 2 Kent 485; Broom, Max. 781; 4 Taunt. 488; 16 Q. B. 282, 283; Cro. Jac. 4; 2 Allen (Mass.) 214; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 354; 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 95.

Simplex et pura donatio dici poterit, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed. Bract. 1.

Simplicitas est legibus amica, et nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is favorable to the law, and too much subtlety is blameworthy in law. 4 Co. 8.

Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest. There can be no prescription without possession.

Singuli in solidum tenentur. Each is bound for the whole. 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 242, 252.

Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars, habet regressum emptor in venditorem. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21. 2. 1; Broom, Max. 768.

Socii mei socius meus socius non est. The partner of my partner is not my partner. Dig. 50. 17. 47; Lindl. Part. *48.

Sola ac per se senectus donationem, testamentum aut transactionem non vitiat. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate gift, will or transaction. 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148, 158.

Solemnitates juris sunt observandæ. The solemnities of law are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. 13.

Solo cedit quod solo implantatur. What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 32; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1572.

Solo cedit quod solo inædificatur. Whatever is built on the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29. See 1 Mack. Civ. Law § 268.

Solus Deus hæredem facit. God alone makes the heir. Bract. 62 b; Co. Litt. 5.

Solutio pretii emptionis loco habetur. The payment of the price stands in the place of a sale. Jenk. Cent. 56.

Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui solidum potest solvere. No one is considered to be solvent unless he can pay all that he owes. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii. A partnership is moreover dissolved by the death of a partner. Inst. 3. 26. 5; Dig. 17. 2.

Solvitur eo ligamine quo ligatur. In the same manner that a thing is bound it is unloosed. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 582.

Spes impunitatis continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. The hope of impunity holds out a continual temptation to crime. 3 Inst. 236.

Spoliatus debet ante omnia restitui. He who has been despoiled ought to be restored before anything else. 2 Inst. 714; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 353.

Spoliatus episcopus ante omnia debet restitui. A bishop despoiled of his see ought, above all, to be restored. See 14 L. Q. R. 27.

Spondet peritiam artis. He promises to use the skill of his art. Pothier, Louage, n. 425; Jones, Bailm. 22, 53, 62, 97, 120; Domat, liv. 1, t. 4, s. 8, n. 1; 1 Story, Bailm. § 431; 1 Bell, Com. 5th ed. 459.

Sponte virum fugiens mulier et adultera facta, doti sua careat, nisi sponsi sponte retracta. A woman leaving her husband of her own accord, and committing adultery, should lose her dower, unless her husband takes her back of his own accord. Co. Litt. 37.

Stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. A presumption will stand good until the contrary is proved. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 33, n.; Hob. 297; 3 Bla. Com. 371; Broom, Max. 949; 15 Mass. 90; 16 id. 87.

Stare decisis et non quieta movere. To adhere to precedents, and not to unsettle things which are established. 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 504; 25 id. 119, 142; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 271, 323; 4 id. 592, 595; 87 Pa. 286; Cooley, Const. Lim. 65. See STARE DECISIS.

Stat pro ratione voluntas. The will stands in place of a reason. 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 408, 411; 16 id. 514, 525.

Stat pro ratione voluntas populi. The will of the people stands in place of a reason. 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 344, 276.

Statuta pro publico commodo late interpretantur. Statutes made for the public good ought to be liberally construed. Jenk. Cent. 21.

Statuta suo clauduntur territorio, nec ultra territorium disponunt. Statutes are confined to their own territory, and have no extra-territorial effect. 4 Allen (Mass.) 334; Story, Confl. L. 24.

Statutes in derogation of common law must be strictly construed. 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 57; Cooley, Const. Lim. 75, n.

Statutum affirmativum non derogat communi legi. An affirmative statute does not take from the common law. Jenk. Cent. 24.

Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, it is to be understood generally. 10 Co. 101.

Statutum speciale statuto speciali non derogat. One special statute does not take away from another special statute. Jenk. Cent. 199.

Sublata causa tollitur effectus. Remove the cause and the effect will cease. 2 Bla. Com. 203.

Sublata veneratione magistratuum, respublica ruit. The commonwealth perishes, if respect for magistrates be taken away. Jenk. Cent. 48.

MAY. Is permitted to; has liberty to. In interpreting statutes the word may should be construed as equivalent to shall or must in cases where the sense of the entire enactment requires it; People v. Common Council, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 404; Kansas City, W. & N. W. R. Co. v. Walker, 50 Kan. 739, 32 Pac. 365; or where it is necessary in order to carry out the intention of the legislature; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46, 7 L. Ed. 47; Rock Island County v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. S.) 435, 18 L. Ed. 419; Kelly v. Morse, 3 Neb. 224; or where it is necessary for the preservation or enforcement of the rights and interests of the public or third persons; Bansemer v. Mace, 18 Ind. 27, 81 Am. Dec. 344; Steins v. Franklin County, 48 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 87; Com. v. Haynes, 107 Mass. 194, 197; but not for the purpose of creating or determining the character of rights; Ex parte Banks, 28 Ala. 28. Where there is nothing in the connection of the language or in the sense and policy of the provision to require an unusual interpretation, its use is merely permissive and discretionary; Williams v. MAYHEM. In Criminal Law. The act of unlawfully and violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or annoy his adversary. 8 C. & P. 167. See Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 247.

"Maiheming is when one member of the commonweale shall take from another member of the same, a naturall member of his bodie, or the use and benefit thereof, and thereby disable him to serve the commonweale by his weapons in the time of warre, or by his labour in the time of peace, and also diminisheth the strength of his bodie, and weaken him thereby to get his owne living, and by that means the commonweale is in a sort deprived of the use of one of her members." Pulton, De Pace Regis, 1609, fol. 15, § 58.

One may not innocently maim himself, and where he procures another to maim him, both are guilty; Co. Litt. 127 a; People v. Clough, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 351, 31 Am. Dec. 303. The cutting or disabling or weakening a man's hand or finger, or striking out his eye or foretooth, or depriving him of those parts the loss of which abates his courage, are held to be mayhems; Chick v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 161; Cl. Cr. L. 183. But cutting off the ear or nose, or the like, are not held to be mayhems at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 205; but see State v. Abram, 10 Ala. 928. The injury must be permanent; State v. Briley, 8 Port. (Ala.) 472; State v. Harrison, 30 La. Ann. 1329; and if inflicted on an assailant in self-defence, it is not mayhem; Hayden v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 546.

These and other severe personal injuries are punished by the Coventry Act, which is common law and also has been re-enacted in most of the states; 1 Hawk. P. C., Curw. ed. 107, § 1; Ryan, Med. Jur., Phil. ed. 191; and by act of congress. See Act of April 30, 1790, s. 13; Act of March 3, 1825, s. 22; Rev. Stat. § 1342, art. 58 (when committed by a soldier in time of war, etc.); State v. Wright, 93 Cal. 564, 29 Pac. 240. Mayhem was not an offence at common law in Massachusetts, but only an aggravated trespass; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 248; but at the early common law it was a felony punishable by the loss of member for member, a punishment disused later; see id.; 1 McCl. Cr. L. § 432. Maim as used in the statutes is not equivalent to mayhem but to mutilate; McCl. Cr. L. § 432.

See PHYSICAL EXAMINATION. As to loss of a member in accident insurance, see Loss.

MAYHEMAVIT. Maimed.

This is a term of art which cannot be supplied in pleading by any other word, as mutilavit, truncavit, etc.; 3 Thomas Co. Litt. 548; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 247. In indictments for mayhem the words feloniously and did maim are requisite; Whart. Cr. Pr. § 260, n.

MAYOR. The chief governor or executive magistrate of a city. Cowell derives it from meyr, used by the Britains, and derived from miret, meaning to keep and preserve, and not from the Latin major.

The old word was portgreve. The word mayor first occurs in 1189, when Rich. I. substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. The word is common in Bracton. Brac. 57. In London, York, and Dublin, he is called lord mayor. Wharton, Lex.

It is generally his duty to cause the laws of the city to be enforced, and to superintend inferior officers, such as constables, watchmen, and the like. But the power and authority which mayors possess, being given to them by local regulations, vary in different places.

MAYOR'S COURT. The name of a court usually established in cities, composed of a mayor, recorder, and aldermen, generally having jurisdiction of offences committed within the city, and of other matters specially given them by the statute. There is a mayor's court in London having civil jurisdiction.

MAYORAZGO. In Spanish Law. A species of entail known to Spanish law. 1 New Rec. 119; Escriche.

MEADOW. A tract of land lying above the shore overflowed only by spring freshets or extraordinary tides, and which yields grass good for hay. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 429.

MEAL RENT. A rent formerly paid in meal.

MEANDER. To wind as a river or stream. Webster.

Meander lines are run in surveying public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but to ascertain the quantity of the land subject to sale; and the watercourse, and not the meander line, as actually run on the land, is the boundary; Jefferis v. MEANS OF SUPPORT. All those resources from which the necessaries and comforts of life are or may be supplied, such as lands, goods, salaries, wages, or other sources of income. Meidel v. Anthis, 71 Ill. 242.

MEASE. A messuage or dwelling-house. Whart.

MEASON-DUE. A corruption of Maison de Dieu.

MEASURE. A means or standard for computing amount. A certain quantity of something, taken for a unit, which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

Before the Conquest, the measures for the things a man handles are the thumb, span, cubit, ell; for the ground, the foot and pace; for large spaces and distances, recourse was had to time—labour—units; the day's journey, and the morning's plowing. Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 368. A cloth ell, or cloth yard, becomes a standard; one third of it is a foot and one thirty-sixth of it a thumb or inch, and five and one-half yards is a land measure—a rod. Again, one rod will represent the arm of an average man; a longer rod may serve to mediate between the foot and the acre, or a day's ploughing. But it is said that "the whole story will be very intricate." Maitland, Domesday Book 368.

The constitution of the United States gives power to congress to "fix the standard of weights and measures." Art. 1, s. 8. The states, it seems, possess the power to legislate on this subject, or, at least, the existing standards at the adoption of the constitution remain in full force; 3 Story, Const. 21; Rawle, Const. 102; but this constitutional power is exclusive in congress when exercised; Weaver v. Fegely, 29 Pa. 27, 70 Am. Dec. 151.

By a resolution of congress, of June 14, 1836, the secretary of the treasury is directed to cause a complete set of all weights and measures adopted as standards, and now either made or in the progress of manufacture, for the use of the several custom-houses and for other purposes, to be delivered to the governor of each state in the Union, or to such person as he may appoint, for the use of the states respectively, to the end that a uniform standard of weights and measures may be established throughout the United States. The act of March 3, 1881, requires the same to be furnished to such agricultural colleges in every state as have received grants of land from the United States.

By act of March 3, 1893, a standard gauge for sheet and plate iron and steel was established.

The act of July 12, 1894, defined and established units of electrical measure: ohm, unit of resistance; ampere, unit of current; volt, unit of electro-motive force; coulomb, unit of quantity; farad, unit of capacity; joule, unit of work; watt, unit of power; henry, unit of induction.

The act of March 3, 1901, established a national bureau of standards, with custody of the standards, and in charge of the comparison of standards, testing and calibration, etc. The bureau exercises its functions for the government; for any state or municipal government; or for any scientific society, educational institution, corporation or individual engaged in manufacturing or other pursuits requiring the use of standards or standard measuring instruments. For all service, except for the government or state governments, a reasonable fee is charged according to a schedule made by the secretary of the treasury. A visiting committee of five members, appointed by the secretary of the treasury, consisting of men prominent in the various interests involved and not in the employ of the government, is appointed to visit the bureau at least once a year and to report to the secretary upon the efficiency of its scientific work and the condition of its equipment. One member retires each year. The appointment is for five years. The members serve without compensation, except their actual expenses incurred.

The act of July 28, 1866, authorized the use of the French metric system of weights and measures in this country, and provided that no contract or dealing, or pleading in any court, shall be deemed invalid or liable to objection, because the weights or measures expressed or referred to therein are weights or measures of the metric system; R. S. § 3569. Annexed to § 3570 is a schedule which shall be recognized in the construction of contracts, and in all legal proceedings, as establishing in terms of the weights and measures now in use in the United States, the equivalent of the weights and measures expressed therein in terms of the metric system. See infra; WEIGHT; FROM.

METRIC SYSTEM. The fundamental, invariable, and standard measure, by which all weights and measures are formed in this system, is called the mètre, a word derived from the Greek, which signifies measure. It is a lineal measure, and is equal to 3 feet, 0 inches, 11 44-1000th lines, Paris measure, or 3 feet, 3 inches, 370-1000th, English. This unit is divided into ten parts; each tenth, into ten hundredths; each hundredth, into ten thousandths, etc. These divisions, as well as those of all other measures, are infinite. As the standard is to be invariable, something has been sought from which to make it, which is not variable or subject to any change. The fundamental base of the mètre is the quarter of the terrestrial meridian, or the distance from the pole to the equator, which has been divided into ten millions of equal parts, one of which is the length of the mètre. All the other measures are formed from the mètre, as follows:—

CAPACITY. The litre. This is the cubic décimètre, or the cube of one-tenth part of a mètre. This is divided by tenths, as the mètre. The measures which amount to more than a single litre are counted by tens, hundreds, thousands, etc., of litres. By above statute the litre is 0.908 quarts, dry measure, and 1.0567 quarts, liquor or wine measure.

WEIGHT. The gramme. This is the weight of a cubic centimètre of distilled water at the temperature of 4° above zero Centigrade. By above statute, the gram is 15.432 grains.

SURFACE. The are, used in surveying. This is a square, the sides of which are of the length of ten mètres, or what is equal to one hundred square mètres. Its divisions are the same as in the preceding measures. One hundred ares make a hectare. By above statute the are is 119.6 square yards.

The stère, used in measuring firewood. It is a cubic mètre. Its subdivisions are similar to the preceding. For the measure of other things, the term cube mètre, or cubic mètre, is used, or the tenth, hundredth, etc., of such a cube. The stère is not adopted in the above statute.

MONEY. The franc weighs five grammes. It is made of nine-tenths of silver and one-tenth of copper. Its tenth part is called a decime, and its hundredth part a centime.

As already stated the divisions of these measures are all uniform, namely, by tens, or decimal fractions; they may, therefore, be written as such. Instead of writing,

1 mètre and 1-tenth of a mètre, we may write, 1 m. 1.
2 mètres and 8-tenths,—2 m. 8.
10 mètres and 4-hundredths,—10 m. 04.
7 litres, 1-tenth, and 2-hundredths,—7 lit. 12, etc.

Names have been given to each of these divisions of the principal unit; but these names always indicate the value of the fraction and the unit from which it is derived. To the name of the unit have been prefixed, deci, for tenth, centi, for hundredth, and milli, for thousandth. They are thus expressed: a décimètre, a décilitre, a décigramme, a décistère, a déciare, a centimètre, a centilitre, a centigramme, etc. The facility with which the divisions of the unit are reduced to the same expression is very apparent.

As it may sometimes be necessary to express large quantities of units, collections have been made of them in tens, hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, etc., to which prefixes derived from the Greek have been given namely, deca, for tens; hecto, for hundreds; kilo, for thousands; and myria, for tens of thousands; they are thus expressed: a décamètre, a décalitre, etc.; a hectomètre, a hectogramme, etc.; a kilomètre, a kilogramme, etc.

The above act of congress gives the equivalents thus:

The Mètre is 39.37 in.
Litre is .908 quarts, dry measure, or 1.0567 quarts, wine measure.
Are is 119.6 square yards.
Gramme is 15.432 grains avoirdupois.
The Stère is 35.317 cubic feet.

As to certain measures under Mexican grants, see Ainsa v. U. S., 161 U. S. 219, 16 Sup. Ct. 544, 40 L. Ed. 673.

See WEIGHT.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. A rule or method by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured. Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 29.

It is the duty of the judge to explain to the jurors, as a matter of law, the footing upon which they should calculate their damages, if their verdict is for the plaintiff. This footing or scheme is called the "measure of damages." Pollock, Torts 27.

The defendant is to make compensation for all the natural and proximate consequences of his wrong, but not for secondary or remote consequences. There are cases in which this principle of compensation is departed from; as, where exemplary damages are awarded, or double or treble damages are allowed by statute. But, in general, the law seeks to give compensation.

Value is in most cases the measure of compensation and it is a fundamental principle that market value is resorted to not as a test, but only as an aid in getting at the real value, the latter being the true measure of a recovery, whether it be property, time, labor, or service which were affected by the contract or tort which is the subject matter of the action; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. §§ 242, 243.

The compensation awarded may be based upon, (1) pecuniary loss, direct or indirect; (2) physical pain; (3) mental suffering; to which have been added the value of the time required for the enforcement of the plaintiff's rights and his actual expenses incurred in so doing. There may be also in the case of injuries resulting from design, malice, or fraud, the sense of wrong or injury to one's feelings which is in some cases taken into consideration as a proper subject of compensation. See Hale, Dam. 86; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 37. The injuries for which compensation may be recovered are stated generally to include all those which affect any right protected by the common law where they are the direct result of actionable wrong. They may be to property, family relations, reputation, or the person, —whether affecting the body or mind or personal freedom of action; id. § 39.

Pecuniary compensation includes every kind of damage which can be measured by money value; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Carr, 71 Md. 135, 17 Atl. 1052. Such loss is almost always an element to be considered and in most cases the primary one; Hale, Dam. 87. So important is the idea of compensation that it is laid down as the fundamental rule of the measure of damages that the recovery must be "by way of compensation for loss and not to punish the wrong doer;" 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 360. The test is compensation, not restitution, and beyond this it is rarely possible to lay down any general rule; Pollock, Torts 180. This idea of compensation which lies at the root of the subject, may be illustrated by cases of the most diverse character. The measure of damages for failing to fulfil a covenant which the other party performs, is what it cost to fulfil it; Appeal of McDowell, 123 Pa. 381, 16 Atl. 753; in a trespass for an injury to the realty, by the inadvertent removal of part of coal, it is its value as part of the realty, and not as a chattel after its removal; Warrior Coal & Coke Co. v. Mining Co., 112 Ala. 624, 20 South. 918; for illegal diversion of water by an upper riparian owner, it is the cost of enough water to take the place of that unlawfully diverted; Standard Plate Glass Co. v. Water Co., 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 563; for a breach of contract to return borrowed stock, it is the price of the stock at the time of the refusal to return it; Jennings v. Loeffler, 184 Pa. 318, 39 Atl. 214. In an action of replevin for wrongful detention, the value of its use during detention may be recovered, although ordinarily the damages would be the interest on its value while detained; Werner v. Graley, 54 Kan. 383, 38 Pac. 482. Where an attorney undertakes for a client a search of records for liens and overlooks a lien, his client, a mortgagee, who has thereupon loaned money on what was supposed to be a first lien upon real estate, may recover from the attorney the difference in value between a first lien and the lien which the client got; Lawall v. Groman, 180 Pa. 532, 37 Atl. 98, 57 Am. St. Rep. 662. The amount stolen from a safe, warranted burglar proof, may be recovered in an action for breach of the warranty; Deane v. Stove Co., 69 Ill. App. 106.

The rental value of a cotton gin is the measure of damages for breach of contract to furnish new machinery which prevents the operation of the gin for a whole season, but anticipated profits cannot be recovered; Standard Supply Co. v. Carter, 81 S. C. 181, 62 S. E. 150, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155. Where a builder fails to build an elevator to do its intended work in an office building, he is not liable to the owner of the building for loss of rents during the time of unsatisfactory service; Winslow Elevator & Machine Co. v. Hoffman, 107 Md. 621, 69 Atl. 394, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130.

Breach of contract to make a loan on a demand note secured by mortgage, to take up an existing lien, renders the lender liable for damages caused by foreclosure of the latter, although ordinarily there is no recovery for breach of contract to make a demand loan; Doushkess v. Brewing Co., 20 App. Div. 375, 47 N. Y. Supp. 312; and where a reasonable sum was stipulated for as liquidated damages for the breach of agreement to loan money, such stipulation will be enforced; Peekskill, S. C. & M. R. Co. v. Village of Peekskill, 21 App. Div. 94, 47 N. Y. Supp. 305. The compensation is not necessarily for actual loss or expense. In many cases there may be a recovery for the amount of expenditure proper to be made and charged where the service was, in fact, gratuitous, as in the case of services of physicians and nurses which cost the plaintiff nothing, and for which he is held entitled to recover upon the ground that he recovers not for their cost but for their value; Brosnan

v. Sweetser, 127 Ind. 1, 26 N. E. 555; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Lorentzen, 79 Fed. 291, 24 C. C. A. 592; contra, Peppercorn v. City of Black River Falls, 89 Wis. 38, 61 N. W. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 818, where it was held that the recovery could only be for expense incurred.

The other essential requisite is that the amount is determined, not by the actual loss, but only that which is the natural result of the act complained of, or as its consequence may be presumed to have been in contemplation of the parties. This rule was established by the leading case of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341; 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502; 8 id. 405 (for a full discussion of that case see 16 L. Q. Rev. 175), which was a suit against a carrier.

Remote, contingent, or speculative damages will not be allowed, but only such as naturally flow from the breach of the contract; Cahn v. Telegraph Co., 46 Fed. 40.

Those which are the natural, but not the necessary, consequences of the act complained of; Roberts v. Graham, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 578, 18 L. Ed. 791; St. Louis Police Relief, etc., v. Strode, 103 Mo. App. 694, 77 S. W. 1091; Carroll v. Caine, 27 Wash. 406, 67 Pac. 993.

The principle of Hadley v. Baxendale, supra, however, is held to cover damages resulting from the failure of the plaintiff to comply with other contracts, made upon the faith of his contract with the defendant, for the breach of which he sues, where the fact of his having made such other contracts was known to the defendant; 20 Q. B. D. 86. But it is held that the mere fact of such consequences being communicated to the other party to a contract, without showing that he was told that he would be answerable for them and consented to undertake such a liability, will not increase the damages for breach by such other party. The knowledge must be brought home to the party sought to be charged, under such circumstances that he must know that the person he contracts with reasonably believes that he accepts the contract with the special condition attached to it. Mere notice to a seller of some interest or probable action of the buyer is not enough necessarily and as matter of law to charge the seller with special damage on that account if he fails to deliver the goods; Globe Refining Co. v. L. Cotton Oil Co., 190 U. S. 540, 23 Sup. Ct. 754, 47 L. Ed. 1171, where it was said that "the suggestion thrown out by Bramwell, B., in Gee v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. Co., 6 H. & N. 211, that perhaps notice after the contract was made and before breach, would be enough, is not accepted by the latter decision. * * * The consequences must be contemplated at the time of the making of the contract." Anticipated profits are, as a general rule, too speculative and remote to be recovered as damages; Howard v. Mfg. Co., 139 U. S. 199, 11 Sup. Ct. 500, 35 L. Ed. 147; Cincinnati Siemens-Lungren Gas Illuminating Co. v. Western Siemens-Lundgren Co., 152 U. S. 200, 14 Sup. Ct. 523, 38 L. Ed. 411; Simmer v. City of St. Paul, 23 Minn. 408; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718; but by way of exception, loss of profits from the interruption of an established business may be recovered, though only if the actual loss is shown with reasonable certainty; Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Hartman, 111 Fed. 96, 49 C. C. A. 244; Goebel v. Hough, 26 Minn. 252, 2 N. W. 847; Chapman v. Kirby, 49 Ill. 211; Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 268; 6 Bing. N. C. 212.

The law requires the injured party to use all reasonable means to reduce his damages to a minimum; Warren v. Stoddart, 105 U. S. 229, 26 L. Ed. 1117; D. A. Tompkins Co. v. Oil Co., 153 Fed. 817; and where the suit is based on the fault of the other party in confiding in his representations and promises, the burden is upon him to show from what time the other should have abandoned his faith and set about retrieving his error and minimizing the damages; Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. v. Lillard, 160 Fed. 34, 87 C. C. A. 190. The rule of Warren v. Stoddart, supra, requiring reasonable effort to reduce damages means merely reasonable action, and not such as upon after-thought defendant may show would have been more favorable; The Thomas P. Sheldon, 113 Fed. 779.

Where the plaintiff sues for breach before the time of complete performance, he is entitled to compensation for loss during the continued breach, less any abatement of which he ought reasonably to have availed himself; Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953.

As to mental suffering, see that title.

With regard to the measure of damages, the same principles are, to a great extent, applicable to cases of contract and tort; Poll. Torts 529; 9 P. Div. 113. Where the action is for breach of contract, the damages are limited to what may reasonably be considered to have been contemplated by the parties at the time of making it as likely to arise from a breach; Bradley v. R. Co., 94 Wis. 44, 68 N. W. 410. They may include, however, gains prevented, as well as losses sustained, if certain, and reasonably to be expected; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Wilhelm, 48 Neb. 910, 67 N. W. 870. They are measured by the loss which results from the breach and not the sum of money or property involved in the transaction; [1897] 1 Q. B. 692. As a general rule, the contract itself furnishes the measure of damages.

In an action of tort based upon negligence in the performance of a contractual obligation without malice, the damages would be substantially the same as for breach of contract under the same circumstances; Fererro v. Telegraph Co., 9 App. D. C. 455.

There are dicta to the effect that a more liberal rule of damages should be applied in cases of tort than of contract; Walsh v. Ry. Co., 42 Wis. 23, 24 Am. Rep. 376; Allison v. Chandler, 11 Mich. 542; but they are contrary to the general current of authority which is in favor of applying the same principles to both classes of cases; Baker v. Drake, 53 N. Y. 211, 216, 13 Am. Rep. 507; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 429, note a.

While the rule which affords the measure of damages is to be supplied by the court, the amount is a question for the jury, and unless the damages are so excessive as to lead to the conclusion of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, the court cannot interfere with their verdict; Dwyer v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 87.

Damages should not exceed the amount claimed; but cases have been known in which the verdict was in excess of the amount claimed, and the court has amended the statement of claim to enable it to enter judgment on the verdict; Poll. Torts 180; but this is said to be an extreme use of the power of the court; id.; 43 Ch. Div. 327. Where there is uncertainty as to the measure of damages, the rule is to give the lowest sum; Appeal of Jones, 62 Pa. 324.

Estimates of value made by friendly witnesses, with no practical illustrations to support them, are too unsafe, as a rule, to be made the basis of a judicial award. The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 134, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 41 L. Ed. 937.

In an action for injuries, an instruction not to award damages for hysteria, not directly caused by the accident, was properly refused as it might restrict the jury to damages directly caused by the accident, while there might properly be a recovery for indirect damages which were its natural consequences; Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. v. Hudson, 113 Fed. 449, 51 C. C. A. 283.

The measure of compensation allowed as damages has been somewhat definitely fixed, as to many classes of cases, by rules of decision, many of which are important and well established.

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT. The right of action in this case is entirely statutory, being based on Lord Campbell's Act and similar statutes in most states. See DEATH. These statutes are constitutional, even if applicable to one class of corporations; Schoolcraft's Adm'r v. R. Co., 92 Ky. 233, 17 S. W. 567, 14 L. R. A. 579; Boston, C. & M. R. R. v. State, 32 N. H. 215; and they are construed by some courts as remedial, by others as in derogation of common law; Hale, Dam. 126; Tiff. Death Wrongf. Act, c. 2, § 32, where the cases are collected. They are said to operate not by way of exception or repeal of the common law, but to create an action totally new in species, quality, or principle; Blackburn, L. J., in 10 App. Cas. 59. This bears upon the measure of damages. It has been said that life is to be regarded as property to be compensated for "without regard to past earnings or capacity to earn at time of death;" Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Keller, 67 Pa. 300; but this case is severely criticised as unsound reasoning; 2 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 572, where it is remarked that at common law life was not property, and no civil action lay for its loss, which "rule has only been modified by this statute, under which juries are allowed to give, in most states, damages for pecuniary injuries only." These pecuniary damages embrace: (1) Present pecuniary loss; (2) prospective pecuniary loss; (3) the interest of one who would presumably derive pecuniary benefit from the services of the deceased. Any case may involve one or all of these elements. Present pecuniary loss is based upon actual compensation for loss to the time of action, and although the action is maintainable only where it might have been brought by the deceased if he survived, the measure of damages rests upon different principles. The deceased might have recovered both for pecuniary loss and his pain and suffering, physical and mental, while his representatives recover only for the injury to his family resulting from his death; 18 Q. B. 93; Whitford v. R. Co., 23 N. Y. 465; and not for his suffering, medical attendance, funeral expenses, loss of society of husband or wife, and the like; 2 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 573; loss of society being considered in a material and pecuniary and not in a sentimental sense; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Freeman, 83 Fed. 82, 27 C. C. A. 457. In the latter sense loss of society is not an element of damage; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson, 48 Fed. 57, 1 C. C. A. 25, 4 U. S. App. 25; Donaldson v. Mississippi & N. R. Co., 18 Ia. 280, 87 Am. Dec. 391. Prospective pecuniary loss is based on a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the life of the deceased; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 60 Md. 449; Kesler v. Smith, 66 N. C. 154; Kaspari v. Marsh, 74 Wis. 562, 43 N. W. 368. It is what the deceased would have probably earned during the residue of his life, taking into consideration his age, condition, ability, disposition, habits, and expenditures, without any solatium for distress of mind; Sharswood, J., in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Butler, 57 Pa. 335; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stacker, 86 Tenn. 343, 6 S. W. 737, 6 Am. St. Rep. 840; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 431, 26 Am. Rep. 384; and no account can be taken of income from investments; Demarest v. Little, 47 N. J. L. 28; or of profits in a partnership business in which the deceased was engaged; Boggess v. Balt. & O. R. Co., 234 Pa. 379, 83 Atl. 356; nor expectations of inheritance by him; Wiest v. Traction Co., 200 Pa. 148, 49 Atl. 891, 58 L. R. A. 666; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Golway, 6 App. D. C. 143; where evidence of earnings is admissible it cannot be proved that he was in the line of promotion; Geary v. R. Co., 78 App. Div. 441, 77 N. Y. Supp. 54; Fajordo v. R. Co., 84 App. Div. 354, 82 N. Y. Supp. 912; Chase v. Ry. Co., 76 Ia. 675, 39 N. W. 196 (unless the promotion was stipulated for in the contract of employment; Bryant v. Bridge Co., 98 Ia. 483, 67 N. W. 392); contra, Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Ford (Tex.) 46 S. W. 77.

In the third class of cases damages are allowed to a husband for the loss of a wife's services, not her society; 11 Can. 422; to a wife for the loss of support; id.; for the same reason to a child during minority; Ihl v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Ewen v. Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 613; Robel v. Ry. Co., 35 Minn. 84, 27 N. W. 305; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Slater, 129 Ill. 91, 21 N. E. 575, 6 L. R. A. 418, 16 Am. St. Rep. 242; Cleary v. Ry. Co., 76 Cal. 240, 18 Pac. 269; and on the weight of authority, for the expectation of pecuniary benefit after majority; Birkett v. Ice Co., 110 N. Y. 504, 18 N. E. 108; Munro v. Reclamation Co., 84 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248; Scheffler v. Ry. Co., 32 Minn. 518, 21 N. W. 711; and if the statute gives the damages to the estate of the deceased, they are not limited to the minority of a child; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lilly, 73 Ind. 252; Walters v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 458; to a parent for the loss of a child to the extent of the pecuniary value of his services during minority; McPherson v. R. Co., 97 Mo. 253, 10 S. W. 846; to the next of kin if dependent on the deceased for support; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 338; but not otherwise for nominal damages; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Weber, 33 Kan. 543, 6 Pac. 877, 52 Am. Rep. 543; Johnston v. R. Co., 7 Ohio St. 336, 70 Am. Dec. 75; Baltimore & R. Turnpike Road v. State, 71 Md. 573, 18 Atl. 884. Where a mother loses her life through the wrongful act of a third party, the children may recover damages for the deprivation of pecuniary advantage; Carter v. R. Co., 76 N. J. L. 602, 71 Atl. 253, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 16 Ann. Cas. 929. Exemplary damages cannot generally be given, but in some states they are expressly authorised, either generally or in special circumstances set forth in the act. Hale, Meas. Dam. § 128.

In estimating the damages in these cases the expectation of life may be reckoned; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ala. 548, 8 South. 360, affirming 94 Ala. 602, 10 South. 167; Wheelan v. R. Co., 85 Ia. 167, 52 N. W. 119. See LIFE TABLES.

NEGOTIABLE PAPER. In suits on negotiable paper the measure of damages is its face value with interest from the breach; Murray v. Judah, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 484; Murphy v. Lucas, 58 Ind. 360. The value of a note is prima facie the amount thereof; Metropolitan El. R. Co. v. Kneeland, 120 N. Y. 134, 24 N. E. 381, 8 L. R. A. 253, 17 Am. St. Rep. 619; Buck v. Leach, 69 Me. 484; Menkens v. Menkens, 23 Mo. 252; Robbins v. Packard, 31 Vt. 570, 76 Am. Dec. 134. Formerly it was said that interest was only recoverable as damages allowable at the discretion of the jury; 2 B. & Ald. 305. It was early settled that interest, as a matter of law, could not be given without an express or implied contract for its payment; 2 B. & C. 348. The present rule is said to be that in England it is allowed on commercial paper; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 291; and that in the United States the jury should be instructed to give it; 2 id. § 699; Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 610; Lewis v. Rountree & Co., 79 N. C. 122, 28 Am. Rep. 309. Where interest is provided for in the paper the recovery is under the contract and not as damages, and there has been much conflict as to whether in case of non-payment at maturity interest thereafter is payable as interest at the contract rate or as damages at the statutory rate. The former view is supported upon the doctrine of an implied contract to pay the stipulated rate after maturity; Kerr v. Haverstick, 94 Ind. 178; Downer v. Whittier, 144 Mass. 448, 11 N. E. 585; Hydraulic Co. v. Chatfield, 38 Ohio St. 575; Warner v. Juif, 38 Mich. 662. Following the latter view—the statutory rate; Duran v. Ayer, 67 Me. 145; Cummings v. Howard, 63 Cal. 503; First Ecclesiastical Society v. Loomis, 42 Conn. 570; Moreland v. Lawrence, 23 Minn. 84; Hamilton v. Van Rensselaer, 43 N. Y. 244 (but contra, Miller v. Burroughs, 4 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 436; Andrews v. Keeler, 19 Hun [N. Y.] 87); Brown v. Hardcastle, 63 Md. 484; Ludwick v. Huntzinger, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 51; L. R. 7 H. L. 27; 14 Ch. D. 49 (contra, 3 C. B. N. S. 144). See 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 325 n., where the authorities are collected and the conclusion stated that the weight of authority is in favor of the latter position, which is also sustained by the supreme court of the United States when not controlled by local law; Holden v. Trust Co., 100 U. S. 72, 25 L. Ed. 567. See Cromwell v. County of Sac., 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681.

If there is an intention expressed it prevails, whatever may be the form of words used; Paine v. Caswell, 68 Me. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 21; 25 Ch. D. 338; Taylor v. Wing, 84 N. Y. 471; Broadway Sav. Bank v. Forbes, 79 Mo. 226. Where a higher rate after maturity is expressed it is generally allowed; Reeves v. Stipp, 91 Ill. 609; Portis v. Merrill, 33 Ark. 416; Capen v. Crowell, 66 Me. 282; L. R. 2 Eq. 221; 15 U. C. C. P. 360; but not by some courts, on the theory that it is a penalty; Watts v. Watts, 11 Mo. 547; White v. Iltis, 24 Minn. 43. It is said that the question properly rests upon the doctrine of liquidated damages, but that the courts have not generally so held; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 331.

In most of the states there are statutory provisions for damages upon protested paper, ranging as to foreign bills from five to twenty per cent; and on bills payable in another state there are varying rates, some statutes making discriminations between states or groups of states, based, apparently, upon contiguity, or extent of business relations and the like. For a summary of the provisions of these statutes, see 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 4753.

CARRIERS. Upon a total failure to deliver goods, the carrier is liable for the value of the goods at their place of destination, with interest from the time they should have been delivered, deducting the freight; Gillingham v. Dempsey, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 186; Bailey v. Shaw, 24 N. H. 297, 55 Am. Dec. 241; Sturgess v. Bissell, 46 N. Y. 462; Erie Ry. Co. v. I. J. Lockwood & Son, 28 Ohio St. 358; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Stanbro, 87 Ill. 195; Gray v. Packet Co., 64 Mo. 47; Whitney v. Ry. Co., 27 Wis. 327; Cushing v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 98 Mass. 550; Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 41 Miss. 671; Taylor v. Collier, 26 Ga. 122; Cole v. Rankin (Tenn.) 42 S. W. 72. Upon a failure to receive the goods at all for transportation, he is liable for the difference between the value at the place of shipment and at the place of destination, less his freight; or, if another conveyance can be found, the difference between the freight agreed on with defendant and the sum (if greater) which the shipper would be compelled to pay another carrier; Grund v. Pendergast, 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 216; McGovern v. Lewis, 56 Pa. 231, 94 Am. Dec. 60; Ward's Cent. & P. Lake Co. v. Elkins, 34 Mich. 439, 22 Am. Rep. 544. Upon a delay in delivering the goods, the plaintiff is entitled to an indemnity for his loss incurred by the delay, taking into account any fall in the market occurring between the time when the property should have been delivered by the carrier and the time when it actually was; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cobb, 64 Ill. 143; Peet v. R. Co., 20 Wis. 594, 91 Am. Dec. 446; Scott v. Steamship Co., 106 Mass. 468; Deming v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267; Ward v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 29, 7 Am. Rep. 405; Newell v. Smith, 49 Vt. 255; or, in some cases, the additional price paid for goods required by him to take the place of the delayed goods; Palmer v. Lumbering Ass'n, 90 Me. 193, 38 Atl. 108; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 13 Sup. Ct. 444, 37 L. Ed. 292; in case of property for exhibition at a museum, the probable net profits; Yoakum v. Dunn, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 524, 21 S. W. 411; or in case of stock injured, the depreciation measured by market value at the place of destination; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Deshong, 63 Ark. 443, 39 S. W. 260; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Avery (Tex.) 33 S. W. 704.

A carrier who fails to deliver goods promptly, knowing that the shipper had contracted to re-deliver on a specified date or forfeit a certain sum, is liable for the loss sustained by the shipper under the penalty clause of his contract; Illinois Cent R. Co. v. Cabinet Co., 104 Tenn. 568, 58 S. W. 303, 50 L. R. A. 729, 78 Am. St. Rep. 933; contra, Clyde Coal Co. v. R. Co., 226 Pa. 391, 75 Atl. 596, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191; Goodin v. R. Co., 125 Ga. 630, 54 S. E. 720, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1054, 5 Ann. Cas. 573, where it appeared that the carrier had no knowledge of the collateral contract of the shipper. Delay in the transportation of scenery renders a carrier liable for the reasonable rental value of the property; Weston v. Boston & M. R. R., 190 Mass. 298, 76 N. E. 1050, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 569, 112 Am. St. Rep. 330, 5 Ann. Cas. 825. The value of damaged goods may properly be determined by their sale at auction by the owner; The Queen, 78 Fed. 155.

The measure of damages for a breach of a contract to transport freight by vessel, is the difference between the contract and the actual price of freight paid; The Oregon, 55 Fed. 666, 5 C. C. A. 229, 6 U. S. App. 581.

In general in actions against a carrier for delay the measure of damages will include loss of profits; Hillsdale Coal & Coke Co. v. R. Co., 229 Pa. 61, 78 Atl. 28, 140 Am. St. Rep. 700; Paxton Tie Co. v. R. Co., 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 422. The measure of damages for failure to furnish cars to transport coal from a mine, is the difference between the reasonable selling price and the cost of mining and placing the coal on the market, plus its value in the mine; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Coke Co., 150 Ky. 489, 150 S. W. 641, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, and note id. 654.

In modern times, the conditions which led to the adoption of the common law rule making a carrier an insurer having changed, it is very common to limit, by contract, the amount of the shipper's recovery. The effect of such contracts is to fix a valuation on the goods which shall be the measure of damages in case of loss, and to this the shipper is held; Hart v. R. Co., 112 U. S. 332, 5 Sup. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 70 N. Y. 410, 26 Am. Rep. 608; Elkins v. Transp. Co., *81 Pa. 315; Graves v. R. Co., 137 Mass. 33, 50 Am. Rep. 282. Some courts, however, hold such contracts invalid; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wynn, 88 Tenn. 320, 14 S. W. 311; upon the theory that it is in fact an exemption from liability for negligence which is not permitted; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627. It is suggested that the true doctrine is that the carrier cannot himself limit the damages, but that a contract to do so, fairly made by both parties to it, should be sustained; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243.

LAND CONTRACTS. In actions for the breach of contracts for the sale of land where the vendor fails to convey, the English rule limits the damages to the amount advanced with interest and expenses incurred in examining the title. The rule dates back to Y. B. 30 Edw. III, 14 b; but the leading case is Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bla. 1078. The rule was qualified by an exception, established in Hopkins v. Grazebrook, when the vendor knew of the defect in title; 6 B. & C. 31; but that case was discredited as authority and the earlier rule adhered to by the house of lords; L. R. 7 H. L. 158, affirming L. R. 6 Excheq. 59, which was followed in 36 Ch. D. 619. In American law there is great lack of harmony in the decisions, and a distinction is taken in many cases growing out of the motive of the party in default. The extreme English rule has been followed in Pennsylvania, and, apparently, even where there is fraud; Burk v. Serrill, 80 Pa. 413, 21 Am. Rep. 105; see Betner v. Brough, 11 Pa. 127; Meason v. Kaine, 67 Pa. 126. In other states a failure to convey for want of good title does not involve liability for the value of the bargain, unless there be fraud, bad faith, or other misconduct; Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 155; Baltimore Permanent Bldg. & Land Society v. Smith, 54 Md. 187, 39 Am. Rep. 374; Tracy v. Gunn, 29 Kan. 508; Yokom v. McBride, 56 Ia. 139, 8 N. W. 795; see Erickson v. Bennet, 39 Minn. 326, 40 N. W. 157.

Knowledge of the defendant that the title was in a third person has been considered in some cases sufficient to warrant substantial damages; Pumpelly v. Phelps, 40 N. Y. 59, 100 Am. Dec. 463; and where the failure to convey was the result of the refusal of the wife to sign the deed, the same rule was applied, upon the theory that the vendor knew that it was doubtful if his wife would sign; Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 358; Plummer v. Rigdon, 78 Ill. 222, 20 Am. Rep. 261. In a case of contract by the defendant to sell the lands of another which he had contracted to purchase, and failed to accomplish his object because the real owner could not make title, the judgment was reversed because the judge had charged in favor of substantial damages, and Cooley, J., held, upon a review of the cases, that Flureau v. Thornhill must be considered as established law, but that where a party acted in bad faith or sold what he did not own, such damages should be allowed; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 490.

In many jurisdictions what is sometimes called the rule of the United States Supreme Court is adhered to and the purchaser is held to be entitled to the difference between the amount he has agreed to pay and the value at the time of breach. This is the opposite extreme from the English rule. Barbour v. Nichols, 3 R. I. 187; Harrison v. Charlton, 37 Ia. 134; Doherty v. Dolan, 65 Me. 87, 20 Am. Rep. 677; Carver v. Taylor, 35 Neb. 429, 53 N. W. 386; Telfener v. Russ, 145 U. S. 522, 12 Sup. Ct. 930, 36 L. Ed. 800; Bangs v. Paullin, 37 Ill. App. 465; Dunshee v. Geoghegan, 7 Utah 113, 25 Pac. 731.

When the purchaser refuses to perform, the measure has been held, in England, to be the difference between the price fixed in the contract and the value of the land at the time fixed for the delivery of the deed; 7 M. & W. 474. But the rule does not appear to be well settled in this country.

The English rule has been followed by some courts; Sanborn v. Chamberlin, 101 Mass. 409; Meason v. Kaine, 67 Pa. 126; Evrit v. Bancroft, 22 Ohio St. 172; Allen v. Mohn, 86 Mich. 328, 49 N. W. 52, 24 Am. St. Rep. 126. In some states where a deed has been tendered and refused, it is held that the contract price may be recovered in full; Richards v. Edick, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 260, the question having been left undecided in Franchot v. Leach, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 506; Alna v. Plummer, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 258; Goodpaster v. Porter, 11 Ia. 161; contra. 1 Pugs. 195. A purchaser in possession on an instalment contract of sale on eviction was held entitled to recover instalments made and cost of improvements; Hawkins v. Merritt, 109 Ala. 261, 19 South. 589; contra, if buildings were erected without the vendor's request; Gerbert v. Trustees of Congregation, 59 N. J. L. 160, 35 Atl. 1121, 69 L. R. A. 764, 59 Am. St. Rep. 578.

One who has contracted for the right to purchase public land is entitled on a breach to the difference between the contract price and the saleable value of such right, and it is the vendor's duty to re-sell the right, or, failing this, to show its market value; Telfener v. Russ, 145 U. S. 522, 12 Sup. Ct. 930, 36 L. Ed. 800; evidence of particular sales of other real estate is not admissible to establish market value; Allison v. Montgomery, 107 Pa. 460.

EVICTION. The damages recoverable for an eviction, in an action for breach of covenants of seisin and warranty in a deed, are the consideration-money, interest thereon, and the costs, if any, of defending the eviction. This is not in accordance with the fundamental doctrine of the law of damages, but it is the rule in most of the states, and is sometimes termed the New York rule; Taylor v. Barnes, 69 N. Y. 434; McClure's Ex'rs v. Gamble, 27 Pa. 288; Ware v. Weathnall, 2 McCord (S. C.) 413 (earlier decisions were contra; Liber v. Parsons' Ex'rs, 1 Bay [S. C.] 19; Eveleigh v. Stitt, 1 Bay [S. C.] 92; Guerard's Ex'rs v. Rivers, 1 Bay [S. C.] 265); Threlkeld's Adm'r v. Fitzhugh's Ex'x, 2 Leigh (Va.) 451; (also after conflicting decisions, Mills v. Bell, 3 Call [Va.] 320); Abernathy v. Phillips, 82 Va. 769, 1 S. E. 113; Shaw v. Wilkins' Adm'r, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 647, 49 Am. Dec. 692; Clark v. Parr, 14 Ohio 118, 45 Am. Dec. 529; Carvill v. Jacks, 43 Ark. 439; Martin v. Gordon, 24 Ga. 533; Harding v. Larkin, 41 Ill. 413; Rhea v. Swain, 122 Ind. 272, 22 N. E. 1000, 23 N. E. 776; Shorthill v. Ferguson, 44 Ia. 249; Levitzky v. Canning, 33 Cal. 299; McGary v. Hastings, 39 Cal. 360, 2 Am. Rep. 456; Morris v. Rowan, 17 N. J. L. 304; Winnipiseogee Paper Co. v. Eaton, 65 N. H. 13, 18 Atl. 171; Phipps v. Tarpley, 31 Miss. 433; Tong v. Matthews, 23 Mo. 437;

Devine v. Lewis, 38 Minn. 24, 35 N. W. 711; Ramsey v. Wallace, 100 N. C. 75, 6 S. E. 638; Glenn v. Mathews, 44 Tex. 400; Crisfield v. Storr, 36 Md. 129, 150, 11 Am. Rep. 480; Hoffman v. Bosch, 18 Nev. 360, 4 Pac. 703; Kingsbury v. Milner, 69 Ala. 502; Stebbins v. Wolf, 33 Kan. 765, 7 Pac. 542; Butcher v. Peterson, 26 W. Va. 447, 53 Am. Rep. 89; 8 U. C. Q. B. 191 (but see 13 U. C. C. P. 146); but the value of improvements may be recovered; Coleman v. Ballard's Heirs, 13 La. Ann. 512; and see as to Louisiana, New Orleans v. Gaine's Adm'r, 131 U. S. 191, 9 Sup. Ct. 745, 33 L. Ed. 99; though excluded by the New York rule; Pitcher v. Livingston, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 4 Am. Dec. 229. In Mississippi a vendee who has lost land by reason of a title paramount to his remote vendor may recover the amount which such remote vendor received for the land; Brooks v. Black, 68 Miss. 161, 8 South. 332, 11 L. R. A. 176, 24 Am. St. Rep. 259.

What is known as the New England rule establishes as the measure of damages the value of the land at the time of eviction, together with the expenses of the suit, etc., and this is followed in all the New England states, Quebec, and Michigan; Furnas v. Durgin 119 Mass. 500, 20 Am. Rep. 341; Ryerson v. Chapman, 66 Me. 557; Sterling v. Peet, 14 Conn. 245; Park v. Bates, 12 Vt. 381, 36 Am. Dec. 347; Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242; 6 Can. 425; and it is also recognized as the rule in England; 9 Q. B. D. 128.

Where a paramount title is purchased to prevent actual eviction the measure of damages is the price paid with interest; Jenks v. Quinn, 61 Hun 427, 16 N. Y. Supp. 240; James v. Lamb, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 21 S. W. 172; and where the breach alleged was the foreclosure of a mortgage, it is the amount paid to redeem the land and expenses of defending the title; Matheny v. Stewart, 108 Mo. 73, 17 S. W. 1014.

INCUMBRANCES. On a breach of a covenant in a deed against incumbrances, the purchaser is entitled to recover his expenses incurred in extinguishing the incumbrance, if practicable; Stowell v. Bennett, 34 Me. 422; Schooley v. Stoops, 4 Ind. 130; Harrington v. Murphy, 109 Mass. 299; Porter v. Bradley, 7 R. I. 538; Koestenbader v. Peirce, 41 Ia. 204.

For a permanent incumbrance the compensation should be measured by the decreased value of the land; Grant v. Tallman, 20 N. Y. 191, 75 Am. Dec. 384; Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175, 11 Am. Rep. 335; Mitchell v. Stanley, 44 Conn. 312; but the amount is limited by the sum recoverable for a total loss of the land; Koestenbader v. Peirce, 41 Ia. 204; Clark v. Zeigler, 79 Ala. 346. If the incumbrance causes a total eviction the damages are the same as in other cases of eviction. See supra.

SALES. Where the seller of chattels fails to perform his agreement, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the article at the time and place fixed for delivery; Windmuller v. Pope, 107 N. Y. 674, 14 N. E. 436; McKercher v. Curtis, 35 Mich. 478; Randon v. Barton, 4 Tex. 289; Smith v. Dunlap, 12 Ill. 184; Shepherd v. Hampton, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 200, 4 L. Ed. 369; Berry v. Dwinel, 44 Me. 255; Bickell v. Colton, 41 Miss. 368; Arnold v. Blabon, 147 Pa. 372, 23 Atl. 575; Humphreysville Copper Co. v. Mining Co., 33 Vt. 92; Smith v. Synder, 82 Va. 614; Osgood v. Bauder, 75 Ia. 550, 39 N. W. 887, 1 L. R. A. 655; Griffith v. Construction Co., 46 Mo. App. 539; Kehler v. Einstman, 38 Ill. App. 91; Erwin v. Harris, 87 Ga. 333, 13 S. E. 513; Ramish v. Kirschbraun, 98 Cal. 676, 33 Pac. 780; 8 Q. B. 604; Benj. Sales § 758; Moffat v. Davitt, 200 Mass. 452, 86 N. E. 929.

The same rule applies as to the deficiency where there is a part-delivery only; 16 Q. B. 941; Benjamin v. Hillard, 23 How. (U. S.) 149, 16 L. Ed. 518; Horn v. Batchelder, 41 N. H. 86; Shreve v. Brereton, 51 Pa. 175; Fisk v. Tank, 12 Wis. 276, 78 Am. Dec. 737; Converse v. Burrows, 2 Minn. 229 (Gil. 191). Where, however, the purchaser has paid the price in advance, some of the cases, particularly in England and New York, allow the highest market price up to the time of the trial; Arnold v. Bank, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 424; Bank of Montgomery v. Reese, 26 Pa. 143; Calvit v. McFadden, 13 Tex. 324. Where the purchaser refuses to take and pay for the goods, the seller may sell them fairly, and charge the buyer with the difference between the contract price and the best market price obtainable within a reasonable time after the refusal; Saladin v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 79; Girard v. Taggart, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327; Pollen v. Le Roy, 30 N. Y. 549; Cook v. Brandeis, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 555; Tufts v. Grewer, 83 Me. 407, 22 Atl. 382; Adler v. Kiber, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 415, 27 S. W. 23. Where the goods are delivered and received, but do not correspond in quality with a warranty given, the vendee may recover the difference between the value of the goods delivered and the value they would have had if they had corresponded with the contract; Tuttle v. Brown, 4 Gray (Mass.) 457, 64 Am. Dec. 80; Crabtree v. Kile, 21 Ill. 180; Moulton v. Scruton, 39 Me. 287; Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597; Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558; English v. Commission Co., 57 Fed. 451, 6 C. C. A. 416, 15 U. S. App. 218. But where the article is one which cannot be bought in the market (a machine), and it was not of the warranted capacity, it appearing that the vendee had contracted to supply the products of the machine, which he was unable to do because of the breach, and the facts were known to the vendor, the measure of damages is the difference between what it would have cost to fulfil his contracts and what the vendee would have received if he had not lost them by reason of the defects in the machine; or if the work was done by others, the difference between what it would have cost him to do the work and what he paid for having it done; Carroll-Porter Boiler & Tank Co. v. Machine Co., 55 Fed. 451, 5 C. C. A. 190, 3 U. S. App. 631; Springfield Milling Co. v. Mfg. Co., 81 Fed. 261, 26 C. C. A. 389, 49 U. S. App. 438.

Where one ordered a water wheel of unusual size and repudiated the contract, the contract price was held the measure of damages; Bookwalter v. Clark, 10 Fed. 793; so where one ordered a printing press to be made, and ordered the work stopped before completion, the manufacturer was entitled to recover the contract price less the value of the machine when the work was stopped and the cost of completing it; Katz v. Koster, 6 Misc. 327, 26 N. Y. Supp. 785.

A vendee who accepts a motor built from a model furnished by him can recover as damages, if the motor does not conform with the model, only the cost of making necessary changes; North Chicago St. Ry. Co. v. Burnham, 102 Fed. 669, 42 C. C. A. 584.

Extraordinary and unusual profits lost because of the vendor's failure to fulfil his contract cannot be recovered as damages, although the vendor knew that the goods were bought to fill a previous contract with a third person; Guetzkow Bros. Co. v. Andrews, 92 Wis. 214, 66 N. W. 119, 52 L. R. A. 209, 53 Am. St. Rep. 909; ordinary profits are recoverable; Gardner v. Deeds & Hirsig, 116 Tenn. 128, 92 S. W. 518, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740, 7 Ann. Cas. 1172; contra, H. G. Holloway & Bro. v. Shoe Co., 151 Fed. 216, 80 C. C. A. 568, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704.

Speculative profits which might have resulted from displaying a machine at an exhibition cannot be considered; Winston Cigarette Machine Co. v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 284, 53 S. E. 885, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255. Where inferior articles are furnished, the measure of damages is the difference of value between those delivered and those agreed to be delivered at the time and place of delivery; Ellison & Co. v. J. T. Johnson & Co., 74 S. C. 202, 54 S. E. 202, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151. Failure to deliver bonds renders the promisor liable for the value of the bonds at the time of delivery; Henry v. Construction Co., 158 Fed. 79, 85 C. C. A. 409. In the absence of special circumstances or special damage shown, damages for loss by failure of delivery in time is measured by the interest on the investment tied up by the breach; for the time the use of the property was postponed; Wood v. Gaslight Co., 111 Fed. 463, 49 C. C. A. 427; New York & Colorado Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 130 U. S. 611, 9 Sup. Ct. 665, 32 L. Ed. 1031; and this rule was applied for failure to deliver a vessel, but damages for the loss of a vessel in a hurricane are too speculative for recovery in an action for breach of contract to construct and deliver at a designated time and place; De Ford v. Steel Co., 113 Fed. 72, 51 C. C. A. 59.

The measure of damages for breach of a contract to deliver articles if they have no market value or cannot be had in the market where the delivery was to be made, is the additional cost and expense of obtaining them at the nearest market, or on the most advantageous terms; Vickery v. McCormick, 117 Ind. 594, 20 N. E. 495.

Many courts allow the highest intermediate value between the breach and the end of the trial; Gilman v. Andrews, 66 Ia. 116, 23 N. W. 291; Ellis v. Wire, 33 Ind. 127, 5 Am. Rep. 189; but it is generally denied; Ingram v. Rankin, 47 Wis. 406, 2 N. W. 755, 32 Am. Rep. 762; Third Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Boyd, 44 Md. 47, 22 Am. Rep. 35; Brewster v. Van Liew, 119 Ill. 554, 8 N. E. 842; Hale, Dam. 186, 194, where the rule is discussed, with the authorities. This rule was originally adopted in New York as to chattels generally; Romaine v. Van Allen, 26 N. Y. 309. It was modified to exclude stock transactions on the ground that the highest intermediate value was not the natural and proximate result; Baker v. Drake, 53 N. Y. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 507. The rule of the last cited case is adopted in Galigher v. Jones, 129 U. S. 193, 9 Sup. Ct. 335, 32 L. Ed. 658. In Pennsylvania the rule is rejected in its general application; Smethurst v. Woolston, 5 U. & S. (Pa.) 106, but adopted in case of stocks; Musgrave v. Beckendorff, 53 Pa. 310; see Neiler v. Kelley, 69 Pa. 403. In some cases it is left to the jury to allow any value between the highest value and that at the time of conversion; Renfro's Adm'x v. Hughes, 69 Ala. 581; and in others, where the transaction is free from bad faith, value is taken at the time of conversion, with interest; Whitfield v. Whitfield, 40 Miss. 352.

For breach of contract by a broker to deliver stocks on the demand of a customer for whom they were bought on margin, the damages are to be determined by the highest intermediate value between the default and the time when the customer has notice thereof reasonably sufficient to enable him to replace the stocks; In re Swift, 114 Fed. 947.

The damages for breach of contract to deliver stock are held in some cases to be the difference between the contract price and the highest market price which the stock attains during such reasonable time after that set for delivery as would enable the purchaser to secure the stock elsewhere; Vos v. Child, Hulswit & Co., 171 Mich. 595, 137 N. W. 209, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 368; Joseph v. Sulzberger, 136 App. Div. 499, 121 N. Y. Supp. 73. But the preponderance of authority is that the damage is measured by the difference between the market value and the contract price at the time of delivery;

Sloan v. McKane, 131 App. Div. 244, 115 N. Y. Supp. 648; Coffin v. State, 144 Ind. 578, 43 N. E. 654, 55 Am. St. Rep. 188; Gray v. Bank, 3 Mass. 390, 3 Am. Dec. 156; Bank of Montgomery v. Reese, 26 Pa. 143.

Where the breach is by the vendee, the vendor may hold the stock and sue for the price or the unpaid balance of it; Reed v. Hayt, 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 121, affirmed on opinion below in 109 N. Y. 659, 17 N. E. 418; Thorndike v. Locke, 98 Mass. 340; or he may sell it for the vendee and sue for the difference between the contract and sale price; Lebus v. Roode, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 128; Stewart v. Canty, 8 M. & W. 160; or he may retain the stock and sue for the difference between the market price at the date of delivery and the contract price; Hamilton v. Finnegan, 117 Ia. 623, 91 N. W. 1039; Reed v. Hayt, supra; Corser v. Hale, 149 Pa. 274, 24 Atl. 285; Sharpe v. White, 25 Ont. L. Rep. 298. Where the vendor agreed to repurchase and refused to receive and pay for the stock, he was held liable for the contract price; Browne v. Plow Works, 62 Minn. 90, 64 N. W. 66; and where the vendee failed to pay for stock sold with no price designated, he was held liable and the measure of damages was the market price at the time and place of delivery; Deck's Adm'r v. Feld, 38 Mo. App. 674.

See generally as to the measure of damages for breach of such contracts, note to Vos v. Child, Hulswit & Co., supra, in 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 368.

Collision. The general principle followed by the courts of admiralty in cases of collision between vessels is that the damages awarded against the offending vessel must be sufficient to restore the other to the condition she was in at the time of the collision, if restoration is practicable. Both damages to vessel and cargo are to be made good. But hypothetical and consequential damages are excluded. The loss of the use of the injured vessel while undergoing repairs is proper to be included. See The Margaret J. Sanford, 37 Fed. 148. If the injured vessel is a total loss, her market value at the time is the measure of damages. See Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. (U. S.) 106, 14 L. Ed. 68; Vantine v. The Lake, 2 Wall. Jr. 52, Fed. Cas. No. 16,878; Jolly v. Terre Haute Drawbridge Co., 6 McLean, 238, Fed. Cas. No. 7,441; O'Neil v. The I. M. North, 37 Fed. 270.

If the fault is equal on the part of both vessels, the loss is to be divided between them; New Haven Steam Transp. Co. v. The Continental, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 345, 20 L. Ed. 801; Atlee v. Packet Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 389, 22 L. Ed. 619; The Wydale, 37 Fed. 716; The Viola, 60 Fed. 296; The Manitoba, 122 U. S. 97, 7 Sup. Ct. 1158, 30 L. Ed. 1095.

For a total loss of cargo, its value at the place of shipment, or its cost, including expenses, charges, insurance, and interest, should be allowed; The Umbria, 59 Fed. 489, 8 C. C. A. 194, 11 U. S. App. 612; when part is recovered and sold, after expenses are incurred, the rule is to allow the difference between the market value of the goods, if uninjured, and the value in their damaged condition; d. The allowance of interest and costs in case of collision rests in the discretion of the lower court, and will not be disturbed on appeal; The Maggie J. Smith, 123 U. S. 349, 8 Sup. Ct. 159, 31 L. Ed. 175.

Funeral expenses of persons whose death was caused by collision are recoverable as part of the damages against the vessel in fault; The Mauch Chunk, 139 Fed. 747.

Libel or Slander. The elements to be considered in fixing the measure of damages are those only which are the natural consequences of the act complained of; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Buckner, 98 Fed. 222, 39 C. C. A. 19; but the damages are not confined to the actual pecuniary loss; Hearne v. De Young, 132 Cal. 357, 64 Pac. 576; they may include injury to reputation; Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10; even where the statute provides for recovery only for injury to property, business, trade, profession, occupation or feelings; McGee v. Baumgartner, 121 Mich. 287, 80 N. W. 21; mental suffering (q. v.); Van Ingen v. Star Co., 157 N. Y. 695, 51 N. E. 1094; even if that is the only element of damages from malicious slander; Hacker v. Heiney, 111 Wis. 313, 87 N. W. 249. The interposition of a plea of justification which is not proved is matter in aggravation of damages; Coffin v. Brown, 94 Md. 190, 50 Atl. 567, 55 L. R. A. 732, 89 Am. St. Rep. 422; Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n v. Schenck, 98 Fed. 925, 40 C. C. A. 163; Potter v. Pub. Co., 68 App. Div. 95, 74 N. Y. Supp. 317. In an action on the case for reflecting on the integrity or responsibility of a merchant, he is entitled to substantial damages; Wolkowsky v. Garfunkel (Fla.) 60 South. 791, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 351 and note. All the consequences of the wrongful act which were reasonably to be foreseen and resulted from it in the ordinary consequences; Brown v. Durham (Tex.) 42 S. W. 331; King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 9 Atl. 705, 60 Am. Rep. 622; or were the natural direct and reasonable consequence of it; Blumhardt v. Rohr, 70 Md. 328, 17 Atl. 266; among those included by various cases are, diminution of business; Daisley v. Douglass, 119 Fed. 485; or its suspension; Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 174 Mo. 444, 73 S. W. 668; prospective damages; Gregory v. Williams, 1 Car. & K. 65; (but these were held too remote and speculative in Bradstreet Co. v. Oswald, 96 Ga. 396, 23 S. E. 423); injury to credit; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 22 S. W. 358, 724, 20 L. R. A. 138, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592; Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 9 S. W. 753, 2 L. R. A. 405, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768; injury to feelings; Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189, 60 N. W. 476; especially when malice is shown; Orth v. Featherly, 87 Mich. 315, 49 N. W. 640. Of course malice may be considered, and, if shown, there may be punitive damages; Orth v. Featherly, and Minter v. Bradstreet Co., supra; and they are also allowed in the case of libel where the publication is actionable per se, and malice is presumed; Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Mach. Co., 139 Ky. 497, 96 S. W. 551, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023, 139 Am. St. Rep. 504; Dun v. Weintraub, 111 Ga. 416, 36 S. E. 808, 50 L. R. A. 670; Mowry v. Raabe, 89 Cal. 606, 27 Pac. 157. See 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 351, note.

CONTINUING TORTS. Ordinarily the damages which may be recovered for a tort include only compensation for the injury suffered to the time of suit, and the theory formerly acted upon was that each continuance of a trespass or a nuisance was a fresh one for which a new action would lie; 3 Bla. Com. 220; Vedder v. Vedder, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 257. The only remedy applied in such cases is that exemplary damages will be given, if, after one verdict against him, any one has the hardihood to continue it; 2 Selw. N. P. 1130. In cases, however, where the injury is of a nature to be permanent, it is held that entire damages may be recovered in one action; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 924; as where the trespass was the insertion of girders into a wall; Ritter v. Sieger, 105 Pa. 400; or maintaining a brothel next to the plaintiff's dwelling-house; Givens v. Van Studdiford, 72 Mo. 129.

The same principle is applied in actions for breach of contract by neglect of a continuing duty imposed by it. Each moment the neglect continues is a separate breach and is often considered and treated as a total breach for which the entire damage, past and prospective, may be recovered in one action, the judgment being a bar to any further suit; Hale, Dam. § 33; but not if the contract be divisible, as was held a contract to issue an annual pass renewable from year to year during the pleasure of the promisee; Kansas & C. P. Ry. Co. v. Curry, 6 Kan. App. 561, 51 Pac. 576. Whether a tort is permanent or not is a question of fact to be determined according to circumstances; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 924; the presumption being that a wrong will not continue; Savannah & O. Canal Co. v. Bourquin, 51 Ga. 378. Damages due to subsidence resulting from the working of a mine under another person's property are measured by the market value of the property attributable to the risk of future subsidence; [1906] 2 Ch. 22.

The question of the right to recover in one action of damage resulting from a continuing trespass, and to be protected by the judgment from further suit, is a very important one in connection with the exercise of the right of eminent domain under those modern constitutions which secure compensation for property damaged as well as for that taken.

OTHER ACTIONS. False Imprisonment. In an action against an individual for causing the plaintiff to be taken into custody on a charge of felony, evidence affording reasonable and probable cause of suspicion of the defendant's guilt is admissible in mitigation of damages; Rogers v. Toliver, 139 Ga. 281, 77 S. E. 28, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 64, and note. Undoubtedly such evidence is admissible in mitigation of punitive damages; Beckwith v. Bean, 98 U. S. 266, 25 L. Ed. 124, where it was also held that such evidence was not admissible in mitigation of compensatory damages and in both these conclusions many other courts concur, among which are: Holmes v. Blyler, 80 Ia. 365, 45 N. W. 756; Garnier v. Squires, 62 Kan. 321, 62 Pac. 1005; Roth v. Smith, 54 Ill. 431; loss of employment resulting from false imprisonment is an element of damage; Stoecker v. Nathanson, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 435, 98 N. W. 1061, 70 L. R. A. 667.

Abduction of Child. The damages for abduction of a minor child, are not limited to loss of services, but include compensation for expense and injury, and punitive damages for the wrong done the parent in his affections and the destruction of his household; Howell v. Howell (N. C.) 78 S. E. 222, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867.

For the Pollution of a Stream by coal dirt, the damages are the cost of removing the coal dirt, unless it exceeds the value of the entire property; there can be no recovery in excess of entire property value; Stevenson v. Coal Co., 201 Pa. 112, 50 Atl. 818, 88 Am. St. Rep. 805.

In an action for deceit the measure of damages is the difference between the real value of the property at the date of the sale and the price paid, together with interest and remunerations for outlays resulting from the defendant's conduct; Sigafus v. Porter, 179 U. S. 116, 21 Sup. Ct. 34, 45 L. Ed. 113.

As to the measure of damages in actions against telegraph and telephone companies see TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE.

Injuries to Women. In a personal injury cause it is held that a married woman cannot recover for loss of time, services or wages or impaired capacity to work, in connection with her household duties, since her services belong to her husband; Norfolk Ry. & Light Co. v. Williar, 104 Va. 679, 52 S. E. 380; Denton v. Ordway, 108 Ia. 487, 79 N. W. 271. She cannot recover the amount she paid for domestic service during her disability; Frohs v. City of Dubuque, 109 Ia. 219, 80 N. W. 341; even where she is working outside to help support the family, it is held that she cannot recover for impaired capacity; Plummer v. City of Milan, 70 Mo. App. 598; Dawson v. City of Troy, 49 Hun 322, 2 N. Y. Supp. 137; or where she had not lived with her husband for 12 years; Thuringer v. R. Co., 71 Hun 526, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1087. But where she is carrying on an independent business, the rule is otherwise; Jordan v. R. Co., 138 Mass. 425; Fife v. City of Oshkosh, 89 Wis. 540, 62 N. W. 541; Healey v. P. Ballantine & Sons, 66 N. J. L. 339, 49 Atl. 511. So if she is a deserted wife; Schmelzer v. Traction Co., 218 Pa. 29, 66 Atl. 1005. But other cases held that the loss of ability to labor is an element of damage; Giffen v. City of Lewiston, 6 Idaho 231, 55 Pac. 545; Harmon v. R. Co., 165 Mass. 100, 42 N. E. 505, 30 L. R. A. 658, 52 Am. St. Rep. 499. A married woman may recover for bodily pain and mental suffering; Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 23 N. E. 17, 6 L. R. A. 553; and for expenses attending her cure when paid from or chargeable to her own estate; Schulte v. Holliday, 54 Mich. 73, 19 N. W. 752.

A miscarriage is an element of damage in an action for negligence; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Ertrachter, 228 Ill. 114, 81 N. E. 816; Berger v. Ry. Co., 95 Minn. 84, 103 N. W. 724; Durham v. City of Spokane, 27 Wash. 615, 68 Pac. 383; Engle v. Simmons, 148 Ala. 92, 41 South. 1023, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96, 121 Am. St. Rep. 59, 12 Ann. Cas. 740; Witrak v. Electric Co., 52 App. Div. 234, 65 N. Y. Supp. 257; ignorance on the defendant's part of the woman's condition is no defence; Kimberly v. Howard, 143 N. C. 398, 55 S. E. 778, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545. In Sullivan v. Ry. Co., 197 Mass. 512, 83 N. E. 1091, 125 Am. St. Rep. 378, it was held that the negligence might be the proximate cause of the miscarriage, though conception had taken place seven months after the injury. Where there were two successive miscarriages after the injury, it was held that the second could be considered as bearing on the extent of the injury only and not in assessing specific damages; Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. Smith, 98 Tex. 553, 86 S. W. 322. Compensation may be given for mental suffering because of the probable deformity of the child, and for disappointment from the birth of a deformed child; Prescott v. Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 69 Atl. 522, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987. Only increased pain over the natural pain can be considered; Hawkins v. Ry. Co., 3 Wash. 592, 28 Pac. 1021, 16 L. R. A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72; but in Morris v. Ry. Co., 105 Minn. 276, 117 N. W. 500, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598, it was held that the natural suffering, in case the child had been born in the natural course, cannot be deducted from the pain and suffering caused by the miscarriage. The loss of the child is not an element of damage; Witrak v. Electric R. Co., 52 App. Div. 234, 65 N. Y. Supp. 257; Morris v. Ry. Co., 105 Minn. 276, 117 N. W. 500, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598; Sullivan v. Ry. Co., 197 Mass. 512, 83 N. E. 1091, 125 Am. St. Rep. 378. See, generally, Tunnicliffe v. R. Co., 102 Mich. 624, 61 N. W. 11, 32 L. R. A. 142; Morris v. Ry. Co., 105 Minn. 276, 117 N. W. 500, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598; UNBORN CHILD.

Sale of Seeds. On a sale of seed of a certain quality or variety, it is the difference between the value of the crop produced and what would have been produced less the expense of raising it; Moody v. Peirano, 4 Cal. App. 411, 88 Pac. 380; Crutcher & Co. v. Elliott, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 592; Dunn v. Bushnell, 63 Neb. 568, 88 N. W. 693, 93 Am. St. Rep. 474. Where rice sold for seed did not grow and it was too late to plant other seed, the measure of damages is the price of the rice, the expense of preparing the soil and planting and a reasonable rent of the land for the year, less rent that could have been obtained by renting the land for other crops; Reiger v. Worth, 127 N. C. 230, 37 S. E. 217, 52 L. R. A. 362, 80 Am. St. Rep. 798. See SALE.

Destruction of Crops. It is the value at the time of destruction; Teller v. Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 Pac. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779, with note; Gulf C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Pool, 70 Tex. 713, 8 S. W. 535. Some cases add the value of the owner's right to harvest the crop when ripe; St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal Ry. Ass'n v. Schultz, 226 Ill. 409, 80 N. E. 879. Some cases hold it to be the net profit the owner would have received less the expense of raising and marketing it; Hopkins v. Commercial Co., 16 Mont. 356, 40 Pac. 865. In Drake v. R. Co., 63 Ia. 302, 19 N. W. 215, 50 Am. Rep. 746, it was held to be the difference in the value of the land just before and just after the injury was inflicted; but this case is criticised as stating an impracticable rule; 2 Farnham, Waters 1873. Interest has sometimes been allowed; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wallis, 82 Ark. 447, 102 S. W. 390; Clark v. Banks et al., 6 Houst. (Del.) 584.

Eminent Domain. Where land is condemned and taken for public use under the power of eminent domain the measure of damages is the marketable value of the property taken. The value of the property to the government, state or city, for whose particular use it is taken "is not a criterion. The owner must be compensated for what is taken from him and that is done when he is paid its fair marketable value for its uses and purposes"; U. S. v. Water Power Co., 229 U. S. 53, 33 Sup. Ct. 667, 57 L. Ed. 1063; U. S. v. Plantation Co., 122 Fed. 581, 58 C. C. A. 279; Moulton v. Water Co., 137 Mass. 163; Allaway v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 510, 13 S. W. 123, 8 L. R. A. 123.

As to property taken or injured for public use, see EMINENT DOMAIN; Sedg. Meas. Dam. ch. xxxvi.; Hale, Dam. 167; 5 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cas. 352, 386; 14 id. 207; change of grade; 4 Am. Ry. & Corp. Cas. 277; rights of landlords, tenants, and reversioners; Corrigan v. City of Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212; 4 Am. Ry. & Corp. Cas. 744; benefit to abutting property to rebut proof of damage; Bohm v. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 576, 29 N. E. 802, 14 L. R. A. 344.

See DAMAGES; CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES; LIQUIDATED DAMAGES; LATERAL SUPPORT; TELEGRAPH.

Exemplary Damages. Those allowed as a punishment for torts committed with fraud, actual malice, or deliberate violence or oppression; they are allowed in trespass for assault and battery in addition to compensatory damages; Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 16 Am. Rep. 270; and may be recovered against corporations; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth, 130 Ky. 759, 114 S. W. 264.

In nearly all of the states, in such cases, the jury are not confined to a strict compensation for the plaintiff's loss, but may, in assessing damages, allow an additional sum by way of punishment for the wrong done. This allowance is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages.

Some courts, however, have declined to recognize the doctrine; Spear v. Hubbard, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 143; Barnard v. Poor, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 378 (and see Hawes v. Knowles, 114 Mass. 518, 19 Am. Rep. 383); Murphy v. Hobbs, 7 Col. 541, 5 Pac. 119, 49 Am. Rep. 366; Riewe v. McCormick, 11 Neb. 261, 9 N. W. 88; Wilson v. Bowen, 64 Mich. 133, 31 N. W. 81; Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475 (overruling earlier cases).

Some other courts refuse punitive damages; but allow exemplary damage as compensatory or "indeterminate damages;" Pegram v. Stortz, 31 W. Va. 220, 6 S. E. 485; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hause, 1 Wyo. 27; Quigley v. R. Co., 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757. In some of these jurisdictions they are really allowed under the guise of compensation for mental suffering and the like.

"Whenever the injury complained of is the result of the fraud, malice or wilful or wanton act of the defendant, and the circumstances of the case are such as call for such damages, vindictive damages may be given. The general rule is that, when the injury has been inflicted maliciously or wantonly, and with circumstances of contumely or indignity, the jury are not restricted to actual damages, but may give such damages in addition thereto as the circumstances of the case seem to warrant, to deter others from like offences." Wood's Mayne, Dam. 58; Webb, Pollock, Torts 219.

"All rules of damages are referred by the law to one of two heads, either compensation or punishment. Compensation is to make the injured party whole. Exemplary damages are something beyond this, and inflicted with a view not to compensate the plaintiff, but to punish the defendant." Per Dillon, Circ. J., charging the jury; Berry v. Fletcher, 1 Dill. 71, Fed. Cas. No. 1,357.

It has been said that the distinction between exemplary damages, and damages given as special or extraordinary compensation is one of words merely; and the effect of allowing the former is the same as that produced upon the theory of compensation, when this is extended to cover injury beyond the pecuniary loss; Hill. Torts 440; Field, Dam. 70.

The propriety of allowing damages to be given by way of punishment under any circumstances has been strenuously denied in many of the cases, and the question has given rise to extensive discussion; but the weight of authority is decidedly that such allowance, in a suitable case, is proper. In Brown v. Swineford, 44 Wis. 289, 28 Am. Rep. 582, the court said: "The argument and consideration of this case have gone to confirm the present members of this court in their disapprobation of the rule of exemplary damages which they have inherited; but they . . . do not feel at liberty to change or modify the rule at so late a day against the general current of authority elsewhere . . . if a change should now be made, it lies with the legislature, etc." See, also, 7 So. L. Rev. N. S. 675; Smithwick v. Ward, 52 N. C. 64, 75 Am. Dec. 453; 20 Am. Law. Reg. N. S. 573; Quigley v. R. Co., 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757.

Actual malice need not be shown if the act complained of was wantonly or recklessly done; Farwell v. Warren, 51 Ill. 467; Paddock v. Somes, 51 Mo. App. 320; or conceived in a spirit of mischief, or in evident disregard of the rights of others, or of civil or social obligations; Dibble v. Morris, 26 Conn. 416; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Statham, 42 Miss. 607, 97 Am. Dec. 478; Wood's Mayne, Dam. 59, note. In an action for slander, however, exemplary damages cannot be recovered without proof of express malice; Nelson v. Wallace, 48 Mo. App. 193. Where motive may be ground of aggravation of damages, evidence on this score, as of proof of provocation, or of good faith, is admissible in mitigation of damages; Pollock, Torts 184. So exemplary damages cannot be recovered where the defendant acted on advice of counsel; Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511; Shores v. Brooks, 81 Ga. 468, 8 S. E. 429, 12 Am. St. Rep. 332; City Nat. Bank v. Jeffries, 73 Ala. 183; Carpenter v. Barber, 44 Vt. 441; or in good faith; Pierce v. Getchell, 76 Me. 216; Millard v. Brown, 35 N. Y. 297; Oursler v. R. Co., 60 Md. 358; Pratt v. Pond, 42 Conn. 318; or with a fixed belief that he was acting in the right; Farwell v. Warren, 70 Ill. 28; Brown v. Allen, 35 Ia. 306; Wilkinson v. Searcy, 76 Ala. 176.

The ground of the doctrine is said to be that society is protected by this species of punishment, while the party is also compensated at the same time and persons are deterred from like offences; Cole v. Tucker, 6 Tex. 266.

Mere negligence on the part of the defendant is not enough; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Ogier, 35 Pa. 60, 78 Am. Dec. 322; Goetz v. Ambs, 27 Mo. 28; but see Morning Journal Ass'n v. Rutherford, 51 Fed. 513, 2 C. C. A. 354, 16 L. R. A. 803; Smith v. Matthews, 6 Misc. 162, 27 N. Y. Supp. 120. Malicious motives alone can never constitute a cause of action but, where the allegations are sufficient to sustain the action, malice may be alleged and proved to enhance the damages; Stevens v. Kelley, 78 Me. 445, 6 Atl. 868, 57 Am. Rep. 813; Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 37 N. W. 838; Glendon Iron Co. v. Uhler, 75 Pa. 467, 15 Am. Rep. 599; Smith v. Goodman, 75 Ga. 198. See MALICE; MOTIVE.

Exemplary damages as a rule are recoverable only in tort, except that they are allowed for breach of promise of marriage; L. R. 1 C. P. 331; Chellis v. Chapman, 125

N. Y. 214, 26 N. E. 308, 11 L. R. A. 784; McPherson v. Ryan, 59 Mich. 33, 26 N. W. 321; see PROMISE OF MARRIAGE; and where there was a breach of a statutory bond by such tort as would warrant exemplary damages; Richmond v. Shickler, 57 Ia. 486, 10 N. W. 882; Floyd v. Hamilton, 33 Ala. 235; contra, Cobb v. People, 84 Ill. 511.

Exemplary damages have been allowed, where one trespassed and cut timber from another's land; Kolb v. Bankhead, 18 Tex. 228; so where armed men broke into a store, carried off the stock, threatened the plaintiff's life, and injured his trade; Freidenheit v. Edmundson, 36 Mo. 226, 88 Am. Dec. 141; in actions for malicious prosecution, when bad faith was shown; Brown v. Chadsey, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 253; for throwing vitriol in the plaintiff's eyes; Munter v. Bande, 1 Mo. App. 484; for maliciously setting fire to a person's woods, etc.; Smalley v. Smalley, 81 Ill. 70; against an innkeeper for wrongfully turning a guest out of the inn; McCarthy v. Niskern, 22 Minn. 90; where a newspaper was informed of the falsity of a libellous articles before publication; Hatt v. Evening News Ass'n, 94 Mich. 114, 53 N. W. 952; where a libel was recklessly or carelessly published, as well as one prompted by personal ill will; Alliger v. Mail Printing Ass'n, 66 Hun 626, 20 N. Y. Supp. 763, for an assault and false imprisonment, against the liberty of a subject; 2 Wils. 205; for wilful trespass on land with intemperate behavior; 5 Taunt. 422; for seduction; 3 Wils. 18; adultery with the plaintiff's wife; Stumm v. Hummel, 39 Ia. 478; Peters v. Lake, 66 Ill. 206, 16 Am. Rep. 593; perhaps for gross defamation; Poll. Torts 182; for negligently pulling down buildings, to an adjacent owner's injury, the defendant's conduct showing a contempt of the plaintiff's rights; 6 H. & N. 54; for injuries which are the result of negligence and accompanied with expressions of insolence; id. 58; where a passenger was improperly required to leave a street car in obedience to an order of a policeman called by the conductor to remove him; Laird v. Traction Co., 166 Pa. 4, 31 Atl. 51; but not against a physician for malpractice unless gross negligence is proved; Cochran v. Miller, 13 Ia. 128; nor against a railway company, which by reason of defective equipment, failed to return a passenger, with a return ticket, to his starting point; Hansley v. R. Co., 115 N. C. 602, 20 S. E. 528, 32 L. R. A. 543, 44 Am. St. Rep. 474, disapproving Purcell v. R. Co., 108 N. C. 414, 12 S. E. 954, 956, 12 L. R. A. 113.

Inasmuch as the objection of permitting exemplary damages is to punish a wrongdoer and protect society, it is necessary in order to justify such damages that there should be some willful or malicious action by the defendant; Voltz v. Blackmar, 64 N. Y. 440; or negligence of a gross and flagrant character, evincing a reckless disregard of human life and safety; Florida Southern Ry. Co. v. Hirst, 30 Fla. 1, 11 South. 506, 16 L. R. A. 631, 32 Am. St. Rep. 17.

It does not prevent a recovery, that the defendant is criminally liable for his wrongful act, and that he has been criminally punished for it; Roach v. Caldbeck, 64 Vt. 593, 24 Atl. 989; Ward v. Ward, 41 Ia. 686; Rhodes v. Rodgers, 151 Pa. 634, 24 Atl. 1044; contra, Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 16 Am. Rep. 270; Austin v. Wilson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 273, 50 Am. Dec. 766; Humphries v. Johnson, 20 Ind. 190; Albrecht v. Walker, 73 Ill. 69; but see Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475.

A master may be liable in exemplary damages for his servant's wanton act within the scope of his business; Hawes v. Knowles, 114 Mass. 518, 19 Am. Rep. 383; Rucker v. Smoke, 37 S. C. 377, 16 S. E. 40, 34 Am. St. Rep. 758. Wherever the servant would be liable in exemplary damages for an act, the master would be so liable for the same act, if done by the servant within the scope of his employment; Goddard v. Grand Trunk Ry., 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hurst, 36 Misc. 660, 74 Am. Dec. 785; the same rule applies to corporations and their servants; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 728; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Rogers, 38 Ind. 116, 10 Am. Rep. 103; Taylor v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 305, 2 Am. Rep. 229.

This rule was applied when such damages were awarded against the master whose servant ordered the defendant off the premises and struck him, when he came with a wagon load of goods to sell; Boyer v. Coxen, 92 Md. 366, 48 Atl. 161. This seems to be an extreme case and is disapproved in 15 Harv. L. Rev. 71. Ordinarily there must be the express authorization of the tort of a servant or agent, or the employment of an obviously unfit man to make the master liable to punitive damages; Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271, 292. Punitive damages may also be recovered against a public service corporation for insulting language used by its employee; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. May (Miss.) 61 South. 449, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1138, and note collecting many cases; Haines v. Schultz, 50 N. J. L. 481; but the subsequent approval of a trespass by a third person will not render him liable unless the act was originally done in his name or for his use; Grund v. Van Vleck, 69 Ill. 478.

A distinction is made in New York, that the master is liable only when he also has been guilty of misconduct, as by the improper employment or retention of the servant, or by the nature of the orders given him; Cleghorn v. R. Co., 56 N. Y. 44, 15 Am. Rep. 375. The master would not be liable if the servant acted from an innocent motive and in the supposed discharge of his duty;

Donivan v. Ry. Co., 1 Misc. 368, 21 N. Y. Supp. 457.

They are allowed in cases of nuisance, only when the injury is wanton or malicious; Wood Nuisance, § 868; as for depriving an abutting owner of access to a street without reasonable ground, necessity, or legal advice; Walker v. R. Co., 52 La. Ann. 2036, 28 South. 324; for carrying on blasting in a manner which was protested against; Berlin v. Thompson, 61 Mo. App. 234; for refusal by a railroad company to remove from its right of way the carcasses of animals killed by it; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Sanders, 87 Miss. 607, 40 South. 163, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119; for not abating a nuisance after one verdict; Pickens v. Timber Co., 51 W. Va. 445, 41 S. E. 400, 90 Am. St. Rep. 819; or not abating it within a reasonable time; Oursler v. R. Co., 60 Md. 358.

Exemplary damages must be given as a part of the verdict, and not as a separate finding; Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475; but see Hinckley v. Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 194; and only in cases where there has been some actual damage; Farwell v. Warren, 70 Ill. 28; Freese v. Tripp, id. 496. The jury may consider the defendant's pecuniary condition; Jones v. Jones, 71 Ill. 562; Bull. N. P. 27; Wood's Mayne, Dam. 64; Guengerech v. Smith, 34 Ia. 348; Buckley v. Knapp, 48 Mo. 152; but in a case where they are not warranted in awarding exemplary damages, evidence to show defendant's wealth is not admissible; West. Union Tel. Co. v. Cashman, 132 Fed. 805. The subject of compensatory and punitive damages in cases of tort is exhaustively considered in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 37 L. Ed. 97.

It has been said that the doctrine of punitive damages is opposed to sound legal principals, but it is supported by the weight of authority; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 71, and see Greenleaf, Evidence (16 Ed.) § 253.

Special Damages. The damages recoverable for the actual injury incurred through the peculiar circumstances of the individual case, above and beyond those presumed by law from the general nature of the wrong.

These damages must be specially averred in the declaration, or they cannot be recovered; while damages implied by law are recoverable without any such special averment. Thus, in the case of an action for libel, the law presumes an injury as necessarily involved in the loss of reputation, and will award damages therefor without any distinct averment. But if there was any peculiar loss suffered in the individual case, as the plaintiff's marriage prevented or the plaintiff's business diminished, etc., this must be especially averred; Chit. Pl. 410; Dumont v. Smith, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 319; Barruso v. Madan, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 149. When they are the natural and proximate result of the act or default they are general and are legally imported, otherwise they are special and must be pleaded; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 1262; in equity as well as at law; Hooper v. Armstrong, 69 Ala. 343. A fortiori where the special damage is essential to support the action; Agnew v. Johnson, 22 Pa. 471, 62 Am. Dec. 303; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 1262. In Chase v. Fitz, 132 Mass. 359, in referring to and sustaining a rule that an action for breach of promise of marriage does not survive when no special damage is alleged, the court said, "Whatever that phrase may be understood to mean"—and afterwards it was said that "this phrase, 'the allegation of special damage,' undoubtedly found its way into the books because of extreme caution of the learned judges who were called upon to decide a case for the first time, and all the possible aspects of it was not deemed necessary to anticipate."

Double or Treble Damages. In some actions statutes give double or treble damages; and they have been liberally construed to mean actually treble damages. In these cases the jury find such damages as they think proper, and the court enhances them in their judgment; Brooke, Abr. Damages, pl. 70; Co. 2d Inst. 416; Lobdell v. Inhabitants of New Bedford, 1 Mass. 155. For example, if the jury give twenty dollars damages for a forcible entry the court will award forty dollars more, so as to make the total amount of damages sixty dollars; 4 B. & C. 154; McClel. 567. The statute must be pleaded; Bell v. Norris, 79 Ky. 48. As to the rule in patent cases, see PATENT.

The construction of the words treble damages is different from that which has been put on the words treble costs; in the case of damages they are actually doubled or trebled, while double or treble costs are assessed. See Rees v. Emerick, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 288; Benton v. Dale, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 160; Livingston v. Platner, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 175; Beekman v. Chalmers, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 584; Hubbell v. Rochester, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 115.

Single damages may be recovered if the claim under the statute is not made out; Osburn v. Lovell, 36 Mich. 246.

MECHANIC. Any skilled worker with tools; a workman who shapes and applies material in the construction of houses; one actually engaged with his own hands in constructive work. City of New Orleans v. Lagman, 43 La. Ann. 1180, 10 South. 244. It has been held that a painter is not a mechanic; Smith v. Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270, 65 N. W. 236, 30 L. R. A. 368; and that a printer is one; Smith v. Osburn, 53 Ia. 474, 5 N. W. 681. A dentist is a mechanic in Michigan; Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 332, 97 Am. Dec. 191; see Berks County v. Bertolet, 13 Pa. 525; but not in Mississippi; Whitcomb v. Reid, 31 Miss. 567, 66 Am. Dec. 579.

MECHANICAL EQUIVALENT. See PATENT.

MECHANICAL PURSUIT. One closely allied to or incidental to some kind of manufacturing business; Cowling v. Iron Co., 65 Minn. 263, 68 N. W. 48, 33 L. R. A. 508, 60 Am. St. Rep. 471. Mining of iron is a mechanical business; id. A mechanic who contracts and shapes materials with his hands is engaged in such a pursuit, in the sense of a statute exempting such from taxation; City of New Orleans v. Lagman, 43 La. Ann. 1180, 10 South. 244.

MECHANIC'S LIEN. See LIEN.

MEDALS. The word medals in a bequest will pass curious pieces of current coin kept by the testator with his medals. 3 Atk. 202; Wms. Ex. 1205.

MEDIA ANNATA. In Spanish Law. Profits of land received every six months. McMullen v. Hodge, 5 Tex. 79.

MEDIA CONCLUDENDI. The steps of an argument. Thus "a judgment is conclusive as to all the media concludendi." Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039. See U. S. v. Land Co., 192 U. S. 358, 24 Sup. Ct. 266, 48 L. Ed. 476. The theory or basis of facts upon which a legal conclusion is reached, per Holmes, C. J., in Hoseason v. Keegen, 178 Mass. 250, 59 N. E. 627.

MEDIATE POWERS. Those incident to primary powers, given by a principal to his agent. For example: the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts due by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle amounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits; these subordinate powers are sometimes called mediate powers. Story, Ag. § 58. See 1 Campb. 43, note; 4 id. 163; Peck v. Harriott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 149, 9 Am. Dec. 415.

MEDIATION. In International Law. States which are at war may accept an offer from a third power, or extend an offer to a third power, friendly to both, to mediate in their quarrel.

It differs from intervention in being purely a friendly act. In the Middle Ages and down to the present time the Pope has been a frequent mediator. Mediation must be distinguished from good offices. The demand of good offices or their acceptance does not confer any right of mediation; 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 303.

"A mediator is a common friend who counsels both parties with a weight proportionate to their belief in his integrity and their respect for his power, but he is not an arbitrator, to whose decisions they submit their differences and whose award is binding upon them." Id., quoting Sir James Mackintosh.

In the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, adopted at The Hague in 1899, the contracting powers recognized (Arts. 2–8) the expediency of mediation, whether at the instance of the parties in dispute or upon the initiative of a third party, and laid down certain rules governing the exercise of it. In no case is the attempt of a third party to mediate to be regarded as an unfriendly act. Mediation is to have the character of advice without any binding force upon the states at variance. Moreover, the acceptance of mediation cannot, in default of an agreement to the contrary, have the effect of interrupting mobilization or other preparations for war. II Opp. §§ 7–11.

MEDIATORS OF QUESTIONS. Six persons authorized, under statute in the reign of Edw. III., to certify and settle, before the mayor and officers of the staple, questions arising among merchants, relating to the wool trade. Toml. Staple.

MEDICAL ATTENDANCE. See MEDICINE.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE. Testimony given by physicians or surgeons in their professional capacity as experts, or derived from the statements of writers of medical or surgical works.

This kind of evidence was first recognized by Charles V. of Germany, and incorporated in the "Caroline Code," framed at Ratisbon in 1532, wherein it was ordained that the opinion of medical men —at first surgeons only—should be received in cases of death by violent or unnatural means, when suspicion existed of a criminal agency. The publication of this code encouraged the members of the medical profession to renewed activity, tending greatly to advance their science and the cause of justice generally. Many books soon appeared on the subject of medical jurisprudence, and the importance of medical evidence was more fully understood. Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 285.

The evidence of the medical witness is strictly that of an expert; Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 275; 1 Phill. Ev. 780; 1 Whart. Ev. § 441.

In the case of Com. v. Rogers, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 505, 41 Am. Dec. 458, Shaw, C. J., presiding, the court held that the proper question to be put to the professional witness was: "If the symptoms and indications testified to by other witnesses are proved, and if the jury are satisfied of the truth of them, whether in his [the witness's] opinion the party was insane, and what the nature and character of that insanity; and what state did they indicate, and what he would expect would be the conduct of such a person in any supposed circumstance." Under this ruling the medical witness passes upon the condition of the person whose condition is at issue. To do it correctly he must hear all the evidence that the jury hears; he must judge as to the relevance of the evidence of others, and make an application of the facts that legally and properly bear upon the case to it, and reject all others; in short, he is judge and jury in the case. Since the trial of Rogers, a different rule has been adopted by the courts in Massachusetts. In the case of the United States v. McGlue, reported in 1 Curt. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,679, Mr. Justice Curtis instructed the jury that medical experts "were not allowed to give opinions in the case."

See EXPERTS; HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION; CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATION; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION; OPINION; PHYSICIAN.

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE. That science which applies the principles and practice of medicine to the elucidation and settlement of doubtful questions which arise in courts of law.

These questions are properly embraced in five different classes:

The first includes questions arising out of the relations of sex: as, impotence and sterility, hermaphroditism, rape, pregnancy, legitimacy, delivery.

The second, injuries inflicted upon the living organization: as, infanticide, wounds, poisons, persons found dead.

The third, those arising out of disqualifying diseases: as, the different forms of mental alienation.

The fourth, those arising out of deceptive practice; as, feigned diseases.

The fifth is made up of miscellaneous questions: as, age, identity, presumption of seniorship, life assurance, and medical evidence.

See the several titles.

MEDICINE. The practice of medicine includes the application and use of medicines and drugs for the purpose of curing, mitigating, or alleviating bodily diseases, while the practice of surgery is limited to manual operations usually performed by surgical instruments or appliances. Smith v. Lane, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 633.

The primary meaning of the terms medical attendance or medical services is the rendering of professional medical services.

See DRUGGIST; PHYSICIAN.

MEDICO-LEGAL. Relating to the law concerning medical questions.

MEDIETAS LINGUÆ (Lat. half tongue). A term denoting that a jury is to be composed of persons one-half of whom speak the English and one-half a foreign language. See JURY.

MEDIO ACQUIETANDO. A judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him. Reg. Jur. 129.

MEDITERRANEAN PASSPORT. A pass issued by the admiralty of Great Britain under various treaties with the Barbary States in the eighteenth century. They were granted to British built ships and were respected by the Barbary pirates. See 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 100. They were also issued by the United States. The term is still retained in R. S. § 4191 (act of Mar. 2, 1803).

MEDIUM CONCLUDENDI. See MEDIA CONCLUDENDI.

MEDLEY. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand-to-hand battle; a mêlée.

MEDSCEAT. A bribe; hush money. Anc. Inst. Eug.

MEETING. A number of people having a common duty or function, who have come together for any legal purpose, or the transaction of business of a common interest; an assembly.

One person does not constitute a meeting; 2 Q. B. Div. 26; but where all of certain preference shares were held by one person and a "meeting" was called, it was held competent for him to hold such meeting, preside, move resolutions, etc.; [1911] 1 Ch. 163.

In the law of corporations the term applies to every duly convened assembly either of stockholders, or of directors, managers, etc.

A distinction is made between general stated meetings of a corporation and special meetings. The former occur at stated times usually fixed by the constitution and by-laws; the latter are called for special purposes or business. Generally speaking, every member of a corporation has a right to be present at every meeting thereof, and to be notified of the meeting, in some way; People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128; 2 H. L. C. 789. In the absence of a by-law or a custom to the contrary, at least one full day's notice must be given of a directors' meeting of a corporation; Mercantile Library Hall Co. v. Library Ass'n, 173 Pa. 30, 33 Atl. 744. An omission to give the required notice will generally, though it be accidental, invalidate the proceedings; 7 B. & C. 695; see Bank of Little Rock v. McCarthy, 55 Ark. 473, 18 S. W. 759, 29 Am. St. Rep. 60; but it will not, where the action taken thereat is duly ratified at a subsequent meeting; Taylor County Court v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 161. When all who are entitled to be present at a meeting are present, whether notice has been given or not, and no objection is made on account of the want of formalities, there is a waiver of the want of notice; People v. Peck, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 604, 27 Am. Dec. 104; Minneapolis Times Co. v. Nimocks, 53 Minn. 381, 55 N. W. 546; but if any one member is absent or refuses to give his consent the proceedings are invalidated; People's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Westcott, 14 Gray (Mass.) 440. Notice should be personal; Stow v. Wyse, 7 Conn. 214, 18 Am. Dec. 99; in writing, and signed by the proper person; Johnston v. Jones, 23 N. J. Eq. 216; should state the time and place of meeting, and, if a special meeting, the business to be transacted; People's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Westcott, 14 Gray (Mass.) 440; L. R. 2 Ch. 191. Ordinarily, notice of stated meetings is not required; People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128. A general notice, not specifying the business to be transacted, is all that is necessary to authorize the transaction of the ordinary business affairs of the corporation; In re Argus Co., 138 N. Y. 557, 34 N. E. 388.

All proceedings carried on by the members of a corporation, while sitting outside of the state which created it, are void; Wood Hydraulic Hose Min. Co. v. King, 45 Ga. 34; Freeman v. Water Power & Mill Co., 38 Me. 343; Duke v. Taylor, 37 Fla. 64, 19 South. 172, 31 L. R. A. 484, 53 Am. St. Rep. 232; Montgomery v. Forbes, 148 Mass. 249, 19 N. E. 342; Smith v. Mining Co., 64 Md. 85, 20 Atl. 1032, 54 Am. Rep. 760; but this rule does not apply to the meetings of the directors of a corporation; Moraw. Priv. Corp. § 533; Newburg Petroleum Co. v. Weare, 27 Ohio St. 343; Smith v. Alvord, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 415; and a corporation created by the laws of two states may hold its meetings and transact its business in either state; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Mayer, 31 Ohio St. 317.

Where a corporate election of officers was held at a place other than that fixed by the by-laws, it was held that the election of directors thereat was valid; Union Nat. Bank of Troy v. Scott, 53 App. Div. 65, 66 N. Y. Supp. 145. Special meetings of directors may be held, although the by-laws are silent on the subject; United Growers Co. v. Elsner, 22 App. Div. 1, 47 N. Y. Supp. 906.

A corporate contract made without approval at a lawful meeting of the directors may be binding on the company if the negotiations leading up to it were known to the members of the board, and the other party had made large expenditures in the matter, and both companies had acted under the contract for a considerable length of time; Greensboro Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 222 Pa. 4, 70 Atl. 940, 128 Am. St. Rep. 790. See Blackwell, Meetings; 2 Weimer, Corp. Law, App., for an interesting paper on corporate meetings, by George M. Dallas; FAMILY MEETINGS; DIRECTORS; STOCKHOLDERS; INSOLVENCY; PROXY; MAJORITY; QUORUM; MINUTES; ELECTIONS IN CORPORATIONS.

As to meeting of minds in a contract, see AGREEMENT.

MELANCHOLIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A name given by the ancients to a species of partial intellectual mania, now more generally known by the name of monomania. It bore this name because it was supposed to be always attended by dejection of mind and gloomy ideas. See MANIA.

MELDFEOH. A recompense given to a person who made discovery of any breach of penal laws committed by another person. Tomlin.

MELIORATIONS. In Scotch Law. Improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Com. 73.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM VEL INQUIRENDO. In Old English Practice. A writ which in certain cases issued after an imperfect inquisition returned on a capias utlagatum in outlawry. This melius inquirendum commanded the sheriff to summon another inquest in order that the value, etc., of lands, etc., might be better or more correctly ascertained.

MEMBER. A limb of the body useful in self-defence. Membrum est pars corporis habens destinatam operationem in corpore. Co. Litt. 126 a.

As to the loss of a member, see Loss.

An individual who belongs to a firm, partnership, company, or corporation. A statutory provision that all the members of a company shall, in certain cases, be liable, is not confined to such as were members when the debts were contracted; Curtis v. Harlow, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 3. See CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP; JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

One who belongs to a legislative body, or other branch of the government; as, a member of the house of representatives; a member of the court.

A child living with the father does not necessarily cease to be a member of his family on reaching his majority; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Chisholm, 79 Ill. 584.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. A member of the senate or house of representatives of the United States; but more commonly used of the lower house.

MEMBERS. In English Law. Places where a custom-house has been kept of old time, with officers or deputies in attendance; and they are lawful places of exportation or importation. 1 Chitty, Com. Law, 726.

MEMBRANA (Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. Parchment; a skin of parchment. Vocab. Jur. Utr.; Du Cange. The English rolls were composed of several skins, sometimes as many as forty-seven. Hale, Hist. Comm. Law 17.

MÉMOIRE. In French Law. A document in the form of a petition by which appeals to the court of cassation are initiated.

MEMORANDUM. An informal instrument recording some fact or agreement: so called from its beginning, when it was made in Latin. It is sometimes commenced with this word though written in English: as, "Memorandum, that it is agreed;" or it is headed with the words, Be it remembered that, etc. The term memorandum is also applied to the cause of an instrument.

A note to help the memory. Bissell v. Beckwith, 32 Conn. 517. A letter may be a memorandum. Id.

The word is also used in England to designate the objects for which a trading corporation is formed. The term prospectus is commonly used in the United States. See PROSPECTUS.

In English Practice. The commencement of a record in king's bench, now written in English, "Be it remembered," and which gives name to the whole clause.

It is only used in proceedings by bill, and not in proceedings by original, and was introduced to call attention to what was considered the bye-business of the court. 2

Tidd, Pract. 775. Memorandum is applied, also, to other forms and documents in English practice: e. g. memorandum in error, a document alleging error in fact and accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 158. Kerr's Act. Law. Proceedings in error are now abolished in civil cases; Jud. Act, 1875. Also, a memorandum of appearance, etc., in the general sense of an informal instrument, recording some fact or agreement.

A memorandum of association is a document subscribed by seven or more persons for the purpose of forming themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability. 3 Steph. Com. 20.

In Contracts. A writing required by the Statute of Frauds. See NOTE OR MEMORANDUM.

In the Law of Evidence. A witness may refresh his memory by referring to a written instrument, memorandum, or entry in a book, and may be compelled to do so, if the writing is in court; State v. Cardoza, 11 S. C. 195; but the memorandum is not competent evidence to prove the facts stated, in itself; Baum v. Reay, 96 Cal. 462, 29 Pac. 117, 31 Pac. 561; nor is the memorandum admitted in evidence merely because the witness uses it to refresh his recollection; 130 U. S. 611. The writing need not be an original or made by the witness himself, provided, after inspecting it, he can speak from his own recollection, not relying wholly upon the writing; Cameron v. Blackman, 39 Mich. 108; Finch v. Barclay, 87 Ga. 393, 13 S. E. 566; Labaree v. Klosterman, 33 Neb. 150, 49 N. W. 1102; Culver v. Lumber Co., 53 Minn. 360, 55 N. W. 552. And a writing may be referred to by a witness, even if inadmissible as evidence itself; 8 East 273; Kunder v. Smith, 45 Ill. App. 368. A witness may refer to a writing which he remembers having seen before, and which he knew at that time to be correct, although he has no recollection of the facts contained therein; so, when he neither recognizes the writing nor remembers anything therein, but yet, knowing it to be genuine, his mind is so convinced, that he is enabled to swear to the fact, as where a banker's clerk is shown a bill of exchange with his own writing upon it; Whart. Ev. § 518; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 436–439. See Brayley v. Kelly, 25 Minn. 160; Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 24 Atl. 1013. The admission in evidence of a memorandum made by the witness is error if it does not appear that the witness could not have testified from memory; Howe v. Cochran, 47 Minn. 403, 50 N. W. 368.

It is held that where a witness uses a memorandum, but refuses to show it to opposing counsel, his testimony will not be suppressed; Parks v. Biebel, 18 Colo. App. 12, 69 Pac. 273; also that documents from which the witness has refreshed his memory before examination need not be produced at the trial (though failure to produce them would weaken his evidence); McCormick v. Cleal, 12 App. D. C. 335; it is no ground for rejecting his testimony that the witness, having refreshed his memory by a memorandum, fails to produce it in court; Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526 (contra, Banking House of Wilcoxson & Co. v. Darr, 139 Mo. 660, 41 S. W. 227); especially if he was able, after refreshing his memory, to testify from his independent recollection; State v. Magers, 36 Or. 38, 58 Pac. 892. Other cases hold that opposing counsel has a right to examine a memorandum used by a witness; Volusia County v. Bigelow, 45 Fla. 638, 33 South. 704; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hays, 8 Kan. App. 545, 54 Pac. 322; Schwickert v. Levin, 76 App. Div. 373, 78 N. Y. Supp. 394; before it is used; Morris v. U. S., 149 Fed. 123, 80 C. C. A. 112, 9 Ann. Cas. 558; but this is discretionary with the trial judge; Com. v. Burke, 114 Mass. 261.

The opposite party may cross-examine on the memorandum; 6 C. & P. 281; Mt. Terry Min. Co. v. White, 10 S. D. 620, 74 N. W. 1060; Schwickert v. Levin, 76 App. Div. 373, 78 N. Y. Supp. 394; Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419, 47 N. W. 330. This extends only to the part covered by the memoranda used by the witness; Com. v. Haley, 13 Allen (Mass.) 587; Parks v. Biebel, 18 Colo. App. 12, 69 Pac. 273; contra, People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78, 13 N. W. 365; State v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 526, 98 Am. Dec. 616; 2 C. & P. 325.

While a witness may refresh his memory by use of an original memorandum made by him, he may not in general testify wholely therefrom without having some recollection independently of the memorandum; Southern Ry. Co. v. State, 165 Ind. 613, 75 N. E. 272; Johnson v. State, 125 Ga. 243, 54 S. E. 184 (contra, Akins v. Banking Co., 111 Ga. 815, 35 S. E. 671). If the witness depends entirely upon books of account, and not at all upon his recollection, he should not be permitted to testify from them, as the books are the best evidence; Eatman v. State, 48 Fla. 21, 37 South. 576.

A stenographer may testify to the correctness of her notes, and read them in the trial court, where she took the testimony of certain witnesses before the grand jury; Keith v. State, 157 Ind. 376, 61 N. E. 716; so of a former trial; Toohey v. Plummer, 69 Mich. 345, 37 N. W. 297; though independently of her notes she has no knowledge of such testimony; State v. Smith, 99 Ia. 26, 68 N. W. 428, 61 Am. St. Rep. 219; Miles v. Walker, 66 Neb. 728, 92 N. W. 1014; he may read from his longhand notes; Harmon v. Territory, 15 Okl. 147, 79 Pac. 765.

A witness may refresh his memory from notes taken by counsel or other persons at a former trial, or from his own testimony at such time; State v. Dean, 72 S. C. 74, 51 S.

E. 524; or from testimony taken down by him in the grand jury room; Luttrell v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 651, 51 S. W. 930; or from a stenographic report of his evidence at a former trial; Portsmouth Street R. Co. v. Peed's Adm'r, 102 Va. 662, 47 S. E. 850.

On an issue as to prior invention a witness may refresh his memory as to the time and issue of the invention from contemporaneous newspaper articles which he read at the time; Bragg Mfg. Co. v. New York, 141 Fed. 118.

A partner may refresh his memory from his ledger entries showing the gross amounts of invoices sold to customers and payments thereon, posted at the end of each month, where he had examined them at or near the time they were made and then knew them to be correct; Grunberg v. U. S., 145 Fed. 81, 76 C. C. A. 51.

Where a newspaper reporter was present when the police examined a bag and made notes of the contents, which were published in his newspaper, and he examined the publication and found it correct, and then destroyed his notes, he was allowed to refresh his memory by reference to the published record; Erdman v. State, 90 Neb. 642, 134 N. W. 258, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 577. Where a writer of articles in a newspaper testified that all the articles written by him were true, a court allowed him to examine one of his articles and testify whether he had any doubt that the fact was as therein stated; 1 C. & K. 320.

A medical expert in a poison case, who "had opened the body and committed the appearances to writing," was allowed to read the writing to the jury; 18 How. St. Tr. 1138. So in the Trial of Webster, Bemis 91.

A witness was called to give an account of a voyage, and was shown the log book, the entries in which were not made by him. He testified that he had examined the entries from time to time while they were fresh and always found them accurate; held that they could be used as if he had made them himself; 2 Campb. 112.

Where a witness has made a memorandum of certain investigations, and on the following day had it copied on the typewriter, and signed a copy and sent it as a report to his superior, he may be permitted to refresh his recollection by the typewritten memorandum; Edwards v. Gimbel, 202 Pa. 30, 51 Atl. 357.

An officer who has taken goods on legal process may refresh his memory from a copy of a return made out in his presence and under his direction; Flohr v. Territory, 14 Okl. 477, 78 Pac. 565; so of an officer who searched defendant's premises on a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquor; State v. Costa, 78 Vt. 198, 62 Atl. 38; a bank teller testifying to checks on the bank may use entries in his books, though some of them were not written by him; Breese v. U. S., 106 Fed. 680, 45 C. C. A. 535. A jailer may refer to the jail record made by himself as to days when defendant was in jail and when he was discharged; State v. Kennedy, 154 Mo. 268, 55 S. W. 293.

A witness as to the price of milk at a given time may refresh his memory from newspapers shown to be the standard authority on the exchange price of milk; Blanding v. Cohen, 184 N. Y. 538, 76 N. E. 1089; so of a witness who testified that a certain book was the only and best evidence of the grain market, and who saw such book and remembered that he knew its quotations on that day to be correct, although he had no independent recollection of the facts in it; Rogers v. Fenimore (Del.) 41 Atl. 886.

A physician may refresh his memory as to the condition of a patient from a memorandum made at the time of a visit; Bailey v. Warner, 118 Fed. 395, 55 C. C. A. 329.

One who testified that he had no recollection of a medical examination made by him for an application for life insurance and that an inspection of the application did not refresh his memory, although he could state that the statements in the application were true when made, was allowed to use the paper; Holden v. Ins. Co., 191 Mass. 153, 77 N. E. 309.

A memorandum made by a witness the day after a transaction, but while he was completing it, may be used; Sibley Warehouse & Storage Co. v. Durand & Kasper Co., 200 Ill. 354, 65 N. E. 676. A memorandum made at the time of the facts in question and known then to be correct may be used; Johnson v. Spaulding, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 699, 95 N. W. 808. A witness may use a memorandum in his own handwriting; Smith v. Pickands, 148 Mich. 558, 112 N. W. 122.

Where a witness testified that he would not have made a record if it had not been true, he may use the record, though unable to recall the facts; Franklin v. R. Co., 74 S. C. 332, 54 S. E. 578.

A memorandum made by another may be used if the witness saw it while the facts were fresh and knew that the memorandum was correct; The Queen of the Pacific, 180 U. S. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 278, 45 L. Ed. 419; it is not necessary that the memorandum should have been made by the witness; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Birdwell (Tex.) 86 S. W. 1067; so where the statements were made before the witness; State v. Magers, 35 Or. 520, 57 Pac. 197; but it must appear that it was read by him at or about the time the transaction was fresh in his memory; Emanuel v. Casualty Co., 47 Misc. 378, 94 N. Y. Supp. 36.

A memorandum book, out of which some of the entries bearing on the cause of action have been torn after the action was commenced, is not admissible in evidence; Johnson v. Fry, 88 Va. 695, 12 S. E. 973, 14 S. E. 183. Memoranda, if admissible at all as independent evidence, cannot be admitted when it is not shown that they were made at the time of the transactions referred to, or why they were made; Bates v. Preble, 151 U. S. 149, 14 Sup. Ct. 277, 38 L. Ed. 106.

A witness may refresh his memory by reference to a copy of a memorandum made by him, only when it is first shown that the copy is correct; Mayor and Aldermen of City of Birmingham v. McPoland, 96 Ala. 363, 11 South. 427.

After a memorandum book has been introduced in evidence without objection, no objection will lie to its use as evidence; nor to a witness using it as a basis for the facts to which he testifies, on the ground that he did not make the entries; Manchester Assur. Co. v. Navigation Co., 46 Or. 162, 79 Pac. 60, 69 L. R. A. 475, 114 Am. St. Rep. 863. The matter is largely discretionary with the trial judge; Michigan Fire & Ins. Co. v. Wich, 8 Colo. App. 409, 46 Pac. 687.

In Insurance. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer.

Policies of insurance on risks of transportation by water generally contain exceptions of all liability from loss on certain articles other than total, or for contributions for general average; and for liability for particular average on certain other articles supposed to be perishable or specially liable to damage, under specified rates on each, varying from three per cent. to twenty, and for any loss whatever under three or five per cent. Some seventy or eighty articles are subject to these exceptions of particular average in the divers forms of policy in use in different places; 1 Phill. Ins. § 54, n. These exceptions were formerly introduced under a "memorandum," or "N. B.," and hence have been called "memorandum articles," and the body of exceptions the "memorandum." The list of articles and rates of exceptions vary much in different places, and from time to time at the same place; De Peyster v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 272, 75 Am. Dec. 331.

The construction of these exceptions has been a pregnant subject in jurisprudence. 4 Maule & S. 503; 5 id. 47; 3 B. & Ad. 20; 5 id. 225; 4 B. & C. 736; 7 id. 219; 8 Bingh. 458; Williams v. Cole, 16 Me. 207; Morean v. Ins. Co., 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 219, 4 L. Ed. 75; Murray v. Hatch, 6 Mass. 465; De Peyster v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 272, 75 Am. Dec. 331; [1893] Prob. 164, 209.

MEMORANDUM ARTICLES. A term used to designate the articles of merchandise mentioned in the memorandum clause. See MEMORANDUM.

MEMORANDUM CHECK. It is not unusual among merchants, when one makes a temporary loan to another, to give the lender a check on a bank, with the express or implied agreement that it shall be redeemed by the maker himself, and that it shall not be presented at the bank for payment; such understanding being denoted by the word memorandum upon it. If passed to a third person, it will be valid in his hands like any other check; Dykers v. Bank, 11 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 612. Being given by the maker to the payee rather as a memorandum of indebtedness than as a payment, between these parties it is considered as a due bill, or an I. O. U. It can be sued upon as a promissory note, without presentment to the bank, whereas the holder of a regular check must first demand its payment at bank, and be refused, before he can maintain an action against the drawer; Van Schaack, Bank Checks 184.

The fact that the word "memorandum" or an abbreviation of it is written on a check makes it a memorandum check, but the bank is not bound to pay any attention to these words, and if such a check is presented for payment and the drawer has sufficient funds to meet it the bank must honor it like any ordinary check; Norton, Bills and Notes 383. If the agreement between the maker and payee is that it shall not be presented for payment, any remedy of the drawer for the breach of such agreement is solely against the payee; Morse, Banks 313. Such a check has all the features of a negotiable instrument in the hands of a bona fide holder for value; id. See CHECK.

MEMORANDUM CLAUSE. A clause inserted in a marine insurance policy to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. Maude & P. Shipp. 371. See MEMORANDUM.

MEMORANDUM IN ERROR. A document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 158.

MEMORIAL. A petition or representation made by one or more individuals to a legislative or other body. When such instrument is addressed to a court, it is called a petition.

MEMORIZATION. No action will lie for pirating a play by means of memorization alone; 5 Term 245; see 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 207, where the subject is discussed in a note by Mr. J. A. Morgan.

MEMORY. Understanding; a capacity to make contracts, a will, or to commit a crime, so far as intention is necessary.

Memory is sometimes employed to express the capacity of the understanding, and sometimes its power; when we speak of a retentive memory, we use it in the former sense; when of a ready memory, in the latter. Shelford, Lun. Intr. 29, 30.

The reputation, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

This memory, when good, is highly prized by the relations of the deceased; and it is therefore libellous to throw a shade over the memory of the dead, when the writing has a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relations of the deceased to avenge the insult offered to the family. 4 Term 126; 5 Co. 125; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 1. See LIBEL; PRIVACY.

As to witness refreshing his memory, see MEMORANDUM.

MEMORY, TIME OF LEGAL. According to the English common law, which has been altered by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, the time of memory commenced from the reign of Richard the First, A. D. 1189. 2 Bla. Com. 31. But proof of a regular usage for twenty years, not explained or contradicted, is evidence upon which many public and private rights are held, and sufficient for a jury in finding the existence of an immemorial custom or prescription; 2 Saund. 175 a, d; 2 Price, Exch. 450; 4 id. 198. See PRESCRIPTION.

MEN OF STRAW. Men who used in former days to ply about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation (i. e. by a straw in one of their shoes), recognized by the name of straw-shoes. An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness, knew by these signs where to find one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. "Don't you remember?" said the advocate (the party looked at the fee and gave no sign; but the fee increased, and the powers of memory increased with it)—"To be sure I do." "Then come into court and swear it." And straw-shoes went into court and swore it. Athens abounded in straw-shoes. 13 L. Quart. Rev. 344.

MENACE. A threat; a declaration of an intention to cause evil to happen to another. The word menace is not restricted to threats of violence to person and property nor to threats of accusing a person of crime; it includes a threat to accuse one of immoral conduct; [1895] 1 Q. B. 706.

When menaces to do an injury to another have been made, the party making them may, in general, be held to bail to keep the peace; and when followed by any inconvenience or loss, the injured party has a civil action against the wrong-doer. Webb, Poll. Torts 210. Com. Dig. Battery (D); Viner Abr.; Bacon, Abr. Assault; Co. Litt. 161 a, 162 b, 253 b; 2 Lutw. 1428. See THREAT.

MENIAL. Pertaining to servants or domestic service; servile. This term is applied to servants who live under their master's roof. See stat. 2 Hen. IV. c. 21; 1 Bla. Com. 425. It has been held not applicable to a housekeeper in a large hotel; I. R. 10 C. L. 188.

MENS REA. A term meaning a guilty intent and commonly used only in connection with the maxim, actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea.

The use of the term and the maxim has been criticised. "Though the phrase is in common use, I think it most unfortunate . . . and actually misleading. . . . It naturally suggests that, apart from all particular definitions of crimes, such a thing exists as a 'mens rea' or 'guilty mind,' which is always expressly or by implication involved in every definition. This is obviously not the case, for the mental elements of different crimes differ widely. 'Mens rea' means, in the case of murder, malice aforethought; in the case of theft an intention to steal. . . . In some cases it denotes mere inattention. For instance, in the case of manslaughter by negligence it may mean forgetting to notice a signal. It appears confusing to call dissimilar states of mind by one name. . . . To an unlegal mind, it suggests that, by the law of England, no act is a crime which is done from laudable motives; in other words, that immorality is essential to crime." Stephen, J., in L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 186.

The maxim relating to "mens rea" means no more than that the definition of all, or nearly all, crimes contains not only an outward and visible element, but a mental element, varying according to the different nature of different crimes. To comprehend "mens rea" we must have a detailed examination of the definitions of particular crimes, and therefore the expression is unmeaning. 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 95.

In offences against the acts relating to adulterating food, etc., the defence of mens rea is not good unless the acts use the word "wilfully"; [1896] 1 Q. B. 65.

See 13 Cr. L. Mag. 831; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. §§ 287, 288, 303 a; 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 16; IGNORANCE; MOTIVE; INTENT; SCIENTER; ANIMUS FURANDI.

MENSA (Lat.). An obsolete term, comprehending all goods and necessaries for livelihoods.

MENSA ET THORO. See DIVORCE; A MENSA ET THORO.

MENSURA DOMINI REGIS. The measure of our lord the king, being the weights and measures established under King Richard I. in his parliament at Westminster, 1197. 1 Bla. Com. 275.

MENTAL INCAPACITY. See DELIRIUM; DELUSION; DEMENTIA; IDIOCY; IMBECILITY; INSANITY; MANIA; PARESIS; PARANOIA.

MENTAL RESERVATION. A silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the term has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise. Wharton.

It differs from equivocation; in the latter the words employed, although doubtful, and perhaps not fitted naturally to convey the real meaning of the speaker, are yet absolutely speaking, and without the addition of any further clause, susceptible of that meaning; in the former some word or clause, necessary to convey fully the meaning of the speaker is held back. Int. Cyc.

MENTAL SUFFERING. Where mental suffering is the natural and proximate result of a tort or of a breach of contract it is a proper subject of compensation, but standing alone it will not support an action of which actual damages is the basis; Hale, Dam. §§ 39, 40.

Damages for mental suffering are allowable where there has been a malicious, intentional or wilful invasion of plaintiff's rights, although there was no physical injury; Rowan v. Telegraph Co., 149 Fed. 550.

A jury is not confined to compensatory damages, but may consider the sorrow, mental distress and bereavement of a father suing for the wrongful and negligent killing of his son; Kelley v. R. Co., 58 W. Va. 216, 52 S. E. 520, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898.

It was the common-law rule that mental suffering unconnected with physical injury or other element of damage to person or property, is not a cause of action for which damages may be recovered; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 9 South. 823, 13 L. R. A. 859, 24 Am. St. Rep. 300, L. R. 10 Q. B. 122; 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Curtin v. Telegraph Co., 13 App. Div. 253, 42 N. Y. Supp. 1109; Connell v. Telegraph Co., 116 Mo. 34, 22 S. W. 345, 20 L. R. A. 172, 38 Am. St. Rep. 575; Wolf v. Stewart, 48 La. Ann. 1431, 20 South. 908; Joch v. Dankwardt, 85 Ill. 331; City of Salina v. Trosper, 27 Kan. 544; Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Russell v. Telegraph Co., 3 Dak. 315, 19 N. W. 408; International Ocean Telegraph Co. v. Saunders, 32 Fla. 434, 14 South. 148, 21 L. R. A. 810.

Damages for a personal injury may properly include compensation for pain and suffering, both physical and mental; and also permanent injuries, which it is fair to believe will result in the future; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 100 Fed. 738, 41 C. C. A. 22, 49 L. R. A. 77; or resulting from a miscarriage caused by fright from the falling of an incandescent light bulb on plaintiff's temple; Jones v. R. Co., 23 App. Div. 141, 48 N. Y. Supp. 914; but the right to recover for mental suffering resulting from bodily injuries is restricted to the person who received the bodily injury. Distress caused by sympathy for another's suffering is not an element of damages; Woodstock Iron Works v. Stockdale, 143 Ala. 550, 39 South. 335, 5 Ann. Cas. 578; and likewise mental distress from seeing a pet cat mangled by a dog, in the absence of wilfulness of the dog's owner, is not recoverable; Buchanan v. Stout, 123 App. Div. 648, 108 N. Y. Supp. 38.

This continues to be the prevailing rule with respect to all actions upon contracts of which the consideration is something having a specific value in money. In such cases mental suffering is treated as not being within the limitations of the doctrine of proximate cause and natural consequences, as settled in Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Fowler, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 755, 27 S. W. 268; Thompson v. Telegraph Co., 107 N. C. 449, 12 S. E. 427.

A line of cases contra is based upon a decision in So Relle v. Telegraph Co., 55 Tex. 308, 40 Am. Rep. 805, which has been followed in several states; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 7 South. 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148; Wadsworth v. Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695, 8 S. W. 574, 6 Am. St. Rep. 864; Reese v. Telegraph Co., 123 Ind. 294, 24 N. E. 163, 7 L. R. A. 583; Shepard v. Ry. Co., 77 Ia. 54, 41 N. W. 564; Porter v. R. Co., 71 Mo. 66, 36 Am. Rep. 454; Leach v. Leach, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 699, 33 S. W. 703; but the doctrine of these cases has been the subject of severe criticism; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 9 South. 823, 13 L. R. A. 859, 24 Am. St. Rep. 300.

Substantial damages may be recovered for mental anguish, irrespective of physical injury caused by negligently delaying the delivery of a telegram; Cashion v. Telegraph Co., 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493; Cowan v. Telegraph Co., 122 Ia. 379, 98 N. W. 281, 64 L. R. A. 545, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268; Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Terrell, 124 Ky. 822, 100 S. W. 292, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927; Arkansas & L. Ry. Co. v. Stroude, 82 Ark. 117, 100 S. W. 760; contra, Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Shenep, 83 Ark. 476, 104 S. W. 154, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, 119 Am. St. Rep. 145.

A further rule in regard to telegrams is established by reason of the relationship between the parties concerned. Damages may be recovered for the delay or negligent transmission of a telegram, notifying the sendee of the serious illness of a near relative; Meadows v. Telegraph Co., 132 N. C. 40, 43 S. E. 512; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hollingsworth, 83 Ark. 39, 102 S. W. 681, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497, 119 Am. St. Rep. 105, 13 Ann. Cas. 397; causing distress by falsely alleging the death of receiver's mother; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hines, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 54 S. W. 627; where a mother notifies her husband that their child has been sent to a pest house; Thurman v. Telegraph Co., 127 Ky. 137, 105 S. W. 155, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

But recovery was denied: Where the telegram announced to a brother-in-law the death of the sender's husband; Cashion v. Telegraph Co., 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493; where there is nothing on the face of the telegram to apprise the company that a claim will result because a father is deprived of the services of a doctor for his sick son as a result of its negligence; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reid, 120 Ky. 231, 85 S. W. 1171, 70 L. R. A. 289; where one is prevented from attending the funeral of his fiancée; Randall v. Telegraph Co., 139 Ky. 373, 107

S. W. 235, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 859, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277, 139 Am. St. Rep. 477.

Mental suffering will not be presumed where one is deprived of the opportunity to attend his first cousin's funeral; Johnson v. Telegraph Co., 81 S. C. 235, 62 S. E. 244, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 128 Am. St. Rep. 905; or the funeral of a son's wife; Foreman v. Telegraph Co., 141 Ia. 32, 116 N. W. 724, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 374. And evidence is not admissible to prove that the sendee is a physician, where he is prevented from attending his mother's death-bed; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Williams, 129 Ky. 515, 112 S. W. 651, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409.

An undisclosed principal cannot recover for mental suffering caused by delay in transmitting a telegram, although both the sender and sendee are his agents; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts, 120 Tenn. 37, 113 S. W. 789, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 479, 127 Am. St. Rep. 991; nor can one for whose benefit the telegram is sent and who pays the charges; Helms v. Telegraph Co., 143 N. C. 386, 55 S. E. 831, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249, 118 Am. St. Rep. 811, 10 Ann. Cas. 643.

Damages for mental suffering can be recovered in the state of delivery under a statute subjecting telegraph companies to such liability for delay in delivering telegrams, although the telegram was sent from a state where such damages are not allowed; Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706; Gentle v. Telegraph Co., 82 Ark. 96, 100 S. W. 742; contra, Johnson v. Telegraph Co., 144 N. C. 410, 57 S. E. 122, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256, 119 Am. St. Rep. 961, where it was held that the law of the state where the telegram is presented for transmission governs.

The federal courts deny the right to recover damages in such cases; Chase v. Telegraph Co., 44 Fed. 554, 10 L. R. A. 464; Tyler v. Telegraph Co., 54 Fed. 634; Kester v. Telegraph Co., 55 Fed. 603; Gahan v. Telegraph Co., 59 Fed. 433; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wood, 57 Fed. 471, 6 C. C. A. 432, 21 L. R. A. 706, where Pardee, J., after discussing the authorities, holds that the weight is against it; and where the mental suffering complained of was not the proximate cause of the injury, this was said to render it unnecessary to consider whether, under a statute giving a right of action for refusal or delay of a telegram, it was held a proper element of damages; Stafford v. Telegraph Co., 73 Fed. 273; Stansell v. Telegraph Co., 107 Fed. 668; Southern Pac. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 68 C. C. A. 26, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288.

It was early settled that substantial damages might be recovered in a class of actions of tort where the only injury suffered is mental, such as cases: Of assault without physical contact; 3 C. & P. 373; Goddard v. Grand Trunk Ry., 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 89; for false imprisonment, where the plaintiff has not been touched by the defendant; 6 C. & P. 774; 4 Bing. N. C. 212; Hawk v. Ridgway, 33 Ill. 473; for the mutilation of a husband's body by dissection; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 50 N. W. 238, 14 L. R. A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370; for wrongful or wanton removal of a child's body from a burial lot; Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759; for wrongful ejection from a train; Shepard v. R. Co., 77 Ia. 54, 41 N. W. 564; for slander and libel; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420; for malicious prosecution; Fisher v. Hamilton, 49 Ind. 341; where a conductor kissed a woman passenger against her will; Craker v. R. Co., 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504; in a suit for the alienation of a husband's affections; Nevins v. Nevins, 68 Kan. 410, 75 Pac. 492; for a mother's physical injury resulting from mental suffering caused by the mistreatment of her daughter by a railroad company's employees; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Coopwood (Tex.) 96 S. W. 102; contra, Sanderson v. R. Co., 88 Minn. 162, 92 N. W. 542, 60 L. R. A. 403, 97 Am. St. Rep. 509; abuse of passenger by a carrier's agent; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 84 Ark. 42, 104 S. W. 551, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159; where a conductor wrongfully takes up plaintiff's commutation ticket, following a public altercation with the plaintiff, who was a passenger; Harris v. R. Co., 77 N. J. L. 278, 72 Atl. 50; also where a passenger is wrongfully ejected from a railroad train; Lindsay v. R. Co., 13 Idaho 477, 90 Pac. 984, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 184; but a non-commissioned officer in the Navy, who, in uniform, is refused admission to a dance hall on a ticket bought by him, can recover only the price of the ticket; Buenzle v. Amusement Ass'n, 29 R. I. 23, 68 Atl. 721, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1242; a parent cannot recover damages for mental shock and distress because his minor children have been unlawfully arrested on a charge of malicious mischief; Sperier v. Ott, 116 La. 1087, 41 South. 323, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 518, 114 Am. St. Rep. 587; and parents of a deceased child are not entitled to damages for mental pain caused by the mutilation of the dead body of the child; Long v. R. Co., 15 Okl. 512, 86 Pac. 289, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883, 6 Ann. Cas. 1005.

So also in cases upon contracts, of which the consideration is not pecuniary in its nature, mental suffering has been treated as a proper basis for damages. Exceptions to the general rule upon this footing are, breach of promise of marriage; Sherman v. Rawson, 102 Mass. 395; Bird v. Thompson, 96 Mo. 424, 9 S. W. 788; Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 194; Sauer v. Schulenberg, 33 Md. 288, 3 Am. Rep. 174; breach of an undertaker's contract to keep safely the body of a child; Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind. 536, 25 N. E. 822, 9 L. R. A. 514, 21 Am. St. Rep. 249; and so also in case of an action by a wife against a railroad company for negligence in transporting her husband's body; Hale v. Bonner, 82 Tex. 33, 17 S. W. 605, 14 L. R. A. 336, 27 Am. St. Rep. 850; and by one arrested for failure to appear as a witness by reason of negligence of a policeman in signing in blank a warrant of arrest containing a false recital of service of subpœna on the witness; Gibney v. Lewis, 68 Conn. 392, 36 Atl. 799; injury to a passenger's feelings caused by insulting language of its employees on the ground of breach of its contract to transport passengers respectfully and courteously; Gillespie v. R. Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 857, 66 L. R. A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503; injury to a wife's feelings caused by drunken men using obscene language on a railroad car; Houston E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 508, 52 S. W. 124; breach of contract to transport a corpse; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hull, 113 Ky. 561, 68 S. W. 433, 57 L. R. A. 771; but where the breach consists in the negligence of the company's agents causing a delay in the funeral arrangements, and there is no wilful or malicious misconduct, damages for mental anguish cannot be recovered; Beaulieu v. R. Co., 103 Minn. 47, 114 N. W. 353, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564, 14 Ann. Cas. 462; failure to transmit promptly money sent to secure the forwarding of a daughter's corpse; Cumberland Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Quigley, 129 Ky. 788, 112 S. W. 897, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575; but a man cannot recover damages for a carrier's delay in delivering baggage to his intended wife which causes the postponement of the wedding; Eller v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 140, 52 S. E. 305, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225, 6 Ann. Cas. 46.

Mental suffering accompanying physical pain is a subject of compensation; 4 Q. B. Div. 406; Wade v. Leroy, 20 How. (U. S.) 34, 15 L. Ed. 813; Carpenter v. R. Co., 39 Fed. 315; South & N. A. R. Co. v. McLendon, 63 Ala. 266; City & Suburban Ry. v. Findley, 76 Ga. 311; Alexander v. Humber, 86 Ky. 565, 6 S. W. 453; Kendall v. City of Albia, 73 Ia. 241, 34 N. W. 833; Smith v. Holcomb, 99 Mass. 552; Matteson v. R. Co., 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 364; the two cannot be disassociated; Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 9 Sup. Ct. 696, 33 L. Ed. 110; Montgomery & E. Ry. Co. v. Mallette, 92 Ala. 210, 9 South. 363. So is fright caused by apprehension of physical harm; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman, 79 Ala. 328; contra, 13 A C. 222; or nervous shock produced by a false report of a husband's injury; [1897] 2 Q. B. 57; Kendall v. City of Albia, 73 Ia. 241, 34 N. W. 833; but see Spade v. R. Co., 168 Mass. 285, 47 N. E. 88, 38 L. R. A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393; so loss of peace of mind and happiness; Cox v. Vanderkleed, 21 Ind. 164; sense of insult or indignity, mortification or wounded pride; Quigley v. R. Co., 5 Sawy. 107, Fed. Cas. No. 11,510; Ward v. Blackwood, 48 Ark. 396, 3 S. W. 624; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman, 79 Ala. 328; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connell, 112 Ill. 295, 54 Am. Rep. 238; sense of shame and humiliation; Barbour v. Stephenson, 32 Fed. 66; Hatch v. Fuller, 131 Mass. 574; Simons v. Busby, 119 Ind. 13, 21 N. E. 451; Craker v. Ry. Co., 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504.

Damages for such injuries need not be specially pleaded, but may be proved under a general allegation of bodily injury; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 100 Fed. 738, 41 C. C. A. 22, 49 L. R. A. 77; and likewise damages for humiliation resulting from disfigurement due to the loss of an eye; United States Exp. Co. v. Wahl, 168 Fed. 848, 94 C. C. A. 260; contra, Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo. 415, 92 Pac. 922, where it was held that there could be no damages for a shortening of the plaintiff's leg due to accidental injury.

Fright alone is not, in the absence of personal injury, a ground of recovery; Ewing v. R. Co., 147 Pa. 40, 23 Atl. 340, 14 L. R. A. 666, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709; Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Haile's Curator v. Ry. Co., 60 Fed. 557, 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 L. R. A. 774; Chicago, R. I. & T. Ry. Co. v. Hitt (Tex.) 31 S. W. 1084; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 100 Fed. 738, 41 C. C. A. 22, 49 L. R. A. 77; Hess v. Mfg. Co., 221 Pa. 67, 70 Atl. 294; though it produced a miscarriage; Mitchell v. R. Co., 151 N. Y. 107, 45 N. E. 354, 34 L. R. A. 781, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604; contra, Barbee v. Reese, 60 Miss. 906; Oliver v. Town of La Valle, 36 Wis. 596; Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 13 S. W. 59, 7 L. R. A. 618; [1901] 2 K. B. 669, where Mitchell v. R. Co. was criticised and disapproved. See 14 L. R. A. 666, n.

The rule in 13 App. Cas. 222, was that "damages arising from mere sudden terror, unaccompanied by any actual physical injury, but occasioning a nervous or mental shock, cannot be considered a consequence which in the ordinary course would flow from the negligence of the gatekeeper" (who invited the plaintiff and his wife to cross the track when a train was approaching). This was doubted in [1896] 2 Q. B. 248; disapproved in 26 L. R. Ir. 428; and not followed in [1901] 2 K. B. 669. It has been criticised by Pollock, Sedgwick, and Beven.

A wife cannot recover for the death of her husband from shock of an explosion; Huston v. Freemansburg Borough, 212 Pa. 548, 61 Atl. 1022, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49; physical incapacity for work due to mental excitement and fright is recoverable under a policy of insurance which provides "absolutely for all accidents however caused"; [1896] 2 Q. B. 248.

Even in cases where mental suffering properly enters into the computation of damages, they are not allowed for such as result from mere disappointment; Wilcox v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 264, 3 C. C. A. 73, 8 U. S. App. 118; Hancock v. Telegraph Co., 137 N. C. 497, 49 S. E. 952, 69 L. R. A. 403; contra, Prescott v.

Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 69 Atl. 522, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987, where they were allowed for disappointment of an injured mother at the birth of a deformed child; or apprehension of danger to one's family; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227; of the result of injury to a child from negligence; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Trimble, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 28 S. W. 96.

Where as the result of a slight injury there was a radical impairment of the nervous system and general health, with serious consequences, they were not the ordinary and natural result of the accident but the physical consequences of the fright and no damages could be recovered either for fright or for the physical consequences of it; Hack v. Dady, 134 App. Div. 253, 118 N. Y. Supp. 906.

See MEASURE OF DAMAGES; DEAD BODY; 12 Mich. L. Rev. 149.

MENU, LAWS OF. Institutes of Hindu law, dating back probably three thousand years, though the Hindus believe they were promulgated "in the beginning of time, by Menu, son, or grandson, of Brahma, the first of created beings, and not the oldest only, but the holiest of legislators."

"Such rules of the system as relate to man in his social relations will be found singularly wise and just, and not a few of them embodying the substance of important rules, which regulate the complex system of business in our day." Our knowledge of these laws is derived chiefly from the translation of Sir William Jones, and a translation by A. L. Des Longchamps, 1833. See Maine's Anc. L.; 9 Am. L. Reg. O. S. 717; CODE.

MERCANTILE AGENCY. See COMMERCIAL AGENCY; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS; LIBEL.

MERCANTILE LAW. That branch of law which defines and enforces the rights, duties, and liabilities arising out of mercantile transactions and relations. As to the origin of this branch of law, see LAW MERCHANT; and for its various principles, consult the articles upon the various classes of commercial property, relations, and transactions.

MERCANTILE LAW AMENDMENT ACTS. The statutes 19 & 20 Vict. cc. 60 and 97, passed mainly for the purpose of assimilating the mercantile law of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

MERCATUM (Lat.). A market. Du Cange. A contract of sale. Id. Supplies for an army (commeatus). Id. See Bracton 56; Fleta, l. 4, c. 28, §§ 13, 14.

MERCEN-LAGE. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Bla. Com. 65. See MERCIAN LAW.

MERCES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from pensio, it means the rent of farms (prædia rustica). Calvinus, Lex.

MERCHANDISE. A term including all those things which merchants sell, either wholesale or retail: as, dry goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc. It is usually applied to personal chattels only, and to those which are not required for food or immediate support, but such as remain after having been used, or which are used only by a slow consumption. See Pardessus, n. 8; Dig. 13, 3, 1; 19, 4, 1; 50, 16, 66; U. S. v. One Hundred Twelve Casks of Sugar, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 277, 8 L. Ed. 944; Sewall v. Allen, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 335.

It may be and often is used as the synonym of "goods," "wares" and "commodities." If used in an insurance policy to describe the goods of a merchant it may very properly be limited to goods intended for sale. If used for the same purpose to describe the goods of a painter, it may be held to cover property intended for use, and not for sale; Hartwell v. Ins. Co., 84 Me. 524, 24 Atl. 954.

Mere evidences of value, as bank-bills, are not merchandise. "The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold does not make it merchandise." Story, J., Citizens' Bank v. Steamboat Co., 2 Story 16, Fed. Cas. No. 2,730; 2 Parsons, Contr. 331.

"Goods, wares, merchandise," has been held to embrace animate, as well as inanimate, property, as oxen; Weston v. McDowell, 20 Mich. 353; or horses; U. S. v. One Sorrel Horse, 22 Vt. 655, Fed. Cas. No. 15,953. "Merchandise" may include a curricle; Anth. N. P. 157; or shares in a joint-stock company; Pray v. Mitchell, 60 Me. 430; or horses and trucks; The Garden City, 26 Fed. 766. See STOCK.

MERCHANT (Lat. mercator, merx). A man who trafficks or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale. Webster, Dict.; Lex Mercatoria 23. These are known by the name of shipping-merchants. See Com. Dig. Merchant (A); Dy. 279 b; Bacon, Abr. Merchant.

One whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise: this applies to all persons who habitually trade in merchandise. Thomson v. Hopper, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 469; 2 Salk. 445.

One who is engaged in the purchase and sale of goods; a trafficker; a trader. Crater v. Deemer, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 378.

A person engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who during the time he claims to be engaged as a merchant does not engage in the performance of any manual labor except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant. Tom Hong v.

U. S., 193 U. S. 517, 24 Sup. Ct. 517, 48 L. Ed. 772.

Merchants, in the statute of limitations, means not merely those trading beyond sea, as formerly held; 1 Chanc. Cas. 152; Thomson v. Hopper, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 469; but whether it includes common retail tradesmen, quære; 4 Scott N. R. 819; 2 Parsons, Contr. 369, 370. See, also, Spring v. Gray, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 8 L. Ed. 352; Anderson v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 569.

The term has been held to include: an ice-dealer; Kansas City v. Vindquest, 36 Mo. App. 584; a hotel-keeper; 12 Duv. 107; a banker; Brown v. Pike, 34 La. Ann. 576; the keeper of a boarding stable; 17 Bankr. Rep. 73; and a saloon-keeper; id. 102; but not a brewer; L. R. 7 Ex. 127; a commercial traveller or drummer; Ex parte Taylor, 58 Miss. 478, 38 Am. Rep. 336; City of Kansas v. Collins, 34 Kan. 434, 8 Pac. 865; the superintendent and treasurer of a steamboat corporation; In re Merritt, 7 Fed. 853; a theatrical manager; In re Duff, 4 Fed. 519; or a speculator in stocks; L. R. 2 Ch. 466; Ex parte Conant, 77 Me. 275, 52 Am. Rep. 759; a farmer; Lansdale v. Brashear, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 330; a druggist; Anderson v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 569; or the principal of a boarding school who provides the students with clothes and books; State v. Smith, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 394.

According to an old authority, there were four species of merchants: namely, merchant adventurers, merchants dormant, merchant travellers, and merchant residents; 2 Brownl. 99. See, generally, 9 Salk. 445; Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; 1 Bla. Com. 75, 260; 1 Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 78; 2 Show. 326; Bracton 334.

MERCHANT APPRAISERS. Merchants selected, under the revenue laws, to appraise the value of imports, where the importer is dissatisfied with the official appraisement, and there is no appraiser appointed by law. The collector appoints two respectable resident merchants; R. S. § 2609. Repealed.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS. Certain English statutes, beginning with the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 131, whereby a general superintendence of merchant shipping is vested in the board of trade. Provisions are made for the registration, etc., of merchant ships, the discipline and protection of seamen, the regulation of pilotage, etc.

MERCHANT VESSELS, IMMUNITIES OF. In international law, a merchant vessel in a foreign port is subject to the jurisdiction of the foreign state. In France, however, it is held that acts and offences connected solely with the discipline of the ship are not subject to the local laws; Snow, Int. Law 36.

This immunity from local jurisdiction in matters which do not affect the peace of the port has now come to be the prevailing rule by convention. In the Case of Wildenhus it was held that a murder committed on board a Belgian steamer moored to a dock in New Jersey affected the peace of the port, and was not subject to consular jurisdiction; 120 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 385, 30 L. Ed. 565.

MERCHANTABLE. This word in a contract means, generally, vendible in market. Merchandise is vendible because of its fitness to serve its proper purpose; Wood v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 680; Hamilton v. Ganyard, 34 Barb. (N. Y.), 204, 206. See, generally, Warner v. Ice Co., 74 Me. 475; 2 Q. B. Div. 102; Harris Bros. v. Waite, 51 Vt. 480, 31 Am. Rep. 694; Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236; Swett v. Shumway, 102 Mass. 365, 3 Am. Rep. 471.

MERCHANTMAN. A ship or vessel employed in the mechant-service.

MERCHANTS' ACCOUNTS. Accounts between merchant and merchant, which must be current, mutual, and unsettled, consisting of debts and credits for merchandise. Fox v. Fisk, 6 How. (Miss.) 328; Spring v. Gray, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 8 L. Ed. 352.

The statutes of limitation in most of the states contain an exception in favor of such accounts, following the stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 16, § 3, which, however, was repealed in England by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, § 9, and has not been retained in the latest revised acts of limitation in this country. Whether the exception applied to accounts in which there had been no item for six years, has been the subject of conflicting adjudication, but was settled affirmatively in England, in Robinson v. Alexander, 8 Bligh N. S. 352. See 8 M. & W. 781; Murray v. Coster, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 576, 11 Am. Dec. 333; Bond v. Jay, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 350, 3 L. Ed. 367; Todd v. Rafferty's Adm'rs, 30 N. J. Eq. 254; Ang. Lim. ch. xv.

MERCHANTS OF THE STAPLE. See STATUTE STAPLE; 17 L. Q. R. 56.

MERCHET. A fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to their lord for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. Cowell.

In mediæval law, the fine paid for leave to give a son or daughter in marriage. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 24.

MERCIAN LAW. One of the main bodies of customs (with the Dane law and the West Saxon law and perhaps an admixture of Norman laws and customs) which composed the law in the early Norman days. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 3. See MERCEN-LAGE.

MERCIMONIATUS ANGLIÆ. The impost of England upon merchandise. Cowell.

MERCY (Law Fr. merci; Lat. misericordia). In Practice. The arbitrament or discretion of the king, lord, or judge in punishing offences not directly censured by law. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2; Jacob, Law Dict. So, to be in mercy, signifies to be liable to punishment at the discretion of the judge.

In Criminal Law. The total or partial remission of a punishment to which a convict is subject. When the whole punishment is remitted, it is called a pardon; when only a part of the punishment is remitted, it is frequently a conditional pardon; or, before sentence, it is called clemency or mercy. Rutherforth, Inst. 224; 1 Kent 265; 3 Story, Const. § 1488.

As to the construction of "mercy" in the exception to the Sunday laws in favor of deeds of necessity and mercy, see 2 Pars. Contr. 262, notes. See IN MERCY.

MERE (Fr.). Mother. This word is frequently used, as, in ventra sa mère, which signifies a child unborn, or in the womb.

MERE MOTION. See EX MERO MOTU.

MERE RIGHT. A right of property without possession. 2 Bla. Com. 197.

MERE-STONE. A stone for bounding land. Yearb. P. 18 Hen. VI. 5.

MERETRICIOUS. Pertaining to unlawful sexual relations. Anderson, L. Dict.

When persons who are under legal disabilities wed it is called a meretricious union. 1 Bla. Com. 436.

MERGER. The absorption of a thing of lesser importance by a greater, whereby the lesser ceases to exist but the greater is not increased.

The annihilation of one estate and its absorption in another by act of law.

The extinction of a security for a debt by the creditor's acquisition either of a higher security, or of the corpus of the property upon which his debt is a lien or charge.

Merger is distinguished from surrender and extinguishment, though in its effects not unlike both. "Strictly speaking" it has been said that it "should be confined to the sinking of one estate in another, or, at most, it should embrace, in addition, the extinction of an incorporeal hereditament through the union of its ownership with that of the land, in, over, or upon which it is exercisable." Ordinarily, however, the Roman doctrine of confusio, which we call extinguishment of a charge or equity, is also denominated merger, and, being governed by the same rules, it is here, and indeed generally, discussed under that title. See 3 Sharsw. & Budd L. Cas. R. P. 228.

Of Estates. When a greater estate and less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the latter; but they must be in one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right; 2 Bla. Com., Sharsw. ed. 177; 6 Madd. 119; Nicholson v. Halsey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 417; Lockwood v. Sturdevant, 6 Conn. 373. But see 3 Prest. Conv. 277. See, also, Stewart v. Neely, 139 Pa. 309, 20 Atl. 1002; Fowler v. Smith, 31 S. C. 398, 10 S. E. 93, 5 L. R. A. 721.

The estate in which the merger takes place is not enlarged by the accession of the preceding estate, and the greater or only subsisting estate continues, after the merger, precisely of the same quantity and extent of ownership as it was before the accession of the estate which is merged, and the lesser estate is extinguished; Prest. Conv. 7; Wash. R. P. As a general rule, equal estates will not merge in each other.

The merger is produced either from the meeting of an estate of higher degree with an estate of inferior degree or from the meeting of the particular estate and the immediate reversion in the same person; 4 Kent 98. See Wash. R. P. Index; 3 Prest. Conv.; 15 Viner, Abr. 361; Pratt v. Bank, 10 Vt. 293, 33 Am. Dec. 201; Moore v. Bank, 8 Watts (Pa.) 146. A merger takes place only when the whole title, equitable as well as legal, unites in the same person; Jordon v. Cheney, 74 Me. 362.

Merger is held to have taken place in the following cases: An antecedent life estate purchased by the owner of a consequent life estate limited on the former; Boykin v. Ancrum, 28 S. C. 486, 6 S. E. 305, 13 Am. St. Rep. 698; life estate of the husband in the fee of the wife, both bought by the same person; Shelton v. Hadlock, 62 Conn. 143, 25 Atl. 483; life estate under a will, in remainder in fee, devolved upon the life-tenant by the death of her child, the tenant in remainder; Harrison v. Moore, 64 Conn. 344, 30 Atl. 55; where a tenant acquires the interest of the landlord, in which case the former cannot recover for breach of contract of the latter to repair; McMahan v. Jacoway, 105 Ala. 585, 17 South. 39; where the tenant for life acquires the fee; Jenkins v. Artz, 6 Ohio Dec. 439; estate by the curtesy released to the owner of the fee; Lineberger v. Newkirk, 179 Pa. 117, 36 Atl. 193. Where a lease for years and an equity of redemption come into the same hands, the legal estate may merge in the equitable, if the parties so intended; Hudson Bros. Commission Co. v. Sand & Gravel Co., 140 Mo. 103, 41 S. W. 450, 62 Am. St. Rep. 722; contra, Litle v. Ott, 3 Cra. C. C. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 8,389.

There has been held to be no merger in the following cases: where the tenant in tail acquires the reversion in fee; 2 Co. 61; Lockwood v. Sturdevant, 6 Conn. 373; a trust estate for life of testator's daughter, undisposed of after her death, in her fee by inheritance; Martin v. Pine, 79 Hun 426, 29 N. Y. Supp. 995; where the co-tenant for years is also the owner of the reversion, there is no merger so as to prevent a separate partition of the leasehold interest; Jameson v. Hayward, 106 Cal. 682, 39 Pac. 1078, 46 Am. St. Rep. 268; where a landlord purchases improvements on property on which the lessee has forfeited his lease, it does not merge so as to entitle the holder of a mechanic's lien against the leasehold to enforce it against the fee; Masow v. Fife, 10 Wash. 528, 39 Pac. 140; a conveyance in fee to husband and wife by entirety was held not to merge in an estate for life already vested in one of them; Bomar v. Mullins, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 80; Co. Litt. 299 b; Litt. 525; contra, 2 Saund. 386 b. A life estate of the father by a conveyance to a trustee for ninety-nine years to secure payment of charges covenanted to be paid by the son, the succeeding tenant for life; 76 L. T. Rep. 489. Unassigned "dower" of husband in his wife's estate does not merge in the inheritance unless required for the promotion of justice; Moore's Adm'r v. Moore, 6 Ohio Dec. 154.

Under the English judicature act of 1873, a life estate in possession conveyed to the next tenant for life in trust to pay a rent charge, and, subject thereto, to the use of the grantee in fee, does not merge the estate per auter vie, it being apparent that no merger was intended; [1892] 3 Ch. 110. See 30 L. R. A. 313 n.

Merger is not favored in equity and is only allowed to promote the intention of parties or for other special reason; McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 80 Md. 115, 30 Atl. 607; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455; Hoffman v. Wilhelm, 68 Ia. 512, 27 N. W. 483; 4 Kent 102; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 788; Jones, Mort. 870; the intention actual or presumed is the criterion; 18 Ves. 390; if no intention is expressed, equity will examine the circumstances and presume an intention in accordance with the advantage to the acquirer of the two estates; 32 Beav. 244; Dodge v. Hogan, 19 R. I. 4, 31 Atl. 268, 1059; and wherever the legal and equitable estates are united in one owner, so long as his interest requires severance, he will be regarded as holding the titles separately; Jones, Mort. § 873. And equity will not permit a merger in the case of an easement as against the interest of a third party, with the interest of a mortgagee; Duval v. Becker, 81 Md. 537, 32 Atl. 308.

One equity will not swallow up another, hence several equitable claims may be acquired by one person without merger, which will take place when the legal title is acquired because the reason for their existence is then terminated; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455.

Merger will not be permitted, and it may be prevented, in equity, where it would operate to assist or accomplish the perpetration of a fraud; Miller v. Whelan, 158 Ill. 544, 42 N. E. 59; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 794; and a merger brought about by a fraudulent deed is destroyed when the deed is set aside; Malloney v. Horan, 49 N. Y. 111, 10 Am. Rep. 335; First Nat. Bank of Lebanon v. Essex, 84 Ind. 144.

Where a greater and lesser estate unite in the same person, the lesser estate merges in the greater; Turk v. Skiles, 45 W. Va. 82, 30 S. E. 234. Where one having equitable claims against land acquires the legal title to the land, they are merged in the legal title if there be no reason for keeping them alive; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455. It is a question of intention; if, from all the circumstances, a merger would be disadvantageous to the party, then his intention against merger would be presumed; Swatts v. Bowen, 141 Ind. 322, 40 N. E. 1057. The intervention of another incumbrance or title that would prejudice the interest of the holder of the older equitable title will prevent a merger; Hayden v. Lauffenburger, 157 Mo. 88, 57 S. W. 721.

In Louisiana one who has once acquired ownership of a thing by one title cannot afterwards acquire it by another title, unless it be to supply a deficiency in the first title; Civ. Code 495; and in other states there are statutes designed to prevent or modify the effects of merger upon third parties. They are collected in 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 1403.

See a note in 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433 on the merger by the union of a life estate and a remote remainder in the same person.

Trusts. Where the same person is, under a will, both trustee and a beneficiary, such person takes the legal estate; Tuck v. Knapp, 42 Misc. 140, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1001; so where there was a gift of property to trustees to be conveyed to a city to maintain a public library, it was held that the city took a fee; Danforth v. Oshkosh, 119 Wis. 262, 97 N. W. 258; merger takes place only when the trustee is the sole beneficiary; Robb v. College, 185 N. Y. 485, 78 N. E. 359; where land was devised for the purpose of a sale and a division of the proceeds among the trustees and others, the trustees took a joint title and the trust was not merged; Burbach v. Burbach, 217 Ill. 547, 75 N. E. 519; where the will created a spendthrift trust for sons for life and the remainder came to them because a gift to a charity had failed, it was held there was no merger of the spendthrift trust; In re Moore's Estate, 198 Pa. 611, 48 Atl. 884.

Judgments. A judgment on a cause of action merges the cause of action and extinguishes it; Price v. Bank, 62 Kan. 735, 64 Pac. 637, 84 Am. St. Rep. 419; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148; Davis v. Sanders, 25 App. D. C. 26. An action will not lie in a state on a cause of action which has been merged into a judgment in another state; Henderson v. Staniford, 105 Mass. 504, 7 Am. Rep. 551; Gray v. Richman Bicycle Co., 167 N. Y. 348, 60 N. E. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 720; Nelson v. R. Co., 88 Va. 971, 14 S. E. 838, 15 L. R. A. 583.

The lien of a judgment on land does not merge in the title thereto afterwards acquired by the judgment creditor under proceedings upon another judgment, unless such is the express intention of the purchaser, where his interests require such lien to be kept alive; Sellers v. Floyd, 24 Colo. 484, 52 Pac. 674; proceedings on a judgment brought in another state for the purpose of sharing with other creditors under a general assignment made there by the judgment later; Wells v. Bank, 23 Colo. 534, 48 Pac. 809; or for the purpose of sharing against a decedent's estate in another jurisdiction; In re Wiley's Estate, 138 Cal. 301, 71 Pac. 441; do not merge the rights of the original judgment creditor. The presentation and establishment of a judgment as a claim against a decedent's estate does not merge its lien on the decedent's land; Hardin v. Melton, 28 S. C. 38, 4 S. E. 805, 9 S. E. 423.

The mere recovery of a judgment in an action on a judgment in another state does not merge the first judgment; Armour Bros. Banking Co. v. Addington, 1 Ind. T. 304, 37 S. W. 100; but a second judgment on the same debt in the same jurisdiction, though for less than the first, extinguishes the first judgment; Price v. Bank, 62 Kan. 735, 64 Pac. 637, 84 Am. St. Rep. 419; and where two judgments of the same purport are rendered in the same case at the same time it will be presumed that the first merged in the second; Johnson v. Hesser, 61 Neb. 631, 85 N. W. 894.

Of Mortgages and Other Liens. The merger of liens is subject to the rule of intention as well as such other general principles, already stated, as are applicable. And it is also to be noted that while separate reference is here made to some classes of liens, the same rules are in the main applicable to all, though usually, for the sake of brevity, only once mentioned. Generally where a lien holder acquires the legal title to the land subject to his lien, and there is no contrary intention expressed or implied, or other circumstance requiring it to be kept alive, the latter is merged; Watson v. Gardner, 119 Ill. 312, 10 N. E. 192; Patterson v. Mills, 69 Ia. 755, 28 N. W. 53; Lynch v. Pfeiffer, 110 N. Y. 33, 17 N. E. 402; and the merger cannot be prevented by an assignment of the incumbrance directly to the owner or for his benefit; Crafts v. Crafts, 13 Gray (Mass.) 360; Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 526, 73 Am. Dec. 603; Robinson v. Urquhart, 12 N. J. Eq. 515; Com. of Virginia v. State, 32 Md. 501.

There is no merger where the mortgagee acquires an incomplete equitable title, or only to a portion of the land; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455; or where he purchases the equity of redemption and by consent of the mortgagor retains the mortgage to cut out subsequent liens by foreclosure: Gibbs v. Johnson, 104 Mich. 120, 62 N. W. 145. A purchase by a partner of partnership land sold under a mortgage assumed by the firm operates to satisfy the mortgage; Freeman v. Moffitt, 119 Mo. 280, 25 S. W. 87. A conveyance by a mortgagor to a mortgagee creates no merger as against the assignee of the mortgage; Curtis v. Moore, 152 N. Y. 159, 46 N. E. 168, 57 Am. St. Rep. 506.

See as to mortgages, Lawson, Rights & Rem. § 3052; 3 Sharsw. & Budd L. Cas. R. P. 245.

The merger of mortgage liens with a fee, both being united in the same person, is a question of intention and will not be implied where there is an intervening claim and when the mortgagee's interests require that the lien should be preserved; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 146 Cal. 644, 80 Pac. 1080; whether there is a merger in equity, when a note and a trust deed securing it comes into the ownership of the owner of the fee of the lands, depends largely upon the intention of the parties and the circumstances; if the party does any act which clearly shows that he regards the lien as still subsisting, it is strong, even if not conclusive, evidence of an intent that there should be no merger; Security Title & Trust Co. v. Schlender, 190 Ill. 609, 60 N. E. 854.

Where a person owning land has a mortgage lien thereon, there must be an intention to prevent a merger and in the absence of such an intention a merger will be presumed; Hester v. Frary, 99 Ill. App. 51; and one purchasing land subsequent to the acquisition by the vendor of an outstanding mortgage thereon has the right to assume that the mortgage had merged; Artz v. Yeager, 30 Ind. App. 677, 66 N. E. 917. The owner of mortgaged land, selling subject to the mortgage, and remaining personally liable for the debt, may take an assignment of the mortgage and foreclose to protect himself; Pratt v. Buckley, 175 Mass. 115, 55 N. E. 889.

The purchase of a prior mortgage may work a satisfaction thereof and not an extinguishment of the debt, though the prior mortgage did not cover all the land covered by the junior mortgage; Moore v. Olive, 114 Ia. 650, 87 N. W. 720. Where the purchaser of mortgaged land pays a mortgage debt and takes an assignment to his wife for the purpose of protecting his title, the mortgage is not merged; Betts v. Betts, 9 App. Div. 210, 41 N. Y. Supp. 285, affirmed 159 N. Y. 547, 54 N. E. 1089. Where bonds and mortgages are executed by a husband and wife and afterwards bought in by the husband, they are a lien in the hands of his executors for only one-half the sum secured by them; Miller v. Miller, 22 Misc. 582, 49 N. Y. Supp. 407; and where the owner of a one-third interest in land takes up an incumbrance on the same, it is merged as to his third; Singleton v. Singleton, 60 S. C. 216, 38 S. E. 462.

The question of merger is one which arises frequently, especially in England, with respect to charges. There is a presumption that when the ownership of the fee and of the charge meet, the latter is merged; 18 Ves. 390; if it is of no advantage to the owner to have it kept alive; 10 Hare 79; 29 Beav. 203; or unless he is a limited owner; 7 id. 232; if a charge is paid off by a limited owner, with no expression of intention, he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance; 5 Ch. D. 645; a tenant in tail is not excepted because it is in his power to become absolute owner; 2 S. & S. 345. It results from the rule of intention that in case of an infant tenant in tail there is no merger, as a person not sui juris is not presumed to intend it; 24 Beav. 457; James v. Morey, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 246, 14 Am. Dec. 475. A charge on land of a husband in favor of his wife and her heirs did not merge in the fee which she took by a devise from the husband, recognizing the charge, to her in trust for her son for life; Hasbrouck v. Angevine, 49 Hun 608, 1 N. Y. Supp. 789; nor did one created by a testatrix in favor of her children on land devised to their father merge on the fee inherited by the children from the father; Dodge v. Hogan, 19 R. I. 4, 31 Atl. 268, 1059.

A mechanic's lien is merged in a conveyance of the land to the lien holder; Simpson, Hartwell & Stopple v. Masterson (Tex.) 31 S. W. 419; but not in a judgment for the debt; Marean v. Stanley, 5 Colo. App. 335, 38 Pac. 395; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917; nor by purchase of the property under circumstances from which a contrary intention would be presumed; Blatchford v. Blanchard, 160 Ill. 115, 43 N. E. 794. Such merger discharges a guarantor of the lien which it destroys; McDonald v. Magirl, 97 Ia. 677, 66 N. W. 904; or a surety for its payment; 77 L. T. Rep. 168. A mechanic's lien assigned to one who took a mortgage on the property affected, the consideration of which was used in the purchase of the lien, did not merge, since it did not appear to be the intention of the parties or required by justice; Henry & Coatsworth Co. v. Fisherdick, 37 Neb. 207, 55 N. W. 643.

If two foreclosure decrees rendered in the same action on different obligations in favor of different persons, become the property of one person, neither will merge; Matless v. Sundin, 94 Ia. 111, 62 N. W. 662.

Of Negotiations in Contracts. Oral agreements, proposals, or negotiations by letter merge in a subsequent written contract respecting the same subject-matter; McKinley v. Williams, 74 Fed. 94, 20 C. C. A. 312, 36 U. S. App. 749; McCrary Bros. v. Trust Co., 97 Tenn. 469, 37 S. W. 543; Graham v. Sadlier, 165 Ill. 95, 46 N. E. 221; Megrath v. Gilmore, 10 Wash. 339, 39 Pac. 131; Hurst v. Coke Co., 86 Hun 189, 33 N. Y. Supp. 313; Hutchinson v. Holmes Sanitarium, 93 Wis. 23, 66 N. W. 700; so a written option to sell land is merged in the subsequent contract of sale; Copp v. Longstreet, 5 Colo. App. 282, 38 Pac. 601; and the seller of chattels is not liable for any breach of warranties not contained in the written contract; Wilson v. Cattle-Ranch Co., 73 Fed. 994, 20 C. C. A. 241; but this rule does not apply to a collateral agreement upon which the instrument is silent, not affecting its terms; Savings Bank of Southern California v. Asbury, 117 Cal. 96, 48 Pac. 1081. A bank check is a contract in the sense that it merges all previous transactions leading up to it; American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 47 Ia. 671; so is a note; Miller v. Miller, 4 Pa. 317; a charter party; Renard v. Sampson, 12 N. Y. 561; a bond of one party to a joint contract debt; Settle v. Davidson & Saunders, 7 Mo. 604.

Generally the provisions of a contract of sale are merged in a deed made in execution thereof; West Boundary Real Estate Co. v. Bayles, 80 Md. 495, 31 Atl. 442; but not so as to prevent the enforcement in equity of a clause in the contract not inserted in the deed; Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 385, 24 N. E. 874; or where the contract is for the sale of two distinct properties and the conveyance only of one; Lulay v. Barnes, 172 Pa. 331, 34 Atl. 52; see Clifton v. Iron Co., 74 Mich. 183, 41 N. W. 891, 16 Am. St. Rep. 621; but the mere absence from the deed of a provision contained in a contract does not necessarily operate to continue the latter; 26 Can. S. C. 181. A covenant in the contract to deliver possession to the purchaser is not merged in the covenants of title of the deed; German-American Real Estate Co. v. Starke, 84 Hun 430, 32 N. Y. Supp. 403. A parol agreement between father and son that the latter shall have the property after his parents' death, in consideration of help in carrying on the farm, does not merge as to the undivided half part not conveyed by a subsequent conveyance from the father to the son of an undivided half part of the property made in contemplation of the remarriage of the father; Pike v. Pike, 69 Vt. 535, 38 Atl. 265.

A specialty taken for a simple contract debt merges it; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917. A new contract with respect to the subject-matter of a former one, and which appears to be supplementary, does not merge the former; Uhlig v. Burnum, 43 Neb. 584, 61 N. W. 749. A note is not merged in a judgment note taken as additional security; Witz v. Fite, 91 Va. 446, 22 S. E. 171. See 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 320. As to merger of the original cause of action in a judgment recovered upon it, see JUDGMENT.

In Criminal Law. When a greater crime includes a lesser, the latter is merged in the former; 1 East, P. C. 411; State v. Durham, 72 N. C. 447; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 786; People v. McKane, 7 Misc. 478, 28 N. Y. Supp. 397. Murder, when committed by blows, necessarily includes an assault and battery; a battery, an assault; a burglary, when accompanied with a felonious taking of personal property, a larceny: in all these and similar cases, the lesser crime is merged in the greater.

Merger of crimes exists only when a misdemeanor is an ingredient of a felony; formerly there was a distinct merger and the trial must be for the felony, but this is so no longer, as a general rule; the misdemeanor and the felony must now be a constituent part of the same act in order that acquittal of the latter may be pleaded in bar of prosecution for the former; 1 Whart. Cr. L., 9th ed. §§ 270, 395; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 804; the essential result is thus expressed: "The same act cannot be punishable both as a felony and as a misdemeanor;" 1 McClain, Cr. L. § 22. In many, probably most, of the states, under an indictment for certain felonies, which include a misdemeanor, there may be conviction of the latter. "When two crimes are of equal grade there can be no technical merger;" as, in the case of a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, and the subsequent commission of the misdemeanor in pursuance of the conspiracy; the two crimes being of equal degree, there can be no legal merger; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 265, 21 Am. Dec. 122; Johnson v. State, 26 N. J. L. 313; State v. Mayberry, 48 Me. 218; Hamilton v. State, 36 Ind. 280, 10 Am. Rep. 22.

The most frequent application of the principle of merger of crimes is in the common law rule which was generally followed in this country (subject to the exception just stated) that a conspiracy to commit a felony is merged in the latter, if it be accomplished; Com. v. Kingsbury, 5 Mass. 106; 5 Am. St. Rep. 900, note; if the felony is not in fact committed, there is no merger, and there may be a conviction of the conspiracy; Elkin v. People, 28 N. Y. 177; but when the crime is a misdemeanor at common law and a felony by statute, there is still a merger; People v. Fish, 4 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 206. It is said that "the weight of the more recent cases" is that the conspiracy is not merged even if the crime intended be a felony; 2 McClain, Cr. L. § 979; and this view is strongly supported; U. S. v. Gardner, 42 Fed. 829; People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252, 31 N. W. 188; State v. Wilson, 30 Conn. 500; State v. Grant, 86 Ia. 216, 53 N. W. 120; and is expressly held in England; 11 Q. B. 929; 12 Cox, C. C. 87.

It has been held that where one in an effort to commit a misdemeanor does some act which is itself a felony, he can be punished only for the latter; 2 Moo. & R. 469; 5 C. & P. 553; but in referring to a case which precisely illustrates this point, where one seeking to obtain goods by false pretences, which is a misdemeanor, commits a forgery, which is a felony, Lord Denman considered that an acquittal of the latter ought to be no bar to an indictment for the former; 11 Q. B. 946. See U. S. v. Rindskopf, 6 Biss. 259, Fed. Cas. No. 16,165.

Of Rights. Rights are said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. This is more properly called a confusion of rights, or extinguishment.

When there is a confusion of rights, and the debtor and creditor become the same person, as by marriage, there can be no right to put in execution; but there is an immediate merger; 2 Ves. 264.

Of Torts in Crimes. Where a person in committing a felony also commits a tort against a private person, in this case the wrong is sunk in the felony, at least until after the felon's conviction.

The old rule, that a trespass is merged in a felony, has sometimes been supposed to mean that there is no redress by civil action for an injury which amounts to a felony. But it is now established that the defendant is liable to the party injured either after his conviction; W. Jones 147; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 546; or acquittal; 12 East 409; Smith v. Weaver, 1 N. C. 141. If the civil action be commenced before, the plaintiff will be nonsuited; Yelv. 90 a, n. See Ham. N. P. 63; Cas. temp. Hardw. 350; Lofft 88; Foster v. Tucker, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 458, 14 Am. Dec. 243. Buller, J., says this doctrine is not extended beyond actions of trespass or tort; 4 Term 333. See, also, 1 H. Bla. 583, 588, 594; Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Dana, 1 Gray (Mass.) 88, 100.

This doctrine doubtless had its origin in the English system of relying on private prosecutors and forfeiture of felons' goods; but it has been repudiated in this country, and the civil remedy and the criminal prosecution go side by side, and neither has any dependence upon the other; Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 96, 9 South. 847; Gray v. McDonald, 104 Mo. 303, 16 S. W. 398; Howk v. Minnick, 19 Ohio St. 462, 2 Am. Rep. 413; Newell v. Cowan, 30 Miss. 492; Pettingill v. Rideout, 6 N. H. 454, 25 Am. Dec. 473; Blassingame v. Glaves, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 38; Heller v. City of Alvarado, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 409, 20 S. W. 1003. Even in England it is said that "so much doubt has been thrown upon the supposed rule in recent cases that it seems, if not altogether exploded, to be only awaiting a decisive abrogation." Poll. Torts 235. In Mairs v. R. Co., 175 N. Y. 409, 67 N. E. 901, it was held that where a statute constitutes a given act a felony and attaches a punishment thereto, an offence against the statute cannot be made the basis of a suit or action.

See, generally, as to this common law doctrine in the United States: Bell's Adm'r v. Troy, 35 Ala. 184; Boardman v. Gore, 15 Mass. 336; Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Patton v. Freeman, 1 N. J. L. 115;

Mitchell v. Mims, 8 Tex. 6; Manro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 473, 6 L. Ed. 369.

In some states, as New York, it is provided that the right of action of any person injured by any felony shall not, in any case, be merged in such felony, or be in any manner affected thereby.

Easements. To extinguish an easement by the unity of title and possession of both the dominant and servient tenements, the estates thus united must be respectively equal in duration and not liable to be again disjoined by the act of law; Curtis v. Francis, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 457.

All easements, whether of convenience or necessity, are extinguished by unity of possession, but, upon a subsequent severance, those of necessity are created anew; Grant v. Chase, 17 Mass. 443, 9 Am. Dec. 161.

Of Corporations. Actual corporate union is usually called consolidation in America and amalgamation in England. Railroad corporations are more commonly the subject of such consolidation.

Consolidation requires legislative authority or consent; Lauman v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 44, 72 Am. Dec. 685; Frazier v. Ry. Co., 88 Tenn. 138, 12 S. W. 537; State v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46, 79 Am. Dec. 405. Statutes exist in most, if not all, of the states, for this purpose. Many of them are abstracted in 1 Thomp. Corp. § 305. The state has the same power to authorize a consolidation of two existing corporations as it has to authorize individuals to incorporate; State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224, 9 S. W. 258.

A permit given in a charter of a railroad company to connect or unite with other roads, refers merely to physical connection of the tracks and does not authorize the purchase or even the lease of such roads or any union of franchises; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849.

Where the charters of the constituent companies or some statute to which the charters are subject do not provide otherwise, the consent of all stockholders is required; Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891; Blatchford v. Ross, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 42; a state legislature cannot ordinarily compel a stockholder to transfer his stock because the majority have voted to consolidate; Clearwater v. Meredith, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 25, 17 L. Ed. 604; but it has been held that the legislature may, when public necessity requires it, grant authority to consolidate existing connected railways, if it provide just compensation for dissenting stockholders; Black v. Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 455. Where statutes existed before a consolidating company was chartered, or one is passed which is binding upon it, provisions in such statutes authorizing consolidation by the vote of a certain proportion of stockholders are binding upon a dissenting minority; such statutes commonly provide for the purchase of dissenting stock by a sale or on an appraisement. If there be no such statute or charter provision, a stockholder is not bound to consent to consolidation, nor to surrender his interest in the original corporation; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 343.

Equity will enjoin a consolidation at the suit of a dissenting stockholder, in cases where he is not bound by the action of the majority; Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891; it has been held that an injunction will be continued only till the dissenting stockholder's interest has been secured; Lauman v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 42, 72 Am. Dec. 685; State v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46, 79 Am. Dec. 405, a dictum. These two cases are criticised in Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891, and their doctrine disapproved in 1 Thomp. Corp. § 351. A stockholder's subscription in case of such a consolidation is held to be released; Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891.

After consolidation has been effected and a de facto corporation formed, only the state can attack the charter; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Stafford County, 36 Kan. 121, 12 Pac. 593; especially if the new company has acted as a corporation for a considerable time; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Sumner County, 51 Kan. 617, 33 Pac. 312.

The legal effect of consolidation is to extinguish the constituent companies and create a new corporation, with all the property, liabilities, and stockholders of the old companies; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Berry, 41 Ark. 509; Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 603; State v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46, 79 Am. Dec. 405; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. People, 123 Ill. 467, 14 N. E. 874; and all their franchises, ordinarily; id. It is said that in consolidation, both the companies go out of existence, and a new company is created; in merger one absorbs the other and remains in existence; Lee v. R. Co., 150 Fed. 775; to the same effect, see Vicksburg & Yazoo City Tel. Co. v. Telephone Co., 79 Miss. 341, 30 South. 725, 89 Am. St. Rep. 656; but this distinction is not always observed. When two companies agree to consolidate their stock, upon new certificates, take a new name, elect a new board, and the old companies cease their functions, it is a new corporation; Yazoo & M. V. Ry. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 240, 45 L. Ed. 395. The general effect of consolidation is to create a new corporation; Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 25 L. Ed. 185.

When two or more corporations, created in different states, consolidated into one, the component parts bring to the new corporation the powers possessed by each and the consolidated company exercises in each state only those powers which the constituent part formerly exercised there; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Auditor General, 53 Mich. 79, 18 N. W. 586.

A new corporation formed by the consolidation of two railroad corporations whose existence is thereby extinguished comes into existence precisely as though it had been organized under a charter created at the date of consolidation; Adams v. R. Co., 77 Miss. 194, 24 South. 200, 317, 28 South. 956, 60 L. R. A. 33.

Consolidation is not sale, and when two companies are authorized to consolidate their roads, it is to be presumed that the franchises and privileges of each continue to exist in respect to the several roads so consolidated; Greene County v. Conness, 109 U. S. 106, 3 Sup. Ct. 69, 27 L. Ed. 872; Branch v. Charleston, 92 U. S. 677, 23 L. Ed. 750; the respective roads and properties of two railroad companies which have been consolidated, retain their respective status towards the public and the state; id. Some cases appear to hold that the old companies continue to exist. See Powell v. R. Co., 42 Mo. 63; Day v. R. Co., 151 Mass. 302, 23 N. E. 824 (where the statute so required). It is said in a leading case that "consolidation" has not acquired a recognized judicial construction; it may mean a union by which the old companies cease to exist, or the absorption of one by the other, the former thus securing enlarged powers. Where a statute merely authorizes consolidation upon terms to be agreed upon by the companies, the character of the consolidation is determined by the agreement; Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 603.

Where a railroad consolidated with a smaller road, it was held that the former preserved its legal, though not its actual, identity, and that the latter and all its members passed into the former and became members thereof; Lauman v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 45, 72 Am. Dec. 685. The old companies are not of necessity dissolved; it depends upon the language of the statute; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Georgia, 92 U. S. 665, 676, 23 L. Ed. 757.

Technically, the consolidated company is a new corporation, but as regards the business of the old companies and their respective creditors, it is a continuation of the old companies under a new name; Kinion v. Ry. Co., 39 Mo. App. 574. The new company is bound to perform the duties of the old companies; Peoria & Rock I. R. Co. v. Mining Co., 68 Ill. 489; it usually has the powers of both of its constituents; Robertson v. City of Rockford, 21 Ill. 451. "As a general rule, the new company succeeds to the rights, duties, obligations, and liabilities of each of the precedent companies, whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto. The charter powers, privileges, and immunities of the corporations pass to and become vested in the consolidated company," unless otherwise provided by law; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 365. See Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo. 176.

But it has been held that the powers, etc., of the new company are no greater than those of the constituent company having the fewest privileges; State v. R. Co., 66 Me. 488; a difficult rule to apply.

The new corporation as an incident of consolidation assumes the debts and liabilities of the constituent companies, and is not an innocent purchaser for value of the property of those companies so as to protect it from liability for taxation; Bloxham v. R. Co., 35 Fla. 625, 17 South. 902.

Where two railroads are consolidated, one of them having a right to exemption from taxes, and the old company being extinguished, its right of exemption does not pass to the new company; Keokuk & W. R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301, 14 Sup. Ct. 592, 38 L. Ed. 450; nor the right to any other governmental exemption; Rochester Ry. Co. v. Rochester, 205 U. S. 236, 254, 27 Sup. Ct. 469, 51 L. Ed. 784. Where a railroad company, possessing certain immunity from taxation not subject to repeal, merged with corporations whose charters were subject to alteration and repeal, the immunity of the former company is subject to such alteration; Northern Cent. Ry. Co. v. Maryland, 187 U. S. 258, 23 Sup. Ct. 62, 47 L. Ed. 167.

Upon the consolidation of water companies, the franchises of the consolidated corporations must be determined by the general law as it existed at the time of the consolidation; held in this case that a new company did not succeed to the right of the original company of excluding the city from erecting its own plant; Shaw v. City of Covington, 194 U. S. 593, 24 Sup. Ct. 754, 48 L. Ed. 1131. Special statutory exemptions do not pass to the new corporation in the absence of express direction to that effect in the statute; People's Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Chicago, 194 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 520, 48 L. Ed. 851.

Although two corporations may be so united by one holding the stock and franchises of the other that the latter may continue to exist and also to hold an exemption under legislative contract, that is not the case where its stock is exchanged for that of the former by operation of law and it is left without stock, officers, property or franchises; but under such circumstances it is dissolved; Rochester Ry. Co. v. Rochester, 205 U. S. 236, 27 Sup. Ct. 469, 51 L. Ed. 784.

The legislature cannot increase the taxes of the exempt company after consolidation, but may tax that of the other precedent company; and where a taxable corporation is merged into an exempt company, the property of the former is taxable; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Georgia, 92 U. S. 665, 23 L. Ed. 757; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 139, 6 Sup. Ct. 645, 29 L. Ed. 830. It is held that where an exempt company and a taxable company consolidate, the property of each will continue as it was before, in relation to taxation; State v. R. Co., 99 Mo.

30, 12 S. W. 290, 6 L. R. A. 222; State v. Commissioner of Railroad Taxation, 37 N. J. L. 240; Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Alsbrook, 110 N. C. 137, 14 S. E. 652. As to betterments on a consolidated company, one of whose constituents was not taxable, see Branch v. City of Charleston, 92 U. S. 682, 23 L. Ed. 750.

Where two companies were exempt except on net earnings above ten per cent dividends and this was based upon conditions which could only be performed by the constituent companies while operating separate lines (keeping accounts and rendering certain reports to the state), and the new company mingled the assets and ran continuous trains over its lines and could not show the net profits of each road, it was held that the new company had no right to the former exemption; Maine C. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 508, 24 L. Ed. 836.

Consolidation does not abate a suit pending against one of the companies; Evans v. Ry. Co., 106 Mo. 594, 17 S. W. 489; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Musselman, 2 Grant (Pa.) 348; Shackleford v. R. Co., 52 Miss. 159; contra, Kansas, O. & T. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 40 Kan. 192, 19 Pac. 636; Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Harbin, 40 Ga. 706. The new company may be substituted under the original process without the issue of process against it; Kinion v. R. Co., 39 Mo. App. 382.

A railroad company is not relieved from liability on the mortgage bonds of a constituent company by consolidation; Gale v. R. Co., 51 Hun 470, 4 N. Y. Supp. 295. A consolidated company may use a patent under which both of the precedent companies were licensed; Lightner v. R. Co., 1 Low. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 8,343; and may occupy the streets of a city, if the constituent companies had the power; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Memphis, 53 Fed. 715. It may sue shareholders of either old company for calls; 18 C. B. 14; Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Brown, 26 Ohio St. 223. Non-assenting subscribers to stock are not released; Atchison, C. & P. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs, 25 Kan. 261; contra, Booe v. R. Co., 10 Ind. 93. A consolidated company is entitled to a donation made by a town to one of the companies; Niantic Sav. Bank v. Town of Douglas, 5 Ill. App. 579; Scott v. Hansheer, 94 Ind. 1; but see Wagner v. Meety, 69 Mo. 150. The title to lands conveyed to a constituent company vests in the consolidated company; Cashman v. Brownlee, 128 Ind. 266, 27 N. E. 560; Terry v. R. Co., 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439; and its mortgage, secured upon its consolidated property is paramount to the unsecured indebtedness of the constituent companies; Tysen v. R. Co., 15 Fed. 763.

But it is held that a consolidated company is liable for the debts of the constituent companies; Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Jones, 29 Ind. 465, 95 Am. Dec. 654; and they can be enforced only against it; Indianola R. Co. v. Fryer, 56 Tex. 609; see Evans v. R. Co., 106 Mo. 594, 17 S. W. 489; even in the absence of an express declaration to that effect; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Boney, 117 Ind. 501, 20 N. E. 432, 3 L. R. A. 435. It is held to be liable in equity for such debts at least to the value of property received; Harrison v. R. Co., 13 Fed. 522; and the remedy at law is said to be complete; Arbuckle v. R. Co., 81 Ill. 429. It is liable on a judgment against a constituent company; St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Miller, 43 Ill. 199. Bonds that had no lien before consolidation do not acquire a lien by consolidation; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Ham, 114 U. S. 587, 5 Sup. Ct. 1081, 29 L. Ed. 235; but see Compton v. R. Co., 45 Ohio St. 592, 16 N. E. 110, 18 N. E. 380. The liability of the new company extends to damages due by a constituent company to a riparian owner; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moffitt, 75 Ill. 524; and damages due by a constituent company for breaking into a neighbor's mine; 47 L. J. Ch. 20; and for damages caused by its negligence; Warren v. R. Co., 49 Ala. 582; St. Louis & S. F. R. R. v. Marker, 41 Ark. 542; for the death of an employé; Varnum v. Thruston, 17 Md. 489. A cause of action on a constituent company's debt is against the consolidated company alone; Chase v. Vanderbilt, 62 N. Y. 307. The necessary facts to establish liability should be averred; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 32 Mich. 251.

A consolidated company is liable for the torts of its constituent companies, whether it is a new corporation or whether one of the old companies has absorbed the other; Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum, 135 Ky. 182, 121 S. W. 1027, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 955, 21 Ann. Cas. 481.

A railroad corporation is a corporation under the laws of its state, although consolidated with a like corporation created under the laws of another state; Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 207; and a state can legislate for that part of a consolidated company which is within its limits, just as if no consolidation had taken place; Peik v. Ry. Co., 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. Ed. 97. A consolidated inter-state corporation has, in each state, all the powers which its constituent company had in that state, but not the powers which the constituent company of the other state had in such other state; Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. People, 123 Ill. 467, 14 N. E. 874; it acts as a unit and may transact its corporate business in one state for both; Fitzgerald v. Ry. Co., 45 Fed. 812. So far as each state has control over the charter it grants, the corporations remain different and separate; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. Corp., 19 Fed. 804; it dwells in both states and is a corporate entity in each; it has a citizenship identical with each; Fitzgerald v. Ry. Co., 45 Fed. 812. A constituent company consolidated with a corporation of another state remains a citizen of its own state for the purposes of federal jurisdiction; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. R. Corp., 136 U. S. 356, 10 Sup. Ct. 1004, 34 L. Ed. 363. A railroad extending in several states is not a citizen of each for purposes of federal jurisdiction; St. Joseph & G. I. R. Co. v. Steele, 167 U. S. 659, 17 Sup. Ct. 925, 42 L. Ed. 315.

A practical merger of corporations is sometimes effected by the purchase by one company of the shares of another. This likewise requires legislative authority. See Williamson v. R. Co., 26 N. J. Eq. 398. Or a merger may be by the purchase of all the corporate property under a statute; Eaton & H. R. Co. v. Hunt, 20 Ind. 457. The right to consolidate with another railroad corporation includes the right to make a fair and lawful agreement with it for the interchange of traffic and for the joint use of terminal facilities, the right to buy one-half of its stock for the shareholders of the purchaser and to guarantee the payment of its bonds; Pearsall v. Ry. Co., 73 Fed. 933.

As to merger by lease of railroads, see LEASE. Many of the cases depend largely upon the language of statutes and of the consolidating agreement, or articles of consolidation, and should be read in connection therewith.

In many states the merger of parallel and competing lines is prohibited by the constitution. The prohibition has been held not to extend to street railways; Gyger v. Ry. Co., 136 Pa. 96, 20 Atl. 399. It includes a projected road in process of construction; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 7 Atl. 368; and may extend to a case where the competition may arise from other lines owned or controlled by the lines proposing to consolidate; East Line & R. R. Ry. Co. v. State, 75 Tex. 434, 12 S. W. 690. In Missouri the act applies only to roads within the state and to cases where the competition would have an appreciable effect on rates; Kimball v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 46 Fed. 888.

The constitution prohibits a scheme by which the control of the competing road is to be placed in the hands of persons named by the other road, which agreed to guarantee bonds of the competing road; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 7 Atl. 368; and one where the existing road attempted to purchase the control of a competing road; id. All contracts for leasing or controlling competing roads are held to be void; Manchester & L. R. v. Railroad, 66 N. H. 100, 20 Atl. 383, 9 L. R. A. 689, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582; and so is a pooling and traffic arrangement between two companies having two hundred miles of parallel tracks; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 30 Fed. 2; and one where a company guarantees the bonds of a competing railroad, receiving half its stock in consideration thereof; Pearsall v. Ry. Co., 161 U. S. 646, 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 40 L. Ed. 838.

In Georgia any contract tending to defeat or lessen competition is void; Hamilton v. Ry. Co., 49 Fed. 412.

Two street railways are parallel when their directions are substantially the same for two and a half miles, though their termini and general direction are wide apart; St. Louis R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 69 Mo. 65.

Parallel lines are not necessarily competing lines as they may command the traffic of different territories; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 698, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849.

See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Constitutional prohibitions against the merger of competing railways do not interfere with the power of congress over interstate commerce; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849, affirming Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com., 97 Ky. 675, 31 S. W. 476.

A merger wrought by fraud does not so extinguish the old corporations that they and their stockholders cannot maintain suits to avoid it; Jones v. Electric Co., 144 Fed. 765, 75 C. C. A. 631.

As to the merger of the interest of a lessee upon obtaining a fee in the land, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

See, as to consolidation generally, 2 L. R. A. 564, n.; 13 L. R. A. 780, n.; 8 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 647; as to the effect of consolidation; 3 id. 572; 3 L. R. A. 435 n.; as to how far a new corporation is created; 15 L. R. A. 82, n.; as to effect on taxation; 17 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 436; 41 id. 702; as to aid bonds; 5 L. R. A. 728, n.; as to lands; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 5; as to inter-state corporations; 16 id. 490; 15 L. R. A. 82, 84, n.; as to liability for rights and obligations of the constituent companies; 5 L. R. A. 726, n.; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 138. See REORGANIZATION.

MERITORIOUS CONSIDERATION. One based upon natural love and affection. 5 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 505. See CONSIDERATION.

MERITS. The state of facts of deserving; intrinsic ground of consideration or reward. Cent. Dict. The word is used principally in matters of defence.

A defence upon the merits is one that rests upon the justice of the cause, and not upon technical grounds only; there is, therefore, a difference between a good defence, which may be technical or not, and a defence on the merits; 5 B. & Ald. 703; McCarney v. McCamp, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 4.

In the New York Code of Procedure, it has been held to mean "the strict legal rights of the parties as contra-distinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself, and from all matters which depend upon the discretion or favor of the court." St. Johns v. West, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 332.

The expression as to the determination of a case "upon its merits" as referred to in the federal Judiciary Act of 1891 was used in distinction to the review of a question of jurisdiction; Ayres v. Polsdorfer, 187 U. S. 595, 23 Sup. Ct. 196, 47 L. Ed. 314.

MERITS, AFFIDAVIT OF. Under the practice in some jurisdictions, an affidavit of merits is required to be filed by defendant in order to prevent the signing of judgment by default; Young v. Browning, 71 Ill. 44; Clark v. Dotter, 54 Pa. 215. The affidavit is usually required only in certain actions in contract, but statutes and rules of court differ in their wording as to the cases in which the affidavit is necessary; Hazle Tp. v. Markle, 175 Pa. 405, 34 Atl. 734; Myers v. Shoneman, 90 Ill. 80. See the statutes and rules of court in the several states.

The affidavit precedes or accompanies the plea, and cannot be substituted for it; and it is the plea and not the affidavit which answers plaintiff's pleading; Scammon v. McKey, 21 Ill. 554; it is, in fact, no part of the pleadings; Muir v. Ins. Co., 203 Pa. 338, 53 Atl. 158. It may be directed against the legal sufficiency of plaintiff's statement, and in such case it is deemed in the nature of a demurrer; Byrne v. Hayden, 124 Pa. 170, 16 Atl. 750.

Judgment for want of an affidavit of defense will not be sustained where plaintiff's statement of his cause of action is insufficient, or where he has waived the want of an affidavit; McKeone Soap Mfg. Co. v. Press Co., 115 Pa. 310, 8 Atl. 781. The affidavit should regularly be made by defendant; Marshall v. Witte, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 117; a third person fully acquainted with the circumstances may make it, when the defendant himself is unable to do so by reason of sickness or absence; Burkhart v. Parker, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 480. The time when the affidavit must be filed is usually determined by statute or rule. In general, the affidavit should disclose the "nature and character of the defense"; Melvin & Son v. Conner, 5 Pennew. (Del.) 476, 62 Atl. 264. The party making the affidavit must swear to the facts stated therein from his own knowledge, and not from information; or information and belief; Cake v. Stidfole, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 95; Brown v. Cowee, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 432. See AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENCE.

MERTON, STATUTE OF. An ancient English ordinance or statute, 20 Hen. III. (1235), which took its name from the place in the county of Surrey where parliament sat when it was enacted. Its provisions related chiefly to dower, usury, legitimacy of children, the right of freeman to make suit by attorney at the lord's or any county court, the inclosure of common lands, wardships. 2 Inst. 79; Barring. Stat. 41, 46; Hale, Hist. Com. Law 9, 10, 18.

MERX. Merchandise.

MESCROYANT. An unbeliever, as used in ancient books.

MESE. An ancient word used to signify house, probably from the French maison. It is said that by this word the buildings, curtilage, orchards, and gardens will pass; Co. Litt. 56.

MESMERISM. See HYPNOTISM.

MESNALTY, or MESNALITY. A manor held under a superior lord. The estate of a mesne. T. L.; Whart. Dict.; Brown v. Butler, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 71; 14 East 234.

MESNE. Intermediate; the middle between two extremes; that part between the commencement and the end, as it relates to time.

Hence the profits which a man receives between disseisin and recovery of lands are called mesne profits. Process which is issued in a suit between the original and final process is called mesne process.

An assignment made between the original grant and a subsequent assignment, is called a mesne assignment.

Mesne incumbrances are intermediate charges, or incumbrances which have attached property between two given periods; as, between the purchase and the conveyance of land.

In England, the word mesne also applies to a dignity; those persons who hold lordships or manors of some superior who is called lord paramount, and grant the same to inferior persons, are called mesne lords.

MESNE LORD. See MESNE.

MESNE PROCESS. See MESNE.

MESNE PROFITS. The value of the premises recovered in ejectment, during the time that the lessor of the plaintiff has been illegally kept out of the possession of his estate by the defendant: such are properly recovered by an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, after a recovery in ejectment. Osbourn v. Osbourn, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 55; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); 3 Bla. Com. 205.

As a general rule, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for such time as he can prove the defendant to have been in possession, provided he does not go back beyond six years; for in that case the defendant may plead the statute of limitations; Hare v. Fury, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 13, 2 Am. Dec. 358; Bull. N. P. 88. The value of the use of land during the time it was unlawfully detained by a lessee is the proper measure of lessor's damages; Roach v. Heffernan, 65 Vt. 485, 27 Atl. 71. In an action to recover mesne profits, plaintiff may either prove the profits actually received, or the annual rental value of the land; Worthington v. Hiss, 70 Md. 172, 16 Atl. 534, 17 Atl. 1026. Defendant in ejectment cannot free himself from liability for mesne profits by permitting a third person to remain in actual possession; Vicksburg &

M. R. Co. v. Lewis, 68 Miss. 29, 10 South. 32. Exemplary damages are allowed in trespass for mesne profits, only when the defendant has acted maliciously or in bad faith; Hereshoff v. Tripp, 15 R. I. 92, 23 Atl. 104.

The value of improvements made by the defendant may be set off against a claim for mesne profits; Wood. L. & T. 1390; but profits before the demise laid should be first deducted from the value of the improvements; Hylton v. Brown, 2 Wash. C. C. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 6,983. See, generally, Wash. R. P.; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); 2 Phill. Ev. 208; Adams, Ej. 13.

MESNE, WRIT OF. The name of an ancient and now obsolete writ, which lies when the lord paramount distrains on the tenant paravail: the latter shall have a writ of mesne against the lord who is mesne. Fitzh. N. B. 316.

MESS BRIEF. In Danish Law. A certificate of admeasurement granted by competent authority at the home-port of a vessel. Jacobsen, Sea-Laws 50.

MESSAGE. See TELEGRAPH.

MESSAGE FROM THE CROWN. The method of communicating between the sovereign and the house of parliament. A written message under the royal sign manual is brought by a member of the house, being a minister of the crown, or one of the royal household. Verbal messages are also sometimes delivered; May, Parl. Pr. ch. 17.

MESSAGE, PRESIDENT'S. The annual communication of the President of the United States to congress, pursuant to art. II. sec. 3, of the constitution. It is usually delivered at the commencement of the session, and embodies the president's views and suggestions concerning the general affairs of the nation. Since Jefferson's time, at least, it has been in writing. Special messages are sent to congress from time to time as the president may deem expedient.

President Wilson has followed an earlier practice of reading his messages to Congress in person.

MESSE THANE. One who said mass; a priest.

MESSENGER. A person appointed to perform certain duties, generally of a ministerial character, such as carriers of messages employed by a secretary of state, or officers of a court of justice, called, in Scotland, messengers at arms. Toml.; Paterson.

The officer who takes possession of an insolvent or bankrupt estate for the judge, commissioner, or other such officer.

The messenger of the English court of chancery has the duty of attending on the great seal, either in person or by deputy, and must be ready to execute all such orders as he shall receive from the lord chancellor, lord keeper, or lords commissioners. Brown.

MESSUAGE. A term used in conveyancing, and nearly synonymous with dwelling-house.

A dwelling-house with the adjacent building and curtilage. Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. 299.

A grant of a messuage with the appurtenances will not only pass a house, but all the buildings attached or belonging to it, as also its curtilage, garden, and orchard, together with the close on which the house is built; Co. Litt. 5 b; 2 Saund. 400; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; 2 Term 502; Grimes v. Wilson, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 331. But see the cases cited in 9 B. & C. 681. This term, it is said, includes a church; 11 Co. 26; 2 Esp. 528; 1 Salk. 256; 8 B. & C. 25. And see 3 Wils. 141; 2 W. Blackst. 726; 4 M. & W. 567; 2 Bingh. N. C. 617; 1 Saund. 6; 2 Washb. R. P.

MESTIZO. The offspring of a Spaniard or other white person and an American Indian. Worcester.

METAL. The word does not include precious metals. 2 B. & Ad. 597.

METATUS. A dwelling; a seat; a station; quarters; the place where one lives or stays. Spelman.

METAYER SYSTEM. A system under which land was divided into small farms among families, the landlord supplying the stock, and receiving in lieu of rent a fixed proportion of the produce. 1 Mill, Pol. Econ. 296, 363.

METEORITE. Mere evidence of a tradition that Indians worshipped a meteorite, and treated it as a medicine rock belonging to the medicine men of the tribe, held insufficient to justify an inference that they had severed the meteorite from the realty and thereafter abandoned it, entitling the defendant thereto, as the next finder; Oregon Iron Co. v. Hughes, 47 Or. 313, 81 Pac. 572, 8 Ann. Cas. 556.

METES AND BOUNDS. The boundary-lines of land, with their terminal points and angles. See MONUMENTS; BOUNDARY.

METHOD. The mode of operating, or the means of attaining an object.

It has been questioned whether the method of making a thing can be patented. But it has been considered that a method or mode may be the subject of a patent, because when the object of two patents or effects to be produced is essentially the same, they may both be valid, if the modes of attaining the desired effect are essentially different. 2 B. & Ald. 350; 2 H. Blackst. 492; 8 Term 106; 4 Burr. 2397. See PATENT.

METRE (From the Greek). A measure. See MEASURE.

METRIC SYSTEM. A system of measures for length, surface, weight, values, and capacity, founded on the metre as a unit. See MEASURE.

METROPOLITAN. One of the titles of an archbishop. In England the word is frequently used to designate statutes relating exclusively to the city of London.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS. A board for the better sewering, draining, lighting, etc., of the metropolis. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD.

METTESHEP, or METTENSCHEP. An acknowledgment paid in a certain measure of corn; or a fine or penalty imposed on tenants for default in not doing their customary service in cutting the lord's corn. Cowell.

METUS (Lat.). A reasonable fear of an intolerable evil, as of loss of life or limb, such as may fall upon a brave man (virum constantem). 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 131; Calvinus, Lex. And this kind of fear alone will invalidate a contract as entered into through duress. Calvinus, Lex.

In a more general sense, fear.

MEUBLES. In French Law. Movables. Things are meubles from either of two causes: (1) From their own nature, e. g. tables, chairs; or (2) from the determination of the law, e. g. obligations. Rap. & Law. Dict.

MEXICAN GRANTS. For a case considering such grants, see U. S. v. Chavez, 175 U. S. 509, 20 Sup. Ct. 159, 44 L. Ed. 255, where it was held that upon a long and uninterrupted possession of lands in Mexico, beginning long prior to the transfer of the territory in which they are situated to the United States, and continuing after that transfer, the law presumes in favor of the possessor.

Possession for six or seven years before the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848 of land by an alleged grantee is not sufficient to constitute a title which can be confirmed under the court of private land claims act, where a valid grant is not proved to have been made; Hays v. U. S., 175 U. S. 248, 20 Sup. Ct. 80, 44 L. Ed. 150.

MICHAELMAS TERM. See TERM.

MICHEL-GEMOT (spelled, also, micelgemote, mycel-gemot. Sax. great meeting or assembly). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 147.

One of the great councils of king and noblemen in Saxon times.

These great councils were severally called witena-gemotes, afterwards micel synods and micel-gemotes. Cowell, edit. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict. Micel-Gemotes. See WITENAGEMOT.

The Saxon kings usually called a synod, or mixed council, consisting both of ecclesiastics and the nobility, three times a year, which was not properly called a parliament till Henry III.'s time. Cowell, ed. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict. Synod, Micel-Gemotes.

MICHEL-SYNOD (Sax. great council). See MICHEL-GEMOT.

MICHERY. Theft; cheating.

MICHIGAN. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

It was admitted into the Union by act of congress of January 26, 1837.

The first constitution of the state was adopted June 24, 1835. This was superseded by the one at present in force, which was adopted August 15, 1850.

In 1913 an amendment gave the inhabitants of cities and villages power to frame, adopt and amend their charters. Minor amendments had been adopted in 1895, 1896 and 1906.

MIDDLE TEMPLE. See INNS OF COURT.

MIDDLE THREAD. See AD MEDIUM FILUM.

MIDDLEMAN. One who has been employed as an agent by a principal, and who has employed a sub-agent under him by authority of the principal, either express or implied. He is not, in general, liable for the wrongful acts of the sub-agent, the principal being alone responsible; 3 Campb. 4; 6 Term 411; 14 East 605.

A person who is employed both by the seller and purchaser of goods, or by the purchaser alone, to receive them into his possession, for the purpose of doing something in or about them: as, if goods be delivered from a ship by the seller to a wharfinger, to be by him forwarded to the purchaser, who has been appointed by the latter to receive them; or if goods be sent to a packer, for and by orders of the vendee, the packer is to be considered as a middleman.

The goods in both these cases will be considered in transitu, provided the purchaser has not used the wharfinger's or the packer's warehouse as his own, and have an ulterior place of delivery in view; 4 Esp. 82; 2 B. & P. 457; 3 id. 127, 469; 1 Campb. 282; 1 Atk. 245; 1 H. Blackst. 364; 3 East 93.

MIDSHIPMAN. A naval cadet on a ship of war whose business it is to second and transmit the orders of the superior officers and assist in the management of the ship and its armament. Webster. In this country applied to the youths who are being trained at the Naval Academy. See LONGEVITY PAY; NAVAL ACADEMY.

MIDWAY. See THALWEG.

MIDWIFE. In Medical Jurisprudence. A woman who practises midwifery; a woman who pursues the business of an accoucheuse.

A midwife is required to perform the business she undertakes with proper skill; and if she be guilty of any mala praxis she is liable to an action or an indictment for the misdemeanor. See Viner, Abr. Physician; Comyns, Dig. Physician; 8 East 348; 2 Wils. 259; 4 C. & P. 398, 407 a; 2 Russ. Cri. 388.

MILE. A length of seventeen hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet. It contains eight furlongs, every furlong being forty poles, and each pole sixteen feet six inches. 2 Stark. 89.

MILEAGE. A compensation allowed by law to officers for their trouble and expenses in travelling on public business.

It usually signifies an allowance for travelling, as so much by the mile. Power v. Board of Com'rs, 7 Mont. 82, 14 Pac. 658.

In computing mileage, the distance by the road usually travelled is that which must be allowed, whether in fact the officer travels a more or less distant way to suit his own convenience; Pierce v. Delesdernier, 17 Me. 431. The computation of 100 miles for witnesses in federal courts is over the ordinary shortest route, and not by the shortest line; Jennings v. Menaugh, 118 Fed. 612.

An allowance to a district attorney for mileage in the R. S. § 823, is simply a reimbursement for travelling expenses; U. S. v. Smith, 158 U. S. 346, 15 Sup. Ct. 846, 39 L. Ed. 1011; irrespective of the amount of his compensation under the law; id.; he is allowed mileage for travelling from his place of abode to the place of examination, though the latter is his official headquarters, if his abode is elsewhere; U. S. v. Perry, 50 Fed. 743, 1 C. C. A. 648, 4 U. S. App. 386; it should be computed for the most convenient and practicable route and not by the shortest; id.; and will not be allowed one who goes home every Saturday and returns on Monday during a continuous session of the court; U. S. v. Shields, 153 U. S. 88, 14 Sup. Ct. 735, 38 L. Ed. 645.

See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; TICKET.

MILES. In Civil Law. A soldier.

In Old English Law. A knight, because military service was part of the feudal tenure. Also, a tenant by military service, not a knight. 1 Bla. Com. 404; Seld. Tit. Hon. 334.

MILESTONES. Stones set up to mark the miles on a road or railway.

MILITARY. Anything pertaining to war or to the army.

MILITARY ACADEMY. The corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point consists of one from each congressional district, one from each territory, one from the District of Columbia, two from each state at large and not to exceed 40 from the United States at large; also one from Porto Rico. One Filipino in each class may receive instruction, who becomes eligible to a commission in the Philippine Scouts. Appointees are admitted only between the ages of 17 and 22. They may be admitted on March 1. They must sign articles to serve for eight years unless sooner discharged. They are appointed on graduation to fill vacancies as second lieutenants in the army.

The president appoints all cadets. The nominations to him by senators and members of congress of applicants rests on custom alone, but it has become an established executive practice and no change should be made with a statute; Dig. Op. J.-Adv. Gen. 800.

A cadet is not an officer of the United States and may be dismissed by the president without trial; Hartigan v. U. S., 196 U. S. 169, 25 Sup. Ct. 204, 49 L. Ed. 434.

Cadets are subject to trial by regimental or garrison courts-martial. They are not competent to sit on a court-martial. In respect of their selection as officers of the army on duty as such at the Academy they are subject to the Articles of War, but not in their relations to each other; Davis, Mil. L. 22.

Except for the statutory offence of hazing (Act of June 23, 1874), cadets are not triable by court-martial; 15 Opin. Sol.-Gen. 634; but the Judge-Advocate General has expressed the opinion that they are so triable for violations of the regulations of the Academy, as "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline." Dig. 210, par. 8.

MILITARY BOUNTY LAND. Land granted by the United States to soldiers for services rendered in the army.

Under U. S. R. S. § 2418, each of the surviving, or the widow or minor children of deceased, commissioned or non-commissioned officers or privates, regulars, volunteers or militia who performed military services in the war of 1812 or in any other Indian war since 1790 and prior to March 3, 1850, and each of the commissioned officers in the war with Mexico, are entitled to grants of public lands. By Act of March 22, 1852, where the state militia or volunteers subsequent to June 18, 1812, and prior to March 22, 1852, were called into service, the officers and soldiers were entitled to the benefits of the preceding section. Where a party entitled, by Act of Sept. 28, 1850, had died without receiving bounty land, his widow was entitled in his place, in case the husband was killed in battle, etc. Her subsequent marriage would not impair her right, if she was a widow at the time of making her application. By Act of March 3, 1855, other classes of beneficiaries were brought under the system; the statutes are found in chapter 10 of Title 32 of the R. S., The Public Lands.

Claims for bounty land can be valid only on the following conditions: (1) The soldier must have been regularly mustered into the United States service; (2) That his services were paid for by the United States; (3) That he served with the armed forces of the United States, subject to the military orders of a United States officer.

MILITARY COURTS. See COURT-MARTIAL.

MILITARY EXPEDITION. See NEUTRALITY.

MILITARY FEUDS. The genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures.

MILITARY JURISDICTION. There are under the constitution three kinds of military jurisdiction; one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war, without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war, within the states or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of states maintaining adhesion to the national government, when the public danger requires its exercise. The first of these may be called jurisdiction under military law, and is found in acts of congress prescribing rules and articles of war, or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces; the second may be distinguished as military government, superseding as far as may be deemed expedient, the local law, and exercised by the military commander under the direction of the president, with the express or implied sanction of congress; while the third may be denominated martial law proper, which title see; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 141, 18 L. Ed. 281.

MILITARY LAW. A system of regulations for the government of an army. 1 Kent 341, n.

That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. De Hart, Courts-Mart. 16.

Military law is to be distinguished from martial law. Martial law extends to all persons; military law to all military persons only, and not to those in a civil capacity. Martial law supersedes and suspends the civil law, but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law. Birk. Mil. G. & Mart. L. 1. See 2 Kent 10; MARTIAL LAW; COURT-MARTIAL; MILITARY JURISDICTION.

The law is found in the acts of congress, particularly the Articles of War, the Army Regulations and in the customary Military Law; Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S. 365, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 46 L. Ed. 236.

The act of 1806 consists of three sections, the first section containing one hundred and one articles, which describe very minutely the various military offences, the punishments which may be inflicted, the manner of summoning and the organization of courts-martial. These articles are called the articles of war. Their provisions extend to the militia mustered into the United States service, and to marines when serving with the army. They have been changed from time to time. Reference must be had to the statutes and the Army Regulations.

The military law of England was contained in the Mutiny Act, which has been passed annually from April 12, 1689, to 1879, when the Mutiny Act was consolidated with the articles of war, and this act was amended in 1881 by the Army Act (see MUTINY ACT), and the additional articles of war made and established by the sovereign. 2 Steph. Com. 589.

In addition, there are in both countries various usages which constitute an unwritten military law, which applies to those cases where there are no express provisions. Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. Ed. 537; Benêt, Mil. Law 3.

"Martial law [that is, military law] is the will of the general who commands the army. It can be indulged only in cases of necessity and ceases when the necessity ends. When called in question, the necessity must be affirmatively shown by the power seeking to exercise it." In re Eagan, 6 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 675, id., 5 Blatchf. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 4,303 (a case arising in 1865 in South Carolina).

When the territory of the states which were making war against the national government was in the military occupation of the United States, military tribunals under the statute and under the laws of war had exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish offences of every grade committed there by persons in the military service. Officers and soldiers of the army were not subject to the laws of the enemy nor amenable to its tribunals for offences committed by them during the war. They were answerable only to their own government, and only by its laws, as enforced by its armies, could they be punished; unless superseded by the commander of the forces of occupation, the laws of the state, as between the inhabitants, remain in force and the courts continue to exercise their jurisdiction; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. Ed. 1118.

Where actual war is raging, acts done by the military authorities are not justiciable by the ordinary tribunals; the military tribunals are alone competent to deal with such questions. The fact that for some purposes some tribunals had been permitted to pursue their ordinary course is not conclusive that war is not raging. Neither an application for summary release from extraordinary arrest nor an action for anything done as an extraordinary act of necessity will be entertained by the ordinary courts during the continuance of a state of war in the jurisdiction, when the court is satisfied that a responsible officer acting in good faith is prepared to justify the act complained of; [1902] A. C. 109.

A soldier in time of peace is subject to the civil authority and may be arrested and detained for violation of municipal ordinances, and if his punishment tends to interfere with his military duties, any unfair discrimination against him, or departure from the strict requirements of the law, or any unusual punishment may justify his release on habeas corpus; Ex parte Schlaffer, 154 Fed. 921.

Where a soldier on a military reservation had been convicted of an offence, and attempted to escape and was killed by a sergeant, it was held that if the act was in compliance with his supposed duties as a soldier and in good faith, without malice, the sergeant was protected; U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. 710.

If a sergeant of the guard when he shoots a prisoner has reasonable ground to believe and does believe that the act was necessary to the suppression of a mutiny, he is justified; and he is not bound to weigh with scrupulous nicety the amount of force necessary to suppress disorder. The exercise of a reasonable discretion is all that is required; U. S. v. Carr, 1 Woods 480, Fed. Cas. No. 14,732.

See MILITIA; ARTICLES OF WAR; COURT-MARTIAL; MARTIAL LAW.

MILITARY OCCUPATION. This at most gives the invader certain partial and limited rights of sovereignty. Until conquest, the sovereign rights of the original owner remain intact. Conquest gives the conqueror full rights of sovereignty and, retroactively, legalizes all acts done by him during military occupation. Its only essential is actual and exclusive possession, which must be effective.

A conqueror may exercise governmental authority, but only when in actual possession of the enemy's country; and this will be exercised upon principles of international law; MacLeod v. U. S., 229 U. S. 416, 33 Sup. Ct. 955, 57 L. Ed. 1260.

The occupant administers the government and may, strictly speaking, change the municipal law, but it is considered the duty of the occupant to make as few changes in the ordinary administration of the laws as possible, though he may proclaim martial law if necessary. He may occupy public land and buildings; he cannot alienate them so as to pass a good title, but a subsequent conquest would probably complete the title. Ships of war, warlike stores and materials, treasure and like movable property belonging to the state vest in the occupant.

State archives and historical records, charitable, etc., institutions, public buildings, museums, monuments, works of art, etc., and public buildings of lesser political subdivisions are safe from seizure; so usually are public vessels engaged in scientific discovery.

Private lands and houses are usually exempt. Private movable property is exempt, though subject to contributions and requisitions. The former are payments of money, to be levied only by the commander-in-chief. The latter consist in the supply of food or transport, or articles for the immediate use of the troops, and may be exacted by the commander of any detached body of troops, with or without payment. This appears to be a modified species of pillage. Military necessity may require the destruction of private property, and hostile acts of communities or individuals may be punished in the same way. Property may be liable to seizure as booty on the field of battle, or when a town refuses to capitulate and is carried by assault. When military occupation ceases, the state of things which existed previously is restored under the fiction of postliminium (q. v.).

Territory acquired by war must, necessarily, be governed, in the first instance, by military power under the direction of the president, as commander-in-chief. Civil government can only be put in operation by the action of the appropriate political department of the government, at such time and in such degree as it may determine. It must take effect either by the action of the treaty-making power, or by that of congress. So long as congress has not incorporated the territory into the United States, neither military occupation nor cession by treaty makes it domestic territory, in the sense of the revenue laws. Congress may establish a temporary government, which is not subject to all the restrictions of the constitution. Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088, per Gray, J., concurring in the opinion of the court.

Where a civilian resident native of Porto Rico was, by a military tribunal of the United States in control of the island, convicted of a crime committed in that island in March, 1899, it was held that so long as a state of war existed between Spain and the United States (which was until after the commission of the crime) that tribunal had jurisdiction to try the offence; Ex parte Ortiz, 100 Fed. 955.

The government at Manila prior to the treaty with Spain was a military government and subject only to higher military authority; Ho Tung & Co. v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cl. 213.

The Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted at The Hague in 1899, lays down (Arts. 42–56) definite rules concerning military authority over the territory of a hostile state. In addition to codifying the accepted law, it provides that the occupant must respect, unless absolutely prevented, the laws in force in the country; he must not compel the population of the occupied territory to take part in military operations against its own country, nor take the oath to the hostile power. Private property cannot be confiscated. State taxes, if collected, must be expended for the administration of the occupied territory. Receipts must be given for any contribution which may be levied for military necessities or the administration of the territory, as well as for requisitions, which must be in proportion to the resources of the country. See Risley, Law of War, 134; Spaight, War Rights on Land, 320–418; II Opp. §§ 166–172.

See MILITARY JURISDICTION.

MILITARY TENURE. Tenure in chivalry or knight service. See KNIGHT'S SERVICE.

MILITARY TESTAMENT. A nuncupative will, that is, one made by word of mouth, by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law requires in other cases. 1 Vict. c. 12.

MILITES. Knights, and in Scotch law freeholders.

MILITIA. A part of the military force of the nation, consisting of citizens called forth to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion.

The militia is essentially the people's army and their defence and security in time of peace; City of Salina v. Blaksley, 72 Kan. 230, 83 Pac. 619, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196.

The constitution of the United States provides on this subject that congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of it as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states respectively the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia, according to the discipline prescribed by congress.

In accordance with the provisions of the constitution, congress, in 1792, act of May 8, passed an act relating to the militia. Under its provisions the militia could be used for the suppression of rebellion as well as of insurrection; R. S. § 1642; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227; Kneedler v. Lane, 45 Pa. 238. The president was to judge when the exigency had arisen which requires the militia to be called out; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. Ed. 537. He may make his request directly to the executive of the state, or by an order directed to any subordinate officer of the state militia; Moore v. Houston, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 169; as provided by R. S. § 1642; and see Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. Ed. 537.

Under the act of congress of January 21, 1903, the militia "shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen and every able-bodied male of foreign birth who has declared his intention to become a citizen, who is more than eighteen and less than forty-five years of age, and shall be divided into two classes: The organized militia, known at the "National Guard" of the state, etc., and the remainder, to be known as the "Reserve Militia." The list of exemptions from service includes government officers and a large number of governmental employees, and also those who are exempt by state laws, and members of any "well-recognized" religious sect or organization whose religious convictions are opposed to war, etc.

Whenever the United States is invaded or in danger of invasion from any foreign nation, or of rebellion against its authority, or the president is unable, with the regular force, to execute the laws of the Union, he may call forth such number of the militia as he may deem necessary and issue his orders for that purpose through the governor of the respective state, etc., to such officers of the militia as he may think proper. (The act of May 27, 1908, limited the period of service to not exceeding nine months, and provided that the orders shall be issued through the governor of the state, etc.) The president may specify in his call the period of service and the militia shall continue to serve during such period, either within or without the United States, unless sooner relieved. In case of a call, the organized militia shall be called into service in advance of any volunteer forces it may be determined to raise. When the militia of more than one state is called into service, the president may, in his discretion, apportion them among the states, etc. When called into actual service, they are subject to the same rules and articles of war as the regular troops. They are entitled to the benefits of pension laws in existence at the time of service, and, in case of death, the same benefit is extended to widows and children.

The militia, until mustered into the United States service, is considered as a state force; Moore v. Houston, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 169; Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 19. See 1 Kent 262; Story, Const. §§ 1194–1210.

See generally Dunne v. People, 94 Ill. 123, 34 Am. Rep. 213; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 267, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615; MILITARY LAW; MARTIAL LAW.

MILK. In England milk means, commercially speaking, skimmed milk. 14 Q. B. Div. 193, where it was held that the sale of milk which had been deprived of sixty per cent of its butter fat was not an offence under § 6, Sale of Food and other Drugs Act, although under § 9 of the same act the sale of skimmed milk as milk is an offence; 24 Q. B. Div. 353; 59 L. J. M. C. 45.

In many states the establishment of a standard founded on the quantity of milk solids and of fat has been adopted to prevent adulteration and secure a proper quality of milk; Com. v. Keenan, 139 Mass. 193, 29 N. E. 477; Com. v. Vieth, 155 Mass. 442, 29 N. E. 577; People v. Cipperly, 101 N. Y. 634, 4 N. E. 107; State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344; State v. Creamery Co., 83 Minn. 284, 86 N. W. 107, 54 L. R. A. 466, 85 Am. St. Rep. 464.

Such legislation was held constitutional in the above cases. See also, Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923. And it is not material that the milk was sold just as it came from the cow; State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 13 Atl. 585, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419; People v. Bosch, 129 App. Div. 660, 114 N. Y. Supp. 65.

A state may by statute authorize inspectors of milk to enter all carriages used for its conveyance, and wherever they have reason to believe the milk to be adulterated, to take specimens to be analyzed or tested; Com. v. Carter, 132 Mass. 12; and vendors of milk must furnish samples gratuitously; State v. Dupaquier, 15 South. 502, 26 L. R. A. 162, 49 Am. St. Rep. 334. If upon inspection milk is found to be adulterated, the vendor may be compelled to pour it upon the ground, or return it to the person who supplied it; State v. Newton, 45 N. J. L. 469; Blazier v. Miller, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 435. See POLICE POWER; HEALTH; FOOD AND DRUG ACTS.

MILL. A complicated engine or machine for grinding and reducing to fine particles grain, fruit, or other substance, or for performing other operations by means of wheels and a circular motion.

The building that contains the machinery for grinding, etc. Webster, Dict.

It has been held that the grant of a mill and its appurtenances, even without the land, carries the whole right of water enjoyed by the grantor, as necessary to its use, and as a necessary incident; Cro. Jac. 121. And a devise of a mill carries the land used with it, and the right to use the water; Washb. Easem. 52; Blaine's Lessee v. Chambers, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 169. And see Wetmore v. White, 2 Caines, Cas. (N. Y.) 87, 2 Am. Dec. 323; New Ipswich W. L. Factory v. Batchelder, 3 N. H. 190, 14 Am. Dec. 346; Leonard v. White, 7 Mass. 6, 5 Am. Dec. 19.

The owner of a mill, whose dam and machinery are suited to the size and capacity of the stream, has a right to the reasonable use of the water to propel his machinery; but he must detain it no longer than is necessary for its profitable enjoyment, and must return it to its natural channel, before it passes upon the land of the proprietor below; Pool v. Lewis, 41 Ga. 162, 5 Am. Rep. 526. See DAM.

A mill means not merely the building in which the business is carried on, but includes the site, the dam, and other things annexed to the freehold, necessary for its beneficial enjoyment; Gould, Waters § 307; Whitney v. Olney, 3 Mas. 280, Fed. Cas. No. 17,595; and a water power also when applied to a mill becomes a part of the mill, and is to be included in the valuation; Bellows Falls Canal Co. v. Town of Rockingham, 37 Vt. 622.

Whether manufacturing machinery will pass under the grant of a mill must depend mainly on the circumstances of each case; 3 Washb. R. P. 415; 1 Brod. & B. 506; Ewell, Fixt. 94. As between mortgagor and mortgagee, a sawmill and its appointments are prima facie part of the realty, if no intent is shown to change their character; Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777. When an estate for years was by a conveyance to the lessee merged in the fee, it was held that machinery by him firmly annexed to the premises, did not, by operation of law and without intent on his part, become a part of the realty; Globe Marble Mills Co. v. Quinn, 76 N. Y. 23, 32 Am. Rep. 259. See FIXTURES; DAM.

MILL. The tenth part of a cent in value.

MILLED MONEY. This term means merely coined money; and it is not necessary that it should be marked or rolled on the edges. Running's case, Leach, Cr. Cas. 708.

MIL-REIS. The name of a coin. The mil-reis of Portugal is taken as money of account, at the custom-house, to be of the value of one hundred and twelve cents. The mil-reis of Azores is deemed of the value of eighty-three and one-third cents. The mil-reis of Madeira is deemed of the value of one hundred cents; 5 Stat. at Large, 625.

MINA. A measure of corn or grain. Cowell.

MINAGE. A toll or duty paid for selling grain by the Mina. Cowell.

MINATOR, or MINERATOR. A miner.

MIND. In its legal sense it means only the ability to will, to direct, to permit or assent. McDermott v. Journal Ass'n, 43 N. J. L. 492, 39 Am. Rep. 606.

MIND AND MEMORY. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them." Washington, J., Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 585, 586, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141; Lowe v. Williamson, 2 N. J. Eq. 82, 85; Stewart's Ex'r v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255; Comstock v. Ecclesiastical Society, 8 Conn. 265, 20 Am. Dec. 100. Mind and memory are convertible terms; In re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274.

MINERALS. All fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug; such as beds of stone which may be quarried. 14 M. & W. 859, construing 55 Geo. III. c. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. 175.*

Any natural production, formed by the action of chemical affinities, and organized when becoming solid by the powers of crystallization. Webster, Dict. But see Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts (Pa.) 34; 1 Crabb, R. P. 95; OIL.

The term mineral has been defined as "every substance which can be got from underneath the surface of the earth, for the purpose of profit." L. R. 7 Ch. App. 699; and in another case it is said that the word does not include anything except that which is part of the natural soil; 33 Ch. D. 566. It has been held to include coal; Henry v. Lowe, 73 Mo. 96; paint-stone; Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 136, 64 Am. Dec. 448; free-stone; L. R. 1 Ch. 303; and petroleum; Appeal of Stoughton, 88 Pa. 198; Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 313, 1 Atl. 921; stone for road making or paving; L. R. 4 Eq. 19; brick clay; L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 552; china clay, and every substance which may be obtained from underneath the surface of the earth for the purpose of profit; L. R. 7 Ch. 699; sandstone; 2 Drew. & S. 395; flintstone; L. R. 8 App. Cas. 508; chromate of iron; Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts (Pa.) 34; natural gas; Westmoreland & Cambria Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731.

See OIL.

The words minerals and ores have been held to include only minerals obtained by underground working; Armstrong v. Granite Co., 147 N. Y. 495, 42 N. E. 186, 49 Am. St. Rep. 683.

The term mineral lands, as used in the statutes relating to the public domain, embraces coal lands; Mullan v. U. S., 118 U. S. 271, 6 Sup. Ct. 1041, 30 L. Ed. 170; granite; Northern P. Ry. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U. S. 526, 23 Sup. Ct. 365, 47 L. Ed. 575; and mineral deposits are not only metals proper, but also salt, coal, and the like; Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 64 Am. Dec. 448.

Minerals severed from the earth by artificial means are personal property and dealt with by the law as such; Barr. & Ad. Mines 5; being taxable as personalty; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. Ed. 313; the subject of larceny; People v. Williams, 35 Cal. 671; Com. v. Steimling, 156 Pa. 400, 27 Atl. 297; or recoverable in trover; Lyon v. Gormley, 53 Pa. 261; or replevin; Green v. Iron Co., 62 Pa. 97. This is not the case, however, where the severence results from natural causes or incidentally from excavation; id.; hence a nugget of gold found upon loose rocks was held to savor of the realty and was not the subject of larceny; State v. Burt, 64 N. C. 619. See MINES AND MINING.

MINES. In Naval War. A method of attack and defence first used by both parties in the Russo-Japanese war, during the blockade of Port Arthur in 1904, is the use of floating mechanical mines which do not require connection with a battery on shore. Their use has given rise to much discussion, and though it is possible in the open sea, the dangers to neutral shipping which would result therefrom will doubtless lead to an international rule forbidding it. In territorial waters of either party, they might be allowed if warning is given to neutrals to avoid those waters, and if they are properly moored. To leave them adrift would make them a source of danger far from the seat of war. 2 Opp. Int. L. § 182.

MINES AND MINING. A mine is an excavation in the earth for the purpose of obtaining minerals.

Mines of gold and silver belonged, at common law, to the sovereign; 1 Plowd. 310; 3 Kent 378, n.; Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 222, 79 Am. Dec. 123; and it has been said that, though the king grant lands in which mines are, and all mines in them, yet royal mines (q. v.) will not pass by so general a description; Plowd. 336. In New York the state's right as sovereign was asserted at an early day, and reasserted by the legislature as late as 1828; 3 Kent 378, n. In Pennsylvania the Royal Charter to Penn reserved one-fifth of the precious metal as rent, and the patents granted by Penn usually reserved two-fifths of the gold and silver. An act passed in 1843 declared that all patents granted by the state pass the entire estate of the commonwealth. In California, after much discussion, it seems to be finally settled that minerals belong to the owner of the soil and not to the government as an incident of sovereignty; Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 199, 79 Am. Dec. 123; Merced Min. Co. v. Boggs, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 304, 18 L. Ed. 245; Castillero v. U. S., 2 Black (U. S.) 17, 17 L. Ed. 360. In Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 199, 79 Am. Dec. 123, Field, C. J., upon thorough examination of the subject, rejected the doctrine of sovereign title as an assertion of personal prerogative of the British crown, neither applicable to our institutions nor a necessary incident of sovereignty in the larger sense. The prerogative title of the sovereign was in Oregon treated as conceded; Gold Hill Quartz Min. Co. v. Ish, 5 Or. 104. It was held that in Maryland the mines passed by royal grant to Lord Baltimore, subject to a reservation of one-fifth of gold and silver found and that the entire title passed to the state, the interest of the proprietor by confiscation, and that of the king by conquest; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170. The same prerogative right was very early asserted in New Jersey; Board of Chosen Freeholders of Middlesex County v. Bank, 30 N. J. Eq. 323, note. It is said that the question is not of practical importance since the title to mineral lands generally in the United States is derived from public grants, and the right to minerals therein is regulated by law; Barr. & Ad. Mines 179. As to mineral lands and claims and their location under the United States laws, see LANDS, PUBLIC; Barr. & Ad. Mines ch. 6. See Judge Dallas's note to Bainbr. Mines 37.

Minerals in the beds of navigable waters below low water mark are owned by the state against which an appropriator without a grant is a trespasser, although he has a good title against any one else; Barr. & Ad. Mines 180. See State v. Phosphate Co., 32 Fla. 82, 13 South. 640, 21 L. R. A. 189; Coosaw Mining Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 12 Sup. Ct. 689, 36 L. Ed. 537; State v. Guano Co., 22 S. C. 50. The same rule applies to minerals found under highways; Smith v. City Council of Rome, 19 Ga. 89, 63 Am. Dec. 298; St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. Bridge Co., 23 Minn. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 682; Matthiessen & Hegeler Zinc Co. v. City of La Salle, 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. E. 406, 8 N. E. 81; Lyman v. Arnold, 5 Mas. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 8,626. See 14 A. & E. Ry. Cas. 486.

Where lands are taken under the right of eminent domain, strictly only a right of way passes, but it is sometimes held that the appropriator may use minerals taken therefrom for making or repairing the road-bed; Stokely v. Bridge Co., 5 Watts (Pa.) 546; at least those above grade which must be excavated; Evans v. Haefner, 29 Mo. 141; but the better opinion is said to be that no such right exists and that minerals remain the property of the owner of the soil; Barr. & Ad. Mines 186; Smith v. Holloway, 124 Ind. 329, 24 N. E. 886; Lyon v. Gormley, 53 Pa. 261. See 24 A. & E. Ry. Cas. 142.

All mineral lands of the general government, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are free and open to exploration and occupation, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and also to local customs or rules of miners when not in conflict with the laws of the United States. R. S. § 2319. See Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 763, 24 L. Ed. 313; LANDS, PUBLIC.

It is the policy of the government to favor the development of mines of gold, silver, and other metals, and every facility is afforded for that purpose; but it exacts a faithful compliance with the conditions required; U. S. v. Mining Co., 128 U. S. 673, 9 Sup. Ct. 195, 32 L. Ed. 571. A mineral lode or vein whose location is perfected under the law is the property of the locators or their assigns, and not subject to disposal by the government; Noyes v. Mantle, 127 U. S. 348, 8 Sup. Ct. 1132, 32 L. Ed. 168.

Subject to the rights of the public, growing out of its original ownership, or as provided by law in special cases, the right to minerals belongs to the owner of the soil, and passes by a grant thereof, unless separated; Lacustrine Fertilizer Co. v. Fertilizer Co., 82 N. Y. 476; but the owner may convey his mines by a separate and distinct grant, so as to create one freehold in the soil and another in the mines; Adam v. Iron Co., 7 Cush. (Mass.) 361; 5 M. & W. 50; Williams v. Gibson, 84 Ala. 228, 4 South. 350, 5 Am. St. Rep. 368; Manning v. Frazier, 96 Ill. 279; and after such severance of the mines from the soil each is entirely independent of the other, separately inheritable, and capable of conveyance; Barr. & Ad. Mines 3.

In case of a separate ownership, the owner of the mine must support the superincumbent soil; 12 Q. B. 739; 12 Exch. 259; and ancient buildings or other erections; 2 H. & N. 828. But in California a miner will not be enjoined against disturbance of crops, unless the appropriation of the land was anterior to the mining location; Ensminger v. McIntire, 23 Cal. 593.

A lessee having the right to mine coal under land over which a railroad is operated, can only mine so much of the coal as can be removed without injury to the surface; Mickle v. Douglas, 75 Ia. 78, 39 N. W. 198. The lessor's measure of damages where there are sinks and depressions in the surface of the land due to lessee's negligence in operating a mine, is the depreciation in the value of the land; McGowan v. Bailey, 155 Pa. 256, 25 Atl. 648.

The estate in the minerals as distinguished from the soil, is created under what are known as mining leases. Where the minerals are undisturbed as a part of the soil they are said to be in place. The severance of the estate in the soil and in the minerals may be by conveyance, by whatever name designated, of all, or a clearly defined part, of the minerals, in which case there passes to the grantee an estate in fee in the minerals, with the privilege of using the land so far as may be necessary for the purpose stated; Adams v. Copper Co., 7 Fed. 634. This is the effect of a conveyance even if it be called a lease or limits a term of years within which the minerals are to be taken out; Barr. & Ad. Mines 36. The effect of this is said to be the somewhat paradoxical result of the limitation of a fee-simple estate for a term of years, and the resulting difficulty is sought to be avoided by treating the limitation of the term as not upon the estate but upon the appurtenant rights, without which it would be valueless, and in case of failure to take out the mineral within the specified time it is forfeited to the grantor; Lillibridge v. Coal Co., 143 Pa. 293, 22 Atl. 1035, 13 L. R. A. 627, 24 Am. St. Rep. 544; Suffern v. Butler, 21 N. J. Eq. 410. A lease for mining purposes, the rent to be a certain part of the ore mined, is forfeited by failure to work the mines for a number of years; Maxwell v. Todd, 112 N. C. 677, 16 S. E. 926. Such instruments, even where the term license is employed, are held to be not a mere license, but to pass a property or to create an estate in the minerals; Hartford Iron Min Co. v. Min. Co., 93 Mich. 90, 53 N. W. 4, 32 Am. St. Rep. 488; Knight v. Iron Co., 47

Ind. 105, 17 Am. Rep. 692; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Peers, 150 Ill. 344, 37 N. E. 937; Lee v. Bumgardner, 86 Va. 315, 10 S. E. 3. See Barr. & Ad. Mines 36, where the cases are collected and examined. A true leasehold interest in the land may be created with an appurtenant right to take minerals, in which case the lessee is a tenant for years, and his possession and property of the soil and the minerals are the same; Patton v. Axley, 50 N. C. 440; Brown v. Beecher, 120 Pa. 590, 15 Atl. 608; Baker v. Hart, 52 Hun 363, 5 N. Y. Supp. 345. Where the permission is to take all the coal and the term is indefinite, the lease expires when the latter is exhausted; Gartside v. Outley, 58 Ill. 210, 11 Am. Rep. 59. In New York this doctrine is limited, so as to apply only where "the whole body of the coal, considered as of cubical dimensions and capable of descriptive separation from the earth above and around it, and as it lies in its place, is absolutely and presently conveyed. The thing sold must be such that it can be identified as land severed, as land, from the estate of which it forms a part;" Genet v. Canal Co., 136 N. Y. 593, 32 N. E. 1078, 19 L. R. A. 127, where Finch, J., citing the Pennsylvania cases, says: "Every case upholding the doctrine, which I have been able to examine, has that marked characteristic." In this case which reversed 122 N. Y. 505, 25 N. E. 922, the "lease" of all the coal contained under a described contract designated it as including all the coal that could be economically mined or taken out.

There may be a license to take all of a certain mineral in a designated tract, which is an incorporeal right, of which the distinguishing character is that it does not carry with it a possession exclusive of the owner of the soil; Barr. & Ad. Mines 53. It must be created by deed; Kamphouse v. Gaffner, 73 Ill. 453; and it is not revocable except after breach of covenant; Boone v. Stover, 66 Mo. 430. It carries the right of property in the minerals only after they are severed; East Jersey Iron Co. v. Wright, 32 N. J. Eq. 248; it is termed a license irrevocable and the word "all" describes the extent to which it may be exercised, not its exclusiveness; Grubb v. Bayard, 2 Wall. Jr. 81, Fed. Cas. No. 5,849.

A mere parol license is a personal privilege, unassignable, concurrent with a right of the licensor to mine, revocable at will, and vests no title to the minerals until severed; Barr. & Ad. Mines 67; Williams v. Morrison, 32 Fed. 177; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203; Cahoon v. Bayaud, 123 N. Y. 298, 25 N. E. 376.

Opening new mines by a tenant is waste, unless the demise includes them; Co. Litt. 53 b; 2 Bla. Com. 282; but if the mines be already open, it is not waste to work them even to exhaustion; 1 Taunt. 410; Appeal of Eley, 103 Pa. 307; Crouch v. Puryear, 1 Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528; Billings v. Taylor, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 460, 20 Am. Dec. 533; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 460. See Smith, Landl. & T. 192, 193, n. In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the mortgagee was allowed for large sums expended in working a mine which he had a right to work; 25 L. J. Ch. 121; but in another case, expenses incurred in opening a mine were disallowed; 16 Sim. 445.

In California, the occupant of public lands, who holds them for agricultural purposes merely, holds them subject to the right of any person to dig for gold; Stoakes v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 36; but the miner must take them as he finds them, subject to prior rights of the same character; Mitchell v. Hagood, 6 Cal. 148; a miner cannot take private lands; Henshaw v. Clark, 14 Cal. 460.

An injunction lies for interference with mines; 6 Ves. 147.

Mineral deposits are usually divided into what are termed lode or vein and placer deposits. The terms lode and vein are generally used interchangeably (see LODE), but they are usually "found together in the statutes and both are intended to indicate the presence of metal in rock; yet a lode may, and often does, contain more than one vein; Field, J., in U. S. v. Mining Co., 128 U. S. 673, 9 Sup. Ct. 195, 32 L. Ed. 571.

A placer is a superficial deposit occupying the bed of an ancient river. Barr. & Ad. Mines 476. In federal legislation it is defined to include "all forms of deposit excepting veins and quartz or other rock in place." U. S. R. S. § 2329. These statutes divide all deposits into two classes, veins or lodes, and placers, and the former being well defined, the latter is made to include all others; Barr. & Ad. Mines 476. See LANDS, PUBLIC.

The dip of a vein is its downward course, and this the locator may follow indefinitely even though it take him beneath the ground of another and outside of his own vertical side lines; Barr. & Ad. Mines 441.

The strike of a vein is "its onward course, its direction or trend across and through the country"; id.

The apex of a vein is the highest point where it approaches nearest to the surface of the earth, and where it is broken at its edge so as to appear to be the beginning or end of a vein. Stevens v. Williams, 1 McCrary 480, Fed. Cas. No. 13,413. If a vein at its highest point turns over and pursues its course downward, then such point is merely a swell in the mineral matter and not a true apex; id. This is a term used in mining law in what is known as the apex rule, as to which see LANDS, PUBLIC, subt. Mineral Lands.

Where two or more veins apex in a claim, the court must decide which is the principal vein, and fix the end lines of the claim by reference to that principal vein. (2) Those end lines as defined by the principal vein are the end lines for all other veins apexing in the claim. (3) The locator owns all the veins having any part of their apexes in his claim, from the apexes downward throughout the entire depth of the veins, within the vertical planes drawn through the ascertained end lines of the claim extended in their own direction; Walrath v. Mining Co., 171 U. S. 293, 18 Sup. Ct. 909, 43 L. Ed. 170.

A miner whose location is on the apex of a lode may follow it to any depth, although in its downward course it may enter the adjoining land; but no location made on the middle of a lode or otherwise than at the top or apex, will enable the locator to go beyond his line; Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Murphy, 3 Fed. 368. The apex is not necessarily a point, but often a line of great length and any portion of it, if found within the limits of a claim, is sufficient to entitle the locator to obtain title. He may follow his vein into the territory of another beyond his side lines, but not further than his own end lines, beyond which it is subject to further discovery and appropriation; Larkin v. Upton, 144 U. S. 19, 12 Sup. Ct. 614, 36 L. Ed. 330; Colorado Cent. Consol. Min. Co. v. Turck, 50 Fed. 888, 2 C. C. A. 67; but where the apex which intersects an end line passes out of the claim across one of the side lines, the owner may still follow so much of the lode on the dip as lies between the end line, through which the vein passed, and its point of divergence from the claim; Del Monte Mining & Milling Co. v. Mining Co., 66 Fed. 212. Where two claims are so located that to follow the dip beyond the side lines would cause a conflict, that having priority of location must prevail; Tyler Min. Co. v. Sweeney, 54 Fed. 284, 4 C. C. A. 329. See U. S. R. S. § 2336.

A mining claim is a parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock. A location is the act of appropriating such parcel, according to certain established rules. If the miner has only one location that "location" is identical with "mining claim," and the two designations may be indiscriminately used to denote the same thing; St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 649, 26 L. Ed. 875; if he acquires an adjoining location his claim covers both; id. See Lindl. Mines § 327. A transfer of a mining claim must be in writing; Garthe v. Hart, 73 Cal. 541, 15 Pac. 93.

A mining claim is real estate; Carrhart v. Mining Co., 1 Mont. 245; and descends to the heir; Keeler v. Trueman, 15 Col. 143, 25 Pac. 311; it is property; Blake v. Mining Co., 2 Utah 54; subject to execution; McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137, 70 Am. Dec. 642; and taxation; State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56; and a lien for unpaid taxes; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. Ed. 313. An owner out of possession may maintain an ejectment or corresponding action; Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 317, 68 Am. Dec. 262; Herbert v. King, 1 Mont. 475; Lentz v. Victor, 17 Cal. 271; Aurora Hill Con. Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 34 Fed. 515; Reynolds v. Mining Co., 116 U. S. 687, 6 Sup. Ct. 601, 29 L. Ed. 774; contra, Duffy v. Mix, 24 Or. 265, 33 Pac. 807. See as to claims, 14 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 152.

There is no right of dower in an unpatented mining claim; Black v. Mining Co., 163 U. S. 445, 16 Sup. Ct. 1101, 41 L. Ed. 221; but in some cases dower has been allowed in mines; In re Seager, 92 Mich. 186, 52 N. W. 299; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263; Priddy v. Griffith, 150 Ill. 560, 37 N. E. 999, 41 Am. St. Rep. 397; Rockwell v. Morgan, 13 N. J. Eq. 389; Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 28 Am. Rep. 680; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 460. See, as to dower, Black v. Min. Co., 52 Fed. 859, 3 C. C. A. 312, 7 U. S. App. 393.

Of joint owners, either may mine without the consent of the others, using the common property for the purpose intended, and it is no objection that the use is consumption; McCord v. Min. Co., 64 Cal. 134, 27 Pac. 863, 49 Am. Rep. 686; it is not waste; but he must account to his co-owners for ore mined; Barnum v. Landon, 25 Conn. 137; and any act for the benefit of the property, as the purchase of a paramount title inures to the benefit of all; Franklin Min. Co. v. O'Brien, 22 Col. 129, 43 Pac. 1016, 55 Am. St. Rep. 118. The interest may be the subject of partition; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 502; but the mere fact of joint ownership does not give an equitable right to a division; the question must be fairly considered by a chancellor upon all the circumstances; Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker, 28 Fed. 220.

Joint owners who co-operate in working, constitute a mining partnership without any specific contract or agreement; Barr. & Ad. Mines 753. There may be an ordinary commercial partnership in the working of a mine, but this will arise only from agreement. A mining partnership, properly so called, is a relation springing only by implication from actual co-operation in the work; Kahn v. Smelting Co., 102 U. S. 641, 26 L. Ed. 266; Judge v. Braswell, 13 Bush (Ky.) 67, 26 Am. Rep. 185; Snyder v. Burnham, 77 Mo. 52; Dougherty v. Creary, 30 Cal. 290, 89 Am. Dec. 116; Decker v. Howell, 42 Cal. 636; State Nat. Bank v. Butler, 149 Ill. 575, 36 N. E. 1000. A mining partnership is not dissolved by the death of a partner, nor by the sale of his interest to a stranger; in the latter case the purchaser becomes a partner; Taylor v. Castle, 42 Cal. 367; Nisbet v. Nash, 52 Cal. 540; Charles v. Eshleman, 5 Col. 107.

Mining partnerships are in some states effectually regulated by statute; Cal. C. C. §§ 2511–2520; Mont. C. C. §§ 3350–3359; Idaho, R. S. §§ 3301–3309. In the latter state it has been said that a mining partnership, by virtue of the statute, "in all its essential elements is precisely like a corporation;" Hawkins v. Min. Co., 3 Idaho 650, 33 Pac. 40, where the substance of the statute is given. See as to mining partnerships, 28 Am. St. Rep. 488, n.

In most states where mining is an important industry, there are statutory provisions for securing the safety of those engaged in the employment. For a citation of these statutes see Barr. & Ad. Mines 780, note 1, where it is said that a discussion of the cases arising under these statutes is impossible because they involve no general principle. Such statutes have been held constitutional; Northumberland County v. Zimmerman, 75 Pa. 26. They are an exercise of the police power, as to the propriety and validity of which there can be little question. In their relation to the law of negligence these statutes enlarge and define the obligation of the mine owner, and fix absolutely his responsibility for injuries resulting from failure to comply with the act, wherever that failure is the proximate cause of the injury. But the violation of the statute does not excuse contributory negligence or authorize the employee to neglect his own safety; Barr. & Ad. Mines 785, where the cases are collected.

Mining acts in some states provide for the appointment by the state of mine bosses or foremen, who are practically placed in charge of the operation of the mines. The following is a substantial synopsis of such acts:

No one shall act as mine foreman unless he shall have been granted a certificate, after having passed a satisfactory examination before a board, and has given evidence of at least five years' practical experience as a miner, and of good conduct, capability and sobriety. A mine shall not be operated without a mine foreman for a longer period generally than thirty days.

A mine boss has charge of all matters pertaining to ventilation. He is the inside overseer of the mine. Where mines generate gas, he must examine them every day. Also every other day he must visit and examine every working place in the mine. Where props and timber are wanted, the miners are required to notify the mine boss, and if timber cannot be supplied when needed, work must be stopped, except in cases of emergency, when the miner must attend to his own propping.

Mine owner is not responsible for negligence of mine boss employed in obedience to a mining act; Dempsey v. Coal Co., 227 Pa. 571, 76 Atl. 745.

MINGLING OF GOODS. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MINIMUM WAGE. Such an amount as will maintain a normal standard of living, including the preservation of the health and efficiency of the worker. The wage board for the fixing of legal minimum rates was originated in Victoria in 1896 and they have since been adopted in England and Massachusetts. Several other states, especially Minnesota and Wisconsin, have considered their adoption. A constitutional amendment authorizing minimum wage legislation was adopted in Ohio.

The English law enacted in 1909 was designed primarily to destroy "sweating" in industries carried on in the workers' homes. It is carried out through the medium of trade or wage boards. The boards fix the wages, and appeals may be taken from the trade boards to the board of trade. In 1912 the law, which had previously related to sweated home industry, was extended to the mining industry.

There has been strong opposition to such laws on constitutional grounds, because of the restriction in the 14th amendment and the doctrine of freedom of contract. In Massachusetts in 1911 a commission was appointed to establish a minimum wage board for the fixing of wages for women and children in any occupation in which the wages paid to a considerable number of workers is believed to be inadequate to maintain an American standard of living.

MINING PARTNERSHIP. See MINES AND MINING.

MINISTER. In Governmental Law. An officer who is placed near the sovereign, and is invested with the administration of the government. Ministers are responsible to the king or other supreme magistrate who has appointed them. Kibbe v. Antram, 4 Conn. 134.

In Ecclesiastical Law. One ordained by some church to preach the gospel. All clergymen of every denomination and faith. Haggin v. Haggin, 35 Neb. 375, 53 N. W. 209. A person elected by a Methodist society to be one of their local preachers, and ordained as a deacon of that church, is a minister of the gospel, within a statute exempting ministers from taxation. Baldwin v. McClinch, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 102. So is a person ordained as a Congregational minister and installed as such over a town. Gridley v. Clark, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 403. See L. R. 8 Q. B. 69.

Formerly the word was applied only to deacons, but it is now the most comprehensive ecclesiastical title. In the prayerbook it means the officiating clergyman, whether bishop, priest, or deacon. 14 P. D. 148.

Ministers are authorized in the United States, generally, to solemnize marriages, and are usually liable to fines and penalties for marrying minors contrary to the local regulations. As to the rights of ministers or parsons, see 3 Am. Jur. 268; Shepp. Touchst. Anthon ed. 564. Weston v. Hunt, 2 Mass. 500. See CLERGY; BENEFIT OF CLERGY; PARSON.

A name given to public functionaries who represent their country with foreign governments, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

A custom of modern origin has introduced a new kind of ministers, without any particular determination of character; these are simply called ministers, to indicate that they are invested with the general character of a sovereign's mandatories, without any particular assignment of rank, and without being invested with the representative character.

There are also ministers plenipotentiary, who, as they possess full powers, are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These, also, are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary; Vattel, liv. 4, c. 5, § 74; 1 Kent 48; Merlin, Répert.

Owing to frequent disputes between the several classes of diplomatic agents regarding precedence, the question was taken up by the Congress of Vienna and by the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, with the result that diplomatic agents are now divided into the following classes:

1. Ambassadors, and papal legates or nuncios. 2. Envoys, ministers, or others accredited to sovereigns (auprès des souverains). 3. Ministers resident, accredited to sovereigns. 4. Chargés d'affaires, acccredited to the minister of foreign affairs. Public ministers take rank among themselves, in each class, according to the date of the official notification of the arrival at the court to which they are accredited. Recez, du Congrès de Vienne, du 19 mars, 1815; Protocol du Congrès d'Aix-la-Chapelle, du Novembre, 1818; Wheaton, Int. Law § 211.

Consuls and other commercial agents are not, in general, considered as public ministers. See AMBASSADOR; CONSUL; RECALL.

MINISTERIAL. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial; as, the sheriff is a ministerial officer bound to obey the judicial commands of the court.

A ministerial act may be defined to be one which a person performs in a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment upon the propriety of the acts being done; American Casualty Insurance & Security Co. v. Flyler, 60 Conn. 448, 22 Atl. 494, 25 Am. St. Rep. 337; Rains v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 501, 32 Am. Rep. 609. Acts done out of court in bringing parties into court are, as a general proposition, ministerial acts; Pennington v. Streight, 54 Ind. 376. See South v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 396, 15 L. Ed. 433; State v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 175, 22 Am. Rep. 692; Diggs v. State, 49 Ala. 311.

When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform ministerial acts in a particular way; but when he acts in a judicial capacity, he can only be required to proceed; the manner of doing so is left entirely to his judgment. See Cowan v. Adams, 10 Me. 377, 25 Am. Dec. 242; Bacon, Abr. Justices of the Peace (E); Fox v. Hills, 1 Conn. 295; Betts v. Dimon, 3 Conn. 107; Inhabitants of Town of Stratford v. Sanford, 9 Conn. 275; Crane v. Camp, 12 Conn. 464; MANDAMUS; OFFICE.

MINISTERIAL DUTY. One in respect to which nothing is left to discretion. A simple definite duty, arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist, and imposed by law, the performance of which may, in proper cases, be required of the head of a department by judicial process. Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 498, 18 L. Ed. 437; State v. Staub, 61 Conn. 553, 23 Atl. 924.

MINISTERIAL TRUSTS (also called instrumental trusts). Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ: as, to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1896.

MINISTRY. The term as used in England is wider than Cabinet and includes all the holders of public office who come in and go out with the Prime Minister. In this respect it may be contrasted with the Permanent Civil Service, whose tenure is independent of public changes. The first English Ministry as now understood was formed after the general election of 1696. Macaulay, Hist. Engl., ch. 24. See CABINET.

MINNESOTA. One of the states of the United States of America.

It was created a territory by act of congress, March 3, 1849, and admitted into the Union as a state, May 11, 1858, under a constitution framed and adopted by a convention at St. Paul, on the 29th day of August, 1857, pursuant to an act of congress of February 26, 1857, and submitted to and ratified by the people on the 13th of October, 1857.

MINOR (Lat. less; younger). One not a major, i. e. not twenty-one. Co. 2d Inst. 291; Co. Litt. 88, 128, 172 b; 6 Co. 67; Bracton, 340 b; Fleta, l. 2, c. 60, § 26.

Of less consideration; lower. Calvinus, Lex. Major and minor belong rather to civil law. The common-law terms are adult and infant. See AGE; CHILD.

MINORA REGALIA. The lesser prerogatives of the crown, relating to revenue. 1 Bla. Com. 241.

MINORITY. The state or condition of a minor; infancy. See AGE; INFANT.

The smaller number of votes of a deliberative assembly: opposed to majority.

The minority of a committee to which a corporate power has been delegated, cannot bind the majority, or do any valid act in the absence of any special provision otherwise; Brown v. District of Columbia, 127 U. S. 579, 8 Sup. Ct. 1314, 32 L. Ed. 262. See MINORITY REPRESENTATION.

MINT. The place designated by law where money is coined by authority of the government.

The mint was established by the act of April 2, 1792, and located at Philadelphia. There are mints of the United States now at Philadelphia, San Francisco, New Orleans, Carson, and Denver. R. S. § 3495. A failure by the director of the mint to observe a rule prescribing that he shall, at the annual settlement, require the weighing and counting of all bullion in the mints, does not relieve a superintendent of a mint of his responsibility for bullion in his custody; Bosbyshell v. U. S., 77 Fed. 944, 23 C. C. A. 581. His receipt for a certain quantity of bullion, and his admissions in reports and accounts that he holds it, are at least prima facie evidence that it came into his possession; id. He and his bondsmen are responsible for the loss of bullion which he has received, and which he cannot produce, though it has been lost or stolen without any negligence or fault on his part; id. When he has, on assuming office, receipted for a certain quantity of bullion, the same is thereafter in his custody, though accepted by him under lock and seal on the faith of a certificate as to its amount; id.

See COIN; FOREIGN COIN; MONEY; ANNUAL ASSAY.

MINT-MARK. The masters and workers of the mint, in the indentures made with them, agree to make a privy-mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making; after every trial of the pix, having proved their moneys to be lawful, they are entitled to their quietus under the Great Seal, and to be thereanent discharged from all suits or actions; they then change the privy mark, so that the moneys from which they are not yet discharged may be distinguished from those for which they are; they use the new mark until another trial of the pix. Wharton.

MINTAGE. That which is coined or stamped.

MINUS. Less; less than.

MINUTE. Measures. In divisions of the circle or angular measures, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or one-sixtieth part of a degree.

In the computation of time, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or the sixtieth part of an hour. See MEASURE.

In Practice. A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court. From these minutes the record is afterwards made up.

Toullier says they are so called because the writing in which they were originally was small: that the word is derived from the Latin minuta (scriptura), in opposition to copies which were delivered to the parties, and which were always written in a larger hand. 8 Toullier, n. 413.

Minutes are not considered as any part of the record; Harvey v. Brown, 1 Ohio 268. See Pruden v. Alden, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 34 Am. Dec. 51. It is not the office of the clerk's minutes to indicate the legal questions raised upon a trial and determined by the court; Scott v. Morgan, 94 N. Y. 514; Johnson v. Com., 80 Ky. 377; State v. Howard, 34 La. Ann. 369.

OF CORPORATE MEETINGS. It is usual for boards of directors of corporations to keep a regular record in writing of their proceedings. It has been said that such a record is essential either to the proof or validity of their acts and contracts. Such may be the case if the charter makes the keeping of such a record essential to the validity of corporate acts. But in the absence of a provision directing the keeping of such records, there appears to be no reason for any distinction between recording in writing the acts of a board of agents of a corporation, and of the agents of a natural person. Provisions in charters directing that minutes be kept are merely directory; a failure to keep them does not affect the validity of corporate acts; Bank of U. S. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 75, 6 L. Ed. 552; Ang. & A. Corp. 291 a; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 522, n. b. See Lyndeborough Glass Co. v. Glass Co., 111 Mass. 315; Foot v. R. Co., 32 Vt. 633.

The failure to enter a vote of stockholders in the corporation records at the time when it was adopted does not affect its validity; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227.

When such records are kept, they are the best evidence of the proceedings of a meeting; but if no minutes were kept, or if, in a suit against the corporation, and upon notice, the corporation neglects or refuses to produce its books, other evidence is admissible; Foot v. R. Co., 32 Vt. 633; Lyndeborough Glass Co. v. Glass Co., 111 Mass. 315; Ang. & A. Corp. 291 a.

A party may introduce in evidence relevant portions of corporate minutes, without being required to offer all that relates to the matter in question, the opposite party having the right to introduce such other portions as are relevant; Fouché v. Bank, 110 Ga. 827, 36 S. E. 256.

MINUTE-BOOK. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court, in which minutes of its proceedings are entered.

MINUTE TITHES. Small tithes, usually belonging to the vicar; e. g. eggs, honey, wax, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law 680; 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, §§ 17, 18, 27.

MIRROR DES JUSTICES. The Mirror of Justices, a legal treatise once supposed to have been written during the reign of Edward II. Andrew Horne is its reputed author. But it has been thought that the germ of it was written before the Conquest and that Horne only made additions to it; Marv. Leg. Bibl. 396. But F. W. Maitland holds to the contrary; and also that the evidence that Horne wrote it is not conclusive. It was first published in 1642, and in 1646 it was translated into English by William Hughes. It was first cited in court in 1550. Coke said (9 Rep. Pref.): "In this book in effect appeareth the whole frame of the common law." It was published by the Selden Society with an introduction by Prof. Maitland. Through Coke's use of it, it was long regarded as an important source of English legal history; but it is known now that it is no authority for the law of the 13th or any other century; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 284. Palgrave (2 Engl. Commonw. cxiii) regarded it as apocryphal. See 13 L. Q. R. 85; 11 id. 395 (Sir F. Pollock).

Maitland's opinion of the work may be gathered in a few words from his introduction to the reprint of it in 1893, by the Selden Society: "Is he [its author] lawyer, antiquary, preacher, agitator, pedant, faddist, lunatic, romancer, liar? A little of all, perhaps, but the romancer seems to predominate."

MISADVENTURE. An accident by which an injury occurs to another.

When applied to homicide, misadventure is the act of a man who, in the performance of a lawful act, without any intention to do harm, and after using proper precaution to prevent danger, unfortunately kills another person. The act upon which the death ensues must be neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. The usual examples under this head are: 1, when the death ensues from innocent recreations; 2, from moderate and lawful correction in foro domestico; 3, from acts lawful and indifferent in themselves, done with proper and ordinary caution; 4 Bla. Com. 182; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 221. It happens in consequence of a lawful act; involuntary manslaughter, in consequence of an unlawful act; Johnson v. State, 94 Ala. 41, 10 South. 667.

See HOMICIDE; MANSLAUGHTER; CORRECTION.

MISAPPLICATION. As used in 7 Hen. IV. s. 44, the misapplication of public funds only covers cases of corrupt practices or of showing illegal favor. 30 H. L. 752.

MISAPPROPRIATION. It is not a technical term of law, but it is sometimes applied to the misdemeanor which is committed by a banker, factor, agent, trustee, etc., who fraudulently deals with money, goods, securities, etc., entrusted to him, or by a director or public officer of a corporation or company who fraudulently misapplies any of its property. Sweet. L. Dict. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

MISBEHAVIOR. Improper or unlawful conduct. See State v. Bell, 2 Mart. La. (N. S.) 683.

A party guilty of misbehavior, as, for example, to threaten to do injury to another, may be bound to his good behavior, and thus restrained. As to misbehavior of juries, see NEW TRIAL.

MISCARRIAGE. In Medical Jurisprudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embryo from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed abortion. When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated premature labor. But the criminal act of destroying the fœtus at any time before birth is termed, in law, procuring miscarriage. Chitty, Med. Jur. 410; 2 Dungl. Hum. Phys. 364. See ABORTION; FŒTUS.

In Practice. A term used in the Statute of Frauds to denote that species of wrongful act for the consequences of which the wrongdoer would be responsible at law in a civil action. By the English Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4, it is enacted that "no action shall be brought to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, unless the agreement," etc., "shall be in writing," etc.

The wrongful riding the horse of another, without his leave or license, and thereby causing his death, is clearly an act for which the party is responsible in damages, and, therefore, falls within the meaning of the word miscarriage: 2 B. & Ald. 516; Burge, Sur. 21.

MISCASTING. An error in auditing and numbering. It does not include any pretended miscasting or misvaluing. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4128.

MISCEGENATION (Lat. miscere, to mix, and genere, to beget). A mixture of races. The intermarriage of persons belonging to the white and black races. In many of the states this is prohibited by statute. The constitutionality of such statutes has been repeatedly affirmed; State v. Jackson, 80 Mo. 175, 50 Am. Rep. 499; McClain Cr. L. § 57; Frasher v. State, 3 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 131; Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 29 Am. Rep. 739; Kinney v. Com., 30 Gratt. (Va.) 858, 32 Am. Rep. 690; Lonas v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 287. It has been further held that a statute denouncing a severer penalty on persons of the two races living together in adultery, than that prescribed for a like offence between persons of the same race, is constitutional; Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 29 Am. Rep. 739; Pace v. Alabama, 106 U. S. 583, 1 Sup. Ct. 637, 27 L. Ed. 207; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1754. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

MISCHIEF. A term used in the law of statutory construction to designate the evil or danger intended to be cured or avoided by the statute. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

MISCOGNIZANT. Ignorant, or not knowing. Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Little used.

MISCONDUCT. Unlawful behavior by a person intrusted in any degree with the administration of justice, by which the rights of the parties and the justice of the case may have been affected.

A verdict will be set aside when any of the jury have been guilty of such misconduct; and a court will set aside an award if it has been obtained by the misconduct of an arbitrator; 2 Atk. 501, 504; 2 Chitt. Bail. 44; 1 Salk. 71; 3 P. Wms. 362; 1 Dick. 66. See Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Phillips, 98 Ala. 159, 13 South. 65; Wood River Bank v. Dodge, 36 Neb. 708, 55 N. W. 234.

Under a statute having reference to a divorce dissolving the marriage contract because of the misconduct of the wife, it relates to adultery; Van Cleaf v. Burns, 133 N. Y. 540, 30 N. E. 661, 15 L. R. A. 542.

See NEW TRIAL.

MISCONTINUANCE. In Practice. A continuance of a suit by undue process. Its effect is the same as a discontinuance. 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 299; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

MISCREANT. An apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounces Christianity. 4 Bla. Comm. 44.

MISDELIVERY. The delivery of property by a carrier to a person not authorized by the owner or person to whom the carrier is bound by his contract to deliver it. Forbes v. R. Co., 133 Mass. 156.

MISDEMEANANT. A person guilty of a misdemeanor. See FIRST-CLASS MISDEMEANANT.

MISDEMEANOR. A term used to express every offence inferior to felony, punishable by indictment, or by particular prescribed proceedings. In its usual acceptation, it is applied to all those crimes and offences for which the law has not provided a particular name.

It has a common-law, a parliamentary, and a popular sense. In a parliamentary sense, as applied to officers, it means maladministration or misconduct, not necessarily indictable. Demeanor is conduct, and misdemeanor is misconduct, in the business of one's office. It must be in matters of importance, and be of a character to show a wilful disregard of duty; 6 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 649; State v. Hastings, 37 Neb. 96, 55 N. W. 774.

The test whether or not a certain crime is a crime at common law, is, not whether precedents for so treating it can be found in the books, but whether it injuriously affects the public policy and economy; Com. v. McHale, 97 Pa. 397, 39 Am. Rep. 808, followed in Com. v. Randolph, 146 Pa. 83, 23 Atl. 388, 28 Am. St. Rep. 782, where it was held that a solicitation to commit murder meets this test.

The word is generally used in contradistinction to felony; misdemeanors comprehending all indictable offences which do not amount to felony, as perjury, battery, libels, conspiracies, and public nuisances, but not including a multitude of offences over which magistrates have an exclusive summary jurisdiction, for a brief designation of which our legal nomenclature is at fault. Misdemeanors have sometimes been called misprisions. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 624. See FELONY; CRIME; MERGER.

Military law makes no distinction between felony and misdemeanor.

MISDESCRIPTION. An erroneous or false description of a contract which is misleading in a material point.

MISDIRECTION. An error made by a judge in charging the jury in a special case.

It is a rule, subject to the qualifications hereafter stated, that when the judge at the trial misdirects the jury on matters of law material to the issue, whatever may be the nature of the case, the verdict will be set aside, and a new trial granted; 6 Mod. 242; 2 Wils. 269; Williams v. Cheesebrough, 4 Conn. 356; or, if such misdirection appear in the bill of exceptions, or otherwise upon the record, a judgment founded on a verdict thus obtained will be reversed. And although the charge of the court be not positively erroneous, yet, if it have a tendency to mislead the jury, and it be uncertain whether they would have found as they did if the instructions had been entirely correct, a new trial will be granted; West v. Anderson, 9 Conn. 107, 21 Am. Dec. 737. When the issue consists of a mixed question of law and fact, and there is a conceded state of facts, the rest is a question for the court; Divver v. McLaughlin, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 596, 20 Am. Dec. 655; and a misdirection in this respect will avoid the verdict. In England, under the Judicature Act of 1875, a new trial will not be granted on the ground of misdirection or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, unless in the opinion of the court, to which the application is made, some substantial wrong has been thereby occasioned; and, if it appear that such wrong or miscarriage affects part only of the matter in controversy, the court may give final judgment as to part thereof, and direct a new trial as to the other part only; 1 Sched. Ord. xxxix. v. 3; L. R. 10 Stat. 1875, 817.

Misdirection as to matters of fact will, in some cases, be sufficient to vitiate the proceedings. For example: misapprehension of the judge as to a material circumstance, and a direction to the jury accordingly; 1 Const. So. C. 200; or instructing them upon facts which are purely hypothetical, whereby they are misled; Griffin v. Witherspoon, 8 Ga. 114; or an instruction which assumes a material fact to have been proved; Jonas v. Field, 83 Ala. 445, 3 South. 893; Deeds v. Ry. Co., 74 Ia. 154, 37 N. W. 124; submitting as a contested point what has been admitted; Toby v. Reed, 9 Conn. 216; giving to the jury a peremptory direction to find in a given way, when there are facts in the case conducive to a different conclusion; Fitzgerald v. Alexander, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 402; or where the evidence is so conflicting or rests so largely upon inference or circumstance, that a court could not rightfully sustain a demurrer to the evidence of the opposite party; Tabler v. Coal Co., 87 Ala. 305, 6 South. 196. See Nelson v. Ry. Co., 73 Ia. 576, 35 N. W. 611; Harris v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 116. There are, however, many cases in which the court may instruct the jury, upon the whole evidence, to find for one or the other party; and when a verdict formed under such instruction is conformable to the law, the evidence, and the justice of the case, it is rarely disturbed; Chiles v. Boothe, 3 Dana (Ky.) 566. But to warrant an unqualified direction to the jury in favor of a party, the evidence must either be undisputed or the preponderance so decided that a verdict against it would be set aside; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 32 N. E. 285, 18 L. R. A. 215; Monroe v. Ins. Co., 52 Fed. 777, 3 C. C. A. 280, 5 U. S. App. 179; and where a special verdict is directed, the court is not bound to give any instructions as to the general rules of law governing the case; Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 278, 19 N. E. 129; Cole v. Crawford, 69 Tex. 124, 5 S. W. 646. When the court delivers its opinion to the jury on a matter of fact, it should be as opinion, and not as direction; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Walden, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 513, 7 Am. Dec. 340. But it is, in general, allowed a very liberal discretion in this regard; 1 M'Cl. & Y. 286. Where the question is one of mere fact, no expressions of the judge, however strong or erroneous will amount to a misdirection, provided the question is fairly presented to the jury and left with them for their decision; 4 Moore & S. 295; Com. v. Child, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 252; Lovejoy v. U. S., 128 U. S. 171, 9 Sup. Ct. 57, 32 L. Ed. 389. The weight of evidence is solely for the jury; and an instruction thereupon is erroneous; Barnett v. State, 83 Ala. 40, 3 South. 612; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937.

Unless the misdirection be excepted to, the party by his silence will be deemed to have waived it. But see Geer v. Archer, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 420; see Krepps v. Carlisle, 157 Pa. 358, 27 Atl. 741; Stock Quotation Telegraph Co. v. Board of Trade, 144 Ill. 370, 33 N. E. 42.

As to its effects, the misdirection must be calculated to do injustice; for if it be entirely certain that justice has been done, and that a re-hearing would produce the same result, or if the amount in dispute be very trifling, so that the injury is scarcely appreciable, a new trial will not be granted; Thorn. Juries § 204; Depeyster v. Ins. Co., 2 Caines (N. Y.) 85; Arrington v. Cherry, 10 Ga. 429; 3 Grah. & W. New Tr. 705; Hill. New. Tr. 96. See NEW TRIAL; CHARGE.

MISE (Lat. mittere, through the French mettre, to place). In Pleading. The issue in a writ of right. The tenant in a writ of right is said to join the mise on the mere right when he pleads that his title is better than the demandant's; 2 Wms. Saund. 45, h, i. It was equivalent to the general issue; and everything except collateral warranty might be given in evidence under it by the tenant; 3 Wils. 420; Green v. Watkins, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 31, 5 L. Ed. 388; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 133, 7 L. Ed. 617; Ten Eyck v. Waterbury, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 52; Bell's Heirs v. Snyder, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 350. The payee in aid, on coming into court, joined in the mise together with the tenant; 2 Wms. Saund. 45 d. It was a more common practice, however, for the demandant to traverse the tenant's plea, when the cause could be tried by a common jury instead of the grand assize.

In Practice. Expenses. It is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions: as, when the plaintiff recovers, the judgment is quod recuperet damna sua (that he recover his damages), and pro misis et custagiis (for costs and charges) so much, etc.

MISE MONEY. Money paid by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, etc. Blount.

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity; as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 5, ch. 1, § 1; La. Code § 2935.

MISERERE. The first word and usual name of one of the penitential psalms, being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy (q. v.); whence it is also called the psalm of mercy. Wharton. See NECK VERSE.

MISERICORDIA (Lat.). An arbitrary or discretionary amercement.

To be in mercy is to be liable to such punishment as the judge may in his discretion inflict. According to Spelman, misericordia is so called because the party is in mercy, and to distinguish this fine from redemptions, or heavy fines. Spelman, Gloss. See Co. Litt. 126 b; Madox 14. See IN MISERICORDIA.

MISFEASANCE. The performance of an act which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, by which another person receives an injury.

It differs from malfeasance or nonfeasance. Misfeasance is the wrongful and injurious exercise of lawful authority, or the doing of a lawful act in an unlawful manner, while malfeasance is doing an act which is positively unlawful or wrongful. 23 L. Mag. & Rev. 139. See, generally, 2 Viner, Abr. 35; 2 Kent 443; Doctrina Plac. 62; Story, Bailm. § 9.

It seems to be settled that there is a distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance in the case of mandates. In cases of nonfeasance the mandatory is not generally liable, because, his undertaking being gratuitous, there is no consideration to support it; but in cases of misfeasance the common law gives a remedy for the injury done, and to the extent of that injury; 5 Term 143; Thompson v. Gregory, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 81, 4 Am. Dec. 255; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Colte v. Lynes, 33 Conn. 109; Story, Bailm. § 165.

MISFORTUNE. It is equivalent to some adverse event not immediately dependent on the action or will of him who suffers from it, and of so improbable a character that no prudent man would take it into his calculations in reference to the interest of himself or of others. 20 Q. B. Div. 816.

MISJOINDER. In Pleading. The improper union of parties or causes of action in one suit at law or in equity.

Of Actions. The joining several demands which the law does not permit to be joined, to enforce by one proceeding several distinct, substantive rights of recovery. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 98; Archb. Civ. Pl. 61; Dane, Abr.

In equity, it is the joinder of different and distinct claims against one defendant; Adams, Eq. 309; 7 Sim. 241; Newland v. Rogers, 8 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 432. The grounds of suit must be wholly distinct, and each ground must be sufficient, as stated, to sustain a bill; 5 Ired. Eq. 313. See Larkins v. Biddle, 21 Ala. 252; Nail v. Mobley, 9 Ga. 278; Dunn v. Cooper, 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 46; Robinson v. Cross, 22 Conn. 171.

It may arise from the joinder of plaintiffs who possess distinct claims; 2 Sim. 331; Yeaton v. Lenox, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 123, 8 L. Ed. 889; see [1893] 1 Q. B. 771; but see Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 150; More v. Smedburgh, 8 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 605; or the joinder of distinct claims of the plaintiff in one bill; 2 S. & S. 79; Allegany & K. R. Co. v. Weidenfeld, 5 Misc. 43, 25 N. Y. Supp. 71. But it seems that where there is a common liability of the defendants and a common interest in the plaintiffs, different claims may be united in the same suit; 1 M. & C. 623; Nelson v. Hill, 5 How. (U. S.) 127, 12 L. Ed. 81; Robinson v. Guild, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 323. And see 2 Y. & C. 389; Story, Eq. Pl. § 536, n.; MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

At law, misjoinder vitiates the entire declaration, whether taken advantage of by general demurrer; 1 Maule & S. 355; motion in arrest of judgment, or writ of error; 2 B. & P. 424. It may be aided by verdict in some cases; 2 Lev. 110; 2 Maule & S. 533; 1 Chitty Pl. 188. Where a single count of a complaint contains one cause of action in tort and another in contract, and plaintiff is allowed over objections to introduce evidence to sustain both causes, the error is not cured by plaintiff's election after the trial, to recover in contract only, when the judgment rendered does not limit plaintiff's recovery of costs to those incurred in the action in contract; Wirth v. Bartell, 84 Wis. 209, 54 N. W. 399.

Of Parties. The joining, as plaintiffs or defendants, parties who have not a joint interest.

In England, under the Judicature Act, 1875, by order xvi. v. 13, no action is to be defeated by the misjoinder of the parties. Different causes of action which cannot be tried together conveniently may be ordered by the court or a judge to be tried separately. Mozl. & W. Dict.

In equity, the joinder of improper plaintiffs is a fatal defect; Cammeyer v. United German Lutheran Churches, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 186; Clason v. Lawrence, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 48; Bowie v. Minter, 2 Ala. 406. But the court may exercise a discretion whether to dismiss the bill; Murray v. Hay, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 59, 43 Am. Dec. 773; Gilbert v. Sutliff, 3 Ohio St. 129. It may be dismissed wholly, or only as to a portion of the plaintiffs; Myers v. Farrington, 18 Ohio 72. The improper joinder of defendants is no cause of objection by a co-defendant; Toulmin v. Hamilton, 7 Ala. 362; Bugbee v. Sargent, 23 Me. 269. See North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Childs, 86 Wis. 292, 56 N. W. 870.

The objection must be taken before the hearing; Livingston v. Woodworth, 15 How. (U. S.) 546, 14 L. Ed. 809; Trustees of Village of Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 510, 27 Am. Dec. 80; not, however, if it be vital; Winnipissiogee Lake Co. v. Worster, 29 N. H. 433; by demurrer, if apparent on the face of the bill; Talmage v. Pell, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 410; Toulmin v. Hamilton, 7 Ala. 362; McMillan v. Baxley, 112 N. C. 578, 16 S. E. 845; but see Spear v. Campbell, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 424; by plea and answer; or otherwise; Story v. Livingston, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 359, 10 L. Ed. 200; where the defect does not appear upon the face of the petition, objection must be raised by answer; Crenshaw v. Ullman, 113 Mo. 633, 20 S. W. 1077. A defendant who is improperly joined must plead or demur; Lyne v. Guardian, 1 Mo. 410, 13 Am. Dec. 509.

At law, see ABATEMENT; PLEADING.

An answer stating facts showing a misjoinder of plaintiffs, but not objecting to the action on that ground is not sufficient to save such an objection; Donahue v. Bragg, 49 Mo. App. 273; where no objection is made in the court below to a misjoinder of parties defendant, no advantage can be taken of it on appeal; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. City of Denver, 2 Colo. App. 436, 31 Pac. 240.

MISKENNING (Fr. mis, wrong, and Sax. cennan, summon). A wrongful citation to appear in court. A variance in a plea. 1 Mon. Angl. 237; Chart. Hen. II.; Jacob, Law Dict.; Du Cange.

MISNOMER. The use of a wrong name.

In contracts, a mistake in the name will not avoid the contract, in general, if the party can be ascertained; 11 Co. 20; Ld. Raym. 304; Hob. 125. So of contracts of corporations; Hoboken Building Ass'n v. Martin, 13 N. J. Eq. 427. See NAME. If a deed, note, etc., be made to a corporation under an erroneous name, the proper course is for the corporation to sue in its proper name and allege that the defendant made the deed, etc., to the corporation by the name mentioned in the instrument; Northwestern Distilling Co. v. Brant, 69 Ill. 658, 18 Am. Rep. 631. A contract entered into by a corporation under an assumed name may be enforced by either of the parties, and the identity of the company may be established by the ordinary methods of proof; Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. 299.

A misnomer of a legatee will not, in general, avoid a legacy, when the context furnishes the means of correction; Schoul. Wills § 583; see 19 Ves. 381; 1 Rop. Leg. 131; LEGACY. A legacy given to a corporation, either by its corporate name, or by description, is good; in the latter case it must be so designated as to be distinguished from every other corporation; New York Inst. for the Blind v. How's Ex'rs, 10 N. Y. 84. See Preachers' Aid Soc. of Maine Conference of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Rich, 45 Me. 552; Burdine v. Grand Lodge of Alabama, 37 Ala. 478.

When a corporation is misnamed in a statute, the statute is not inoperative if there is enough to designate what corporation is meant; 10 Co. 44, 57 b.

Misnomer of one of the parties to a suit must be pleaded in abatement. It has been held that misnomer of one of the partners of a firm in a scire facias sur mortgage is unimportant, if the name of the firm is correct in the mortgage itself; Rushton v. Rowe, 64 Pa. 63. A slight variation in a corporate name will be disregarded unless the misnomer be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement; Hoereth v. Mill Co., 30 Ill. 151; Thatcher v. Bank, 19 Mich. 196. If a corporation, sued by an erroneous name, appears by that name without objection, the error is cured; Virginia & M. Steam Nav. Co. v. U. S., Taney 418, Fed. Cas. No. 16,973. See Merchants' & Planters' Bank v. Meyer, 56 Ark. 499, 20 S. W. 406. But a writ of mandamus issued against a corporation under an erroneous name is void; 2 Ld. Raym. 1238; and an error in the corporate name in an execution is fatal; Bradford v. Water Lot Co., 58 Ga. 280. The same is true when there is an error in the corporate name in a judgment; 1 Ld. Raym. 117; but see Sherman v. Proprietors of Bridge, 11 Mass. 338.

The names of third persons must be correctly laid; for the error will not be helped by pleading the general issue; but, if a sufficient description be given, it has been held, in a civil case, that the misnomer was immaterial. Example: in an action for medicines alleged to have been furnished to defendant's wife, Mary, and his wife was named Elizabeth, the misnomer was held to be immaterial, the word wife being the material word; 2 Marsh. 159. See Bigelow v. Chatterton, 51 Fed. 614, 2 C. C. A. 402, 10 U. S. App. 267. In indictments, the names of third persons must be correctly given; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 78. If a person is well known by the name in the indictment, the indictment is good; 7 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 445; the middle name of a defendant, if stated in an indictment, either in full or by the initial letter, must be correctly stated; 1 Am. L. Reg. 380. That a party is known by one name as well as another, is a good replication to a plea of misnomer; Parmelee v. Raymond, 43 Ill. App. 609. Accuracy is especially required in stating the correct name of a corporation in all criminal proceedings in which it may be concerned; 1 Leach 253; but see People v. Potter, 35 Cal. 110. See Archbold; Chitty, Pleading; ABATEMENT; CONTRACT; PARTIES; LEGACY; NAME.

MISPLEADING. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is essential to the support or defence of an action, is so called.

Pleading not guilty to an action of debt is an example of the first; setting out a defective title is an example of the second. See 3 Salk. 365.

MISPRISION. In Criminal Law. A term used to signify every considerable misdemeanor which has not a certain name given to it by law. Co. 3d Inst. 36.

The concealment of a crime.

Negative misprision consists in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed.

Misprision of felony is the like concealment of felony, without giving any degree of maintenance to the felon; Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, s. 6, R. S. § 5390; for if any aid be given him, the party becomes an accessory after the fact.

Misprision of treason is the concealment of treason by being merely passive. Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, R. S. § 5333; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 139. If any assistance be given to the traitor, it makes the party a principal, as there are no accessories in treason.

Positive misprision consists in the commission of something which ought not to be done. 4 Bla. Com. c. 9.

It is the duty of every good citizen, knowing of a treason or felony having been committed, to inform a magistrate. Silently to observe the commission of a felony, without using any endeavors to apprehend the offender, is a misprision. 1 Russ. Cr. 43; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 720; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 59, s. 6; 4 Bla. Com. 119.

In Coke's time the term had got an extended meaning; it was not merely a crime of omission, but a crime of commission (3 Inst. 139). In this latter sense it was a vague offence which covered many and various offences. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 312. At present it is the passive omission to do one's duty—to stand by and make no attempt to apprehend the offender or give information to the police. The least degree of assent makes the person a principal in treason, or in felonies a principal or accessory. Odger C. L. 201.

Misprisions which are merely positive are denominated contempts or high misdemeanors: as, for example, dissuading a witness from giving evidence. 4 Bla. Com. 126.

MISREADING. When a deed is read falsely to an illiterate or blind man who is a party to it, such false reading amounts to a fraud, because the contract never had the assent of both parties; 5 Co. 19; 6 East 309. See SIGNATURE.

MISRECITAL. The incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement or a plea: under the latter term is here understood the declaration and all the subsequent pleadings. See RECITAL.

MISREPRESENTATION. The statement made by a party that a thing is in fact in a particular way, when it is not so.

The misrepresentation must be both false and fraudulent in order to make the party making it responsible to the other for damages; Otis v. Raymond, 3 Conn. 413; Emerson v. Brigham, 10 Mass. 197, 6 Am. Dec. 109; Metc. Yelv. 21 a, n. 1. And see 5 Maule & S. 380; 3 B. & P. 370; Wachsmuth v. Martini, 45 Ill. App. 244. Misrepresentation as to a material part of the consideration will avoid an executory contract; Chatham Furnace Co. v. Moffatt, 147 Mass. 403, 18 N. E. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 727; Byrne v. Stewart, 124 Pa. 450, 17 Atl. 19; Angell v. Loomis, 97 Mich. 5, 55 N. W. 1008.

A misrepresentation, to constitute fraud, must be contrary to fact; the party making it must know it to be so; 2 Kent 471; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 142; 4 Price 135; Bradley v. Chase, 22 Me. 511; Dale v. Roosevelt, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 182; Barnard v. Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 139, 2 S. W. 21; King v. Investment Co., 76 Ia. 11, 39 N. W. 919; Stevens v. Allen, 51 Kan. 144, 32 Pac. 922; Childs v. Merrill, 63 Vt. 463, 22 Atl. 626, 14 L. R. A. 264; excluding cases of mere mistake; 5 Q. B. 804; 10 M. & W. 147; Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 309, 46 Am. Dec. 598; Lord v. Colley, 6 N. H. 99, 25 Am. Dec. 445; and including cases where he falsely asserts a personal knowledge; Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 193, 35 Am. Dec. 358; Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 309, 46 Am. Dec. 598; and one which was the inducement to the other party to enter into the contract; Concord Bank v. Gregg, 14 N. H. 331; 1 W. & M. 90, 342; English v. Benedict, 25 Miss. 167; Tindall v. Harkinson, 19 Ga. 448. See Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 260; Pollock, Cont. 542.

A contract is bad where a party is induced to enter into it by the innocent misstatement of facts by another; Mulvey v. King, 39 Ohio St. 491; Hunt v. Blanton, 89 Ind. 38; 2 Kent 471; but the misrepresentation must be the proximate and immediate cause of the transaction; Adams v. Schiffer, 11 Colo. 15, 17 Pac. 21, 7 Am. St. Rep. 202; and part of the same transaction; Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. 733; and the party seeking relief must have relied upon it; Fowler v. McCann, 86 Wis. 427, 56 N. W. 1085. In an action for misrepresentation of facts, it is not always necessary to prove that it was made with a fraudulent intent and with guilty knowledge; Montreal River Lumber Co. v. Mihills, 80 Wis. 540, 50 N. W. 507; but an innocent misrepresentation cannot be proved under a plea of fraud; 21 Can. S. C. R. 359.

To be material, the misrepresentation must be in respect to an ascertainable fact, as distinguished from a mere matter of opinion, judgment, probability, or expectation; if it is vague and indefinite in its nature and terms, or is merely a loose, conjectural, or exaggerated statement, it is not a material misrepresentation; Putman v. Bromwell, 73 Tex. 465, 11 S. W. 491; Finlayson v. Finlayson, 17 Or. 347, 21 Pac. 57, 3 L. R. A. 801, 11 Am. St. Rep. 836; Dawe v. Morris, 149 Mass. 188, 21 N. E. 313, 4 L. R. A. 158, 14 Am. St. Rep. 404.

A representation concerning a man's private rights, though it may involve matters of law, is as a whole deemed to be a statement of fact; 13 Q. B. D. 363; as is a representation that one has extraordinary and supernatural power in curing disease; Jules v. State, 85 Md. 305, 36 Atl. 1027. And representations from one bank to another that a business corporation is prosperous, well organized, doing a large business, and is a valued customer, and that an investigation has been made of its business and responsibility by a bank officer, are also representations of fact and not of opinion; Nevada Bank of San Francisco v. Bank, 59 Fed. 338. "A suppression of the truth may amount to a suggestion of falsehood;" Stewart v. Cattle Ranch Co., 128 U. S. 388, 9 Sup. Ct. 101, 32 L. Ed. 439; Nairn v. Ewalt, 51 Kan. 355, 32 Pac. 1110; and a false pretence need not be in regard to a fact which does in reality exist, but may be that a fact exists when it does not; 14 Crim. L. Mag. 1.

Mere honest expression of opinion will not, as a rule, be regarded as fraud, either as a basis for an action of deceit, or as ground for setting aside a contract, although the opinion may prove to be erroneous; Wise v. Fuller, 29 N. J. Eq. 257; Putman v. Bromwell, 73 Tex. 465, 11 S. W. 491; Max Meadows Land & Improvement Co. v. Brady, 92 Va. 71, 22 S. E. 845; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 8 Sup. Ct. 881, 31 L. Ed. 678; L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 562. And this rule applies ordinarily to statements of the value of property to be bought or sold; Chrysler v. Canaday, 90 N. Y. 272, 43 Am. Rep. 166; Anderson v. McPike, 86 Mo. 293; Lion v. McClory, 106 Cal. 623, 40 Pac. 12; but it cannot be laid down as a matter of law that value is never a material fact; Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68; as where the defendant was employed to value real estate for an intended mortgagee, and gave a valuation which was in fact no valuation at all, it was held that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff which he had failed to discharge, and had made reckless statements on which plaintiff had acted, and therefore defendant was liable to plaintiff for the loss he had sustained; 39 Ch. D. 39.

So the mere puffing of articles to be sold is held not to amount to such a misrepresentation as will amount to fraud; Allen v. Hart, 72 Ill. 104; but this rule applies only when the purchaser has a full and fair opportunity to inspect the article and judge for himself, and not to things which are not the subject of any visible test or examination; Gaty v. Holcomb, 44 Ark. 216; and a vendor may be held guilty of deceit by reason of material untrue representations in respect to his own business or property, the truth of which representation he is bound and must be presumed to know; Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 219, 37 L. Ed. 1215. A person who makes representations of material facts, assuming or intending to convey the impression that he has adequate knowledge of the existence of such facts, when he is conscious that he has no such knowledge, is liable if he knew that they were false; id.

Statements as to future events are mere matters of opinion; Davidson v. Hobson, 59 Mo. App. 130; and however contrary to good faith and sound morals, they cannot form the basis of an action at law or in equity; Dugan v. Cureton, 1 Ark. 31, 31 Am. Dec. 727; but see Harvey v. Hadley, 87 Cal. 557, 26 Pac. 792, where although the question was not raised as to whether misrepresentations of prospects of property sold would entitle one to an action, yet as the measure of damages for such representations was decided, the court seem to have admitted that liability would arise therefrom.

Liability for Honest Misrepresentation. An affirmation of title, though made in good faith by a seller, renders him liable if the title is bad; 1 Ld. Raym. 593; and the law has taken the further step that even without such an affirmation an obligation will be implied, at least if the seller was in possession when the sale took place; 4 A. & E. 473. At the present day it is nearly universal law that any representation of fact as to the quality of the goods, made for the apparent purpose of inducing the buyer to purchase them, amounts to a warranty; Williston, Sales 201. Hence, a warranty of title and a warranty of quality must be a misrepresentation of an existing fact in precisely the same way that a fraudulent misrepresentation must now be, in order to furnish a basis for action. Iler v. Jennings, 87 S. C. 87, 68 S. E. 1041, furnishes an interesting comparison with the well-known case of Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337. In the latter case the plaintiff was induced to take shares in a company by a misrepresentation of the directors in regard to a right which they stated had been given by special act of parliament to use steam or other mechanical motive power. In Iler v. Jennings the plaintiff was induced to buy shares of stock by representations of the seller as to the corporate assets and liabilities. In both cases the reasonable inference was that representations of fact were made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to purchase shares. In Iler v. Jennings it was held that a scienter need not be alleged or proved, but if the statement was made to induce the buyer to purchase, and he did purchase in reliance thereon, the defendant will be held liable. The English case held that the directors were not liable because a scienter was not proved.

An honest misrepresentation, then, made by a seller in regard to the goods sold in order to induce a sale, will render him liable.

Entirely analogous to the law of warranty in the sale of goods is the warranty which the law imposes upon an agent that he is authorized to act as such. The agent either expressly, or by necessary implication of fact, represents that he is an authorized agent, and it was decided in Collen v. Wright, 8 E. & B. 647, that the agent was liable as a warrantor. The case has been followed generally in this country; Mechem, Agency, § 545; and was followed in [1903] A. C. 114.

Liability by Estoppel in Pais. At the present day, though there are many expressions still made use of which seem to indicate that either fraud or culpable negligence is an essential element in estoppel, it is certain that positive statements of fact as to matters upon which the speaker should be correctly informed give rise to an estoppel, though there is neither fraud nor negligence. Thus Lord Esher says: "If a man by express terms or by conduct makes a representation to another of the existence of a certain state of facts which he intends to be acted upon in a certain way, and it be acted upon in that way, in the belief of the existence of such a state of facts, to the damage of him who so believes and acts, the first is estopped from denying the existence of such a state of facts; L. R. 10 C. P. 307, 317. See, also, Nickerson v. Insurance Co., 178 Mass. 308, 59 N. E. 814.

In England according to Derry v. Peek, an action for deceit will not lie for an honest misrepresentation. Many American courts go beyond the limits of the English rule, and hold a defendant liable in deceit, irrespective of good or bad faith, for making a positive false statement as to which he had special means of knowledge; Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 14 Sup. Ct. 219, 37 L. Ed. 1215; Huntress v. Blodgett, 206 Mass. 318, 324, 92 N. E. 427; Hindman v. Bank, 112 Fed. 931, 50 C. C. A. 623, 57 L. R. A. 108; Prestwood v. Carlton, 162 Ala. 327, 50 South. 254; Tate v. Bates, 118 N. C. 287, 24 S. E. 482, 54 Am. St. Rep. 719; Ward v. Trimble, 103 Ky. 153, 44 S. W. 450.

The doctrine that one who positively states a fact as of his own knowledge is liable if the statement is false is not to be confused with the doctrine that if no reasonable ground existed for the statement it is evidence of fraud, or is evidence enough to make out a prima facie case of fraud.

In Michigan, the doctrine is settled that if there was in fact a misrepresentation, though made innocently, and its deceptive influence was effective, the plaintiff would have a right of action for damages caused thereby, either at law or in equity; Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396, 37 N. W. 497.

Where a defendant makes a statement which is false if his words are given the natural meaning which his hearer would give them, but which are true if taken in some unnatural sense which he himself put upon them, there is no dishonesty in the defendant, even though he knew that the facts did not accord with the natural meaning of his words, provided that such natural meaning did not occur to him, it has been held that a defendant is not liable; Nash v. Trust Co., 163 Mass. 574, 40 N. E. 1039, 28 L. R. A. 753, 47 Am. St. Rep. 489; [1891] 2 Ch. 449.

The law of misrepresentation as laid down in Derry v. Peek is hopelessly inconsistent with the law governing misrepresentation where relied on as the basis of warranty or estoppel. See an article by Prof. Williston in 24 Harv. L. R. 451; DECEIT; FRAUD; ESTOPPEL; WARRANTY.

It is not necessary that the misrepresentations should have been made directly to the plaintiff; Pollock, Torts 282; 2 M. & W. 519; it may be published generally with the intention that they may be acted upon by any who choose; 3 B. & Ad. 114; as a time-table of a railway company announcing a train, which is not, in fact, running; 5 E. & B. 860; or a prospectus; L. R. 6 H. L. 377.

Where one states that he knows a thing to exist, when he does not know it to exist, he is guilty of fraud; this rule applies to facts susceptible of actual knowledge, and not matters of opinion, etc.; one who does not know a fact to exist must ordinarily be deemed to know that he does not know; Chatham Furnace Co. v. Moffatt, 147 Mass. 403, 18 N. E. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 727. "If persons take upon themselves to make assertions as to which they are ignorant, whether they are true or untrue, they must, in a civil point of view, be held as responsible as if they had asserted that which they knew to be untrue"; L. R. 4 H. L. 79; this ignorance is conscious ignorance; 14 App. Cas. 371. Where one has honestly made a representation and discovers that it is false before it is acted upon, he is deemed, if he has the means of communicating the truth and does not do so, to be making a false representation with knowledge of its untruth; see 1 D. G. M. & G. 660.

There may be a false pretence by conduct, as where one not a member of the university put on a cap and gown at Oxford and thereupon obtained goods on credit; 7 C. & P. 784; so where one having no money goes into a restaurant and orders a good dinner and cannot pay for it, it was held to be incurring a liability by fraud; 42 Sol. Journ. 78.

An action to recover for false representations made by the seller of personal property does not survive as against his estate, under a statute providing that actions "of trespass and trespass on the case for damages done to . . . personal estate shall survive"; Jones v. Ellis' Estate, 68 Vt. 544, 35 Atl. 488.

In the absence of any bad faith, a principal is not affected by a representation made by his agent, which the former knew to be untrue, as he would be by a fraudulent representation made either by himself or his agent; 2 Kent 621, n.; 1 H. L. C. 615; Cornfoot v. Fowke, 6 M. & W. 358; contra, Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129, 52 Am. Dec. 46; 3 Q. B. 58. See Pollock, Torts 384; Benj. Sales § 445; Broom, Leg. Max. 707.

In the 1911 edition of Leake on Contracts, the editor says in the preface: "I think the time has now arrived when Cornfoot v. Fowke, 6 M. & W. 358, may be consigned to oblivion." Pollock (Contracts [1911] 609) seems to be in accord with this view. See also a discussion of the case in Pollock, Torts (1897 ed.) 291.

Where a purchaser has been induced to buy through the fraud of an agent, the vendor being innocent, he may rescind the contract or maintain an action of deceit against the agent personally, but against the principal he can maintain no action unless there was a warranty; Benj. Sales § 467, notes. See 3 Am. L. Rev. 430; Bigel. L. C. Torts 21; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray (Mass.) 436.

If a principal knows the representation of his agent to be false and authorizes him to make it, the former is liable; if the agent makes the representation without specific authority, but not believing it to be true, the principal is liable (6 M. & W. 373); as to whether, in such case if the agent does believe the representation to be true, the principal is liable, is doubtful in England; Pollock, Torts 291. See AGENTS; see, generally, DECEIT; FRAUD.

MISSÆ PRESBYTER. A priest in orders. Blount; Cowell.

MISSILIA. In Roman Law. Gifts which officers were in the habit of throwing among the people. Inst. 2, 1, 45.

MISSING SHIP. A ship which has been at sea and unheard from for so long a time as to give rise to the presumption that she has perished with all on board.

There is no precise time fixed as to when the presumption is to arise; and this must depend upon the circumstances of each case; 2 Stra. 1199; Park. Ins. 63; Marsh. Ins. 488; Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 150; Holt 242.

MISSING WORD COMPETITIONS. See LOTTERY.

MISSIO. In Roman Law. Letting go or sending away.

MISSIO IN BONA. Execution against the property of a debtor by which a creditor was empowered to take possession of the entire estate of the debtor. Sohm, Rom. L. 211.

MISSIO IN POSSESSIONEM. A writ by which a creditor obtained actual control, or mere detention of a thing as security for his claim, without any right of sale or action. Sohm, Rom. L. 275.

MISSISSIPPI. The name of one of the United States of America.

The territory of Mississippi, embracing the present states of Alabama and Mississippi, was authorized to be organized by act of congress, of April 9, 1778, and organized on 22d January, 1779. Georgia, from which the territory was formed, ceded it to the United States on April 24, 1802.

The western part of the Mississippi territory was authorized to form a state government to be known as the state of Mississippi, by act of congress passed March 1, 1817, and the state was admitted into the Union December 10, 1817.

The first constitution of the state was adopted at Washington, August 15, 1817. The second at Jackson, October 26, 1832. This was amended in August, 1865, so as to strike out the word "white," and to abolish and to eliminate everything connected with the institution of slavery. The third, at Jackson, on May 15, 1868, ratified by the people on December 1, 1869, and went into operation in 1870, on the readmission of the state into the Union under the Reconstruction Acts of congress. The fourth was adopted in convention November 1, 1890, to take effect from that date.

MISSOURI. The name of one of the United States of America.

It was formed out of part of the territory ceded to the United States by the French Republic by treaty of April 30, 1803, and admitted into the Union by a resolution of congress approved March 2, 1821.

To this resolution there was a condition, which, having been performed, the admission of Missouri as a state was completed by the president's proclamation, dated August 10, 1821.

The convention which formed the constitution of this state met at St. Louis, on Monday, June 12, 1820, and continued by adjournment till July 19, 1820, when the constitution was adopted, establishing "an independent republic, by the name of the 'State of Missouri.'"

An amendment in 1912 provided for the erection of a new capitol building, and another was adopted relating to the ages of pupils in the public schools.

MISSURA. The ceremonies used in a Roman Catholic church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

MISTAKE. Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Story, Eq. Jur. § 110; 46 Wis. 118.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, he would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 358.

A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Bisp. Eq. § 185. The essential element of mistake is a mental condition or conception or deviation of the understanding either in a passive or active state; when passive, it may consist of unconsciousness, ignorance, or forgetfulness, and when active, it may be a belief. The first condition must always be a fact material to the transaction, while in the second, the belief may be that a matter or thing exists at the present time which really does not exist, or that it existed at some past time when it did not really exist. All particular errors which fall under either condition are mistakes of fact which are a ground of equitable relief. These mistakes may arise from ignorance; Briggs v. Vanderbilt, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 222; in forgetfulness of a fact past; Durkin v. Cranston, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 442; of a fact present; Huthmacher v. Harris' Adm'rs, 38 Pa. 491, 80 Am. Dec. 502; in unconsciousness; McDaniels v. Bank, 29 Vt. 238, 70 Am. Dec. 406; in belief of a thing which does not exist; Rheel v. Hicks, 25 N. Y. 289; of things which have not existed; Martin v. McCormick, 8 N. Y. 335. See 6 L. R. A. 835, n.

Mistake Generally. It is the general rule, subject to varying restrictions, that equity will relieve against instruments made under mistake; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 15 Pet. 233, 10 L. Ed. 721; Rosevelt v. Dale, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 129; Bingham v. Bingham, 1 Ves. Sr. 126.

When a mistake in the expression of a written contract is so obvious, without extrinsic evidence, as to leave no doubt of the intention of the parties, the writing may be so construed as to correct the mistake; 5 H. L. C. 40; L. R. 9 Eq. 507.

The word which the parties intended to use in an instrument may be substituted for one which was actually used by a clerical error, in equity; Adams, Eq. 169; Canedy v. Marcy, 13 Gray (Mass.) 373; Stone v. Hale, 17 Ala. 562, 52 Am. Dec. 185; Providence Wash. Ins. Co. v. Brummelkamp, 58 Fed. 918. Equity will not correct a mistake in a voluntary deed by inserting the word "heirs" omitted by inadvertence of the draughtsman; but otherwise, when the deed is supported by a valuable or meritorious consideration; Powell v. Morisey, 98 N. C. 426, 4 S. E. 185, 2 Am. St. Rep. 343.

As to mistakes in wills, they are not rendered invalid merely because the testator had not correctly informed himself as to all the facts and circumstances surrounding him; In re Bethune's Will, 48 Hun 614; id., 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 294; or for a mere misconception of fact or law; Monroe v. Barclay, 17 Ohio St. 302, 93 Am. Dec. 620; or a mistake as to a fact which might have led to a different conclusion; In re Tousey's Will, 34 Misc. 363, 69 N. Y. Supp. 846; unless the mistake be such as to affect the testimentary intentions; Boell v. Schwartz, 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 12; or in the nomination of an executor; In re Finn's Estate, 1 Misc. 280, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1066; or a mere mistake by the draftsman of the will; Whitlock v. Wardlaw, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 453; or the misspelling of testator's name; Succession of Crouzeilles, 106 La. 442, 31 South. 64. A will is not to be set aside on account of a mistake of law or fact as to the effect of testator's acts or dispositions, but only on account of a mistake as to the paper itself or its contents; Couch v. Eastham, 27 W. Va. 796, 55 Am. Rep. 346.

As to the rule for the correction of mistakes in wills, see Story, Eq. Jur. 179; 2 Ves. 216; 3 id. 321; 1 Bro. C. C. 85; 3 id. 446; 1 Keen 692; 2 K. & J. 740; [1893] Prob. 1.

As to the effect of a mistake in an award, see ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

A mistake sometimes prevents a forfeiture in cases of violation of revenue laws, as where the owner of property was ignorant of the illegal intention of the vessel on which it was shipped; U. S. v. Guillem, 11 How. 47, 13 L. Ed. 599; or where a mistake in the entry at the custom house is set up as an excuse; U. S. v. Nine Packages of Linen, 1 Paine 129, Fed. Cas. No. 15,884 (where it was held that the mistake need not be made out by an unusually clear case, but only by ordinary proof); in order to justify a forfeiture, there must not be mere mistake in valuation, but fraudulent intention and design; U. S. v. Fourteen Packages of Pins, 1 Gilpin 235, Fed. Cas. No. 15,151.

The mutual mistake of parties to a deed as to the extent of the grantor's title will frequently justify the rescission of the sale and cancellation of the deed by a court of equity. This relief has been granted to the vendor where the deed was executed under a mistaken theory of the law of descent; Lansdown v. Lansdown, Mosely 364; or as to the number of persons interested; Irick v. Fulton, 3 Grat. (Va.) 193; or as to the validity and extent of the vendor's title; McCormick v. Miller, 102 Ill. 208, 40 Am. Rep. 577; Kennedy v. Johnson, 2 Bibb. (Ky.) 12, 4 Am. Dec. 666 (where the grantee knew and would not inform the grantor of the truth); or as to the result of suit determining the title; Mason v. Pelletier, 82 N. C. 40; or as to the extent of the grantor's title and the mistake was mutual; Castleman v. Castleman, 184 Mo. 432, 83 S. W. 757; Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 60 S. E. 736, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, and note collecting the cases on the subject. Relief has also been afforded to the vendee where the vendor had no title and the conveyance contained no covenant of title; Hadlock v. Williams, 10 Vt. 570; and where there was a mutual mistake as to the vendor's title; Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155; Bingham v. Bingham, 1 Ves. Sr. 127. But relief has been refused in some cases upon the facts of the case although the doctrine was admitted, as where the title was in litigation and both parties knew of it; Allen v. Brooks, 88 Wis. 265, 60 N. W. 253; or when the vendor subsequently acquired the title he assumed to convey and it enured to the benefit of the vendee; Cochran v. Pascault, 54 Md. 1.

Mistake of Law. It is frequently said that as a general rule, both at law and in equity, mistakes of law do not furnish an excuse for wrongful acts or a ground of relief from the consequences of acts done in consequence of such a mistake; Mellish v. Robertson, 25 Vt. 603; Clapp v. Hoffman, 159 Pa. 531, 28 Atl. 362; Zenor v. Johnson, 107 Ind. 69, 7 N. E. 751; Norton v. Highleyman, 88 Mo. 621; Crosier v. Acer, 7 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 137; Harner v. Price, 17 W. Va. 523; McMurray v. Oil Mfg. Co., 33 Mo. 377.

The rule was expressed by Chancellor Kent to the effect that the "court does not relieve parties from their acts and deeds fairly done, on a full knowledge of the facts, though under a mistake of the law; but every person is charged, at his peril, with a knowledge of the law"; Lyon v. Richmond, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 51. It is true that this so-called rule has been declared by courts in general terms, and it is a popular derivative of the maxim that "ignorance of the law excuses no man"; but this application of the maxim is fallacious, and there is no such rule of exclusion from relief either at law or in equity of suitors who seek to have some legal act declared void upon the ground that it was done through mistake of law; King v. Doolittle, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 77.

Perhaps the true rule cannot be better expressed than in the language of Mr. Justice Washington, in Sims v. Lyle, 4 Wash. C. C. 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,892: "If the mistake be nothing more than a misconception of the law . . . I can only say that such a mistake is not a ground of relief. For ignorance is not mistake; and equity will not grant relief upon the mere supposition that the party was ignorant of the legal effect of his act, or of his omission to act." Mistake is capable of proof, ignorance is not; the former is action after reasoning, the latter without it; Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155.

As long ago as 1823, in Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'r, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 215, it was said by Marshall, C. J., that, "although we do not find the naked principle, that relief may be granted on account of ignorance of law, asserted in the books, we find no case in which it has been decided that a plain acknowledged mistake in law is beyond the reach of equity." In U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall. 395, 409, 19 L. Ed. 937, where the question was of the validity of a bond under the revenue laws, the court said: "Every one is presumed to know the law. Ignorance standing alone can never be the basis of a legal right." This probably indicates the true rule, corresponding as it does with the language above quoted from Washington, J. It is said that a mistake of law standing absolutely alone is not a ground of relief, but when, as is usually the case, there are circumstances which enable the court to treat the mistake as based in some degree upon matter of fact as well as of law, they will do so; there must be other equitable elements; Lowndes v. Chisolon, 2 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 455, 16 Am. Dec. 667; Sandlin v. Ward, 94 N. C. 490; Green v. R. Co., 12 N. J. Eq. 165; Terry v. Moore, 12 Misc. 641, 33 N. Y. Supp. 846; Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 11 Sup. Ct. 972, 999, 35 L. Ed. 678; Trigg v. Read, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 529, 42 Am. Dec. 447. Such was the effect of Wheeler v. Smith, 9 How. (U. S.) 55, where a compromise of the claim of the heir to an estate bequeathed for a charitable use was held invalid because the heir was young, needy, and inexperienced, as well as pressed for money, and the executors, who were men of high character, had assured the heir that the bequest was considered to be good. In State v. Paup, 13 Ark. 129, 56 Am. Dec. 303, a distinction is drawn between ignorance of the existence of a law and of its legal effect, and mistake as to the latter may be relieved, where such mistake is shared by each of the contracting parties; Dolvin v. American Harrow Co., 125 Ga. 699, 54 S. E. 706, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785; Loss v. Obrey, 22 N. J. Eq. 52. A mistake of law, in the sense of this question, has been defined to be a wrong conclusion as to the legal effect or consequence of known facts; Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 355, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Deseret Nat. Bank v. Dinwoodey, 17 Utah 43, 53 Pac. 215; Purvines v. Harrison, 151 Ill. 219, 37 N. E. 705; and this includes the construction of words; id. Where the terms used in writing the contract do not express the legal effect intended by the parties, relief will generally be given, otherwise when the real meaning of the parties is expressed and the mistake is as to its legal effect, without other equitable features; Richmond v. R. Co., 44 Or. 48, 74 Pac. 333; Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Bldg. Co. v. Sloan, 21 Fed. 561; Showman v. Miller, 6 Md. 479. So also if a contracting party knows that the other party is proceeding upon a mistake in law, there might arise a consideration of fraud in his taking advantage of the other's mistake; Whelen's Appeal, 70 Pa. 410, 425; Mason v. Pelletier, 82 N. C. 40; Hardigree v. Mitchum, 51 Ala. 151; McCormick v. Miller, 102 Ill. 208, 40 Am. Rep. 577; particularly where there has been reliance upon the advice of, or misplaced confidence in, the other party; Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470, 27 N. W. 651; or where a mistake purely of law is accompanied by such circumstances as misrepresentation, undue influence or misplaced confidence; Carley v. Lewis, 24 Ind. 23; Burke & Williams v. Mackenzie, 124 Ga. 248, 52 S. E. 653.

In the leading case of Bilbie v. Lumley, 2 East 469, it was held by Lord Ellenborough that money paid by mistake of law could not be recovered back even though the circumstances made it inequitable for the defendant to retain it. It is stated that counsel for the plaintiff was asked whether he could state any case where money could be recovered back after payment in ignorance of the law. The counsel, described "as a most experienced advocate" (Brisbon v. Dacres, 5 Taunt. 144), appears to have made no reply, although several cases were said to have existed at that time; 5 Colum. L. Rev. 366, where the cases are cited with the comment that had they been properly urged upon the court the question would doubtless have been settled correctly, whereas the rule then established has been in the main consistently followed; Elliot v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 9 L. Ed. 373; Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 355, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265, 79 Am. Dec. 176; and the rule applies to money paid by a county; Wayne County v. Randall, 43 Mich. 137, 5 N. W. 75. It has not been, however, without a struggle by the courts to escape from its rigor and apparent injustice; Northrop's Ex'rs v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264, where the court said: "The mind no more assents to the payment made under a mistake of the law, than if made under a mistake of the facts; the delusion is the same in both cases; in both, alike, the mind is influenced by false motives." And in another state a similar view has been acted upon in a great variety of cases, money having been recovered back which had been paid under an invalid ordinance; Bruner v. Stanton, 102 Ky. 459, 43 S. W. 411; under an unconstitutional statute; Board of Trustees v. Board of Education, 75 S. W. 225, 25 Ky. L. R. 341; or taxes illegally assessed under a mistake of law; City of Louisville v. Henning, 1 Bush (Ky.) 381; money paid to a gas company as meter rent, though the payment was voluntary; Capital Gas & Elec. Light Co. v. Gaines, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1464, 49 S. W. 462, where the court quoted its own language in City of Covington v. Powell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 226: "Upon the whole, . . . whenever, by a clear and palpable mistake of law or fact, essentially bearing upon and affecting the contract, money has been paid, without cause or consideration, which, in law, honor, or conscience, ought not to be retained, it was, and ought to be recovered back." The same disposition to rebel against the rule is observed in some English cases; Rogers v. Ingam, L. R. 3 Ch. D. 351; Daniel v. Sinclair, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 181.

In some of the states the rule has been modified by statute. This subject is very effectively discussed and the cases examined by Frederick C. Woodward, 5 Colum. L. Rev. 366, where an abrogation of the rule is urged upon the courts and legislatures.

In many other cases a mistake in law has been held good ground for such relief; Northrop's Ex'rs v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264; Culbreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 64, 50 Am. Dec. 375; Covington v. Powell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 226; contra, Nelson v. Davis, 40 Ind. 366; Smith v. MacDougall, 2 Cal. 586; and it is said that the weight of authority is with the affirmative; 13 Y. L. J. 201, where it is also said that in England it is well settled that a mistake either of law or fact is ground of equitable relief; Moses v. McFarland, 2 Burr. 1005; Farmer v. Arundel, 2 W. Bla. 824. The conclusion of the law journal cited is probably correct and it may be safely stated that the power of courts of equity to afford relief from the consequences of the mistakes of parties to written instruments is not strictly limited to mistakes of fact, but extends also to mistakes of law; Benson v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 30, 33 N. W. 38, 5 Am. St. Rep. 816; Whitmore v. Hay, 85 Wis. 240, 55 N. W. 708, 39 Am. St. Rep. 838; see Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 11 Sup. Ct. 972, 999, 35 L. Ed. 678; it will correct an instrument where it is fully and clearly inconsistent with a prior agreement and with the purpose for which it was designated, or if it fails to express the intention of the parties; Kornegay v. Everett, 99 N. C. 30, 5 S. E. 418. So it is settled, both in England and the United States, that money paid under a mistake of fact can be recovered, and it is generally stated that, in neither country can there be a recovery of money paid under a mistake of law; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 225; see 6 Harv. L. Cas. 798; 4 Ch. Div. 693; unless perhaps, when paid to an officer of the court; L. R. 9 Ch. 609. For an agreement that there can be a recovery in either case in England, see 7 Columb. L. Rev. 476. It was held that money paid under bona fide forgetfulness may be recovered back; Kelly v. Solari, 9 M. & W. 54.

It has been said that courts cannot relieve against ignorance of the law but will grant relief against a mistake of the law; Hopkins' Ex'rs v. Mazyck, 1 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 242.

When both parties are under a common mistake of law as to the application of their contract, it can be applied only according to their intention and not otherwise; 46 L. J. Q. B. 213. And, if parties contract under a common misapprehension as to their relative and respective rights, the contract may be liable to be set aside as inapplicable to the state of rights really existing; Cooper v. Fibbs, L. R. 2 H. L. 170, where Lord Westbury drew a distinction between a mistake of private rights and one of general law, and said that the word jus in the maxim ignorantia juris haud excusat, denotes general law and not private rights. The distinction was applied in Beauchamp v. Winn, L. R. 6 H. L. 223, where it was held that if the mistake arose from ignorance of a well-known rule of law, the court would not interfere, but if it was upon the construction of a document of doubtful meaning the maxim did not apply and relief would be granted; and also in Brock v. Weiss, 44 N. J. L. 241, where it was held that the maxim that ignorance of the law is no excuse, is not universally applicable, but only when damages have been inflicted or crimes committed; but it will not excuse in a civil case, a wrong done or a right withheld; Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155; Rochester & K. F. Land Co. v. Davis, 79 Hun 69, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1148; nor affect contracts, or excuse parties from the consequences of particular acts; Dailey v. Jessup, 72 Mo. 144; Rankin v. Mortimere, 7 Watts (Pa.) 372.

A mistake as to legal rights where they are of a doubtful character will be relieved in equity; Lammot's Heirs v. Bowly's Heirs, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 500.

A unilateral mistake of which the other party to a compact is ignorant is no ground for avoiding the contract; Tatum v. Lumber Co., 16 Idaho 471, 101 Pac. 957, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1109; otherwise if the vendee has knowledge that the vendor has made an error in computation; Everson v. Granite Co., 65 Vt. 658, 27 Atl. 320; or if the vendee who was an experienced buyer must have known that the low price named in a letter was a typographical error; Buckberg v. Washburn-Crosby Co., 115 Mo. App. 701, 92 S. W. 733.

An agreement made for the purpose of settling rights, with full knowledge of the doubts arising upon them, will be enforced, and parties will not be allowed to state that they were under a misapprehension as to the law; 1 S. & S. 555; Bell v. Lawrence's Adm'r, 51 Ala. 160; 3 Lead. Cas. Eq. 411; Good v. Herr, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 253, 42 Am. Dec. 236. This is particularly the case in relation to family settlements; and where such agreements "have been fairly entered into without concealment or imposition on either side . . . a court of equity will not disturb the quiet which is the consequence of the agreement"; per Eldon, L. C., in Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swanst. 463; and a family compromise may be binding even if entered into through mistake induced by a solicitor representing all parties, but not where the legal adviser has suppressed material facts; Stewart v. Stewart, 6 Cl. & Fin. 911; In re Roberts [1905] 1 Ch. 704; Shartel's Appeal, 64 Pa. 25. Inadvertence and mistake are, equally with fraud and wrong, grounds for judicial interference to divest a title acquired thereby; Williams v. U. S., 138 U. S. 514, 11 Sup. Ct. 457, 34 L. Ed. 1026. If parties enter into an agreement for the purpose of settling their rights with full knowledge of the doubts arising upon them, the courts will enforce such agreement even though they are erroneously advised as to the law, but being informed on what circumstances the question of law depends and how it may be tried, they may determine whether to press or abandon the question; Stone v. Godfrey, 5 De G. M. & G. 76. And this disposition of the courts to sustain such agreements extends generally to the compromise of doubtful rights or claims; Mills' Heirs v. Lee, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 91, 17 Am. Dec. 118; Perkins v. Gay, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 327, 8 Am. Dec. 653; Wells v. Neff, 14 Or. 66, 12 Pac. 88. For a full and analytical discussion of relief from mistakes of law and a collection and classification of the cases, see note to Dolvin v. Harrow Co., supra, in 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785–933.

In a number of cases the question has been raised as to the right of one party to a construction contract to rescind on the ground of a mistake in computation in the bid and there is some conflict of decision. Relief was granted in such case in Neill v. Midland R. Co., 20 L. T. N. S. 864; Dunn v. O'Mara, 70 Ill. App. 609; Board of School Com'rs of City of Indianapolis v. Bender, 36 Ind. App. 164, 72 N. E. 154 (where it was considered that the error was made without fault and the minds of the parties never met); Harran v. Foley, 62 Wis. 584, 22 N. W. 837 (where the grounds of the decision were similar); Long v. Inhabitants of Athol, 196 Mass. 497, 82 N. E. 665, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96 (where the mistake was caused by an erroneous estimate of the public engineer).

Relief was refused in Crilly v. Board of Education, 54 Ill. App. 371 (where the mistake was due to the failure to exercise ordinary care); Moffett, H. & C. Co. v. Rochester, 178 U. S. 373, 20 Sup. Ct. 957, 44 L. Ed. 1108, reversing 91 Fed. 28, 33 C. C. A. 319, 62 U. S. App. 392, and affirming 82 Fed. 255 (where it was held that no contract was entered into and the court could not reform the proposal, but it enjoined the defendant from forfeiting the bond); Steinmeyer v. Schroeppel, 226 Ill. 9, 80 N. E. 564, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 114, and note, 117 Am. St. Rep. 224. There is also a conflict of decision as to whether money paid under a mistake of fact may be recovered back. Such recovery has been allowed in Wolf v. Beaird, 123 Ill. 585, 15 N. E. 161, 5 Am. St. Rep. 565; Mansfield v. Lynch, 59 Conn. 320, 22 Atl. 313, 12 L. R. A. 285; Tarplee v. Capp, 25 Ind. App. 56, 56 N. E. 270. On the other hand, recovery was refused in Lawson's Adm'rs v. Hansborough, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 147; Carson v. McFarland, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 118, 19 Am. Dec. 627.

Where a note was signed under a mistake as to its contents, the maker having negligently failed to read it, no fraud being shown, he was liable; Walton Guano Co. v. Copelan, 112 Ga. 319, 37 S. W. 411, 52 L. R. A. 268; but where there was fraudulent misrepresentation the liability of the maker turns upon the question of his negligence, which may estop him from denying liability to an innocent holder; Foster v. MacKinnon, L. R. 4 C. P. 704.

See "A Critical Analysis of the Law as to Mistake in Its Effect upon Contracts" by Truman Post Young, in 38 Am. L. Rev. 334.

Mistake of Fact. An act done or a contract made under a mutual mistake or ignorance of a material fact is voidable and relievable in equity; Pollock, Contr. 442; Story, Eq. Jur. § 140; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 417, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055. The rule applies to cases where there has been a studied suppression of facts by one side, and to cases of mutual ignorance or mistake; 12 Sim. 465; Allen v. Hammond, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 71, 9 L. Ed. 633; Diman v. R. Co., 5 R. I. 130; McHarry v. Irvin's Ex'r, 85 Ky. 322, 3 S. W. 374, 4 S. E. 800; Martinsburg Bank v. Supply Co., 150 Pa. 36, 24 Atl. 754; Elwood v. Stewart, 5 Wash. 736, 32 Pac. 735, 1000; Christopher & T. St. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 78 Hun 462, 29 N. Y. Supp. 233; Gould v. Emerson, 160 Mass. 438, 35 N. E. 1065, 39 Am. St. Rep. 501; Park Bros. & Co. v. Blodgett & Clapp Co., 64 Conn. 28, 29 Atl. 133. See U. S. v. Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450; Lovell v. Wall, 31 Fla. 73, 12 South. 659; Deischer v. Price, 148 Ill. 383, 36 N. E. 105. But the fact must be material to the contract, i. e. essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its concoction; Bailey v. James, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 468, 62 Am. Dec. 659; Voorhees v. De Meyer, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 37; McAninch v. Laughlin, 13 Pa. 371. See Dambmann v. Schulting, 75 N. Y. 55; Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 55, 23 L. Ed. 798. And as a ground for reforming an instrument the mistake must be mutual; Gano v. Palo Pinto County, 71 Tex. 99, 8 S. W. 634; Steinberg v. Ins. Co., 49 Mo. App. 255; German American Ins. Co. v. Davis, 131 Mass. 316; Roszell v. Roszell, 109 Ind. 354, 10 N. E. 114; Hallam v. Corlett, 71 Ia. 446, 32 N. W. 449. But equity will not afford relief in cases of mutual mistake of legal rights where it is impossible to restore both parties to the status quo; Fink v. Bank, 178 Pa. 154, 35 Atl. 636, 56 Am. St. Rep. 746. A mistake will not be relieved against if it was the result of the party's negligence; Lewis v. Lewis, 5 Or. 169; 12 Cl. & F. 248; Diman v. R. Co., 5 R. I. 130; Bonney v. Stoughton, 122 Ill. 536, 13 N. E. 833; Appeal of Weller, 103 Pa. 594; Massey v. Ins. Co., 70 Ga. 794. If the mistake, as to the expression of an agreement, is only on one side, there will be no relief. But if such a mistake on the part of one party be known to the other at the time, the contract can be avoided at common law, if not reduced to writing; L. R. 6 Q. B. 597. In equity, a mistake of one party known to the other may not only preclude the latter from obtaining specific performance, but may also be a ground for setting aside the contract altogether; Leake, Contr. 318; 30 Beav. 445. When a written contract contains a mistake common to both parties in expressing its terms, equity will give relief by restraining proceedings at law or by rectifying the writing or setting it aside; Leake, Contr. 319. An act done intentionally and with knowledge, cannot be treated as a mistake; Griffith v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 165.

Where an attorney acting under general instructions of his client to compromise a litigation consents to a compromise under a misapprehension, neither the client nor the counsel are bound thereby and the court will set it aside on application; [1895] 2 Ch. 638.

MISTRIAL. A trial which is erroneous on account of some defect in the persons trying, as if the jury come from the wrong county, or because there was no issue formed, as if no plea be entered, or some other defect of jurisdiction. 3 Cro. 284; 2 Maule & S. 270.

Where a jury is discharged without a verdict, the proceeding is properly known as a mistrial; Fisk v. Henarie, 32 Fed. 427.

Consent of parties cannot help such a trial, when past; Hob. 5.

It is error to go to trial without a plea or an issue, in the absence of counsel and without his consent, although an affidavit of defence be filed in the case, containing the substance of a plea, and the court has ordered the case on the list for trial; Ensly v. Wright, 3 Pa. 501.

On an indictment for perjury, an infant under the age of twenty-one years, and not otherwise qualified, not having, in fact, been summoned, personated his father as a juror. Here was a mistrial, because the verdict in the case was the verdict of but eleven jurors. "To support a judgment," observed Justice Holroyd, "it must be founded on a verdict delivered by twelve competent jurors. This man was incompetent, and therefore there has been a mistrial." 7 D. & R. 684. See 4 B. & Ald. 430; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; NEW TRIAL.

MISUSER. An unlawful use of a right.

In cases of public offices and franchises, a misuser is sufficient to cause the right to be forfeited. 2 Bla. Com. 153; Comstock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 163.

MITIGATION. Reduction; diminution; lessening of the amount of a penalty or punishment.

Circumstances which do not amount to a justification or excuse of the act committed may yet be properly considered in mitigation of the punishment: as, for example, the fact that one who stole a loaf of bread was starving.

In actions for the recovery of damages, matters may often be given in evidence in mitigation of damages which are no answer to the action itself. See DAMAGES; CHARACTER.

MITIOR SENSUS. See IN MITIORI SENSU.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS FINIS. An abolished judicial writ, addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of the fine acknowledged before justices in eyre into the common pleas. Reg. Orig. 14.

MITTER (L. Fr.). To put, to send, or to pass: as, mitter avant, to present to a court; mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. 2 Bla. Com. 324; Bacon, Abr. Release (C); Co. Litt. 193, 273 b. Mitter a large, to put or set at large.

MITTIMUS. In Old English Law. A writ enclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine: it derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc. Territory v. Hattick, 2 Mart. O. S. (La.) 88.

In Criminal Practice. A precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of the peace, or other competent officer, directed to the jailer or keeper of a prison, commanding him to receive and safely keep a person charged with an offence therein named, until he shall be delivered by due course of law. Co. Litt. 590.

MIXED ACTION. See ACTION.

MIXED BLOOD. See INDIANS.

MIXED CONTRACT. See CONTRACT.

MIXED GOVERNMENT. A government established with some of the powers of a monarchial, aristocratical, and democratical government. See GOVERNMENT; MONARCHY.

MIXED JURY. A jury composed partly of white men and partly of negroes. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

One consisting partly of citizens and partly of aliens. See MEDIETAS LINGUÆ; JURY.

MIXED LARCENY. Compound larceny, which see.

MIXED MARRIAGE. A marriage between persons of different nationalities or of different races. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

MIXED POLICY. See POLICY.

MIXED PRESUMPTION. See PRESUMPTION.

MIXED PROPERTY. That kind of property which is not altogether real nor personal, but a compound of both. Heirlooms, tombstones, monuments in a church, and title-deeds to an estate, are of this nature. 2 Bla. Com. 428; 3 B. & Ad. 174; 4 Bingh. 106. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MIXED QUESTION. A question involving matters of law and of fact, or one arising from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; LEX LOCI; JURY.

MIXED TITHES. In Ecclesiastical Law. "Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground:" e. g., colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. L. 380; 2 Bla. Com. 24.

MIXED TRIBUNALS. A name given to an international jurisdiction introduced into Egypt in 1878, after negotiations with the various Christian Powers of Europe. This tribunal made the administration of civil justice quite independent of the government of Egypt. They have jurisdiction over cases between persons of different nationalities, whether native or European, but criminal charges against natives are heard in the native criminal courts and those against Europeans in the proper consular courts. There are three first instance courts, one at Alexandria with eighteen judges, of whom twelve are foreign, one at Cairo with nineteen judges, of whom thirteen are foreign, and one at Mansurah with nine judges, of whom six are foreign, and a Court of Appeal sitting at Alexandria, composed of fifteen judges.

The jurisdiction cannot be invoked unless one party is a foreigner, but it is said to be not uncommon for Egyptian merchants to assign their claims to foreigners, so as to get them into these courts. See Ann. Bull. of Comp. Law Bureau, 1911, p. 43.

The judges are subjects of various European states, and of the United States and Brazil. They are appointed by their respective governments; Milner, England in Egypt.

These courts were instituted for a period of five years only, and have been renewed at various times. Bonfils, Manual of Int. Law 460; 23 L. Q. R. 409; and see 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 445.

MIXTION. The putting of different goods or chattels together in such a manner that they can no longer be separated: as, putting the wines of two different persons into the same barrel, the grain of several persons into the same bag, and the like.

The intermixture may be occasioned by the wilful act of the party, or owner of one of the articles, by the wilful act of a stranger, by the negligence of the owner or a stranger, or by accident. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MOB (Lat. mobilis, movable). A tumultuous rout or rabble; a crowd excited to some violent or unlawful act. The word in legal use is practically synonymous with riot, but the latter is the more correct term.

At common law a municipal corporation is not liable for damage to property by a mob; County of Allegheny v. Gibson's Son & Co., 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670; Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Poultney, 25 Md. 107; nor for the failure of its officers to repress a mob; Campbell's Adm'x v. City Council of Montgomery, 53 Ala. 527, 25 Am. Rep. 656; Hart v. Bridgeport, 13 Blatchf. 282, Fed. Cas. No. 6,149. The legislature may, however, give a right of action against the corporation for damages caused by a mob, and provide the measure of damages; Atchison v. Twine, 9 Kan. 350; Solomon v. City of Kingston, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 562; Wing Chung v. Mayor, etc., of City of Los Angeles, 47 Cal. 531; Brightman v. Inhabitants of Bristol, 65 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711. Such a right of action has been provided by statute in Pennsylvania against the county in which the damage was caused. The right to sue a city for damages caused by a mob is purely statutory and can be taken away even after judgment obtained; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936.

An Illinois statute rendering municipalities liable for damages to property caused by mob violence is valid under the police power, and a classification in such act between cities and unincorporated sub-divisions of the county is not unreasonable; City of Chicago v. Sturges, 222 U. S. 313, 32 Sup. Ct. 92, 56 L. Ed. 215, citing Darlington v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248, and Fauvia v. City of New Orleans, 20 La. Ann. 410; County of Allegheny v. Gibson's Son & Co., 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670; referring to the liability of the "hundred" and that created under statutes from 1285 to 8 George II.

A tumultuous gathering in the streets in connection with two newly married persons was held a mob for whose acts in injuring a child the municipality was held liable to the child in Cherryvale v. Hawman, 80 Kan. 170, 101 Pac. 994, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645, 133 Am. St. Rep. 195, 18 Ann. Cas. 149.

Recovery under a state statute against a city or county must be against the one where the property destroyed was situated and not where the mob originated; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Jersey City, 207 Fed. 871.

As all the parties in any way concerned with an unlawful killing by a mob are liable in solido, it is proper to join, as a party defendant with the individuals who participated in the killing, the city in which the act was committed, on the ground of its negligence in not preventing the killing; Comitez v. Parkerson, 50 Fed. 170; and independently of any misconduct on the part of the city or county to which the loss is attributed, a state may constitutionally compel such county or city to indemnify against losses of property from mobs and riots within their limits; Pennsylvania Co. v. City of Chicago, 81 Fed. 317. See LYNCH LAW; RIOT.

MOBILIA. See MOVABLES.

MOCK. To deride, to laugh at, to ridicule, to treat with scorn and contempt. State v. Warner, 34 Conn. 279.

MODE. The manner in which a thing is done; as the mode of proceeding, the mode of process. Anderson's L. Dict.

MODEL. A machine made on a small scale to show the manner in which it is to be worked or employed.

A copy or imitation of the thing intended to be represented. State v. Fox, 25 N. J. L. 602. See PATENT.

MODERAMEN INCULPATÆ TUTELÆ. In Roman Law. The regulation of justifiable defence. The term expresses that degree of force which a person might lawfully use in defence of his person or property, even though it should occasion the death of the aggressor. Bell, Dict.

MODERATA MISERICORDIA. A writ founded on Magna Carta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offence; it is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amerciament of the parties. New Nat. Brev. 167; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 76.

MODERATE CASTIGAVIT. The name of a plea in trespass by which the defendant justifies an assault and battery, because he moderately corrected the plaintiff, whom he had a right to correct. 2 Chitty, Pl. 576; 2 B. & P. 224. See CORRECTION; ASSAULT; Hannen v. Edes, 15 Mass. 347; 2 Phill. Ev. 147; Bacon, Abr. Assault (C).

This plea ought to disclose, in general terms, the cause which rendered the correction expedient; 3 Salk. 47.

MODERATE SPEED. The moderate speed of a steam vessel is such as will permit the steamer reasonably and effectually to avoid a collision by slackening speed, or by stopping and reversing within the distance at which an approaching vessel can be seen. The City of New York, 35 Fed. 609; The Allianca, 39 Fed. 480. Five knots is a moderate speed for a sailing vessel; 46 L. T. N. S. 840.

MODERATOR. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting; sometimes he is called a chairman. The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

MODIATIO. A certain duty paid for every tierce of wine. Mon. Angl. t. ii. 144.

MODIUS. A measure, usually a bushel.

MODO ET FORMA (Lat. in manner and form). Technical words used to put in issue such concomitants of the principal matters as time, place, etc., where these circumstances were material. Their use when these circumstances were immaterial was purely formal. The words were translated literally, when pleadings began to be made in English, by "in manner and form." See Lawes, Pl. 120; Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 22; Steph. Pl. 213; Dane, Abr. Index; Viner, Abr. Modo et Forma.

MODUS. In Civil Law. Manner; means; way. Ainsworth, Lat. Dict. A rhythmic song. Du Cange.

In Old Conveyancing. Manner; e. g., the manner in which an estate should be held, etc. A qualification, whether in restriction or enlargement of the terms of the instrument; especially with relation to the kind of grant called "donatio,"—the making those quasi heirs who were not in fact heirs according to the ordinary form of such conveyances. And this modus or qualification of the ordinary form became so common as to give rise to the maxim "modus et conventio vincunt legem." Co. Litt. 19 a; Bracton, 17*b*; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 293.

A consideration. Bracton, 17, 18.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom. See MODUS DECIMANDI.

MODUS DECIMANDI. In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, arising from immemorial usage, and differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase.

To be a good modus, the custom must be—first, certain and invariable; second, beneficial to the person; third, a custom to pay something different from the thing compounded for; fourth, of the same species; fifth, the thing substituted must be in its nature as durable as the tithes themselves; sixth, it must not be too large; that would be a rank modus. 2 Bla. Com. 30. See 13 M. & W. 822.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO. A custom or prescription not to pay tithes, which is not good, except in case of abbey-lands. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 31.

MODUS LEVANDI FINES. See FINE.

MOERDA. The secret killing of another; murder. 4 Bla. Com. 194.

MOHAMMEDAN LAW. A system of native law prevailing among the Mohammedans in India, and administered there by the British government. See HINDU LAW. See Principles of Muhammadan Jurisprudence, etc., by Abdur Rahim.

MOHATRA. In French Law. The name of a fraudulent contract made to cover a usurious loan of money.

It takes place when an individual sells merchandise on credit at a high price and afterward buys it back at a much less price for cash. 16 Toullier, n. 44.

MOIETY. The half of anything: as, if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A, and the other to B, each shall take an equal part. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. Littleton 125; 3 C. B. 274, 283.

MOLESTATION. In Scotch Law. The name of an action competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession. It is chiefly used in questions of commonty, or of controverted marches. Erskine, Inst. 4. 1. 48. See, generally, 12 Q. B. D. 539; 14 id. 792.

MOLITURA. Toll paid for grinding at a mill; multure.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT (Lat.). He laid his hands on gently.

In Pleading. A plea in justification of a trespass to the person. It is a good plea when supported by the evidence; 12 Viner, Abr. 182; Hamm. N. P. 149; where an amount of violence proportioned to the circumstances; Gates v. Lounsbury, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 427; Scribner v. Beach, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 448, 47 Am. Dec. 265; Davis v. Whitridge, 2 Strobh. (S. C.) 232; Likes v. Van Dike, 17 Ohio 454; has been done to the person of another in defence of property; Com. v. Goodwin, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 154; Faris v. State, 3 Ohio St. 159; Newkirk v. Sabler, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 652; Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. 424, 62 Am. Dec. 341; see Jewett v. Goodall, 19 N. H. 562; Thompson v. State, 25 Ala. 41; or the prevention of crime; 2 Chitty, Pl. 574; Bac. Abr. Assault and Battery (C. 8).

MOLMUTIAN LAWS. The laws of Dunvallo Molmutius, king of the Britons, who began his reign about 400 B. C. These laws were famous in the land till the conquest; Toml.; Moz. & W.

MONARCHY. That government which is ruled, really or theoretically, by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state.

According to the etymology of the word, monarchy is that government in which one person rules supreme—alone. In modern times the terms autocracy, autocrat, have come into use to indicate that monarchy of which the ruler desires to be exclusively considered the source of all power and authority. The Russian emperor styles himself Autocrat of all the Russias. Autocrat is the same with despot; but the latter term has fallen somewhat into disrepute. Monarchy is contradistinguished from republic. Although the etymology of the term monarchy is simple and clear, it is by no means easy to give a definition either of monarchy or of republic. The constitution of the United States guarantees a republican government to every state. What is a republic? In this case the meaning of the term must be gathered from the republics which existed at the time of the formation of our government, and which were habitually called republics. Lieber, in a paper on the question, "Shall Utah be admitted into the Union?" (in Putnam's Magazine), declared that the Mormons did not form a republic.

The fact that one man stands at the head of a government does not make it a monarchy. We have a president at the head. Nor is it necessary that the one person have an unlimited amount of power, to make a government a monarchy. The power of the king of England is limited by law and theory, and reduced to a small amount in reality; yet England is called a monarchy. Nor does hereditariness furnish us with a distinction. The pope is elected by the cardinals, yet the States of the Church were a monarchy; and the stadtholder of several states of the Netherlands was hereditary, yet the states were republics. We cannot find any better definition of monarchy than this: a monarchy is that government which is ruled (really or theoretically) by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state (called his subjects); while we call republic that government in which not only there exists an organism by which the opinion of the people, or of a portion of the people (as in aristocracies), passes over into public will, that is, law, but in which also the supreme power, or the executive power, returns, either periodically or at stated times (where the chief magistracy is for life), to the people, or a portion of the people, to be given anew to another person; or else, that government in which the hereditary portion (if there be any) is not the chief and leading portion of the government, as was the case in the Netherlands.

Monarchy is the prevailing type of government. Whether it will remain so with our Caucasian race is a question not to be discussed in a law dictionary. The two types of monarchy as it exists in Europe are the limited or constitutional monarchy, developed in England, and centralized monarchy—to which was added the modern French type, which consisted in the adoption of Rousseau's idea of sovereignty, and applying it to a transfer of all the sovereign power of the people to one Cæsar, who thus became an unqualified and unmitigated autocrat or despot. It was a relapse into coarse absolutism.

Paley has endeavored to point out the advantages and disadvantages of the different classes of government—not successfully, we think. The great advantages of the monarchial element in a free government are: first, that there remains a stable and firm point in the unavoidable party struggle; and secondly, that supreme power, and it may be said the whole government, being represented by or symbolized in one living person, authority, respect, and, with regard to public money, even public morality, stand a better chance to be preserved.

The great disadvantages of a monarchy are that the personal interests or inclinations of the monarch or his house (of the dynasty) are substituted for the public interest; that to the chance of birth is left what with rational beings certainly ought to be the result of reason and wisdom; and that loyalty to the ruler comes easily to be substituted for real patriotism, and frequently passes over into undignified and pernicious man-worship. Monarchy is assuredly the best government for many nations at the present period, and the only government under which in this period they can obtain security and liberty; yet, unless we believe in a pre-existing divine right of the monarch, monarchy can never be anything but a substitute—acceptable, wise, even desirable, as the case may be—for something more dignified, which, unfortunately, the passions or derelictions of men prevent. The advantages and disadvantages of republics may be said to be the reverse of what has been stated regarding monarchy. A frequent mistake in modern times is this: that a state simply for the time without a king—a kingless government—is called a republic. But a monarchy does not change into a republic simply by expelling the king or the dynasty; as was seen in France in 1848. Few governments are less acceptable than an elective monarchy; for it has the disadvantages of the monarchy without its advantages, and the disadvantages of a republic without its advantages. See GOVERNMENT; ABSOLUTISM; REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

MONASTERIUM. A monastery; a church. Spel. Gloss.

MONASTICON. A book giving an account of monasteries, convents, and religious houses.

MONETAGIUM. An ancient tribute paid by tenants to their lord every third year, in consideration of the lord's not changing the money he had coined.

Mintage, or the right of coining money. Cowell.

MONETARY UNION. See LATIN MONETARY UNION.

MONEY. Gold and silver coins. The common medium of exchange in a civilized nation.

There is some difference of opinion as to the etymology of the word money; and writers do not agree as to its precise meaning. Some writers define it to be the common medium of exchange among civilized nations; but in the United States constitution there is a provision which has been supposed to make it synonymous with coins: "The congress shall have power to coin money." Art. 1, sect. 8. Again: "No state shall coin money, or make anything but gold and silver a legal tender in payment of debt." Art. 1, sect. 10. Hence the money of the United States consists of gold and silver coins. And so well has the congress maintained this point, that the copper coins heretofore struck, and the nickel cent of recent issues, although authorized to "pass current," are not money in an exact sense, because they are not made a legal tender beyond twenty-five cents. The question has been made whether a paper currency can be constitutionally authorized by congress and constituted a legal tender in the payment of private debts. Such a power has been exercised and adjudged valid by the highest tribunal of several of the states, as well as by congress in the legal-tender acts of 1862 and 1863. See LEGAL TENDER; 1 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 553; 11 id. 618; 12 id. 601; Klauber v. Biggerstaff, 47 Wis. 551, 3 N. W. 357, 32 Am. Rep. 773.

For many purposes, bank-notes; 1 Y. & J. 380; Floyd v. Day, 3 Mass. 405, 3 Am. Dec. 171; Willie v. Green, 2 N. H. 333; State v. Kube, 20 Wis. 217, 91 Am. Dec. 390; Ainslie v. Wilson, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 662, 17 Am. Dec. 532; Rice v. Jones, 71 Ala. 554; Waterman v. Waterman, 34 Mich. 490; treasury notes and national bank notes; Woodruff v. State, 66 Miss. 298, 6 South. 235; greenbacks; Ex parte Prince, 27 Fla. 196, 9 South. 659, 26 Am. St. Rep. 67; a check; 4 Bingh. 179; negotiable notes; Floyd v. Day, 3 Mass. 405, 3 Am. Dec. 171; securities; Hinckley v. Primm, 41 Ill. App. 579; and bonds; Smith's Estate, 19 Pa. C. C. R. 516; will be considered as money. But, ordinarily, standing alone, it means only that which passes current as money, including bank deposits; but in a bequest of money it has been held to include personal property; Sweet v. Burnett, 65 Hun 159, 20 N. Y. Supp. 24; see Gillen v. Kimball, 34 Ohio St. 352. But a charge that the defendant set up and kept a faro bank, at which money was bet, etc., is not sustained by proof that bank-notes were bet, etc.; Pryor v. Com., 2 Dana (Ky.) 298; or where there is an indictment for the larceny of lawful money of the United States, evidence of the larceny of national bank notes, does not warrant a conviction; Hamilton v. State, 60 Ind. 193, 28 Am. Rep. 653. To support a count for money had and received, the receipt by the defendant of bank-notes, promissory notes; Fairbanks v. Blackington, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 93; Buck v. Appleton, 14 Me. 285; Tuttle v. Mayo, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 132; credit in account in the books of a third person; 3 Campb. 199; or any chattel, is sufficient; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 560; and will be treated as money. See Morrison v. Berkey, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 246; 3 B. & P. 559; Menear v. State, 30 Tex. App. 475, 17 S. W. 1082; Miller v. McKinney, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 96. The mutilation of coins is forbidden by law. U. S. R. S. 2 Supp. 579.

A worn five-cent piece is legal tender as long as it is not appreciably diminished in weight and retains the appearance of genuine coinage; Cincinnati Northern Traction Co. v. Rosnagle, 84 Ohio St. 310, 95 N. E. 884, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1030, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 639; Jersey City & B. R. Co. v. Morgan, 52 N. J. L. 60, 18 Atl. 904. If a silver coin is punched and mutilated, and an appreciable amount of silver removed from it, and the hole plugged up with base metal, it is an act of counterfeiting; but otherwise where all the silver is in the coin; U. S. v. Lissner, 12 Fed. 840.

The value of foreign coin depends upon the value of its pure metal; Act of Aug. 27, 1894, which directs a quarterly estimate of the value of foreign coins to be published by the secretary of the treasury. See U. S. v. Whitridge, 197 U. S. 141, 25 Sup. Ct. 406, 49 L. Ed. 696.

See LATIN UNION; GOLD; SILVER; COIN; LEGAL TENDER; TICKET.

MONEY BILLS. Bills or projects of laws providing for raising revenue, and for making grants or appropriations of the public money.

A bill for granting supplies to the crown. Such bills commence in the House of Commons and are rarely attempted to be materially altered in the Lords; May, Parl. L. ch. 22.

The first clause of the seventh section of the constitution of the United States declares, "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills." See Story, Const. §§ 874–877; Perry County v. R. Co., 58 Ala. 546; Opinion of Justices, 126 Mass. 601; Cooley, Const. Lim. (4th Ed.) 160.

What bills are properly "bills for raising revenue," in the sense of the constitution, has been matter of some discussion. Tuck. Bla. Com. App. 261; Story, Const. § 880. In practice, the power has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue; Story, Const. § 880; 2 Elliott, Deb. 283; Millard v. Roberts, 202 U. S. 429, 26 Sup. Ct. 674, 50 L. Ed. 1090.

And a privilege conferred by a state constitution, to originate "money bills," has been held to be limited to such as transfer money from the people to the state, and not to include such as appropriate money from the state treasury; Opinion of Justices, 126 Mass. 557; or an act imposing taxes on national bank notes; Twin City Bank v. Nebeker, 167 U. S. 196, 17 Sup. Ct. 766, 42 L. Ed. 134; that a revenue provision was added in the senate does not render it invalid; U. S. v. Billings, 190 Fed. 359.

See REVENUE; PARLIAMENTARY ACT.

MONEY BROKER. A money changer; one who lends to or raises money for others.

MONEY CLAIMS. Under the English Judicature Act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" hitherto in use. Moz. & W. 410.

MONEY COUNTS. The common counts in an action of assumpsit.

They are so called because they are founded on express or implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt. They are of four descriptions; the indebitatus assumpsit; the quantum meruit; the quantum valebant; and the account stated. See these titles.

Although the plaintiff cannot resort to an implied promise when there is a general contract, yet he may, in many cases, recover on the common counts notwithstanding there was a special agreement, provided it has been executed; 12 East 1; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 299, 3 L. Ed. 351; Keyes v. Stone, 5 Mass. 391; Tuttle v. Mayo, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 132. It is, therefore, advisable to insert the money counts in an action of assumpsit, when suing on a special contract; 1 Chitty, Pl. 333.

MONEY DEMAND. A claim for a mixed amount of money, contradistinguished from damages.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED. The technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

An action of assumpsit will lie on a count for money had and received, to recover money to which the plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity, when no rule of policy or strict law prevents it, the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which he cannot with a good conscience retain; Tevis v. Brown's Adm'r, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 175; Rice v. Porter's Adm'rs, 16 N. J. L. 447; Wiseman v. Lyman, 7 Mass. 288; see Mason v. Prendergast, 120 N. Y. 536, 24 N. E. 806; Wild v. Fry, 45 Ill. App. 276.

When the money has been received by the defendant in consequence of some tortious act to the plaintiff's property, as when he cut down the plaintiff's timber and sold it, the plaintiff may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for money had and received; Whitwell v. Vincent, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 452, 16 Am. Dec. 355; Pritchard v. Ford, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 543; Willet v. Willet, 3 Watts (Pa.) 277.

In general, the action for money had and received lies only where money has been received by the defendant; Doebler v. Fisher, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 179; National Trust Co. of City of N. Y. v. Gleason, 77 N. Y. 400, 33 Am. Rep. 632. But bank-notes or any other property received as money will be considered for this purpose as money; Floyd v. Day, 3 Mass. 405, 3 Am. Dec. 171; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 560; Vermont State Bank v. Stoddard, Brayt. (Vt.) 24. See Witherup v. Hill, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 11. Money paid under an illegal contract which has been partially carried into effect cannot be recovered back; L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 742.

No privity of contract between the parties is required in order to support this action, except that which results from the fact of one man's having the money of another which he cannot conscientiously retain; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 563; Hall v. Marston, id. 579. See Rapalje v. Emory, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 54, 1 L. Ed. 285; Eagle Bank of New Haven v. Smith, 5 Conn. 71, 13 Am. Dec. 37; Moore v. Moore, 127 Mass. 22. See QUASI CONTRACTS.

MONEY IN HAND. There is no real difference between "money in hand" and "ready money." 12 L. J. Ch. 387.

MONEY JUDGMENT. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred.

MONEY LAND. A phrase sometimes applied to money held upon trust to be laid out in the purchase of land. See CONVERSION.

MONEY LENDERS ACT. An act in England of 1900, regulating loans on expectancies, to heirs, etc. See Bellot's Treatise on the Act; EXPECTANCY; [1906] A. C. 461.

MONEY LENT. The technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

To recover, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant received his money, but it is not indispensable that it should be originally lent. If, for example, money has been advanced upon a special contract, which has been abandoned and rescinded, and which cannot be enforced, the law raises an implied promise from the person who holds the money to pay it back as money lent; 7 Bingh. 266; 8 M. & W. 434. See Tevis v. Brown's Adm'r, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 175.

MONEY-ORDER. The act of June 8, 1872, c. 335, provided for the establishment of a uniform money-order system, at all suitable post-offices, which shall be called "money-order" offices. The applicant, upon depositing a sum, at one post-office, receives a certificate for that amount, which he mails to the payee, who can then obtain the money at the office designated in the order, upon presenting the latter and mentioning the name of his correspondent. R. S. §§ 4027–4048; Suppl. to R. S. p. 155. Under the law of March 3, 1883, it was provided that money-orders should not be issued for a larger sum than a hundred dollars; 1 Supp. R. S. 406; 2 id. 166.

MONEY PAID. The technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant.

When one advances money for the benefit of another with his consent, or at his express request, although he be not benefited by the transaction, the creditor may recover the money in an action of assumpsit declaring for money paid for the defendant; Hassinger v. Solms, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 9. But one cannot by a voluntary payment of another's debt make himself creditor of that other; Jones v. Wilson, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 434; Weakley v. Brahan, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 500; Town of Rumney v. Ellsworth, 4 N. H. 138; Appeal of Breneman, 121 Pa. 641, 15 Atl. 650. In order to enable one who has paid money to the use of another, to maintain an action for money paid, two things are essential: a legal liability on the part of the defendant to pay the original demand, and his antecedent request, or subsequent promise to pay; Beard v. Horton, 86 Ala. 202, 5 South. 207.

Assumpsit for money paid will not lie where property, not money, has been given or received; Morrison v. Berkey, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 246; Greathouse v. Throckmorton, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 18. But see Ainslie v. Wilson, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 662, 17 Am. Dec. 532. Nor will an action lie to recover back money paid voluntarily with a full knowledge of the facts and circumstances; Lewis v. Hughes, 12 Colo. 208, 20 Pac. 621; Gilliam v. Alford, 69 Tex. 267, 6 S. W. 757.

But where money has been paid to the defendant either for a just, legal, or equitable claim, although it could not have been enforced at law, it cannot be recovered as money paid. See MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

The form of declaring is for "money paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant and at his request"; 1 M. & W. 511.

MONEYED CAPITAL. In a statute with reference to taxation of national bank stock, it is held to mean money employed in a business whose object is to make profit by investing in securities by way of loan, discount or otherwise, which from time to time are reduced again to money and reinvested. Mercantile Nat. Bank of Cleveland v. Shields, 59 Fed. 952.

The term has a more limited meaning than the term personal property, and applies to such capital as is readily solvable in money; Mercantile Nat. Bank v. City of New York, 28 Fed. 777.

MONEYED CORPORATION. A corporation having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make insurance. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 7th ed. 1371; Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 479; Osgood v. Laytin, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 464; Bank Com'rs v. Bank, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 497.

MONGOLIAN. See CHINESE.

MONIERS. Ministers of the mint; also bankers. Cowell.

MONITION. In Practice. A process in the nature of a summons, which is used in the civil law, and in those courts which derive their practice from the civil law. In the English ecclesiastical courts it is used as a warning to a defendant not to repeat an offence of which he had been convicted. See Bened. Adm.; City of St. Louis v. Richeson, 76 Mo. 470.

A general monition is a citation or summons to all persons interested, or, as is commonly said, to the whole world, to appear and show cause why the libel filed in the case should not be sustained, and the prayer of relief granted. This is adopted in prize cases, admiralty suits for forfeitures, and other suits in rem, when no particular individuals are summoned to answer. In such cases the taking possession of the property libelled, and this general citation or monition served according to law, are considered constructive notice to the world of the pendency of the suit; and the judgment rendered thereupon is conclusive upon the title of the property which may be affected. In form, the monition is substantially a warrant of the court, in an admiralty cause, directed to the marshal or his deputy, commanding him, in the name of the president of the United States, to give public notice, by advertisements in such newspapers as the court may select, and by notifications to be posted in public places, that a libel has been filed in a certain admiralty cause pending, and of the time and place appointed for the trial. A brief statement of the allegations in the libel is usually contained in the monition. The monition is served in the manner directed in the warrant.

A mixed monition is one which contains directions for a general monition to all persons interested, and a special summons to particular persons named in the warant. This is served by newspaper advertisements, by notifications posted in public places, and by delivery of a copy attested by the officer to each person specially named, or by leaving it at his usual place of residence.

A special monition, is a similar warrant, directed to the marshal or his deputy, requiring him to give special notice to certain persons, named in the warrant, of the pendency of the suit, the grounds of it, and the time and place of trial. It is served by delivery of a copy of the warrant, attested by the officer, to each one of the adverse parties, or by leaving the same at his usual place of residence; but the service should be personal, if possible. Clerke, Prax. tit. 21; Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 135. See Conkl. Adm.; Pars. Marit. Law.

MONITORY LETTER. In Ecclesiastical Law. The process of an official, a bishop, or other prelate having jurisdiction, issued to compel, by ecclesiastical censures, those who know of a crime, or other matter which requires to be explained, to come and reveal it. Merlin, Répert.

MONOCRACY. A government by one person only.

MONOCRAT. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

MONOGAMY. The state of having only one husband or one wife at a time.

A marriage contracted between one man and one woman, in exclusion of all the rest of mankind. The term is used in opposition to bigamy and polygamy. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 857.

MONOGRAM. A character or cipher composed of one or more letters interwoven, being an abbreviation of a name.

A signature made by a monogram would perhaps be binding provided it could be proved to have been made and intended as a signature; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 471.

There seems to be no reason why such a signature should not be as binding as one which is altogether illegible.

MONOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. Insanity only upon a particular subject, and with a single delusion of the mind.

A perversion of the understanding in regard to a single object, or a small number of objects, with the predominance of mental excitement. In re Gannon's Will, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 333, 21 N. Y. Supp. 960.

See DELUSION; INSANITY; MANIA; and other titles there referred to.

MONOPOLIUM. The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly. Calvin.

MONOPOLY. In Commercial Law. The abuse of free commerce by which one or more individuals have procured the advantage of selling alone all of a particular kind of merchandise, to the detriment of the public.

Any combination among merchants to raise the price of merchandise to the injury of the public.

An institution or allowance by a grant from the sovereign power of a state, by commission, letters-patent, or otherwise, to any person, or corporation, by which the exclusive right of buying, selling, making, working, or using anything is given; Bacon, Abr.; Co. 3d Inst. 181; whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be restrained of any freedom or liberty they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade; Butchers' Union Slaughter-House & Live-Stock Landing Co. v. Slaughter House Co., 111 U. S. 754, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Darcantel v. Refrigerating Co., 44 La. Ann. 632, 11 South. 239; U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 53 Fed. 452. Monopolies were, by stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 3, declared illegal and void, subject to certain specified exceptions, such as patents in favor of the authors of new inventions; 4 Bla. Com. 159; 2 Steph. Com. 25. See Curtis, Robinson, Merwin, Walker; Patents.

A patent for a useful invention, under the United States laws, is not, in the old sense of the common law, a monopoly.

The constitutions of Maryland, North Carolina, and Tennessee declare that "monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and ought not to be allowed."

The Sherman anti-trust act (July 2, 1890) is treated under RESTRAINT OF TRADE. See COPYRIGHT; PATENT.

MONROE DOCTRINE. A policy adopted by the United States according to which this government will consider any attempt on the part of a European power to colonize, or to extend its system of government to, any part of the Western Hemisphere as an act of unfriendliness to the United States. The policy was foreshadowed by Jefferson in 1793, and again in 1801, when the United States expressed to Great Britain its willingness that the Floridas should remain in the hands of Spain, but its unwillingness that they should be transferred to any other power. The doctrine was definitely stated in a message of President Monroe to congress on December 2, 1823, in which he says: "The American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers. . . . We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States. . . ." In another part of the message it is declared that "the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers."

This doctrine is now the settled policy of the United States, and while it has not been formally recognized by foreign powers, it has for the most part been generally acquiesced in. The policy with respect to the colonization of America by European powers was occasioned by discussions with Russia as to territorial rights on the northwest coast of America. Existing colonies of Great Britain and other countries were not, of course, affected by the declaration. In 1848 President Polk stated that a transfer of the sovereignty of Yucatan to either Spain, Great Britain or any other power could not be consented to by the United States. The same principle was reasserted in 1888 when there were rumors that Haiti might become a protectorate of France, and that the French government might take charge of the work of digging the Panama Canal.

The island of Cuba was for a long time a subject for the application of the Monroe Doctrine. As early as 1825 the United States felt that any change in the sovereignty of that island would be detrimental to its interests; again in 1848 the position was taken with regard to a possible control by Great Britain over the island. During the American civil war the emperor of France attempted to establish Prince Maximilian of Austria upon the throne of Mexico. The United States protested, and at the end of the war brought pressure to bear upon France to withdraw her troops, which were in Mexico in support of Maximilian. A boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela gave occasion to President Cleveland to apply the Monroe Doctrine in a very positive way. As it appeared that Great Britain would be likely to press her claim by force, the United States recommended arbitration between the two countries, and then undertook itself to appoint a commission to determine what seemed to be the just boundary line. Finally a commission of arbitration was appointed under treaty between Great Britain and Venezuela, which rendered an award on October 3, 1899.

In his annual message of December 3, 1906, President Roosevelt said distinctly: "We do not guarantee any state against punishment if it misconducts itself, provided that punishment does not take the form of the acquisition of territory by any non-American power." In 1899 the American delegation at the Peace Conference at The Hague made with reference to the convention providing for the new Court of Arbitration the following declaration: "Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions." The convention was signed under a reservation in accordance with this declaration.

While the United States exercises a sort of wardship over the New World, it recognizes that circumstances may occur in which a foreign power may lawfully exact reparation from an American state; and so long as the reparation does not take the form of territorial occupation, the United States will not interfere. T. J. Lawrence, Int. Law, 4th ed., 282.

An international nuisance must be abated, and if European powers are not to be allowed to do so in the case of an American state, the United States must do so. This may lead to a form of intervention, as in the case of San Domingo in 1904–1905, when an American receiver-general was appointed to collect the Dominican customs in order to insure the payment of foreign creditors. It is by an extension of the Monroe Doctrine that the United States justifies its qualified intervention in the domestic affairs of Mexico. If foreign powers are not to be allowed to see to the protection of their citizens and their citizens' property, then the United States must itself undertake that duty. Moore, Int. Law Digest, VI, §§ 927–969.

MONSTER. An animal which has a conformation contrary to the order of nature. 2 Dungl. Hum. Phys. 422.

It is said that a monster, although born of a woman in lawful wedlock, cannot inherit. Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting, if otherwise qualified; 2 Bla. Com. 246; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 366; Co. Litt. 7, 8; Dig. 1. 5. 14; 1 Swift, Syst. 331; Fred. Code, pt. 1, b. 1, t. 4, § 4.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed. Traill, Med. Jur. 47. See Briand, Méd. Lég. pt. 1, c. 6, art. 2, § 3; 1 Foderé, Méd. Lég. § 402.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT (Fr. showing of right). A common-law process by which restitution of personal or real property is obtained from the crown by a subject. Chitty, Prerog. of Cr. 345; 3 Bla. Com. 256. By this process, when the facts of the title of the crown are already on record, the facts on which the plaintiff relies, not inconsistent with such record, are shown, and judgment of the court prayed thereon. The judgment, if against the crown, is that of ouster le main, which vests possession in the subject without execution. Bac. Abr. Prerogative (E); 1 And. 181; French v. Com., 5 Leigh (Va.) 512, 27 Am. Dec. 613; Flott v. Com., 12 Gratt. (Va.) 564.

Monstrans de droit was preferred either on the common-law side of the court of chancery, or in the exchequer, and will not come before the corresponding divisions in the high court of justice. (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34.)

MONSTRANS DE FAIT (Fr. showing of a deed). A profert. Bac. Abr. Pleas.

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English Law. A writ which lies for the tenants of an ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court-roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzh. N. B. 31.

For a form see 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 499.

MONTANA. One of the states of the United States.

Congress, by an act approved May 26, 1864 (R. S. § 1903), created the territory and defined its boundaries, providing also that the United States might divide the territory or change its boundaries in such manner as may be deemed expedient; and further, that the rights of person and property pertaining to the Indians in the territory shall not without their consent be included within the territorial limits of jurisdiction.

By act of congress approved March 1, 1872, a tract of land in the territories of Montana and Wyoming, lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River, is reserved and withdrawn from settlement under the laws of the United States and dedicated and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people; R. S. § 2474; and by act of April 15, 1874, a tract of land at the northern boundary is set apart as a reservation for the Gros Ventre Piegan, Blood, Blackfoot, River Crow, and such other Indians as the President may, from time to time, see fit to locate therein. 18 Stat. at L. 28

The act providing for the admission of Montana into the Union as one of the states was passed February 22, 1889, and the proclamation announcing its admission was on November 8, 1889.

The constitution was adopted August 17, 1889 and ratified by the people October 1, 1889. An amendment of 1913 adopted woman suffrage.

MONTES PIETATIS, MONTS DE PIÉTÉ. Institutions established by public authority for lending money upon pledge of goods.

In these establishments a fund is provided, with suitable warehouses and all necessary accommodations. They are managed by directors. When the money for which goods are pledged is not returned in proper time, the goods are sold to reimburse the institutions. They are found principally on the continent of Europe. With us, private persons, called pawnbrokers, perform this office.

MONTH. A space of time variously computed, as the term is applied to astronomical, civil or solar, or lunar months.

The astronomical month contains one-twelfth part of the time employed by the sun in going through the zodiac. In law, when a month simply is mentioned, it is never understood to mean an astronomical month.

The civil or solar month is that which agrees with the Gregorian calendar; and these months are known by the names of January, February, March, etc. They are composed of unequal portions of time. There are seven of thirty-one days each, four of thirty, and one which is sometimes composed of twenty-eight days, and in leap-years, of twenty-nine.

The lunar month consists of twenty-eight days.

The Roman names of the months, as settled by Augustus, have been used in all Christian countries except Holland, where a set of characteristic names prevail, the remains of the ancient Gaulish title, which were also used by our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. The French convention, in October, 1793, adopted a set of names similar to that of Holland.

By the law of England, a month means ordinarily, in common contracts, as in leases, a lunar month; [1904] 1 Ch. 305. A contract, therefore, made for a lease of land for twelve months would mean a lease for forty-eight weeks only; 2 Bla. Com. 141; 6 Co. 62; 1 Maule & S. 111. A distinction has been made between "twelve months" and a "twelve-month;" the latter has been held to mean a year; 6 Co. 61. In a contract for the hire of furniture at a weekly rental for so many months, "months" was held to mean lunar month; 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 343.

But in mercantile contracts a month simply signifies a calendar month; Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 190, 17 L. Ed. 822; Union Bank of Georgetown v. Forrest, 3 Cra. C. C. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 14,356; Churchill v. Bank, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 532; Hosley v. Black, 28 N. Y. 444; a promissory note to pay money in twelve months would, therefore, mean a promise to pay in one year, or twelve calendar months; 1 M. & S. 111; Story, Bills, §§ 143, 330; Thomas v. Shoemaker, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 179; Leffingwell v. White, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 99, 1 Am. Dec. 97; 1 Q. B. 250; Benj. Sales § 684.

In general, when a statute speaks of a month, without adding "calendar," or other words showing a clear intention, it shall be intended a lunar month; Com. Dig. Anno (B); in England by statute (1850) it means a calendar month, as also in orders of court, sales and negotiable instruments. In all legal proceedings, as in commitments, pleadings, etc., a month means four weeks; 3 Burr. 1455; 1 W. Bla. 540; Dougl. 446, 463; Com. v. Stanley, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 543; Stackhouse v. Halsey, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 74.

That a month mentioned generally in a statute has been construed to mean a calendar month; see Brudenell v. Vaux, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 302, 1 L. Ed. 390; Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 461; Hardin v. Major, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 105; Brown v. Williams, 34 Neb. 376, 51 N. W. 851; Guaranty Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Buddington, 27 Fla. 215, 9 South. 246, 12 L. R. A. 770; Baltimore & D. P. R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 74 Md. 86, 21 Atl. 559; Guaranty Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. R. Co., 139 U. S. 137, 11 Sup. Ct. 512, 35 L. Ed. 116. In England in the ecclesiastical law, months are computed by the calendar; 3 Burr. 1455; 1 M. & S. 111; thirty days is not a month; State v. Upchurch, 72 N. C. 146.

In New York, it is enacted that whenever the term "month" or "months" is or shall be used in any statute, act, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, it shall be construed to mean a calendar, and not a lunar, month, unless otherwise expressed. Rev. Stat. pt. 2, c. 19, tit. 1, § 4; Hosley v. Black, 28 N. Y. 444. But this has been modified as to computation of interest, so that a month shall be considered the twelfth part of a year, and as consisting of thirty days, and interest for any number of days less than a month shall be estimated by the proportion which such number of days bears to thirty; R. S. pt. 3, p. 2254, § 9.

MONUMENT. A thing intended to transmit to posterity the memory of some one. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In this sense it differs from a cenotaph, which is an empty tomb. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 6; 11. 7. 2. 42.

Coke says that the erecting of monuments in church, chancel, common chapel, or churchyard in convenient manner is lawful; for it is the last work of charity that can be done for the deceased, who whilst he lived was a lively temple of the Holy Ghost, with a reverend regard and Christian hope of a joyful resurrection.

The defacing of monuments is punishable by the common law; Year B, 9 Edw. IV. c. 14; and trespass may be maintained; 10 F. Moore 494; 1 Cons. S. C. 172; 3 Bingh. 136. An heir may bring an action against one that injures the monument of his ancestor; Co. 3d Inst. 202; Gibs. 453. A gift for the perpetual repair of a tomb, if in a church, will be sustained; [1891] 3 Ch. 252; but see L. R.

4 Eq. 521; CHARITABLE USES. Although the fee of church or churchyard be in another, yet he cannot deface monuments; Co. 3d Inst. 202. The fabric of a church is not to be injured or deformed by the caprice of individuals; 1 Cons. S. C. 145; and a monument may be taken down if placed inconveniently; 1 Lee, Eccl. 640. A monument containing an improper inscription can be removed; 1 Curt. Eccl. 880.

As to inscriptions on monuments and their value as evidence, see INSCRIPTION.

MONUMENTS. Permanent landmarks established for the purpose of indicating boundaries.

Monuments may be either natural or artificial objects: as, rivers, known streams, springs, or marked trees; Preston v. Bowmar, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 582, 5 L. Ed. 336; Rix v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 524, 22 Am. Dec. 472; Shepherd v. Nave, 125 Ind. 226, 25 N. E. 220. Even posts set up at the corners; Alshire's Lessee v. Hulse, 5 Ohio 534; and a clearing; Jackson v. Widger, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 723; are considered as monuments. But see Reed v. Shenck, 14 N. C. 75.

When monuments are established, they must govern, although neither courses nor distances nor computed contents correspond; Ely v. U. S., 171 U. S. 220, 18 Sup. Ct. 840, 43 L. Ed. 142; Preston v. Bowmar, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 582, 5 L. Ed. 336; Watrous v. Morrison, 33 Fla. 261, 14 South. 805, 39 Am. St. Rep. 139; England v. Vandermark, 147 Ill. 76, 35 N. E. 465; Smith v. Improvement Co., 117 Mo. 438, 22 S. W. 1083; Anderson v. Richardson, 92 Cal. 623, 28 Pac. 679; Yanish v. Tarbox, 49 Minn. 268, 51 N. W. 1051; Whitehead v. Ragan, 106 Mo. 231, 17 S. W. 307; McCullough v. Improvement Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 170, 21 Atl. 481; 1 Washb. R. P. 406. Their location may be proved where lost; Resurrection Gold Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 129 Fed. 668, 64 C. C. A. 180.

A monument established by the government surveyors as the true corner of sections will control courses and distances; Brown v. Morrill, 91 Mich. 29, 51 N. W. 700; Ogilvie v. Copeland, 145 Ill. 98, 33 N. E. 1085. See BOUNDARY.

In Mexican grants, while monuments control courses and distances, and courses and distances control quantity, yet where there is uncertainty in specific description, the quantity named may be of decisive weight and necessarily is so if the intention to convey only so much and no more is plain; Ainsa v. U. S., 161 U. S. 208, 16 Sup. Ct. 544, 40 L. Ed. 673; Ely v. U. S., 171 U. S. 220, 18 Sup. Ct. 840, 43 L. Ed. 142.

See METES AND BOUNDS.

MOOE. An officer in the Isle of Man similar to the English bailiff.

MOORAGE. A sum due for fastening ships to a tree or post at the shore or to a wharf. 3 Bland 373.

MOORING. In Maritime Law. The securing of a vessel by a hawser or chain, or otherwise, to the shore, or to the bottom by a cable and anchor. The being "moored in safety," under a policy of insurance, is being moored in port, or at the usual place for landing and taking in cargo free from any immediate impending peril insured against; 1 Phil. Ins. 968; Speyer v. Ins. Co., 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 88; Bill v. Mason, 6 Mass. 313; Code de Comm. 152.

MOOT (from Saxon gemot, meeting together. Anc. Laws and Inst. of England). See FOLC GEMOTE; WITENA-GEMOT; FICTITIOUS ACTION; AMICABLE ACTION.

In English Law. A term used in the inns of court, signifying the exercise of arguing imaginary cases, which young barristers and students used to perform at certain times, the better to be enabled by this practice to defend their clients' cases. Orig. Jur. 212. Mooting was formerly the chief exercise of the students in the inns of court.

To plead a mock cause. (Also spelled meet, from Sax. motain, to meet; the sense of debate being from meeting, encountering. Webster, Dict.)

Any attempt, by a mere colorable dispute, to obtain the opinion of a court upon a question of law, when there is no real controversy, is an abuse which courts have always reprehended and treated as a punishable contempt of court; Taney, C. J., in Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. (U. S.) 251, 12 L. Ed. 1067; any agreement to practice such deceit is void; Connoly v. Cunningham, 2 Wash. Terr. 242, 5 Pac. 473; Van Horn v. Kittitas County, 112 Fed. 3. Courts do not adjudicate moot cases, and will not hear a case when the object sought is not attainable; Jones v. Montague, 194 U. S. 150, 24 Sup. Ct. 611, 48 L. Ed. 913. So also State v. Savage, 64 Neb. 684, 90 N. W. 898, 91 N. W. 557; State v. Lambert, 52 W. Va. 248, 43 S. E. 176.

On a bill to restrain the secretary of the treasury from paying certain sums, if they have been paid, the question of right is a moot question; Wilson v. Shaw, 204 U. S. 24, 27 Sup. Ct. 233, 51 L. Ed. 351; but a case is not moot where interests of a public character are asserted by the government under conditions that may be immediately repeated, merely because the particular order has expired; Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 31 Sup. Ct. 279, 55 L. Ed. 310.

Where a question of jurisdiction has become a moot question on appeal from a judgment for nominal damages, it will not be considered; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Lyne, 193 Fed. 984, 113 C. C. A. 604; and a suit will not be retained to determine appellant's liability on bonds, when there is nothing in the record on which the rights of the parties may be adjudicated; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, 228 U. S. 610, 33 Sup. Ct. 599, 57 L. Ed. 989.

Courts will not construe contracts until actual questions have arisen from them; New Orleans & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Ferry Co., 104 La. 53, 28 South. 840. Action will not lie for the sole purpose of determining at law whether a city ordinance is void; Coykendall v. Hood, 36 App. Div. 558, 55 N. Y. Supp. 718. An action will not lie against a city hospital for injuries received therein merely to fix plaintiff's damages, in order that he may present his claim to the legislature; Maia's Adm'r v. Hospital, 97 Va. 507, 34 S. E. 617, 47 L. R. A. 577.

Where there is an actual bona fide contest as to a legal right, an agreement to put the case in such shape that the right can be readily determined by the court, especially when it concerns a matter of public moment, which should be speedily settled, is a common practice in every state in the Union. The legal tender cases are said to have been made up in that way. So also Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 397, 25 Am. Rep. 611.

A moot question is one which has not been decided.

MOOT COURT. A court where moot questions are argued. Webster, Dict.

In law schools this is one of the methods of instruction; an undecided point of law is argued by students appointed as counsel on either side of the cause, one or more of the professors sitting judicially in presence of the school. The argument is usually conducted as in cases reserved for hearing before the full bench.

MOOT HILL. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence, the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below. Encyc. Lond.

MORA. A moor, barren or unprofitable ground; marsh; a heath; a watery bog or moor. Co. Litt. 5; Fleta, l. 2, c. 71, See IN MORA.

In Roman law, the nonperformance of an obligation was called "mora" (delay), for the debtor delays performance. Generally it is only after demand for performance had been properly made and refused. It did not exist if the obligation was in good faith disputed. In some cases interest became due, but only as a matter of judicial discretion. Mora threw on the debtor the whole loss arising from the destruction of the thing promised by accident without the fault of the creditor or debtor (periculum rei). If the creditor improperly refused to accept a discharge of the debt, the debtor was released from paying interest for the delay and must bear the loss of an accidental destruction of the thing promised. Hunter, Rom. Law 653.

MORAL ACTIONS. Actions only in which men have knowledge to guide them and a will to choose for themselves. Ruth. Inst. Nat. L. lib. 1, c. 1.

MORAL CERTAINTY. That degree of certainty which will justify a jury in grounding on it their verdict.

It is only probability; but it is called certainty, because every sane man assents to it necessarily from a habit produced by the necessity of acting. Beccaria on Crimes and Punishments, c. 14. Nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us. Puffendorff, Law of Nature, b. 1. c. 2, § 11. A reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt. Shaw, C. J., Commonwealth v. Webster, Bemis' Rep. of the Trial, 469; Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1. Such a certainty "as convinces beyond all reasonable doubt." Parke, B., Best, Presumpt. 257, note; Lawrens v. Lucas, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 217. See DOUBT.

MORAL CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION; MORAL OBLIGATION.

MORAL INSANITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A morbid perversion of the moral feelings, affections, inclinations, temper, habits, and moral disposition, without any notable lesion of the intellect or knowing and reasoning faculties, and particularly without any maniacal hallucination. Prichard, art. Insanity, in Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine.

A disorder which affects the feelings and affections, or what are termed the moral powers in contradistinction to those of the understanding or intellect. 3 Witth. & B. 269.

For a discussion on this subject and its legal relations, see INSANITY; MANIA.

MORAL OBLIGATION. A duty which one owes, and which he ought to perform, but which he is not legally bound to fulfil.

These obligations are of two kinds: 1st, those founded on a natural right: as, the obligation to be charitable, which can never be enforced by law. 2d, those which are supported by a good or valuable antecedent consideration: as, where a man owes a debt barred by the act of limitations, or contracted during infancy; this cannot be recovered by law, though it subsists in morality and conscience. A doctrine prevailed for some time in the courts of England and this country that an express promise made in discharge of an antecedent moral obligation created a valid contract, and the contract was then said to be supported by the previous moral obligation; Cowp. 290; 5 Taunt. 36; Willing v. Peters, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 177. This opinion appears to have been entertained by Lord Mansfield; 5 Taunt. 36. In a note to Wennall v. Adney, 3 B. & P. 249, this idea was controverted, and in Eastwood v. Kenyon, 11 Ad. & E. 438 (6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 41), the notion of the validity of a moral consideration was finally overruled. The rule existed, if it does not still exist, in Pennsylvania, as late as Hemphill v. McClimans, 24 Pa. 367, and see Holden v. Banes, 140 Pa. 63, 21 Atl. 239; Hollingsworth, Contr.

Promises by an infant, after coming of age, to pay a debt incurred during infancy, of a bankrupt to pay a debt discharged in bankruptcy, and of a debtor to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, are sometimes considered as instances of contracts supported by moral considerations; as is a note given as surety by wife for husband, renewed after his death; Rathfon v. Locher, 215 Pa. 574, 64 Atl. 790. But the promise of the infant is rather a ratification of a contract which was voidable, but not void. The promise of the bankrupt operates as a waiver of the defence given to the bankrupt by statute, the certificate of discharge not having extinguished the debt, but merely having protected the defendant from an action on it, by means of the statutory bar. In both of these cases the action is founded upon the original debt. The case of a promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations is said to stand upon anomalous grounds. The true explanation of the doctrine seems to be that it was an ingenious device for evading the statute adopted at a time when the courts regarded it with disfavor. Here too the action is upon the old debt, and not upon the new promise; Ilsley v. Jewett, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 439. The subject is learnedly treated by Mr. Langdell (Contr. § 71). Some cases have held a feme bound by a promise after coverture to pay a debt contracted during coverture; Hemphill v. McClimans, 24 Pa. 371; see Ewell, L. C. Cov. 332.

Under the English Bankruptcy Act of 1869, debts discharged cannot be revived by a promise made after adjudication; and under the Infants' Relief Act of 1874, any promise made after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy is void.

The discharge of a merely moral obligation of another will not create a debt, unless made in pursuance of an express request or actual agreement to that effect; Leake, Contr. 86.

MORAL TURPITUDE. An act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellow men or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. In re Henry, 15 Idaho 755, 99 Pac. 1054, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207. It does not necessarily include publishing a defamatory libel of George V; U. S. v. Uhl, 210 Fed. 860. See DEPORTATION; IMMIGRATION.

MORATORIUM. A term designating a suspension of all, or of certain, legal remedies against debtors, sometimes authorized by law during times of financial distress.

MORATUR or DEMORATUR IN LEGE. He demurs in law. He rests on the pleadings of the case, and abides the judgment of the court.

MORE OR LESS. Words, in a conveyance of lands or contract to convey lands, importing that the quantity is uncertain and not warranted, and that no right of either party under the contract shall be affected by a deficiency or excess in the quantity. 17 Ves. 394. So in contracts of sale generally; 2 B. & Ad. 106. These words added to a specification of quantity in a conveyance show it to be a mere estimate, and by necessary inference subordinates the quantity to fixed calls or monuments; Borkenhagen v. Vianden, 82 Wis. 206, 52 N. W. 260.

In case of an executory contract, equity will enforce specific performance without changing the price, if the excess or deficiency is very small; 17 Ves. 394; Phipps v. Tarpley, 24 Miss. 597; Lawrence v. Simonton, 13 Tex. 223; but not if the excess or deficiency is great, even though the price reserved be per acre. In 2 B. & Ad. 106, it was held that an excess of fifty quarters over three hundred quarters of grain was not covered by the words "three hundred more or less," if it was not shown that so large an excess was in contemplation; 1 Esp. 229. See Libby v. Dickey, 85 Me. 362, 27 Atl. 253. But a deed adding the words more or less to a description of the property is not a sufficient fulfilment of a contract to convey the described property, when more or less was not in such original contract, if there is an actual deficiency. But after such a conveyance is made and a note given for the purchase-money, the note cannot be defended against on the ground of deficiency; Houghtaling v. Lewis, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 297. These words more or less have been held to cover a deficiency of 10 acres where the deed called for 96 acres; Faure v. Martin, 7 N. Y. 210, 57 Am. Dec. 515; a deficiency of 54 acres in a deed calling for 451 acres; King v. Brown, 54 Ind. 368; 50 feet from 220, where the true dimension was on record, in a purchase in gross; Noble v. Googins, 99 Mass. 231.

In case of an executed contract, equity will not disturb it, unless there be a great deficiency; 2 Russ. 570; Thomas v. Perry, 1 Pet. C. C. 49, Fed. Cas. No. 13,908; or excess; Mann v. Pearson, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 37; 1 V. & B. 375; or actual misrepresentation without fraud, and there be a material excess or deficiency; Belknap v. Sealey, 14 N. Y. 143, 67 Am. Dec. 120; see 11 Q. B. Div. 255.

Eighty-five feet, more or less, means eighty-five feet, unless the deed or situation of the land in some way controls it; Blaney v. Rice, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 62, 32 Am. Dec. 204.

The words more or less will not cover a distinct lot; McCune v. Hull, 24 Mo. 574. See CONSTRUCTION; ABOUT.

The purchaser is not precluded by a recital of "more or less" in the deed from showing by parol evidence, under an allegation of fraud or mistake, an agreement contemporaneous with the execution of the deed, making the transaction a sale by the acre; Franco-Texan Land Co. v. Simpson, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 600, 20 S. W. 953. See By Estimation.

MORGANATIC MARRIAGE. A lawful and inseparable conjunction of a single man of noble and illustrious birth with a single woman of an inferior or plebeian station, upon this condition, that neither the wife nor children should partake of the title, arms, or dignity of the husband, nor succeed to his inheritance, but should have a certain allowance assigned to them by the morganatic contract.

This relation was frequently contracted during the Middle Ages; the marriage ceremony was regularly performed, the union was for life and indissoluble, and the children were considered legitimate, though they could not inherit. Fred. Code, b. 2, art. 3; Poth. Du Mar. 1, c. 2, § 2; Shelf. Marr. & D. 10; Pruss. Code, art. 835. In Germany, it is now confined to the reigning houses and the higher nobility and mediatized princes. It is there called a "left hand marriage."

MORGUE. A place where the bodies of persons found dead are exposed for identification, or until they are claimed and removed by their relatives or friends. A dead house.

A place where the bodies of unidentified dead are kept and exposed to view for the purpose of identification or that they may be claimed by their friends. Koebler v. Pennewell, 75 Ohio St. 278, 79 N. E. 471.

This meaning of the word is a derived, and not its original, one. Its present use in cities is adopted from the Morgue in Paris and is quite general.

The word is derived from morguer to look at solemnly or sourly, and a morgue was formerly, "in the chastelet of Paris, a certain chair wherein a new-come prisoner is set, and must continue some hours, without stirring either head or hand, that the keeper's ordinary servants may the better take notice of his face and favour." Cotgrave.

A variation in this explanation is that the word originally meant the inner wicket of a prison, where prisoners were kept for some time, that the jailers and turnkeys might view them at their leisure, so as to be able to recognize them when occasion required. Int. Encyc.

The term morgue as used in a statute forbidding the establishment of one on a street on which there are dwelling houses, except under certain conditions of consent of the owners or occupants, does not make it unlawful to receive, care for and keep temporarily in an undertaking establishment in such location, in a private room and unexposed to public view, the bodies of known and identified dead taken there from time to time by relatives or friends in order that funeral services may be held and conducted at that place; Koebler v. Pennewell, 75 Ohio St. 278, 79 N. E. 471.

The position of morgue keeper, being one of public trust with fixed salary and continuous duties, not menial, is a public office within a rule requiring appointments to be in writing; People v. Keller, 30 Misc. 52, 61 N. Y. Supp. 746.

MORMONISM. The system of doctrines, practices (especially polygamy), ceremonies, and church government maintained by the Mormons. Cent. Dict. See Marriage.

MORNING GIFT. A gift made by the bridegroom to the bride the day after marriage. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 76. It was the purchase price or morgengifu of the heathen Germans; id. 77.

MORPHINOMANIA, or MORPHINISM. The opium habit. An excessive desire for morphia.

The irresistible desire for this drug, when acquired, resembles dipsomania (q. v.). The result of continued and excessive indulgence in the habit is apt to be a species of insanity (q. v.), and sudden deprivation of the drug results to the victim in extreme physical discomfort and insomnia, with the possibility of that form of insanity grouped as mania (q. v.).

The physical results of the habit include the demoralization of most of the functions of the body, while mentally the final results are those of dementia (q. v.), with lowering of the moral character, loss of judgment and of memory, special tendency to lying, neglect of family and business and not uncommonly forgery. While the inception of the habit is generally due to the legitimate use of the drug to relieve pain, its continuance and abuse are said "to depend on a neurotic state which is due to an inherited degenerative nervous organization" and that "rarely will this habit plant itself upon an otherwise sound organization." 3 Witth. & Beck. Jur. For. Med. & Tox. 258. An agreement to treat one for this habit until he was "fully and permanently cured" is to be construed as intending that he should be restored to a normal condition, with the same power to resist the habit as before he acquired it, and not to put him in a condition in which he could not take the drug; Wellman v. Jones, 124 Ala. 580, 27 South. 416. See a note in 39 L. R. A. 262.

MORT D'ANCESTOR. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in English law. An assize of mort d'ancestor was a writ which was sued out where, after the decease of a man's ancestor, a stranger abated, and entered into the estate. Co. Litt. 159. The remedy in such case is now to bring ejectment.

MORTALITY TABLES. See Life Tables.

MORTGAGE. A conveyance of real estate or assignment of personal property, without parting with the possession in either case, by way of hypothecation as security for the performance of some act, usually the payment of money, and treated at law as a conveyance or assignment, but in equity as a lien.

The conveyance of an estate by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it. 4 Kent 136.

An estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 2 Washb. R. P., 5th ed. *475.

A conditional conveyance of land designed as a security for the payment of money, the fulfilment of some contract, or the performance of some act, and to be void upon such payment, fulfilment or performance. Mitchell v. Burnham, 44 Me. 299.

A contract by which specific property is hypothecated for the performance of an act without the necessity of a change of possession. Sandmeyer v. Ins. Co., 2 S. Dak. 346, 50 N. W. 353. It is a mere security for a debt or obligation; Cook v. Bartholomew, 60 Conn. 24, 22 Atl. 444, 13 L. R. A. 452; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 322, 21 L. Ed. 179.

"A concise definition of mortgage which should embrace both its equitable and its legal character is virtually impossible. . . . These attempted definitions are all erroneous upon any theory of the instrument; they do not go beyond the literal import of the language in which a mortgage is usually expressed, and they utterly ignore all the equitable elements which are as much and as truly constituent parts of the mortgage as the legal elements. Any true definition based upon the original common law and equitable system must embody and express all the double features of the mortgage—that it is both a lien in equity and a conveyance at law." Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 1191.

The first definition, supra, is an attempt to do what Pomeroy here says is "virtually impossible." It is, however, to be noted that advantage has been taken of his criticism of the definitions generally, and an effort made to supply what he pointed out as their deficiencies.

Scientific legal writers reckon among proprietary rights "jura in re aliena," i. e. rights of dominion over tangible things of which the fundamental property right is in another. Of such rights the most important is Pledge, which, in this sense, covers those legal relations in which a right in rem is conferred by a debtor upon a creditor as security for a right in personam, i. e. for the debt or other personal obligation of the debtor; Holland, Jurispr. ch. xi. Practically we distinguish these securities as Mortgage, when the debtor transfers the title to the res to his creditor, retaining the possession of it, and Pledge, when he retains the title but transfers the possession. See PLEDGE.

Mortgage is the translation of vadium mortuum—dead pledge, so named because the land was turned over to the mortgagee or lender of the money, who received the profits or revenues of it without applying them in satisfaction of his debt, and the land thus became dead to the mortgagor or borrower who derived no benefit from it. This was regarded as in the nature of usury on the part of the lender and was looked upon with disfavor, in modern pharse as contrary to public policy. In contrast to this was vadium vivum, or live pledge, under which the borrower continued in possession of his property, receiving the profits or revenues of it. Another explanation of the words is that in the vadium mortuum the pledge was dead to the borrower if he failed to redeem, but in the other was alive to him until the lender secured possession of it on default; 1 Coote, Mortg., 4th ed. 5; Co. Litt. 205. (In the case of Welsh mortgages, now disused, the mortgagee entered into possession, taking the rents and profits, but applying them on account of the debt.) In attempting to avoid the difficulty lenders devised the plan of taking from the borrower a conveyance of the property to become absolute upon the failure of the borrower to redeem. Later, the plan was adopted of taking an absolute conveyance, with an agreement on the part of the lender to re-convey on payment of the debt, the transaction being in form an absolute sale of land with an option to buy it back by payment of the loan at a fixed time. Another form was to convey the land to a trustee who was to hold to the creditor's use, and on default was to sell it for the payment of the debt. All these devices were intended to protect the lender by enabling him to secure the land on his debtor's default. All of them were modified or softened by the courts refusing to allow the forfeiture or to treat the transaction as other than a method of pledging the land as security for the debt, the debtor retaining what came to be known as the equity of redemption, and being protected against the strict enforcement of his contract; H. W. Chaplin, in 4 Harv. L. Rev. 1. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

In modern times although the old forms are still followed, it is everywhere recognized that the real owner of the land is the mortgagor, and the mortgage is a mere security for the debt or obligation, giving the mortgagee a chattel interest which passes to his personal representatives and not to his heirs. Some of the states have abrogated the old rule and declared by statute that the effect of a mortgage shall be merely to give a lien and not to pass an estate to the mortgagee. But in England and in most of the states the old rule remains nominally in force, and in courts of law the mortgage is recognized as conveying an estate, while equity treats it as merely conferring a lien. Originally this was burdensome, since there was an actual distinction between the rules applied in the different jurisdictions, and redress had to be sought in equity against the severities of the law, but the principle adopted in Pennsylvania in the eighteenth century, of administering equity through common law forms has been gradually making its way until it reached its most signal triumph in the adoption of the Judicature Act of 1873 in England providing that where "there is any conflict between the rules of equity and the rules of common law, the rules of equity shall prevail." To-day it may be safely said that the equitable doctrine has completely supplanted the legal, but as the form of the transaction is still the same, some confusion exists, and doubtless always will exist, in the definitions given of mortgage. Some of these have been quoted supra. See a discussion of the relations of mortgagor and mortgagee by Lord Selborne, in 6 Q. B. D. 345.

A mortgage on real estate in New York is merely a chose in action and gives the mortgagee merely a lien on the property; In re Kellogg, 113 Fed. 120; and it "is now almost universally regarded as a mere security for the payment of the debt"; Reasoner v. Edmundson, 5 Ind. 393; but, per contra, it was said to be "a conveyance of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of a debt, to become void on payment thereof"; Poarch v. Duncan, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 91 S. W. 1110. Any transfer of property as security, regardless of the form of characterizing the same, creates the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee; Beebe v. Loan Co., 117 Wis. 328, 93 N. W. 1103.

What May be Mortgaged. Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the law respecting the necessity of possession in case of personal property and the nature of the instruments of transfer, require the transfer to be made differently in the two cases.

All kinds of property, real or personal, which are capable of an absolute sale, may be the subject of a mortgage; rights in remainder and reversion, franchises, and choses in action, may, therefore, be mortgaged. But a mere possibility or expectancy, as that of an heir, cannot; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1012; 4 Kent 144; Wilson v. Wilson, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 328; Low v. Pew, 108 Mass. 347, 11 Am. Rep. 357; Hosmer v. Carter, 68 Ill. 98 (see EXPECTANCY).

Where real estate is mortgaged, all accessions thereto, subsequent to the mortgage, will be bound by it; Arques v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 620, 21 Am. Rep. 718; Broughton v. Powell, 52 Ala. 123; Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 544, 22 L. Ed. 183; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 596; if specifically stated to bind after-acquired property, it will have that effect; Hoyle v. R. Co., 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 45; Rowan v. Rifle Mfg. Co., 29 Conn. 282.

It may now be considered as settled that a mortgage of after-acquired property is valid and equity will give effect to it, whether the title subsequently acquired by the mortgagor is legal or equitable; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 15, 17 Sup. Ct. 7, 41 L. Ed. 327; Brady v. Johnson, 75 Md. 445, 26 Atl. 49, 20 L. R. A. 737; Hickson Lumber Co. v. Lumber Co., 150 N. C. 282, 63 S. E. 1045, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 843, and note on the validity of such mortgages other than of railroads. But it was held in Loth v. Carty, 85 Ky. 591, 4 S. W. 314, that a mortgage of property to be acquired in futuro was constructively fraudulent as to the creditors of the mortgagee.

A mortgage to secure advances is valid; Seymour v. Darrow, 31 Vt. 122; Lawrence v. Tucker, 23 How. (U. S.) 14, 16 L. Ed. 474; Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517, 43 N. W. 890; Union Nat. Bank v. Moline, Wilbun & Stoddard Co., 7 N. D. 201, 73 N. W. 527; Citizens' Savings Bank v. Kock, 117 Mich. 225, 75 N. W. 458; Bunker v. Barron, 93 Me. 87, 44 Atl. 372; but if a second mortgage be executed of which the holder of the first mortgage have notice before he makes advances the latter will not be protected; Appeal of Bank of Montgomery County, 36 Pa. 170; 9 H. L. C. 514; but see, contra, McDaniels v. Colvin, 16 Vt. 300, 42 Am. Dec. 512; but he will be where the first mortgagee binds himself to make the advances, though they be made after the execution of the subsequent mortgage; Ladue v. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380, 87 Am. Dec. 759; Boswell v. Goodwin, 31 Conn. 74, 81 Am. Dec. 169; and in either case it is said the first mortgagee will be protected if the advances be made without notice of the subsequent mortgage; id.; the record of the second mortgage is constructive notice; Ladue v. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380, 87 Am. Dec. 759.

Land in one state may be mortgaged to a bank of another to secure a debt; Lathrop v. Commercial Bank, 8 Dana (Ky.) 114, 33 Am. Dec. 481. Rents and profits may be mortgaged; Ryan v. Bank, 100 Ill. App. 251, affirmed 199 Ill. 76, 64 N. E. 1085; and the mortgage of them does not interfere with the equity of redemption; Ortengren v. Rice, 104 Ill. App. 428; but nothing can be mortgaged except things which can be sold; Mendenhall v. R. Co., 36 Pa. 145.

As to the form, a mortgage must be in writing, when it is intended to convey the legal title; Porter v. Muller, 53 Cal. 677; but it need not be under seal; Woods v. Wallace, 22 Pa. 171; though at common law it must be by deed; Hebron v. Town of Centre Harbor, 11 N. H. 571; but no precise form of words is necessary; Baldwin v. Jenkins, 23 Miss. 206. It may be given to mortgagees in their firm name; Orr v. How, 55 Mo. 328. It may be written on more than one sheet of paper, if the testatum clause, signatures, seals and acknowledgment are on one sheet; Norman v. Shepherd, 38 Ohio St. 320. It is either in one single deed, which contains the whole contract, which is the usual form, or it is two separate instruments, the one containing an absolute conveyance and the other a defeasance; Dow v. Chamberlin, 5 McLean 281, Fed. Cas. No. 4,037; Payne's Adm'r v. Patterson's Adm'rs, 77 Pa. 134; Moors v. Albro, 129 Mass. 9; Knowlton v. Walker, 13 Wis. 264; Robinson v. Willoughby, 65 N. C. 520; Poston v. Jones, 122 N. C. 536, 29 S. E. 951; Waters' Lessee v. Riggin, 19 Md. 536.

The true test, determining whether an instrument purporting to convey title in payment of a debt be a mortgage or not, is, Was the old debt at that time cancelled and absolutely paid? Peters Saddlery & Harness Co. v. Schoelkopf & Co., 71 Tex. 418, 9 S. W. 336. In law, the defeasance must be of as high a nature as the conveyance to be defeated; Lund v. Lund, 1 N. H. 39, 8 Am. Dec. 29; Dey v. Dunham, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 182. See infra, subtitle Equitable Mortgage.

When the date of acknowledgment of a mortgage differs from the date of the mortgage, the mortgage, in the absence of any evidence upon the subject, will be presumed to have been delivered when it purports to be acknowledged; Guaranty Trust Co. v. R. Co., 107 Fed. 311.

What Law Governs. In some states the law of the state in which real estate is situated governs a transfer of the property by mortgage; Bowdle v. Jencks, 18 S. D. 80, 99 N. W. 98; Gault v. Trust Co., 100 Ky. 578, 38 S. W. 1065, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 1038; Bramblet v. Lumber Co., 83 S. W. 599, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1176, judgment modified on rehearing 84 S. W. 545, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 156; Sinclair v. Gunzenhauser (Ind.) 98 N. E. 37. In others the law of the place of the execution of the note or bond and mortgage will be applied, although the property is located in another state in which the case was tried; Trower Bros. Co. v. Hamilton, 179 Mo. 205, 77 S. W. 1081; Conradt v. Lepper, 13 Wyo. 473, 81 Pac. 307, 82 Pac. 2 (where the question was in the determination of the validity of the consideration); Lamkin v. Lovell (Ala.) 58 South. 258 (where the debt was payable in the state where executed).

In at least one state there is a statute providing that mortgages of real estate within its limits shall be construed by its laws as to interest and in all other respects without regard to the place of performance, and this was held prospective and not to affect a mortgage executed before its passage; Mutual Aid Loan & Inv. Co. v. Logan, 55 S. C. 295, 33 S. E. 372; and so it was held as to a statute providing that a mortgage could be created, renewed or extended only with the formalities required in the case of a grant of real estate; Wilson v. Pickering, 28 Mont. 435, 72 Pac. 821. A statute making void all mortgages, deeds of trust, etc., of land in more than one county for the payment of a debt, means "void" and not "voidable"; Denny v. McCown, 34 Or. 47, 54 Pac. 952, where it was also held that the invalidity of a mortgage affected by the statute could not be cured by subsequent legislation or consolidation of the counties.

What is a Mortgage and Its Characteristics, and How it is Proved. The rule as to the admission of parol evidence to establish the character of a conveyance as a mortgage varies in the different states. It is safe to state that where the equitable principle admitting parol evidence to vary a writing on the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake can be invoked, it would universally be applied. In some states the rule is still more liberal, and the evidence is admitted more upon the principle of making the intention of the parties govern the transaction. It excluded in any state it would probably be for statutory reasons: Thus in New Hampshire no deed shall be defeated, nor any estate encumbered, unless by condition inserted in the conveyance; Benton v. Sumner, 57 N. H. 117. In Georgia a deed absolute in form and supported by possession shall not be shown by parol evidence to be a mortgage, unless fraud be the issue; Mitchell v. Fullington, 83 Ga. 303, 9 S. E. 1083; Davis v. Davis, 88 Ga. 191, 14 S. E. 194. In Pennsylvania no defeasance shall have the effect of reducing a deed absolute to a mortgage unless the defeasance is contemporaneous with the deed and is in writing, signed, sealed, acknowledged, and delivered, and is recorded within sixty days. See Sankey v. Hawley, 118 Pa. 30, 13 Atl. 208. In Colorado, on the other hand, it is provided that parol evidence may be admitted to convert a deed into a mortgage; Townsend v. Petersen, 12 Colo. 491, 21 Pac. 619. Where a conveyance is in form absolute, in order to change its character to that of a mortgage, the proof must clearly and satisfactorily show such intent; and evidence which leaves the mind in serious doubt is not sufficient; Strong v. Strong, 126 Ill. 301, 18 N. E. 665; Perdue v. Bell, 83 Ala. 396, 3 South. 698; Gassert v. Bogk, 7 Mont. 585, 19 Pac. 281, 1 L. R. A. 240; 20 Can. S. C. R. 548; Ganceart v. Henry, 98 Cal. 281, 33 Pac. 92; Hayward v. Mayse, 1 App. D. C. 133. See DEFEASANCE.

It is competent for either party to a conveyance to prove that it was in fact a mortgage; Kellogg v. Northrup, 115 Mich. 327, 73 N. W. 230. It is a question of intention, and if the mortgage was meant to be a security at the time of its execution, though absolute in its form, it is a mortgage; Cobb v. Day, 106 Mo. 278, 17 S. W. 323; Weiseham v. Hocker, 7 Okl. 250, 54 Pac. 464; Howat v. Howat, 101 Ill. App. 158; and the intention of the parties, which is the infallible test, is to be gathered from all surrounding circumstances; Miller v. Miller, 101 Md. 600, 61 Atl. 210; Day v. Davis, 101 Md. 260, 61 Atl. 576; Reavis v. Reavis, 103 Fed. 813; Sanders v. Ayres, 63 Neb. 271, 88 N. W. 526. The right to treat a deed, intended as a mortgage, as such, is mutual, and the grantee cannot be compelled by other creditors to treat it as a deed; Andrus v. Burke, 61 N. J. Eq. 297, 48 Atl. 228.

A valid mortgage may be given by way of indemnity, as to secure a surety from liability; Simmons Hardware Co. v. Thomas, 147 Ind. 313, 46 N. E. 645; Harlan County v. Whitney, 65 Neb. 105, 90 N. W. 993, 101 Am. St. Rep. 610; or an indorser; Stavers v. Philbrick, 68 N. H. 379, 36 Atl. 16. An indebtedness of several creditors may be secured by a single mortgage; Rice Bros. v. Davis, McDonald & Davis, 99 Mo. App. 636, 74 S. W. 431; and a mortgage need not be made directly to the beneficiary, but may be made to a third person as well as to a creditor; Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 135, 8 N. W. 719.

The mortgagor has, in law, technically speaking, a mere tenancy, subject to the right of the mortgagee to enter immediately, unless restrained by his agreement to the contrary; Clay v. Wren, 34 Me. 187; Mc-

Call v. Lenox, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 302; Jackson v. Bronson, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 325; 5 Bingh. 421. In equity, the mortgage is held a mere security for the debt, and is only a chattel interest; and until a decree of foreclosure, the mortgagor is regarded as the real owner; 2 J. & W. 190; Huntington v. Smith, 4 Conn. 235; Ford v. Philpot, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 312; Eaton v. Whiting, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 484. Both in law and equity a mortgage is held to be only a chattel interest; City of Davenport v. R. Co., 12 Ia. 539. It has been held frequently that the legal fee is in the mortgagee until default, and an absolute fee afterwards; Smith v. Johns, 3 Gray (Mass.) 517; City of Norwich v. Hubbard, 22 Conn. 587; Swartz's Ex'rs v. Leist, 13 Ohio St. 419; but it may be considered as the general rule, in modern practice, that the mortgagor, before entry, is the legal owner as to third persons and his conveyance is a transfer of the fee, if the mortgage is afterwards paid; Freeman v. McGaw, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 82.

The mortgagee, at law, is the owner of the land, subject, however, to a defeat of title by performance of the condition, with a right to enter at any time; Toby v. Reed, 9 Conn. 216; Gore v. Jenness, 19 Me. 53. He is, however, accountable for the profits before foreclosure, if in possession; Stevens v. Payne, 42 Ill. App. 202; Morgan v. Morgan, 48 N. J. Eq. 399, 22 Atl. 545.

The different states fluctuate somewhat between the rules of equity and those of law, or, rather, have engrafted the equitable rules upon the legal to an unequal extent; Wilson v. Shoenberger's Ex'rs, 31 Pa. 295; Ragland v. Justices of Inferior Court, 10 Ga. 65; Bryan v. Butts, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 503; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; State v. Laval, 4 McCord (S. C.) 336; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365, 70 Am. Dec. 655.

If, after a mortgage of land in fee, the mortgagor remains in possession and grants a lease under the English Conveyancing Act of 1881, the mortgagee has the immediate freehold in reversion expectant on the term so granted by the lease, for it passed to him under the grant contained in the mortgage deed; the lease was good as against the mortgagee but he could enforce its provisions and collect the rent or recover it; 22 Q. B. D. 70; and in such case the mortgagor has no power to accept a surrender of the lease without the concurrence of the mortgagee; [1906] 1 K. B. 125. Section 18 of the Conveyancing Act of 1881, under which the two cases last cited arose, gives a mortgagor in possession the power to lease as against every incumbrancer, and a like power to a mortgagee in possession.

Case lies by a mortgagor for injuries done the mortgaged premises by a mortgagee not in possession; Morse v. Whitcher, 64 N. H. 591, 15 Atl. 207. A mortgagee cannot maintain trover for fixtures severed from the mortgaged premises prior to the foreclosure; Rowland v. Sprouls, 66 Hun 635, 21 N. Y. Supp. 895; but he may maintain a bill to prevent injury to the mortgaged property; Clapp v. City of Spokane, 53 Fed. 515.

Mortgages Distinguished from Other Transactions. Mortgages are to be distinguished from sales with a contract for repurchase. The distinction is important and has been the subject of much litigation; Kelly v. Thompson, 7 Watts (Pa.) 401; but turns rather upon the evidence in each case than upon any general rule of distinction; Wallace v. Johnstone, 129 U. S. 58, 9 Sup. Ct. 243, 32 L. Ed. 619; and while the intention of the parties determines the question; Sadler v. Taylor, 49 W. Va. 104, 38 S. E. 583; in cases of doubt, equity inclines to construe the transaction to be a mortgage; Snavely v. Pickle, 29 Grat. (Va.) 27; Heath v. Williams, 30 Ind. 495; Bennet v. Holt, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 6, 24 Am. Dec. 455; Hughes v. Sheaff, 19 Ia. 335.

They are also to be distinguished from leases and the transaction is frequently held to be a mortgage where the form appears to be a lease; Lanfair v. Lanfair, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 299; Barroilhet v. Battelle, 7 Cal. 450; but in this also the intention of the parties will prevail; Stockton v. Dillon, 66 N. J. Eq. 100, 57 Atl. 487; and there must be evidence to show that the instrument was not intended to be a lease as it purported to be; Packard v. Corp. for Relief of Widows, 77 Md. 240, 26 Atl. 411; and where a lease is made for a price it will not be converted into a mortgage because the rent is to go in satisfaction of a debt; Halo v. Schick, 57 Pa. 320.

So they are distinguished from trusts, and a deed conveying land to creditors in trust to sell it and pay certain debts, including the grantee's in the deed, is in effect a mortgage; Morgan v. Glendy, 92 Va. 86, 22 S. E. 854; but not where the surplus after payment of the debt was to go to the grantor; Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651. Deeds of trust to secure the payment of debts do not differ in legal effect from mortgages with power to sell; McLane v. Paschal, 47 Tex. 365; Thompson v. Marshall, 21 Or. 171, 27 Pac. 957.

A mortgage differs from a pledge: the general property passes by a mortgage, whilst by a pledge only the possession or, at most, a special property, passes. Possession is inseparable from the nature of a pledge, but is not necessary to a mortgage; Perry v. Craig, 3 Mo. 516; Barrow v. Paxton, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 258, 4 Am. Dec. 354; Ferguson v. Thomas, 26 Me. 499.

The essence of a pledge is that the grantee says to the grantor: I will lend you money if and when you deposit certain goods with me. It is not (as in a mortgage): I will lend you money on the security of an authority to take possession of certain goods; 17 Q. B. D. 690.

Assignment of Mortgages at common law, or under statutes merely providing for the registration of deeds for the purpose of notice, must be by deed only, in order to operate at law as an assignment of the mortgagee's interest in the land; Stanley v. Creelman, 14 Can. Sup. Ct. 33; Morrison v. Mendenhall, 18 Minn. 232 (Gil. 212); Den v. Dimon, 10 N. J. L. 156; Givan v. Doe, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 210; Graham v. Newman, 21 Ala. 497; and in a previous Maine case it was held that a valid assignment must be in writing, signed by the party charged; Lyford v. Ross, 33 Me. 197. The difference between these two classes of cases doubtless arises merely from the point of view; those which require an assignment by deed dealing with the transaction as the conveyance of an interest in the land, and those which merely require that it be in writing having in view the satisfaction of the Statute of Frauds. The latter view is taken by Shepley, C. J., in the last cited Maine case; while in Young v. Miller, 6 Gray (Mass.) 152, Shaw, C. J., held that the endorsee of notes secured by a mortgage could not maintain a writ of entry without a formal assignment of the mortgage. Whether such assignment should be by deed, or in writing merely, was not suggested though the decision seems to require that it should be based upon the theory that an assignment was necessary for the transfer of the title of the mortgagee to the land and therefore would necessarily be by deed. In Barnes v. Boardman, 149 Mass. 106, 21 N. E. 308, 3 L. R. A. 785, it was held that an assignment of the mortgage and of the debt described therein, without words of inheritance, was sufficient to vest in the assignee the title of the mortgagee.

In Canada, as appears supra, a deed is required, and "assign, transfer, and set over" are said to be the proper technical words; Watt v. Feader, 12 U. C. C. P. 254; and in Austin v. Boulton, 16 U. C. C. P. 318, the words "bargained, sold, assigned and transferred" unto the assignee, "his heirs and assigns, the annexed mortgage, and all the right, title and interest therein," of the assignor, "to have and to hold the same unto the said . . . her heirs and assigns, to his and their sole use for ever," did not pass the interest in the land; and to the same effect; Wright v. Sperry, 21 Wis. 331, where it was held that an assignment "of the mortgage" did not convey the legal estate in the land; but an assignment of the mortgage passes the legal title and no suit can subsequently be maintained thereon in the name of the assignor; Pryor v. Wood, 31 Pa. 142; though where the granting part of the deed of assignment transferred the indenture simply, and the habendum the estate in the indenture, the estate passed; Doe dem. Wood v. Fox, 3 U. C. Q. B. 134; but where the language was "do hereby assign . . . all my right, title and interest in and to the within mortgage," the land did not pass; Moran v. Currie, 8 U. C. Q. B. 60.

As a result of the modern tendency of courts to regard a mortgage as a lien rather than a conveyance of the land, it is in many cases held to be merely a chattel interest that may be transferred by parol; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Rigney v. Lovejoy, 13 N. H. 247; Kamena v. Huelbig, 23 N. J. Eq. 78; Sims v. Hammond, 33 Ia. 368; and the assignee may foreclose in equity; Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9, 18 Am. Rep. 58.

A transfer by mere delivery of the papers has been held valid; Daly v. R. Co., 55 N. J. Eq. 595, 38 Atl. 202, affirmed 57 N. J. Eq. 347, 45 Atl. 1092; John H. Mahnken Co. v. Pelletreau, 93 App. Div. 420, 87 N. Y. Supp. 737; McMillan v. Craft, 135 Ala. 148, 33 South. 26; Cutler v. Haven, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 490; but there must be an intention to transfer accompanying the delivery, and if the intention is to have a written assignment the manual delivery does not pass title; Strause v. Josephthal, 77 N. Y. 622. The transfer by delivery merely creates an equity, but does not at law transfer either the mortgage debt or an interest in the property; Dacus v. Streety, 59 Ala. 183; and while good between the parties, as to third persons it takes effect, either in law or in equity, only from the time it is duly recorded; Fosdick v. Barr, 3 Ohio St. 471.

The transfer of the note secured by the mortgage, by delivery merely, operates as an equitable transfer of the mortgage; O'Neal v. Seixas, 85 Ala. 80, 4 South. 745; and the transfer of the debt carries with it the security without assignment or delivery thereof; Stimpson v. Bishop, 82 Va. 190; Jenkins v. Wilkinson, 113 N. C. 532, 18 S. E. 696; but the assignee of an overdue note and mortgage takes them subject to all equities which could be enforced against the assignor; Owen v. Evans, 134 N. Y. 514, 31 N. E. 999.

A specific request or devise of a mortgage and deed or of the "real estate of which I now hold a mortgage" is sufficient to pass the interest of the testator; Clark v. Clark, 56 N. H. 105; Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284; and where the executor was also residuary legatee, and there was no specific bequest of the mortgage, the executor took the property as executor, and not by assignment, and could foreclose the mortgage; Hayes v. Frey, 54 Wis. 503, 11 N. W. 695.

Assumption of Mortgage by Grantee. The question whether the acceptance by a grantee of a deed subject to a specified mortgage as part of the consideration, in the absence of an express promise to pay it implies such a promise on his part, has been the subject of conflicting decisions. But the more generally accepted view is, that the clause "under and subject" in a deed or conveyance, is a covenant of indemnity only as between grantor and grantee for the protection of the former; Moore's Appeal, 88 Pa. 450, 32 Am. Rep. 469; Freeman v. R. Co., 173 Pa. 275, 33 Atl. 1034; (but see Blood v. Crew Levick Co., 171 Pa. 328, 33 Atl. 344); Hamill v. Gillespie, 48 N. Y. 556; Tichenor v. Dodd, 4 N. J. Eq. 454; Fiske v. Tolman, 124 Mass. 254, 26 Am. Rep. 659; Meech v. Ensign, 49 Conn. 191, 44 Am. Rep. 225; Morris v. Mix, 4 Kan. App. 654, 46 Pac. 58.

A different view has been held in New York, based in the later cases on the doctrine that when one makes a promise for the benefit of a third person, the latter may maintain an action upon it; Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327; Campbell v. Smith, 71 N. Y. 26, 27 Am. Rep. 5. But this doctrine is for the most part confined to New York; see 26 Am. Rep. 660, n.; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Hanford, 143 U. S. 187, 12 Sup. Ct. 437, 36 L. Ed. 118; Solicitors' Loan & Trust Co. v. Robins, 14 Wash. 507, 45 Pac. 39; 1 Jones, Mort. § 758. In Pennsylvania, by statute, a grantee does not assume a liability for an incumbrance, unless by agreement in writing, and the words "under and subject" in his deed do not impose such liability.

As to the rights of a mortgagee holding more than one mortgage of the same mortgagor, see TACKING.

Where it is sought to give the lien of a junior mortgage precedence over the lien of a senior one, the claim must be based either on an agreement to that effect, or on the superior equity of the junior mortgage; Brown v. Baker, 22 Neb. 708, 36 N. W. 273. An agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee extending the time of payment of the mortgage debt, and providing for the compounding of interest, cannot be enforced to the prejudice of junior lienholders whose liens were created prior to such agreement; Johnson v. Finzer, 84 Ky. 411, 1 S. W. 674. The vested priority of a mortgagee is beyond the power of the mortgagor or the legislature thereafter to disturb; Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 134 U. S. 296, 10 Sup. Ct. 546, 33 L. Ed. 905. Failure to show that a mortgage was recorded before a judgment, is fatal to the mortgagee's claim of priority; Holst v. Burrus, 79 Ga. 111, 4 S. E. 108. The redelivery of a mortgage which has been paid, upon an agreement that it shall secure another debt, does not create a lien; Thompson's Adm'r v. George, 86 Ky. 311, 5 S. W. 760. A mortgage cannot be continued in effect so as to cover a new indebtedness by an oral agreement; Thomas' Appeal, 30 Pa. 378; Sims v. Mead, 29 Kan. 124; but where money has been paid thereunder, the party making payments will be protected as against the mortgagor, or his vendee with knowledge of the facts; Stone v. Lane, 10 Allen (Mass.) 74; L. R. 12 Eq. 516.

A chattel mortgage is a transfer of personal property as security for the obligation of the mortgagor. In form it is usually a bill of sale with a clause of defeasance. In some states its form is prescribed by statute; in the greater number, however, this is not the case, and any form may be adopted. A mortgage is to be distinguished from a pledge, the former being a transfer of title, the latter a transfer of possession (see PLEDGE); also from a conditional sale, the test being that if after the transfer the mere relation of debtor and creditor exists the transaction is a mortgage, if not, a conditional sale. The courts lean toward construing the transaction as a mortgage.

The subject-matter of the transaction being a chattel, the law is in some respects simpler than the law as to mortgages of realty which is complicated by rules of conveyancing. The courts seek, in dealing with chattel mortgages, as in the case of other contracts, to arrive at the intention of the parties, and form is generally of little importance. But on the other hand the subject is complicated by the transitory nature of the subject-matter and the devices resorted to to secure the mortgagee and at the same time protect from fraud the creditors of the mortgagor, in other words by the recording acts. These are the very life of the chattel mortgage, and without them it cannot exist. For example, it was held in Pennsylvania (where chattel mortgages formerly did not exist at all, and are now recognized only to a limited extent) that while such a mortgage between citizens of Maryland would be recognized and enforced, when the question arose between the mortgagee and a citizen of Pennsylvania who had in good faith purchased the mortgaged chattel from the mortgagor, the mortgage could not be regarded because in the absence of statutory provisions the common law rule prevails in Pennsylvania that a sale of personal property unaccompanied by delivery of possession is void as against the intervening rights of creditors and purchasers; McCabe v. Blymyre, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 615.

The problem is how to restrict a transaction by which the mortgagor, though retaining possession of his goods, gives a valid lien upon them as security for a debt, so that innocent parties shall not be injured by giving credit to the mortgagor on the strength of the apparent ownership of the goods. Manifestly the only way to secure this end is by requiring the transaction to be made a matter of record.

Accordingly, the statutes provide for recording the instrument, usually in the county or town in which the mortgagor resides, or, if he is a non-resident, in the county or town in which the chattels are situated. Commonly this is sufficient record while the mortgaged property remains within the state, but some of the acts require re-recording if the property be removed to another county.

The recording acts gave the mortgagee who recorded his mortgage a right good against any one who subsequently acquired any interest in the goods from the mortgagor. This result is generally accomplished by saying that the record gives constructive notice to all the world. All that was purposed and effected by the mortgage recording acts was to protect a mortgagee against subsequently acquired interests by placing knowledge within the reach of all. It has been held that a fire insurance company is not charged with notice of a recorded mortgage so as to raise a forfeiture clause for breach of condition against encumbrancing; Wicke v. Ins. Co., 90 Ia. 4, 57 N. W. 632. Where a commission merchant, ignorant of an existing mortgage on cattle, sold them and remitted the proceeds to the consignor, the mortgagee recovered, in an action against him on a count for money had and received; Greer v. Newland, 70 Kan. 310, 77 Pac. 98, 70 L. R. A. 554, 109 Am. St. Rep. 424, this decision being the result of employing the fiction of constructive notice, instead of recognizing that recording really dispenses with the necessity of notice. This distinction was recognized in Frizzell v. Rundle, 88 Tenn. 393, 12 S. W. 918, 17 Am. St. Rep. 908, with the consequence that a contrary decision was reached.

In some acts it is provided that the wife of the mortgagor must join. In many states are found provisions to punish any removal or disposition of the property by the mortgagor in prejudice of the rights of the mortgagee. See LEX REI SITÆ; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The property must be described with such accuracy as the nature of it will admit, and the description should be sufficient to enable third parties to identify the property. As a general rule it may be said that any personal property may be mortgaged, but this with the reservation that in a number of states the right is restricted to classes of articles, more or less numerous. Naturally, a common subject of such a mortgage is a shopkeeper's stock of goods employed by him in regular course of business. As to this, every variety of rule from the absolute prohibition of such mortgages to their freest use will be found. In some cases they bind the stock at the time the mortgage is created, in others they bind the stock at the time of foreclosure, in others they bind what is left of the original stock, but not the accessions; in others they bind the accessions, provided no other specific lien has attached before the mortgagee secures possession of them.

Where animals are mortgaged, the natural increase will be covered by the mortgage, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary. A mortgage on an article in process of manufacture will cover it when completed if still capable of identification. Growing crops are frequently the subject of mortgage, and the mortgage is valid at any stage of their development, and even in anticipation of their planting. See LIENS. As to a mortgage in its terms covering after acquired property see supra, and also corporation mortgages infra.

The remedies upon a mortgage by the mortgagee on default of payment are various. In cases of real estate he may (1) bring ejectment on his legal title; (2) file a bill and obtain a decree of foreclosure, or a sale of the property mortgaged; 4 Kent *180; (3) exercise a power of sale, if such power be in the mortgage; (4) take possession of the land, if he can do so peaceably, his title becoming sure, and the equity of redemption being barred after the lapse of twenty years or a period equal to the lapse of time necessary to bar a writ of entry, or in some states for a less period provided by law; (5) by proceeding in accordance with statutory enactments which vary in the different states.

In cases of chattel mortgages, the mortgagee's remedy is either (1) to bring a bill in equity, obtain a decree of foreclosure and a sale; (2) if he have the thing mortgaged in his possession, to sell it after giving to the mortgagor notice of such sale, and also of the amount of the debt due.

A remedy by foreclosure is barred where the obligation secured by the mortgage is barred; Perkins v. Sterne, 23 Tex. 561, 76 Am. Dec. 72; Pollock v. Maison, 41 Ill. 516; contra, Mitchell v. Clark, 35 Vt. 104; Bush v. Cooper, 26 Miss. 599, 59 Am. Dec. 270.

In some cases a reconveyance by the mortgagee is necessary when the mortgage has been paid after default; L. R. 5 Ch. 227; Brobst v. Brock, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 536, 19 L. Ed. 1002; in other cases no reconveyance is necessary; Armitage v. Wickliffe, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 497.

A tender after default discharges the mortgage lien; Trimm v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 599, 13 Am. Rep. 623; Van Husan v. Kanouse, 13 Mich. 306; contra, Shields v. Lozear, 34 N. J. L. 505, 3 Am. St. Rep. 256; Currier v. Gale, 9 Allen (Mass.) 522.

It is held in England that a mortgagee's purchase at a foreclosure sale, under a power of sale, by having another buy for him, does not pass a title free from the interest of the mortgagor unless the right to purchase is conferred by the mortgage; [1894] A. C. 150; Lovelace v. Hutchinson, 106 Ala. 417, 17 South. 623; if the power is conferred by the mortgage, the mortgagee may buy at his own sale; North Brookfield Savings Bank v. Flanders, 161 Mass. 335, 37 N. E. 307; Yount v. Morrison, 109 N. C. 520, 13 S. E. 892; Sanford v. Kane, 127 Ill. 591, 20 N. E. 810. A mere power to sell has been held to confer on the mortgagee the right to purchase; Palmer v. Young, 96 Ga. 246, 22 S. E. 928, 51 Am. St. Rep. 136. But in scire facias proceedings in Pennsylvania the mortgagee may buy at his own sale; and it is everywhere a familiar practice in the foreclosure of corporate mortgages for the bondholders to unite to buy in the property.

The bidding in of the property by one who has taken an assignment of a mortgage as collateral security, at his own foreclosure sale, gives him a good title to the property, and transfers the interest of his debtor to the proceeds, although such assignor, because not within the jurisdiction, was not made a party to the proceedings; Anderson v. Messinger, 146 Fed. 929, 77 C. C. A. 179, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094. Notwithstanding the statute provides that a mortgage of real estate shall not be deemed a conveyance, whatever its terms, so as to enable the owner of the mortgage to recover possession without a foreclosure, a court of equity may, pending foreclosure, impound the rents and profits to be applied in reduction of the debt, especially where the rents and profits were pledged in the mortgage to the payment of the debt, in consideration of the release by the mortgage of other security; id. Equity has power in a jurisdiction where a mortgage does not convey the title to impound rents and profits of mortgaged property; Moncrieff v. Hare, 38 Colo. 221, 87 Pac. 1082, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001. The right of a mortgagee to have a receiver appointed, where there is a stipulation in the mortgage that he shall have a lien upon the rents and profits as well as upon the land, was recognized, although it was provided by law that a mortgage of real estate is not a conveyance of any estate whatever; Hardin v. Hardin, 34 S. C. 77, 12 S. E. 936, 27 Am. St. Rep. 786; such provision was held against public policy in Couper v. Shirley, 75 Fed. 168, 21 C. C. A. 288.

A strict foreclosure is the barring of the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, after default in payment, when such default continues after due notice to redeem; 4 Kent *180. It is by bill in equity, by which the lands became the absolute property of the mortgagee. This is a common English practice and obtains also in certain New England states, with a liberal period, by statute or by practice in equity, for redemption; 4 Kent *181. But it is common to decree a sale of the mortgaged premises and apply the proceeds to the payment of the incumbrances in their order of priority. A more common practice, both in England and here, is for the mortgagee, or a trustee appointed for the purpose, to sell the land under a power of sale inserted in the mortgage. This takes the place of a foreclosure. It is the usual practice in the foreclosure of corporation mortgages, except that the sale by the trustee named in the mortgage is usually made in the course of legal proceedings and under a decree of the court, the fund being distributed to the lienholders according to their respective priorities, and the surplus, if any, paid over to the mortgagor.

A mortgagee may proceed to judgment on his bond secured by the mortgage; and such judgment has a lien as of the date of the mortgage; McCall v. Lenox, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 310; the purchaser at a sale under the judgment holds the land discharged of the lien of the mortgage; Berger v. Hiester, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 210.

The Equity of Redemption. The right to redeem mortgaged real estate may be kept open by the express agreement of the parties or by circumstances from which an agreement may be inferred, although it would be foreclosed except for such agreement, and so long as the right of redemption remains in existence the mortgagor may recover from the mortgagee, as money had and received, a surplus obtained by the latter from the sale of the mortgaged property; Dow v. Bradley, 110 Me. 249, 85 Atl. 896, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041, with note classifying the cases.

An agreement in a mortgage cutting off the right of redemption is void; Bayley v. Bailey, 5 Gray (Mass.) 505; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503, 7 N. W. 74; Turpie v. Lowe, 114 Ind. 37, 15 N. E. 834. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

Defects in the execution of the note or bond have been held not to invalidate the accompanying mortgage, as when the wife's name did not appear on the notes, although so recited in the mortgage; Baker v. Hutchinson, 147 Ala. 636, 41 South. 809; or where the note is void because of the wife's coverture, but she joins in a separate promise to pay the debt secured; Sperry v. Dickinson, 82 Ind. 132; or where the note never was delivered; Eacho v. Cosby, 26 Grat. (Va.) 112 (contra, Leader Pub. Co. v. Savings Co., 174 Ind. 192, 91 N. E. 498); or where the note was void by reason of non-compliance with a statute requiring mention in them of the mortgage security; Hogan v. Akin, 181 Ill. 448, 55 N. E. 137 (followed in several cases cited in note referred to infra); or where the bond was never executed or the note made; Baldwin v. Raplee, 4 Ben. 433, Fed. Cas. No. 801; Lee v. Fletcher, 46 Minn. 49, 48 N. W. 456, 12 L. R. A. 171; Swancey v. Parrish, 62 S. C. 240, 40 S. E. 554; McFadden v. State, 82 Ind. 558; Burger v. Hughes, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 180, affirmed 63 N. Y. 629; Morris v. Linton, 74 Neb. 411, 104 N. W. 927; Goodhue v. Berrien, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 630 (in both of the last two cases there was a pre-existing debt); Lierman v. O'Hara, 153 Wis. 140, 140 N. W. 1057, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153, and note reviewing the cases and concluding that weight of authority sustains the rule here stated.

The general rule is that the mortgagee may pursue all his rights at the same time; 4 Kent *183; but it is said that there are difficulties attending the sale of equity of redemption by execution at law, and it has been forbidden by statute in New York; and is disapproved in Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Kentucky; 4 Kent *184.

The satisfaction of a mortgage on the record is only prima facie evidence of its discharge, and the owner may prove that the cancellation was done by fraud, accident, or mistake; and if he does this, his rights will not be affected by the improper cancellation of it; Crumlish v. R. Co., 32 W. Va. 244, 9 S. E. 180.

The cancellation of a mortgage through misapprehension or mistake of law, but for which it would not have been cancelled, is good ground for equity to grant relief and re-establish the mortgage; Swedesboro Loan & Bldg. Ass'n v. Gans, 65 N. J. Eq. 132, 55 Atl. 82.

The object of recording a mortgage is to give notice to third persons; as between the parties thereto, a mortgage is just as effectual for all purposes without recording as with; Bacon v. Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 9 Sup. Ct. 787, 33 L. Ed. 128.

The receipt of insurance money by a mortgagee in whose behalf the premises were insured, does not constitute a payment of the mortgage, where such is not the intent of the parties, and the money is delivered to the mortgagor for rebuilding; Johnson v. Marble Co., 64 Vt. 337, 25 Atl. 441.

One who has conveyed land in a foreign state as collateral security for the payment of money under a contract may, upon failure to make payment, be required to convey title to the property; Dickson v. Loehr, 126 Wis. 641, 106 N. W. 793, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 986. The right to the proceeds of insurance, where loss occurs after foreclosure sale, but during the period of redemption, is a point upon which the courts are not harmonious in the few reported decisions. Some cases hold that a trustee in a deed of trust who collects insurance money during that period must turn it over to the mortgagor, on the theory that his interest in the property has ceased; Rawson v. Bethesda Baptist Church, 221 Ill. 216, 77 N. E. 560, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 448; Carlson v. Board of Relief, 67 Minn. 436, 70 N. W. 3; Chipman v. Carroll, 53 Kan. 163, 35 Pac. 1109, 25 L. R. A. 305; contra, McLaren v. Fire Ins. Co., 5 N. Y. 151.

An honest mortgage is not affected by its proximity to an assignment for creditors; Root & Co. v. Harl, 62 Mich. 420, 29 N. W. 29; nor is it affected by the fact that it was given for a larger sum than is actually due, or in some particulars misdescribes the note in fact secured; Nazro v. Ware, 38 Minn. 443, 38 N. W. 359; and because it was given for a larger amount than the actual indebtedness, is not conclusive evidence of fraud; Connelly v. Edgerton, 22 Neb. 82, 34 N. W. 76.

To prevent an infringement of the equity of redemption it was early established that a mortgagee should not have a collateral advantage besides interest on the mortgage debt; 2 Vern. 520. The first marked departure from the spirit of the old cases in the direction of allowing freedom of contract was not until Biggs v. Hoddinott [1898] 2 Ch. D. 307. It was there stipulated that the mortgagee should for a term of years buy all the beer he used in his public house from the mortgagee. The court sustained the stipulation on the ground that it did not clog the equity of redemption, as damages for the breach of the covenant were not covered by the security. In [1899] 2 Ch. D. 474, the mortgagee of a lease stipulated, besides interest, for one-third of the net profits from any sub-leases, and that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee should subsist for this purpose during the entire term of the lease, though the principal was to be paid off before its end. There being no evidence of fraud or over-reaching, the stipulation was held valid, thus abolishing the rule against collateral advantage. Hence a stipulation is invalid only when repugnant to the continuance of the instrument as a mortgage, and this rule has the advantage of simplicity and of conforming to the modern tendency to allow freedom of contract.

An equitable mortgage is one in which the mortgagor does not actually convey the property, but does some act, by which he manifests his determination to bind the same as a security. It may be created by an agreement in writing to give a mortgage, defectively executed, or an imperfect attempt to create a mortgage, or to appropriate specific property to the discharge of a particular debt; McQuie v. Peay, 58 Mo. 56; 1 Am. Lead. Eq. Cas. 510; Martin v. Nixon, 92 Mo. 26; De Racouillat v. Sansevain, 32 Cal. 376; the principle is that a court of equity will treat an agreement for a mortgage or pledge as binding and give it effect according to the intention of the parties; White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Vallette, 21 How. (U. S.) 414, 16 L. Ed. 154; such a mortgage was held to be created in favor of a partner for advances; Smith v. Rainey, 209 U. S. 53, 28 Sup. Ct. 474, 52 L. Ed. 679; or a conveyance of land in consideration of support for the grantor or payments to third persons; Stehle v. Stehle, 39 App. Div. 440, 57 N. Y. Supp. 201; Matheny v. Furguson, 55 W. Va. 656, 47 S. E. 886; Richards v. Reeves, 22 Ind. App. 648, 47 N. E. 232; contra, Ricks v. Pope, 129 N. C. 52, 39 S. E. 638; or where one of two purchasers of land took the deed in his own name to hold for the other until repaid his advances; Ratliff v. Groom, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1998, 44 S. W. 968. An assignment of a lease, shown by parol to have been made as security for a debt, is a mortgage; Providence F. R. & N. Steamboat Co. v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 45, 72 N. E. 338.

An instrument executed to secure a subsisting debt is always treated as a mortgage; Love v. Blair, 72 Ind. 281; and, generally, whenever it is proved that a conveyance was made for the purpose of security, equity treats it as a mortgage, and attaches thereto its incidents; Stoever v. Stoever, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 434; Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 489, 6 L. Ed. 142; Kilgour v. Scott, 86 Fed. 39; Murphy v. Calley, 1 Allen, (Mass.)

107; Wells v. Scanlan, 124 Wis. 229, 102 N. W. 571; and the intention may be proved by parol; Cake v. Shull, 45 N. J. Eq. 208, 16 Atl. 434; but the mere fact of an agreement to reconvey will not always make an absolute conveyance a mortgage; Stahl v. Dehn, 72 Mich. 645, 40 N. W. 922; such conveyance may be executed with the intention that it shall become absolute after default; Luesenhop v. Einsfeld, 184 N. Y. 590, 77 N. E. 1191. But in doubtful cases courts of equity are inclined to construe a deed with a condition to be a mortgage; Swetland v. Swetland, 3 Mich. 482. But an absolute conveyance of property in partial satisfaction of a debt, with a parol agreement that, if the property value enhances within a certain time and to a certain extent, notes given for the remainder of the debt shall be delivered up and cancelled, is not an equitable mortgage; Pearson v. Dancer, 144 Ala. 427, 39 So. 474. But a paper made for a deed of trust to secure a debt, not executed so as to be effectual at law, is an equitable mortgage and when recorded is valid against subsequent purchasers and creditors; Atkinson v. Miller, 34 W. Va. 115, 11 S. E. 1007, 9 L. R. A. 544, with note on the nature of equitable mortgage.

A deed absolute, to secure a debt, does not transfer the legal title from the grantor; but it may be levied on under execution against him; Flynn v. Holmes, 145 Mich. 606, 108 N. W. 685, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209. The weight of authority holds that the legal title passed with the deed to the grantee and the grantor only has an equitable right; Walcop v. McKinney's Heirs, 10 Mo. 229; Calame v. Calame, 24 N. J. Eq. 446; Kerr v. Davidson, 32 N. C. 270; Muller v. Flavin, 13 S. D. 595, 83 N. W. 687.

Whether the intention that it was a security for money appears from the same instrument or from any other, it is always considered, in equity, a mortgage; Baldwin v. Crow, 86 Ky. 679, 7 S. W. 146; Marshall v. Thompson, 39 Minn. 137, 39 N. W. 309; Jackson v. Lynch, 129 Ill. 72, 21 N. E. 580, 22 N. E. 246.

A deed absolute on its face, with or without a contemporaneous defeasance showing that it was to secure the payment of money, is a mortgage; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225; Robinsons v. Bank, 85 Tenn. 363, 3 S. W. 656; but the evidence must be clear and satisfactory where it is sought to prove the fact by parol; Wright v. Mahaffey, 76 Ia. 96, 40 N. W. 112.

The English doctrine of the creation of an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds is not generally recognized in this country, being in conflict both with the Statute of Frauds and the system of recording in force. In some cases, however, there has been held to be an equitable lien where there was a written agreement accompanying the deposit and showing the intention; Higgins v. Manson, 126 Cal. 467, 58 Pac. 907, 77 Am. St. Rep. 192; Edwards's Ex'rs v. Trumbull, 50 Pa. 509; Rickert v. Madeira, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 325; In re Snyder, 138 Ia. 553, 114 N. W. 615, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206, where the cases are collected and analyzed in a note. In a few cases an oral agreement was held sufficient; Foster Lumber Co. v. Bank, 71 Kan. 158, 80 Pac. 49, 114 Am. St. Rep. 470, 6 Ann. Cas. 44; Bullowa v. Orgo, 57 N. J. Eq. 428, 41 Atl. 494.

See EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

CORPORATION MORTGAGES OR DEEDS OF TRUST. The power to give a mortgage is said to be inherent, unless prohibited by statute, in all corporations except railway companies. In the case of the latter, the power does not exist unless conferred by charter or statute; Cook, Stock and Stockh. § 780. In practice, however, this power is usually—perhaps universally—possessed by railroad companies; Short, Rwy. Bonds, ch. viii.; Compton v. Jesup, 68 Fed. 263, 15 C. C. A. 397, 31 U. S. App. 486. See, generally, 7 Rul. Cas. 613.

A corporate mortgage should be executed with the same formalities as a deed. As it is incident to the general business of a corporation, unless restrained by statutory or charter provision, the directors can authorize a mortgage, though it is customary, and perhaps better practice, that authority should be given by the stockholders. In form it may correspond to the mortgage of an individual and be made directly to the holder of the bond which it secures; but as it is usually given to secure an issue of a number of bonds, it is ordinarily in form a deed of trust conveying the mortgaged property to a trustee for the bondholders, and this trustee is usually a corporation.

Corporate mortgages usually contain covenants or provisions which are not found in a mortgage given by an individual. Provisions common in such mortgages are (1) that until default the mortgagor may remain in possession of the property mortgaged; (2) an express covenant that the mortgagor will pay the principal and interest of the bonds secured, when due; (3) that all the bonds are entitled to equality of lien no matter when issued; (4) that the mortgagor shall have power to sell, free from lien of the mortgage, worn out or damaged material (usually accompanied by some provision for replacing the same); (5) provisions as to the payment of taxes and assessments upon the mortgaged property (which are usually assumed by the mortgagor) and providing against the suffering of liens to be established against it; (6) provisions as to the maturing of the principal of the mortgage debt in case of default in the covenants for payment of interest, or other covenants, by the mortgagor; (7) precluding any one from pursuing a separate remedy on his bond; (8) exemption of the trustee from liability except for gross negligence; (9) provision for the substitution of a trustee in case the trustee named should decline to act, or, usually, in case a substitution be desired by a majority or some larger number of the bondholders; (10) any other provisions, not illegal, which may be desired, such as provisions for the conversion of bonds into stock, provisions in regard to maintaining a sinking fund, etc. It is customary for the trustee to accept the trust expressly, or to become a party to the deed, and also to certify upon each bond that it is one of the issues secured under the mortgage. Where such certificate is forged the bond is void, though in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value; Maas v. Ry. Co., 83 N. Y. 223. But signature by vice-president is good though the bond calls for signature of the president; Conshohocken Tube Co. v. Equipment Co., 161 Pa. 391, 28 Atl. 1119. A trustee's certificate is a warranty of the facts recited therein (as that the bond is secured by a first mortgage duly recorded) on which the trustee is liable; Miles v. Roberts, 76 Fed. 919; Miles v. Vivian, 79 Fed. 848, 25 C. C. A. 208; Byers v. Trust Co., 175 Pa. 318, 34 Atl. 629.

The trustee in a railroad or corporation mortgage represents the bondholders; Bowling Green Trust Co. v. Power Co., 132 Fed. 921; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Electric Co., 108 Md. 64, 69 Atl. 436, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1006, and note collecting cases on the extent of this representation.

The mortgage should be recorded in each county in which real estate covered by it is situated, and if it covers also personal property the provisions of the law in regard to chattel mortgages should ordinarily be complied with and the mortgage recorded as a chattel mortgage, at any rate in the county in which the principal office of the mortgagor is situated. These matters are frequently governed by statutes. See RECORDING.

A railroad mortgage is made with reference to the law of the state in which the subject-matter of the contract is, and in which the contract is made; and the law enters into and becomes a part of the contract as if it were there in express terms; Southern R. Co. v. Bouknight, 70 Fed. 442, 17 C. C. A. 181, 25 U. S. App. 415, 30 L. R. A. 823.

When a corporation mortgage is made for the general purposes of the corporation and bonds are issued in the ordinary course of business, the mortgage being recorded, all the bonds are to be taken as issued as of the date of the mortgage; Rauch v. Park Ass'n, 226 Pa. 178, 75 Atl. 202. The power given under the state law to a corporation to mortgage its franchises and privileges necessarily includes the power to bring them to sale and to make the mortgage effectual, and the purchaser acquires title thereto although the corporate right to exist may not be sold; Vicksburg v. Waterworks Co., 202 U. S. 453, 26 Sup. Ct. 660, 50 L. Ed. 1102, 6 Ann. Cas. 253.

In the absence of a provision to the contrary, all bonds secured by a mortgage have an equal lien irrespective of the time at which they were negotiated; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lynde, 55 Ohio St. 23, 44 N. E. 596; Appeal of Reed, 122 Pa. 565, 16 Atl. 100. First mortgage bonds are prior to second mortgage bonds, even if subsequently negotiated; Claflin v. R. Co., 8 Fed. 118. The invalidity of some of the bonds does not invalidate the mortgage; Graham v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 161, 6 Sup. Ct. 1009, 30 L. Ed. 196.

A stipulation in a mortgage for attorney's fee is lawful; Nelson v. Everett, 29 Ia. 184; Barry v. Snowden, 106 Fed. 571; Piasa Bluffs Imp. Co. v. Evers, 65 Ill. App. 205; contra, Kittermaster v. Brossard, 105 Mich. 219, 63 N. W. 75, 55 Am. St. Rep. 437; Turner v. Boger, 126 N. C. 300, 35 S. E. 592, 49 L. R. A. 590; Rilling v. Thompson, 12 Bush (Ky.) 310. It is a penalty and the court may reduce it; Daly v. Maitland, 88 Pa. 384, 32 Am. Rep. 457.

The negotiable character of the bonds extends also to the mortgage securing them, against which the mortgagor cannot defend on grounds which it cannot set up against bona fide holders of bonds; Chicago Ry. Equipment Co. v. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 10 Sup. Ct. 999, 34 L. Ed. 349; Collins v. Bradbury, 64 Me. 37; Towne v. Rice, 122 Mass. 67; the rule in Ohio and Illinois is said to be different; Baily v. Smith, 14 Ohio St. 396, 84 Am. Dec. 385; Chicago, D. & V. Ry. Co. v. Loewenthal, 93 Ill. 433; see Spence v. Ry. Co., 79 Ala. 587. In case of default, an individual bondholder may sue the corporation, but after securing judgment cannot have execution on property covered by the mortgage, which is security for all the bondholders alike. As to the effect of recitals in bonds as notice, see RECITALS.

In the surrender of corporate bonds and the substitution of new bonds, the latter will retain the security of the mortgage, unless an extinguishment was intended; Traders Nat. Bank v. Mfg. Co., 96 N. C. 298, 3 S. E. 363 (where under a reorganization plan the old bonds were deposited and were to be held by a trustee as additional security for the old bonds); but not where the mortgage was satisfied of record; Traders' Nat. Bank v. Mfg. Co., 96 N. C. 298, 3 S. E. 363. A mere change in the form of the mortgage debt, such as substituting new bonds for the old, will not affect the lien; novation, especially when against the interest of the bondholders, must be clearly proved; Mowry v. Trust Co., 76 Fed. 38, 22 C. C. A. 52; and the funding of overdue interest and the issue of new evidence of indebtedness in place of the overdue coupons will not constitute a novation unless there be clear proof of an intention to waive the lien; Skiddy v. R. Co., 3 Hughes 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,922; Gilbert v. R. Co., 33 Gratt. (Va.) 586.

A corporate mortgage may cover property acquired by the corporation after the mortgage is given. This has been sustained upon the theory that though ineffective as a conveyance, the mortgage operates as an executory agreement attaching to the property when acquired; Grape Creek Coal Co. v. Loan & Trust Co., 63 Fed. 891, 12 C. C. A. 350. This rule, though contrary to the common law, has been established from necessity in the case of railroads, public policy requiring that a railroad be preserved intact as quasi-public property. The rule will be applied only where the mortgage expressly covers the subsequently acquired property. As to after acquired property in other than corporation mortgages, see supra.

A railroad mortgage covers the road, although the route differs from that originally laid out. It covers, also, a right of way acquired subsequently to the mortgage, though here the mortgage would be strictly construed, and while held to apply to property used for railroad purposes, it would be held not to apply if not so used; Porter v. Steel Co., 122 U. S. 267, 7 Sup. Ct. 1206, 30 L. Ed. 1210. It covers terminal facilities upon a line of railroad constructed or to be constructed between the named termini, together with all stations, etc.; Central Trust Co. v. Kneeland, 138 U. S. 414, 11 Sup. Ct. 357, 34 L. Ed. 1014. See TERMINAL FACILITIES. It applies not only to legal titles but also to equitable rights and interests subsequently acquired either by or for the company; Wade v. R. Co., 149 U. S. 327, 13 Sup. Ct. 892, 37 L. Ed. 755; Bear Lake and River Water Works and Irrigation Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 7, 41 L. Ed. 327; it embraces the lease of a belt line around a city acquired after the execution of the mortgage; Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 22 U. S. App. 54, 60 Fed. 794, 9 C. C. A. 264. It does not cover uncalled capital; [1897] 1 Ch. 406. Where the property acquired is at the time subject to existing liens, these liens are prior in right to the lien of the mortgage; U. S. v. New Orleans R. Co., 12 Wall. (U. S.) 362, 20 L. Ed. 434; Central Trust Co. of New York v. R. Co., 81 Fed. 772. See FUTURE ACQUIRED PROPERTY. And if property was fraudulently acquired, the vendor may rescind as against the mortgagee.

Another rule resting upon the quasi-public character of a railroad is that which prohibits creditors from levying an attachment or execution upon the railroad, or parts of it, even subject to the mortgage. To permit such action would be to permit the disintegration of the railroad and the destruction of the power to discharge the public obligation of the corporation.

Foreclosure. The mortgage deed of trust usually contains provisions for enforcing the rights of bondholders in case of default of the mortgagor. It usually provides for (1) Entry by the trustee. This is seldom now resorted to, since by operating the property, the trustee becomes liable as the mortgagor would have been, and as default implies that the property has been operated at a loss, the trustee will seldom consent to exercise this right, and never unless sufficiently indemnified by the bondholders. (2) Trustee's sale of the property after prescribed advertisement, which is seldom resorted to. (3) The usual method of procedure is by a bill of foreclosure, usually accompanied by a prayer for a receiver (see supra; RECEIVERS) and for the ascertainment of liens or claims against the property. No provision in the mortgage can exclude the right of a trustee to apply to a court of equity for foreclosure. The provision usually found that a majority, or a specified proportion, of the bondholders may by an instrument in writing waive the right to declare that a default has occurred, will be sustained by the court, though such provision is not favored, as being inimical to the rights of a minority. Provisions unreasonably limiting the right to foreclose are void. When a provision required the request of one-fourth of the bondholders to compel the trustee to begin foreclosure, the fact that three-fourths of the bonds were held by a company operating the mortgagor company was held to justify action by a single bondholder; Linder v. R. Co., 73 Fed. 320. In case the trustee refuses to act, a bondholder may bring suit for foreclosure on behalf of himself and such others as may join; New York Security & Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 74 Fed. 67; id., 77 Fed. 525; in such case the refusal of the trustee must be set out and the trustee should be made a party defendant; General Electric Co. v. Electric Co., 79 Fed. 25; First Nat. Bank v. Trust Co., 80 Fed. 569, 26 C. C. A. 1.

Mortgage bondholders have no right to foreclose or to intervene in a suit by the trustee to foreclose the mortgage, he being the proper person to do it, unless negligence, incompetency, or improper conduct of the trustees injuriously affecting their interests, is established; Wiltsie, Mtg. Forecl. § 127, where the cases are collected.

If a single bondholder has the right to institute proceedings he is bound to act for all standing in a similar position; New Orleans P. Ry. Co. v. Parker, 143 U. S. 42, 12 Sup. Ct. 364, 36 L. Ed. 66. See PARTIES.

Railroad foreclosure suits are begun generally in the federal courts, thus securing the appointment of the same receiver or receivers for the entire property, and avoiding, to a certain extent, possible prejudice in a state court. For the latter reason, perhaps, the same jurisdiction is sought in many cases of corporations other than railroads. The jurisdiction of the federal courts in such cases depends on the citizenship of the parties. Federal courts sitting in equity cannot be ousted of jurisdiction to enforce a right of an equitable nature by a state statute which prescribes an action at law to enforce such right; Sheffield Furnace Co. v. Witherow, 149 U. S. 574, 13 Sup. Ct. 936, 37 L. Ed. 853. See JURISDICTION.

Where a federal court has jurisdiction and possession of the property of a railroad company, it acquires jurisdiction of a subsequent suit to foreclose a mortgage on the same property, irrespective of the citizenship of the parties thereto; Morgan's La. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Ry. Co., 137 U. S. 171, 11 Sup. Ct. 61, 34 L. Ed. 625; Carey v. Ry. Co., 52 Fed. 671.

The fact that by the terms of a railroad mortgage the trustees therein are not authorized to enter and take possession of the property until six months after a default does not preclude a court of equity from entertaining a bill of foreclosure before that time, and appointing receivers, when it is found necessary for the protection of the property, and to insure the due performance of the obligations which the mortgagor owes to the public; State Trust Co. v. R. Co., 120 Fed. 398.

The fact that there is a right of entry and sale, on default, provided for in the mortgage, does not exclude a judicial foreclosure; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 52 S. W. 835, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 556; and a provision requiring six months default before foreclosure proceedings, may be waived by the company and such waiver is not in fraud of creditors; Wells v. Trust Co., 195 Ill. 288, 63 N. E. 136.

Foreclosure proceedings on a railroad mortgage are not in rem so as to bind those who are not parties; Pardee v. Aldridge, 189 U. S. 429, 23 Sup. Ct. 514, 47 L. Ed. 883.

Demand for payment is not necessary if the mortgagor has no funds, before proceeding for foreclosure, though a corporation could of course show that payment would have been made if demanded; Shaw v. Bill, 95 U. S. 10, 24 L. Ed. 333.

The court having acquired jurisdiction takes control of the entire property of the corporation through its receiver, and usually in the case of a railroad, though exceptionally in the case of other corporations, operates the property through such receiver. See RECEIVERS.

After the receiver takes possession, supplies, even though not covered by the mortgage, cannot be taken in execution by creditors. Prior to such taking possession, such assets are ordinarily subject to execution, or can be reached by attachment or bill in equity. Income, such as earnings, or interest or accounts collected subsequently to the appointment of the receiver, are taken by him and administered for the benefit of all the creditors. See RECEIVERS; OPERATING EXPENSES.

Provision is then made for ascertaining the liens, or claims, against the property and determining the liabilities of the corporation and their several priorities. This is preliminary to a sale of the property, in order that parties interested may know what the incumbrances upon, or claims against, the property are, and may bid intelligently, or make provision to redeem the property without forcing it to a sale; Grape Creek Coal Co. v. Trust Co., 63 Fed. 891, 12 C. C. A. 350.

Decrees for the sale of mortgaged property usually provide that a part of the bid may be paid in bonds of the issue secured.

On the foreclosure sale of the property of a corporation, bonds should not be received in payment of a bid except for such proportion of the bid as the purchaser, on a distribution of the purchase money, is entitled to receive on account of his bonds, and the right to bid in bonds should be extended to all bondholders on the same terms; American Waterworks Co. of Illinois v. Trust Co., 73 Fed. 956, 20 C. C. A. 133.

The receivership usually terminates in a sale under order of court, either for the purpose of carrying out a plan of reorganization (see REORGANIZATION), or for the purpose of realizing upon the property of the corporation. For the form of a bill of foreclosure and decree, see Skiddy v. R. Co., 3 Hughes 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,922.

A purchaser of real estate at a foreclosure sale is punishable as for contempt in refusing to obey an order of the court requiring him to complete the sale; see Burton v. Linn, 20 App. Div. 625, 47 N. Y. Supp. 835. Inability to pay the price will not relieve the party; Burton v. Linn, 20 App. Div. 625, 47 N. Y. Supp. 835; contra, Smith v. Smith, 92 N. C. 304.

In equity a decree may be entered on a mortgage foreclosure for any balance that may be due over and above the proceeds of the sale; White v. Ewing, 69 Fed. 454, 16 C. C. A. 296.

The purchaser of railroad property at a judicial sale succeeds to all the rights of the former owner and of the holders of the liens and claims foreclosed, as against an unforeclosed lien, and may intervene in a suit to enforce such lien, and assert the equities and rights to which it has thus succeeded; Connor v. R. Co., 109 Fed. 931, 48 C. C. A. 730, 54 L. R. A. 687, where it was also held that the property of a public corporation, such as a railroad company, cannot be sold under process separately and apart from its franchise, where such property is so indissolubly linked to the franchise and to the public functions of the corporation that without it the franchise will be rendered inoperative.

If there is collusion to cut out unsecured creditors the sale will be set aside; Louisville Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 174 U. S. 674, 19 Sup. Ct. 827, 43 L. Ed. 1130.

It is to be observed that in a foreclosure it is by no means certain that the lien of the mortgage will be determined to be the first lien upon the corporate property. In many cases it develops that claims subsequent to the mortgage in time are held to be prior liens, and while for many purposes the filing of a bill or appointment of a receiver fixes the liabilities, it may be that claims arising even subsequent to the receivership will be held to precede the claim of the mortgage bondholders.

The first payment out of the fund realized from the property is for the expenses of the litigation, always provided for from a fund under the control of a court. Included under this head are receivers' certificates, since these were issued by order of the court. See OPERATING EXPENSES; RECEIVERS.

Taxes are prior in lien to all other liens except judicial costs; Georgia v. R. Co., 3 Woods 434, Fed. Cas. No. 5,351; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 110 N. Y. 250, 18 N. E. 92, 1 L. R. A. 260; New Jersey Southern R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 41 N. J. L. 235.

In many states liens are given by statutes to certain favored creditors, who thus acquire priority over mortgage bonds prior to the inception of their claims. The ordinary mechanic's lien statute does not apply to railroads unless expressly declared to do so. The contractor who constructs a railroad has no lien thereon as a matter of right. The fact that he has possession does not give him a lien; Dunham v. Ry. Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 17 L. Ed. 584; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 459, 20 L. Ed. 199. The courts construe such statutes strictly. Thus, a statute giving a lien for materials, supplies, and labor does not give a lien for money loaned to pay for them; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436. And a lien for materials will be allowed only for such materials as pass into the permanent structure, and not for trucks, scales, etc.; Central Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 27 Fed. 178. A contractor's lien for work done will be limited to the embankments and structures actually made by him, as distinguished from the land and right of way; Central Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 83 Fed. 386. It has been held that a statute giving a lien to persons furnishing supplies necessary to the operation of a manufacturing company prior to the lien of an earlier mortgage is not unconstitutional as special or class legislation; Virginia Development Co. v. Iron Co., 90 Va. 126, 17 S. E. 806, 44 Am. St. Rep. 893. Such "supplies" are only such things as contribute directly to carrying on the work in which the company is engaged and not, e. g., goods supplied to a "company store" maintained by a furnace company; Fidelity Ins., Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Iron Co., 81 Fed. 451. But, while the courts construe such statutes strictly in determining the kind of claims to be admitted under their provisions, they construe them liberally as remedial statutes in determining the formalities to be observed under their provisions; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 442.

A very common statutory lien of this class is the lien for labor, usually limited as to the duration of the labor for which a lien can be filed, and also as to the class of employés entitled to take advantage of the provisions of such a statute; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436; Fidelity Insurance, Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Iron Co., 81 Fed. 453.

The "six months' rule," or as it is usually called, from the case in which is was adopted by the supreme court of the United States (99 U. S. 235, 25 L. Ed. 339) the rule in Fosdick v. Schall, allows parties who have furnished labor or supplies within six months antecedent to the receivership priority, at least so far as income received during the receivership is concerned, over mortgage bondholders. It has been held that the rule applies only to railroads; Wood v. Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 128 U. S. 416, 9 Sup. Ct. 131, 32 L. Ed. 472; not to manufacturing corporations; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436; Fidelity Insurance & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Iron Co., 42 Fed. 372; nor to steamship lines; Bound v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 312; nor to a hotel company; Raht v. Attrill, 106 N. Y. 423, 13 N. E. 282, 60 Am. Rep. 456. But see, contra, an Alabama case discussing the authorities and extending the rule to private corporations generally; 39 L. R. A. 623, n. See RECEIVERS.

As to the right of a mortgagee to possession, see 5 Harv. L. Rev. 245. As to the early history of mortgage, see Hazeltine, Gage of Land in Mediæval England, 17 Harv. L. Rev. 549; 18 id. 36.

In the Civil Law. Mortgages in the civil law are of two kinds, conventional and legal. A conventional mortgage results from the direct act or covenant of the parties. A legal mortgage arises by mere act of law.

A mortgage may be acquired in three ways.

First, with the consent of the debtor, by his agreement.

Second, without the owner's consent, by the quality and bare effect of the engagement, the nature of which is such that the law has annexed to it the security of a mortgage.

Third, where a mortgage is acquired by the authority of justice: as where a creditor who had no mortgage obtains a decree of condemnation in his favor.

When the creditor is put into possession of the thing, movable or immovable, he has a right to keep it until he is paid what is owing him; and the debtor cannot turn the creditor out of possession, nor make use of his own thing without the consent of the creditor.

Effect of a mortgage. First, the creditor has a right to sell the thing pledged, whether the creditor has it in his possession or not. Under the French law, it was a right to have it sold. Cushing's Domat, p. 647.

Second, a right on the part of the creditor to follow the property, into whosoever hands it has come, whether movable or immovable.

Third, a preference of the first creditor to whom the property is mortgaged, and a right on his part to follow the property into the hands of the other creditors.

Fourth, the mortgage is a security for all the consequences of the original debt, as damages, interest, expenses in preserving, etc.

With respect to mortgages under the modern civil law of France and Louisiana, the distinction between movables and immovables is important. Such a thing as a chattel mortgage is not recognized under either system. "But some things movable in their nature become immovable by destination under certain circumstances," as: animals intended for and used in the cultivation of a plantation and placed on it by the owner for that purpose; though the animal cannot be mortgaged by itself, a mortgage of a plantation will cover the animals so attached to it; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 76; Moussier v. Zunts, 14 La. Ann. 15. See LIEN; PACT DE NON ALIENANDO.

See, generally, Domat, part i. lib. iii. tit. i.; Guyot, Rep. Univ. tit. Privilegium; Cushing's Domat.

MORTGAGEE. He to whom a mortgage is made. See MORTGAGE.

MORTGAGOR. He who makes a mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

MORTMAIN. A term applied to denote the possession of lands or tenements by any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occasioned the general appellation of mortmain to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bla. Com. 268; Co. Litt. 2 b; Barrington, Stat. 27, 97. See Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 1137 n. (4); Shelf. Mortm. In England the common-law right of every corporation to take and hold lands and tenements has been restrained by the statutes of mortmain, which subject the power to acquire lands to the discretion of the crown or parliament as to the grant of a license; 8 H. L. C. 712; McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. (U. S.) 367, 405, 14 L. Ed. 732. These statutes have not been re-enacted or considered in force in this country except in Pennsylvania, where they are judicially recognized to the extent of prohibiting the dedication of property to superstitious uses, and grants to a corporation without a statutory license; Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 313; though the title is good till office found and may be conveyed subject to the right of the state to defeat it; id. See American & Foreign Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352, 25 L. Ed. 888. The commonwealth only can object; Goundie v. Water Co., 7 Pa. 233.

Ordinarily, a corporation may take and hold such land as may be within the purposes of the charter, whether it acquires it by deed or devise; Clark, Corp. 129. Statutes sometimes restrict the amount that can be taken. Where a limit of value is specified it is ascertained as of the taking; Bogardus v. Rector, etc., of Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 633.

In the United States the term mortmain acts is applied to statutes which exist in some states restricting the right of religious corporations to hold land and the power to make conveyances, devises, or bequests to religious societies or charitable uses. Such statutes are aimed at the same mischief which gave rise to the English statutes of mortmain, and either avoid the deed or will, quoad hoc, altogether, or when without valuable consideration, or when the real estate is above a specified valuation, or if made within a specified time before the death of the grantor or testator. See Stims. Am. Stat. L. §§ 403, 1446, 2618.

In England, by the Mortmain Act of 1736, 9 Geo. II. c. 36, the power of devising land by will to charitable purposes was absolutely destroyed; 6 Ch. D. 214. This act and various amending acts were repealed by the act of 1888, but practically the then existing law was re-enacted; Whitehead, Church Law 174.

The act of 1888 is in effect a codification of the law on the subject; 5 L. Quart. Rev. 387. It is in four distinct parts; I. Assurances in mortmain are void and the land liable to forfeiture, if made otherwise than under authority of a statute or of a license from the queen, who is empowered to grant it. II. Assurances for charitable uses are treated substantially on the basis of the statute 9 Geo. II., and charitable objects are enumerated in the language of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 4; they must take effect immediately, without any power of revocation, reservation, etc., except as to a nominal rent, mines and minerals, or easements, building contract, or the like; or, in case of bona fide sale, of a rent charge or annual payment to the vendor; they can never be made by will, but only by deed made with prescribed formalities. III. Exemptions are made of specified quantities of land for parks, museums, and schoolhouses, which may be made by will; also land for the two universities and other named colleges is excepted from the provisions in the second part of the act. IV. Scotland and Ireland are excluded, and existing charters, etc., are saved.

By the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act of 1891, land may be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use, but such land shall, notwithstanding anything in the will contained to the contrary, be sold within one year from the death of the testator unless the time is extended by the high court, or a judge at chambers, or the charity commissioners, who have power to sanction the retention or acquisition of such land where it is required for actual occupation for purposes of charity. Land under the mortmain acts, 1888 and 1891, is defined to include tenements and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, of any tenure, but not any money, secured on land or any personal estate arising from or connected with land; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 73, § 3. See Bourchier & Chilcott, Mortmain; Tudor, Charities, etc. (1906 ed.).

Statutes of mortmain are local in their application and do not affect wills of persons domiciled in British colonies. A bequest by a testator, domiciled in a colony, of money, to his trustees for the purchase of land in England for a charitable object, is valid; 7 H. L. Cas. 124.

See Whitehead, Church Law 174; Tyssen, Char. Beq. 561; 1 Brett, Com. ch. xix.; CHARITABLE USE.

MORTUARY. A burial-place.

A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the churchyard or not. These mortuaries, like lay heriots, were originally voluntary bequests to the church in lieu of tithes or ecclesiastical dues neglected in lifetime. See SOUL SCOT. They were reduced to a certain amount by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6. They were sometimes payable to the lord; Paroch. Antiq. 470. The mortuary seems to have been carried to church with the corpse, and was therefore sometimes called corpse-present. 2 Burn. Eccl. Law 563. Anciently, a parishioner could not make a valid will without an assignment of a sufficient mortuary or gift to the church. 2 Bla. Com. 427.

The crown of England was at one time entitled to certain perquisites in the nature of a mortuary on the death of a bishop; 2 Steph. Com. 726.

MORTUARY TABLES. See LIFE TABLES.

MORTUUM VADIUM. A mortgage.

MORTUUS (Lat.). Dead. Ainsworth, Lex. So in Sheriff's return mortuus est, he is dead. O. Bridgm. 469; Brooke, Abr. Retorne de Briefe, pl. 125; 19 Viner, Abr. Return, lib. 2, pl. 12.

MORTUUS CIVILITER. Civil death. This incident attended every attainder of treason or other felony, whereby in the language of Lord Coke the attainted person "is disabled to bring any action, for he is extra legem mortuus"; Co. Litt. 199. He could be heard in court only for the direct purpose of reversing the attainder, and not in prosecution of a civil right; 1 B. & A. 159. He could be grantor or grantee after attainder, and the grant would be good against all persons except the king; Shepard, Touch. 231.

MOSLEM LAW. One of the two great systems of customary law which the English found in India. See HINDU LAW. It regulated the life and relations of all Moslems, and parts of it, especially its penal provisions, were applied to both Moslems and Hindus. Bryce, Extension of the Law.

MOST FAVORED NATION CLAUSE. A clause found in most treaties providing that the citizens or subjects of the contracting states may enjoy the privileges accorded by either party to those of the most favored nations. It is said that the general design of such clauses is to establish the principle of equality of international treatment. The test of whether this principle is violated by the concession of advantages to a particular nation is, not the form in which such concession is made, but the condition on which it is granted; whether it is given for a price, or whether this price is in the nature of a substantial equivalent, and not of a mere evasion. The United States has always taken the stand that reciprocal commercial concessions are given for a valuable consideration and are not within the scope of this clause. Bartram v. Robertson, 122 U. S. 116, 7 Sup. Ct. 1115, 30 L. Ed. 1118; Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 456, 31 L. Ed. 386. Great Britain has taken the opposite position.

See Consular Treaty Rights and Comments on the "Most Favored Nation" Clause, by Ernest Ludwig.

Political relations between two states may be of a kind to afford a fair basis for commercial concessions which other states could not claim to enjoy under this clause; for instance, as between the United States and Cuba. The clause has been considered as not extending to extradition treaties, nor to the provisions of a pilot law excepting from pilotage American coastwise vessels. But it does cover a law providing for the levying of lower rates of tonnage dues on vessels sailing from certain foreign ports, as against the ports of a country outside of the specified area whose commerce is, by treaty, to be accorded the most favored nation treatment. 3 Amer. Journ. Int. L. 57.

A simple form of the clause is that "in all that concerns commerce and navigation, favors which either party has granted or may hereafter grant to any other state shall be granted to the other party"; sometimes followed by a promise that the other party "shall enjoy the same freely if the concession is freely made, and allowing the same compensation if the concession was conditional." The reciprocal civil rights of the subjects or citizens of the contracting powers are frequently covered by such a clause.

See Herod, Most Favored Nation Treatment; Moore's Dig. Int. Law; 8 Amer. Journ. Int. Law 395.

MOTEER. A customary service or payment at the moot or court of the lord from which some were exempted by charter or privilege. Cowell.

MOTHER. A woman who has borne a child. See PARENT AND CHILD; INFANT.

MOTHER-IN-LAW. The mother of one's wife or of one's husband.

MOTION. In Practice. An application to a court by one of the parties in a cause, or his counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court which he thinks becomes necessary in the progress of the cause, or to get relieved in a summary manner from some matter which would work injustice.

It is said to be a written application for an order; Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Ia. 471, 50 N. W. 204; but it is frequently made verbally.

Where the object of the motion may be granted merely on request, without a hearing, it is a motion of course; those requiring a hearing are special; such as may be heard on the application of one party alone, ex parte; those requiring notice to the other party, on notice.

When the motion is made on some matter of fact, it must be supported by an affidavit that such facts are true; and for this purpose the party's affidavit will be received, though it cannot be read on the hearing; Hoar v. Mulvey, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 145. See 3 Bla. Com. 305; 15 Viner, Abr. 495; Graham, Pr. 542; Smith, Ch. Pr. Index; Mitchell, Motions and Rules.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT. In English Practice. A proceeding whereby a party to an action moves for the judgment of the court in his favor, which he may adopt under various circumstances enumerated under the Judicature Act, 1875.

MOTIVE. The inducement, cause, or reason why a thing is done.

It is an inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge the criminal act; it is resorted to as a means of arriving at an ultimate fact, not for the purpose of explaining the reason of a criminal act which has been clearly proved, but from the important aid it may render in completing the proof of the commission of the act when it might otherwise remain in doubt; People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 148. It is not indispensable to conviction for murder that the particular motive for taking the life of a human being shall be established by proof to the satisfaction of the jury; Pointer v. U. S., 151 U. S. 396, 14 Sup. Ct. 410, 38 L. Ed. 208.

An act legal in itself, which violates no right, is not actionable on account of the motive which actuated it; Occum Co. v. Mfg. Co., 34 Conn. 529; Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49; [1898] 1 Ch. 274; [1898] A. C. 1. See a learned paper on the doctrine of the last cited case, Allen v. Flood, by L. C. Krauthoff, in Rep. Am. Bar Assoc. 1898.

See MALICE; INTENT; LIBEL; LUCRI CAUSA; CAUSE; CONSIDERATION; MENS REA; MISTAKE; WITNESS.

MOTOR BOAT. By act of Congress of June 9, 1910, defined to include "every vessel propelled by machinery and not more than 65 feet in length, except tug boats and tow boats propelled by steam." The measurement is "from end to end over the deck, excluding the sheer." The engine, boiler and operating machinery shall be subject to inspection by the local inspectors of steam vessels and to their approval of the design, on all said motor boats which are more than 40 feet in length and propelled by machinery driven by steam. The act classifies them as follows: Less than 26 feet; 26 feet or over, and less than 40 feet; 40 feet or over, and not more than 65 feet. They are required in all weathers from sunset to sunrise to carry certain specified lights, and no other lights which may be mistaken for the prescribed lights shall be exhibited. They shall be provided with a "whistle or other sound-producing appliance" as specified; also, for the latter two classes, an "efficient fog horn" and an "efficient bell"; also life preservers or life belts or buoyant cushions or ring buoys or other device, prescribed by the secretary of commerce, "sufficient to sustain afloat every person on board, and so placed as to be readily accessible."

Every motor boat and every vessel propelled by machinery other than steam, more than 65 feet in length, "shall carry ready for immediate use the means of promptly and effectually extinguishing burning gasoline." The secretary of commerce is required to make such regulations as may be necessary in executing the act. Nothing in the act shall be deemed to alter the acts of congress as to international rules for preventing collisions at sea.

MOTOR CYCLE. A motor cycle is within the meaning of a statute providing for the registering and identification of motor vehicles, which are defined to be all vehicles propelled by power other than muscular power, except traction engines and such motor vehicles as run upon rails or tracks; People v. Smith, 156 Mich. 173, 120 N. W. 581, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.

See AUTOMOBILES; BICYCLE.

MOURNING. The apparel worn at funerals, and for a time afterwards, in order to manifest grief for the death of some one, and to honor his memory.

It has been held, in England, that a demand for mourning furnished to the widow and family of the testator is not a funeral expense; 2 C. & P. 207. See 14 Ves. 346.

MOVABLES. Such subjects of property as attend a man's person wherever he goes, in contradistinction to things immovable.

Things movable by their nature are such as may be carried from one place to another, whether they move themselves, as cattle, or cannot be removed without an extraneous power, as inanimate things. So in the civil law mobilia; but this term did not properly include living movables, which were termed moventia. Calvinus, Lex. But these words mobilia and moventia are also used synonymously, and in the general sense of "movables." Ibid. Movables are further distinguished into such as are in possession, or which are in the power of the owner, as a horse in actual use, a piece of furniture in a man's own house; and such as are in the possession of another, and can only be recovered by action, which are therefore said to be in action, as a debt. But it has been held that movable property, in a legacy, strictly includes only such as is corporeal and tangible; not, therefore, rights in action, as judgment or bond debts; Strong v. White, 19 Conn. 238, 245; 1 Wm. Jones 225. But see Penniman v. French, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 404, 28 Am. Dec. 309. See PERSONAL PROPERTY; Pow. Mortg. Index; 2 Bla. Com. 384; 2 Steph. Com. 26; 1 P. Wms. 267.

In a will, "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass growing crops, nor building materials on ground; nor, as stated above, rights in action; 2 Wms. Exec. 1014; Humble v. Humble, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 123; Jackson v. Vandersprelgle, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 142, 1 L. Ed. 323. See MORTGAGE.

MOVE. To apply to the court to take action in any matter. See MOTION. To propose a resolution, or recommend action in a deliberative body.

MOVING PAPERS. Such papers as are made the basis of some motion in court proceedings, e. g. a bill in equity with supporting affidavits.

MOVING PICTURES. A moving picture and vaudeville show, including comedy singers and dancers, etc., is not a theatrical entertainment; Com. v. Donnelly, 21 Pa. Dist. R. 21; moving picture shows are not theatrical performances; 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 241; nor public shows; Edwards v. McClellan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 181; State v. Chamberlain, 112 Minn. 52, 127 N. W. 444, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 21 Ann. Cas. 679; exhibition of moving pictures in a hotel, with no charge for admission, is not the conducting a common show without a license; People v. Wacke, 77 Misc. 196, 137 N. Y. Supp. 652. An ordinance imposing a license fee on kinetoscopes, panoramas, etc., covers moving pictures; Laurelle v. Bush, 17 Cal. App. 409, 119 Pac. 953; but not one prohibiting the opening of billiard rooms, baseball grounds and other places of amusement on Sunday; Clinton v. Wilson, 257 Ill. 580, 101 N. E. 192.

The regulation of moving picture shows is a proper exercise of the police power; In re Whitten, 152 App. Div. 506, 137 N. Y. Supp. 360. An Ohio city cannot under the 1912 constitution, lay taxes to carry on the business; State v. Lynch (Ohio) 102 N. E. 670.

The registered trademark of a periodical ("Nick Carter") is not infringed by the use of "Nick Carter" as the name of a character in a moving picture; Atlas Mfg. Co. v. Street, 204 Fed. 398, 122 C. C. A. 568; but moving pictures and dramatization are cognate forms of reproduction and a copyright of the latter includes the former; id.

An exhibition of a series of photographs of persons and things arranged on films as moving pictures, and so depicting the principal scenes of an author's work as to tell the story, is a dramatization of such work and the person producing the films and offering them for sale for exhibitions, even if not himself exhibiting them, infringes the copyright of the author; Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros., 222 U. S. 55, 32 Sup. Ct. 20, 56 L. Ed. 92; Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1285.

MUHAMMADAN LAW. See MOHAMMEDAN LAW.

MULATTO. A person born of one white and one black parent. Medway v. Natick, 7 Mass. 88; State v. Scott, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 270; Thurman v. State, 18 Ala. 276. See NEGRO.

Properly a mulatto is a person one of whose parents is wholly black and the other wholly white; but the word does not always, though perhaps it does generally, require so exactly even a mixture of blood, nor is its signification alike in all the states. 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 308.

MULCT. A fine imposed on the conviction of an offence.

An imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like. It is obsolete in the latter sense, and but seldom used in the former.

MULE. A reward offered for the apprehension of a mare, horse, or gelding does not apply to a mule; Com. v. Davidson, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 172.

MULIER. Anciently mulier was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held that a virgin is included under the name mulier. Co. Litt. 170, 253; 2 Bla. Com. 248.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate, Co. Litt. 243, and seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the French meilleur, signifying lawful issue born in wedlock. But by Glanville, lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten e muliere, and not ex concubina, for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanville, lib. 7, c. 1. If the said lands "should, according to the queen's lawes, descend to the right heire, then in right it ought to descend to him, as next heire being mulierlie borne, and the other not so borne." Holinshed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1558.

MULIER PUISNE. See BASTARD EIGNE; EIGNE.

MULTA. A fine imposed ex arbitrio by magistrates on the præsides provinciarum. Inst. 4. 1.

A fine given to the king that the bishop might have the power to make his will and to have the probate of other men's, and the granting administrations. Toml. Law Dict.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS. In Equity Pleading. The demand in one bill of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 182; 18 Ves. 80; Fellows v. Fellows, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 682, 15 Am. Dec. 412; White v. Curtis, 2 Gray (Mass.) 467. See Dan. Ch. Pr. 2093.

The uniting in one bill against a single defendant several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected. More commonly called misjoinder of claims. See MISJOINDER.

Multifariousness of the first kind is where the plaintiff joins several distinct claims against the same defendant and prays relief in respect to all; and of the second kind is where a plaintiff having a valid claim against one defendant joins another person as defendant in the same suit with a large part of which he is not connected.

The objection is discouraged where it might defeat the ends of justice; Marshall v. Means, 12 Ga. 61, 56 Am. Dec. 444; but joinder will be allowed unless it is apparent that the defence will be seriously embarrassed by confusing different issues and proofs in the same litigation; Nourse v. Allen, 4 Blatchf. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 10,367. A bill is multifarious where there is a misjoinder of distinct and independent causes of action. See Savage v. Benham, 17 Ala. 119. Thus, unconnected demands against different estates cannot be united in the same bill, though the defendant is executor in both; Daniel v. Morrison's Ex'r, 6 Dana (Ky.) 186; nor will a bill lie against two different partnerships, though one defendant is a partner in both; Griffin v. Merrill, 10 Md. 364; nor a bill combining individual claims with claims in a representative capacity; Carter v. Treadwell, 3 Story 25, Fed. Cas. No. 2,480; but a bill may be brought by several persons claiming under a common title but in different shares; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. (U. S.) 253, 15 L. Ed. 368; and where there is a joinder of a legal and an equitable claim and a prayer for relief as to both, the bill is not multifarious; Carpenter v. Hall, 18 Ala. 439. To justify dismissal on this ground, it must appear that the interests are so diverse that they cannot be properly included in one decree; Michan v. Wyatt, 21 Ala. 813.

The vice of multifariousness is the union of causes of action which, or of parties whose claims, it is either impractical or inconvenient to adjudicate in a single suit. Where it is as practical and convenient for court and parties to deal with the claims and parties joined in one suit as in many, there is no multifariousness; Westinghouse A. B. Co. v. R. Co., 137 Fed. 26, 71 C. C. A. 1. It does not apply where all the defendants' acts are of like character, their effect on complainant is identical, and the same relief is sought against all, the defenses being the same; Bitterman v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 206, 28 Sup. Ct. 91, 52 L. Ed. 171, 12 Ann. Cas. 693.

The question is always largely within the discretion of the court; Horner-Gaylord Co. v. Miller, 147 Fed. 297; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450; Brown v. Deposit Co., 128 U. S. 403, 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 32 L. Ed. 468; Shafer v. O'Brien, 31 W. Va. 601, 8 S. E. 298.

A bill for infringement of a patent and for unfair trade is not; Onondaga I. W. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 182 Fed. 832; contra, Keasby & Mattison Co. v. Mfg. Co., 113 Fed. 432; nor is a bill by the equitable owner of a patent for its infringement and to compel a transfer; Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Lighting Co., 164 Fed. 60; nor for infringement of several patents with an averment that the inventions are capable of "conjoint use"; Southern Plow Co. v. Agr. Works, 165 Fed. 214; nor is a bill multifarious because it seeks to enforce two series of bonds, both owned by the complainant and issued by the same city; Burlington Sav. Bank v. Clinton, 106 Fed. 269.

A bill framed with a double aspect is not multifarious; Baines v. McGee, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 208; Murphy v. Clark, id., 221.

There is no general rule by which to determine whether a bill is multifarious because it joins another person as defendant in a suit with a large part of which he is unconnected; it must be left to the discretion of the court; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. (U. S.) 333, 11 L. Ed. 622; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. (U. S.) 259, 15 L. Ed. 368; the courts do not disregard previous decisions, but have a due regard to general convenience and the advancement of justice; Dunn v. Cooper, 3 Md. Ch. 47.

Defendants should not be put to the unnecessary trouble and expense of answering litigated matters in a bill in which they are not interested; Newland v. Rogers, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 432; but where the interests of different parties are so complicated in different transactions that entire justice could not be conveniently done without uniting the whole, the bill is not multifarious; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. (U. S.) 333, 11 L. Ed. 622; Page v. Whidden, 59 N. H. 507. The objection is confined to cases where the cause of each defendant is entirely different in subject-matter from that of his co-defendants, but it does not apply to a case where a general right is claimed by the plaintiff, though the defendants may have separate and distinct rights; Heggie v. Hill, 95 N. C. 303; Donovan v. Dunning, 69 Mo. 436. To render a bill multifarious it must contain not only separate and distinct matters, but such that each entitles the complainant to separate equitable relief; Adams, Eq. 310.

The objection should be raised by demurrer; Grove v. Fresh, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 280; filing an answer and taking the testimony on the merits waives the objection, and it cannot be made on appeal after a decree pro confesso; id.; Gilmore v. Sapp, 100 Ill. 297; or after a final decree on the merits of one part of the bill; Betts v. Betts, 18 Ala. 787. In Persch v. Quiggle, 57 Pa. 247, it was held that it was too late to object at the hearing. But in such case it has also been held that its allowance rests in the discretion of the court; Felder v. Davis, 17 Ala. 425. It may be taken by plea, answer, or demurrer, but not at the hearing; but the court may raise it at any time; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. (U. S.) 333, 11 L. Ed. 622.

One defendant cannot demur on the ground of the joinder of another defendant who does not object. See 38 N. J. Eq. 89, note.

A demurrer goes to the whole suit, and, if sustained, the bill should be dismissed; Dunn v. Cooper, 3 Md. Ch. 46; McIntosh v. Alexander, 16 Ala. 87. See MISJOINDER.

MULTIPLICITY OF ACTIONS, or SUITS. Numerous and unnecessary attempts to litigate the same right. For such cases equity provides a proceeding called a bill of peace, q. v., and a court of common law may grant a rule for the consolidation of different actions; L. R. 2 Ch. 8; Story, Eq. Pl. 234; Bisph. Eq. 415.

It is not a ground of equity jurisdiction where the right is disputed between two persons only and such right has not been established at law; Cleland v. Campbell, 78 Ill. App. 624; something more than a mere indebtedness to a great many different persons on disconnected causes of action, is necessary; Rosenbaum v. Kershaw, 40 Ill. App. 659; there must be different persons assailing the same right and a mere repetition of the same trespass on the same person; Taylor v. Pierce, 174 Ill. 9, 50 N. E. 1109. Equity can be invoked only when the suits will be against the same person; People's N. B. v. Marye, 191 U. S. 272, 24 Sup. Ct. 68, 48 L. Ed. 180.

Where the interests of all the parties may be well determined in one action, equity will uphold such action; Coleman v. Phelps, 57 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 393; equity may be invoked by either plaintiff or defendant; Smith v. Bank, 69 N. H. 254, 45 Atl. 1082; or where a large number of complainants have identical claims against a large number of common carriers, alleged to be in combination to inflict on each complainant a common wrong; Tift v. R. Co., 123 Fed. 789; or where 57 persons executed notes to induce a railroad to build through their town and the validity of the notes depended upon the same principles of law; Crawford v. R. Co., 83 Miss. 708, 36 South. 82, 102 Am. St. Rep. 476; or where a large number of persons claim rights to use the waters of a stream; Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 67 Neb. 325, 93 N. W. 781, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647; or in case of a bill to maintain a right of way against the encroachments of several adjoining owners; Stockwell v. Fitzgerald, 70 Vt. 468, 41 Atl. 504; but not where several makers of a non-negotiable note procured by fraud could be independently sued; Johnson v. Swanke, 128 Wis. 68, 107 N. W. 481, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1048, 8 Ann. Cas. 544; or where sundry persons licensed to cut timber from certain parts of the public domain, cut and carried away timber from other land; U. S. v. Devel. Co., 200 U. S. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. 318, 50 L. Ed. 550.

Equity will take jurisdiction only where it appears from the bill that the rights of all the parties can be as fully determined in a single suit as they could be in several suits; Eureka & K. R. Co. v. R. Co., 109 Fed. 509, 48 C. C. A. 517. A bill to recover real estate will be dismissed where the defendants can be joined in one action at law; McGuire v. City Co., 105 Fed. 677, 44 C. C. A. 670.

An adequate remedy at law does not exist where a multiplicity of actions is required to obtain complete relief; Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 Fed. 971. Equity will not encourage the splitting of causes of action and needless litigation; German American Sem. v. Kiefer, 43 Mich. 105, 4 N. W. 636.

In order to make multiplicity of suits a ground for the interposition of equity, more than one suit must have been commenced, and the court should not interfere unless it is clearly necessary to protect complainant from continued and vexatious litigation; Boise Art. H. & C. W. Co. v. Boise, 213 U. S. 276, 29 Sup. Ct. 426, 53 L. Ed. 796.

MULTITUDE. The meaning of this word is not very certain. By some it is said that to make a multitude there must be ten persons at least, while others contend that the law has not fixed any number. Co. Litt. 257. That two cannot constitute a multitude, see Pike v. Witt, 104 Mass. 595.

MUMMIFICATION. In medical jurisprudence, the complete drying up of the body as the result of burial in a dry, hot soil, or the exposure of the body to a dry, cold atmosphere.

MUNERA. The name given to grants made in the early feudal ages, which were merely tenancies at will or during the pleasure of the grantor. Dalrymple, Feud. 198, 199; Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICEPS (Lat. from munus, office, and capere, to take). In Roman Law. Eligible to office.

A freeman born in a municipality or town other than Rome, who had come to Rome, and though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices (dignitates).

The inhabitants of a municipality entitled to hold municipal offices. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Calvinus, Lex.

MUNICIPAL. Strictly, this word applies only to what belongs to a city. It is used in this sense in the terms municipal court, municipal ordinance, municipal officer.

It has two meanings: (1) relating to cities, towns, and villages; (2) relating to the state or nation; Powder R. C. Co. v. Board, 3 Wyo. 597, 29 Pac. 361, 31 Pac. 278. See Horton v. Com'rs, 43 Ala. 598.

Among the Romans, cities were called municipia; these cities voluntarily joined the Roman republic in relation to their sovereignty only, retaining their laws, their liberties, and their magistrates, who were thence called municipal magistrates. With us this word has a more extensive meaning: for example, we call municipal law not the law of a city only, but the law of the state. 1 Bla. Com. 44. Municipal is used in contradistinction to international: thus, we say, an offence against the law of nations is an international offence, but one committed against a particular state or separate community is a municipal offence. See MUNICIPIUM.

MUNICIPAL BONDS. Evidences of indebtedness issued by a municipality.

In the ordinary commercial sense, they are negotiable bonds. Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520, 22 S. W. 668, 960.

This class of securities is issued for sale in the market, with the object of raising money, under the express authority of the legislature. As to the power of municipal corporations to issue and sell bonds and borrow money, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. Notwithstanding they are under seal, they are clothed with all the attributes of negotiable or commercial paper, pass by delivery or indorsement, and are not subject to prior equities (where the power to issue them exists) in the hands of holders for value, who took before maturity and without notice. Payment of interest on such bonds for a number of years will estop the corporation from setting up a mere irregularity in their issue, as against bona fide holders for value; Dudley v. Board, 80 Fed. 672, 26 C. C. A. 82. The coupons usually attached to such bonds are likewise negotiable, and may be detached and held separately from the bond, and may be sued on by the holder in his own name without his being the owner of the bonds to which they were originally attached; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 486; Thompson v. Lee Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 327, 18 L. Ed. 177; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Otoe Co., 1 Dill. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 2667; whether he has given consideration for them or not; Dudley v. Board, 80 Fed. 672, 26 C. C. A. 82.

Coupons when severed from the bonds cease to be incidents of the bonds, and become independent claims, and do not lose their validity, if for any cause the bonds are cancelled or paid before maturity; Clark v. Iowa City, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 583, 22 L. Ed. 427. See as to coupons as distinct and separate instruments, 6 L. R. A. 562, note; COUPONS.

The fact that such bonds are payable out of a special fund, known as a "sinking fund," does not prevent the holder from suing at law to enforce collection; Waite v. Santa Cruz, 75 Fed. 967.

As to the rule in Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. Ed. 520, that bonds valid under a state decision when issued will be sustained, although the state court had subsequently overruled its earlier decision, see IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

Purchasers of the bonds of a municipality issued to aid the building of a railway, which recite a compliance with the law authorizing their issue, are not required to ascertain conditions imposed by the proposition voted on, which do not appear in the bonds; Chilton v. Gratton, 82 Fed. 873; they have a right to assume that the conditions have been complied with; Evansville v. Dennett, 73 Fed. 966, 20 C. C. A. 142.

See as to power to subscribe; 12 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 689; 15 id. 621, 655; ratification; 12 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 651; effect of recitals; 12 id. 524; 15 id. 584, 675; 2 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 291, 320. See also an extended discussion of cases in the United States Supreme Court on municipal bonds in aid of railroads; 17 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 209, 609.

See, generally, as to municipal bonds for public purposes; 1 L. R. A. 787, note; 15 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 356; as to an election for issue; 40 id. 543; negotiability; 5 id. 593; over issue; 40 id. 535; limit of indebtedness; id. 584; 26 id. 473; fraudulent circulation; 2 id. 263; estoppel to deny validity; 2 Am. Ry. Corp. Cas. 525; power to issue; 5 L. R. A. 728, note bona fide holder; 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 310; 29 id. N. S. 380; mandamus, to enforce subscription; 12 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cas. 609; or to enforce payment; 15 id. 629.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corporation, created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation: e. g. a county, town, city, etc. 2 Kent 275; Ang. & A. Corp. 9, 29; Bonaparte v. R. Co., Baldw. 222, Fed. Cas. No. 1,617. An incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government. Glover, Mun. Corp. 1. Municipal corporations have until later days been created singly, each with its special or separate charter passed by the legislature of the state. These charters define the territorial boundaries; provide for a governing body, usually styled the town or city council, with representatives to be chosen from different wards of the city or town; fix the qualifications of voters; specify the mode of holding elections; provide for the election of a mayor; and contain a minute and detailed enumeration of the powers of the city council; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 39.

A state is the proper party to impeach the validity of a municipal charter, and its corporate existence cannot be collaterally attacked; Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 646, 17 Sup. Ct. 957, 42 L. Ed. 310. There must be both population and territory; Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 156; People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107; and there cannot be two municipal corporations, at the same time, over the same territory; State v. Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371, 5 South. 818.

There are territorial subdivisions, not incorporated, but which are, like municipal corporations, instrumentalities of local government for certain definite purposes. Such are in some states, the counties, or towns, or school districts where they are not incorporated. They are termed quasi-corporations, which title see. They are not included in the phrase "counties or municipal corporations" in a statute; Eaton v. Sup'rs, 44 Wis. 489.

The term municipal corporation has been held to include the District of Columbia; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 9 Sup. Ct. 256, 32 L. Ed. 637; a village; Wahoo v. Reeder, 27 Neb. 770, 43 N. W. 1145.

Where a municipal charter is repealed, and the same, or substantially the same, inhabitants are erected into a new corporation, whether with extended or restricted territorial limits, such new corporation is the successor of the old one and entitled to its property and subject to its liabilities; Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 646, 17 Sup. Ct. 957, 42 L. Ed. 310.

Public duties are required of such corporations as counties and districts as a part of the machinery of the state government, and in order that they may properly perform these duties they are invested with certain corporate powers, but their functions are wholly of a public nature, and they are at all times subject to the will of the legislature, unless restrained by the constitution; Board v. Board, 30 W. Va. 424, 4 S. E. 640.

In England, the municipal corporation acts, 5 & 6 Will. IV. ch. 76, abolish all special charters, with enumerated exceptions, and enact general provisions for the incorporation, regulation, and government of municipal corporations. These acts have been followed in many of the United States. The usual scheme is to grade corporations into classes, according to their size, as into cities of the first class, second class, etc., and towns or villages, and to bestow on each class such powers as the legislature deems expedient; but the powers and mode of organization of corporations of each class are uniform; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 41, n.

The scope of legislative authority over municipal corporations is limited only by the terms of the state and federal constitutions, and the necessary implications derived therefrom; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 108; Doon Tp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 12 Sup. Ct. 222, 35 L. Ed. 1044. Those matters which are of concern to the state at large, although exercised within defined limits, such as the administration of justice, the preservation of the public peace, and the like, are held to be under legislative control; while the enforcement of municipal by-laws proper, the establishment of gas works, of water works, the construction of sewers, and the like, are matters which pertain to the municipality as distinguished from the state at large; Chicago v. Wright, 69 Ill. 326; Britton v. Steber, 62 Mo. 370; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; People v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Andrews v. Pipe Works, 61 Fed. 782, 10 C. C. A. 60.

As ordinarily constituted, municipal corporations have a dual character, the one governmental, legislative, or public; the other, proprietary or private. In their public capacity a responsibility exists in the performance of acts for the public benefit, and in this respect they are merely a part of the machinery of government of the sovereignty creating them, and the authority of the state is supreme. But in their proprietary or private character their powers are supposed to be conferred not from considerations of state, but for the private advantage of the particular corporation as a distinct legal personality.

"The functions of such municipalities are obviously two-fold: (1) political, discretionary, and legislative, being such public franchises as are conferred upon them for the government of their inhabitants and the ordering of their public officers, and to be exercised solely for the public good, rather than their special advantage; (2) those ministerial specified duties which are assumed in consideration of the privileges conferred by their charter." Richmond v. Long's Adm'rs, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461. And it was said by Folger, J., in Maxmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468: "There are two kinds of duties which are imposed upon a municipal corporation. One is of that kind which arises from the grant of a special power in the exercise of which the municipality is as a legal individual; the other is of that kind which arises or is implied from the use of political rights under the general law, in the exercise of which it is sovereign. The former power is private and is used for private purposes; the latter is public and is used for public purposes; the former is not held by the municipality as one of the political divisions of the state, the latter is." "The distinction is quite clear and well settled and the process of separation practicable. To this end regard should be had, not so much to the nature and character of the various powers conferred, as to the object and purpose of the legislature in conferring them. If granted for public purposes exclusively they belong to the corporate body in its public, political, or municipal character; but if the grant was for purposes of private advantage and emolument, though the public may derive a common benefit therefrom, the corporation quoad hoc is to be regarded as a private company." Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669.

The absolute power of the state over municipal corporations has been upheld in Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 180, and in U. S. v. R. Co., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 329, 21 L. Ed. 597, where it is said: "A municipal corporation like the city of Baltimore is a representative not only of the state, but is a portion of its governmental power. It is one of its creatures, made for a specific purpose to exercise within a limited sphere the powers of the state. The state may withdraw these local powers of government at pleasure, and may, through its legislature or other appointed channels, govern the local territory as it governs the state at large. It may enlarge or contract its powers or destroy its existence."

This doctrine has been followed in other states; Daniel v. Memphis, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 582; Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 19, 67 Am. Dec. 748; People v. Draper, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 344; Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376; Burch v. Hardwicke, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 24, 32 Am. Rep. 640; Coyle v. Gray, 7 Houst. (Del.) 44, 30 Atl. 728, 40 Am. St. Rep. 109; unless otherwise provided in the constitution; Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 386, 19 N. E. 224, 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566; State v. Williams, 68 Conn. 131, 35 Atl. 24, 421, 48 L. R. A. 465; Com. v. Moir, 199 Pa. 543, 49 Atl. 351, 53 L. R. A. 837, 85 Am. St. Rep. 801; Pumphrey v. Baltimore, 47 Md. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 446.

Cooley, J., said in People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103: "The state may mould local institutions according to its views of policy or expediency; but local government is a matter of absolute right, and the state cannot take it away."

Amasa M. Eaton, of Rhode Island, in an able paper (1902, Amer. Bar Assoc. 292) reviews at length the history of municipal corporations in England and comes to the conclusion "that towns and cities (or counties, etc., in some states) are the units of our system of government and have the right to govern themselves in all matters of local concern, free from the control of the legislature, except through general laws, applicable to all such units alike, or through particular laws, passed at the request and with the consent of such units, to enable them to do that which otherwise they would be powerless to accomplish."

According to some cases towns and cities have certain powers that the legislature cannot interfere with, even though the constitution be silent on the subject; People v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 21 N. E. 252, 4 L. R. A. 79.

It is contended that, although generally the state may have absolute control over towns and cities within its borders, the theory is inapplicable in Rhode Island and the other New England states and in New York. The original towns of Rhode Island existed before there was any colony or state, with well-defined, self-instituted powers, legislative, judicial and executive, that were not surrendered when they agreed to unite. The system of town government brought to this country has nowhere been so faithfully and insistently applied and developed as in Rhode Island. Among the powers that have always been reserved and exercised by the towns and cities of that state is the power to manage their own affairs. See 13 Harv. Law Rev. 441.

In some cases the doctrine has been established that municipal corporations cannot be deprived of the right of local self-government, this view resting either upon the ground of implied constitutional guarantee or implied reservation to that effect; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; this right to self-government has, however, been confined to matters of purely local concern. The principle upon which the distinction is based is that the municipality acts in a dual capacity as an agent of the state with regard to certain matters and as the agent of its own inhabitants with regard to others; in respect to the former it is subject to the complete control of the state; People v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202. The management of the municipal water works and fire department is held a matter of purely municipal concern, and a statute transferring their control to a state board was held an unconstitutional interference with the right of municipal self-government; State v. Barker, 116 Iowa, 96, 89 N. W. 204, 57 L. R. A. 244, 93 Am. St. Rep. 222; State v. Fox, 158 Ind. 126, 63 N. E. 19, 56 L. R. A. 893; contra, David v. Water Committee, 14 Or. 98, 12 Pac. 174.

Such corporations are sometimes authorized to hold real property for the same purposes that such property is held by private corporations or individuals. The distinction between property owned by municipal corporations in their public and governmental capacity, and that owned by them in their private capacity, though difficult to define, has been approved by many of the state courts; Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U. S. 179, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151. It has been held that as to the latter class of property the legislature is not omnipotent. If the distinction is recognized, it suggests the question whether property of a municipal corporation owned in its private and proprietary capacity may be taken from it against its will and without compensation. Judge Dillon says correctly that the question has never arisen directly for adjudication in the supreme court of the United States, but it and the distinction upon which it is based has several times been noticed; Tippecanoe Co. v. Lucas, 93 U. S. 108, 23 L. Ed. 822; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L.

As to powers of the non-public nature and as to property acquired thereunder, and contracts made with reference thereto, they are to be considered as quoad hoc private corporations; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 66; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485. And in like manner, as such corporations, they are liable for the misuser or nonuser of their powers of this nature. A city is liable for wrongfully permitting the accumulation of sewage in a cellar, thereby causing the death of a person who lived in the house over such cellar; Hughes v. Auburn, 21 App. Div. 311, 47 N. Y. Supp. 235. But counties, though by modern legislation frequently constituted municipal corporations, are permitted greater immunity from liability for negligence than cities. On this principle it was held that the act of 1892, declaring a county to be a municipal corporation, did not change the common-law rule as to its non-liability in such cases, and, consequently, it was not liable for personal injuries sustained by an individual by reason of a defective bridge which it was bound to maintain; Markey v. County of Queens, 154 N. Y. 675, 49 N. E. 71, 39 L. R. A. 46. If a municipal corporation becomes indebted, the rights of creditors cannot be impaired by any subsequent legislative enactment; Smith v. Appleton, 19 Wis. 468; but authority to a city to borrow money, and to tax all the property therein to pay the debt thus incurred, does not necessarily deprive the state of the power to modify taxation, if the rights of creditors be not thereby impaired; Goodale v. Fennell, 27 Ohio St. 426, 22 Am. Rep. 321. So, also, as trustee for the general public, the legislature has control over the public property and the subordinate rights of municipal corporations. It can authorize a railroad company to occupy the streets of a city without its consent and without payment; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 26 La. Ann. 517. It can direct a municipal corporation to build a bridge over a navigable watercourse within its limits, or appoint agents of its own to build it, and empower them to create a loan for the purpose, payable by the corporation; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Carter v. Bridge Prop'rs, 104 Mass. 236; Pumphrey v. Baltimore, 47 Md. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 446. The legislature may compel a city to pay its bonds, by taxation, but not to pay an obligation for which no consideration had been received; New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. Ed. 521. In the absence of constitutional restraint, it may extend the boundaries of an existing municipal corporation without the consent, or even against the remonstrance, of the majority or of all of the inhabitants of the existing corporation; Madry v. Cox, 73 Tex. 538, 11 S. W. 541. And in general the legislature may, by subsequent legislation, validate acts of a municipal corporation otherwise invalid; Cooley, Const. Lim. 371; Pompton v. Cooper Union, 101 U. S. 196, 25 L. Ed. 803. The legislature may also interfere with the administration of public charitable trusts by municipal corporations; Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169; but not with those of a private character where a contract has been constituted; New Gloucester School Fund v. Bradbury, 11 Me. 118, 26 Am. Dec. 515; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629. A contract made by a city with a water works company, so far as the city's rights are concerned, is subject to the will of the legislature, and a statute may authorize a change therein; New Orleans v. Water Works Co., 142 U. S. 79, 12 Sup. Ct. 142, 35 L. Ed. 943; and property acquired by it for the purpose of furnishing water is not held by it as a private corporation so as to prevent the legislature from modifying the management of it; Coyle v. McIntire, 7 Houst. (Del.) 44, 30 Atl. 728, 40 Am. St. Rep. 109.

See as to special legislation, as applied to corporate powers of municipal corporations, 35 Cent. L. J. 266; as to the power of the legislature over the streets of municipalities, 26 Am. L. Rev. 520; as to municipal power of taxation, 35 Cent. L. J. 227.

"A municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: first, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient but indispensable." Smith v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 14, 16 Am. Rep. 766; Cook County v. McCrea, 93 Ill. 236; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 89; Barnett v. Denison, 145 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 819, 36 L. Ed. 652; Turner v. Forsyth, 78 Ga. 683, 3 S. E. 649; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L. R. A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214. No powers can be implied except such as are essential to the purposes of the corporations as created; they can bind the people and property only to the extent of their powers; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 110, 2 Sup. Ct. 361, 27 L. Ed. 669; Portland v. Schmidt, 13 Or. 17, 6 Pac. 221. Where discretionary powers are granted, the corporation thereby acquires a control and discretion as absolute as that originally possessed by the legislature; Covington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 550; Howe v. Plainfield, 37 N. J. L. 146; a grant of express power carries with it the right to determine the mode of its execution; Poillon v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 132, 4 N. E. 191; French v.

Dunn Co., 58 Wis. 403, 17 N. W. 1; and its discretion in that respect should not be interfered with by courts except where it is clearly abused; Torrent v. Muskegon, 47 Mich. 115, 10 N. W. 132, 41 Am. Rep. 715. Acts in excess of the express or implied powers are void; Mather v. Ottawa, 114 Ill. 659, 3 N. E. 216. See as to municipal powers, express and implied, Lucia v. Montpelier, 60 Vt. 537, 15 Atl. 321, 1 L. R. A. 169; Schneider v. Detroit, 72 Mich. 240, 40 N. W. 329, 2 L. R. A. 54.

A strict, rather than a liberal, construction of the powers of a municipal corporation is adopted; Logan v. Pyne, 43 Ia. 524, 22 Am. Rep. 261; and only such can be implied as are essential to the corporate objects and purposes; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 110, 2 Sup. Ct. 361, 27 L. Ed. 669; Portland v. Schmidt, 13 Or. 17, 6 Pac. 221. Grants to municipal corporations, like grants to private corporations, are subject to the law of strict construction; Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. R. Co., 171 U. S. 48, 18 Sup. Ct. 732, 43 L. Ed. 67. The grant of an exclusive privilege must be expressly made, or, if inferred from other powers, must be indispensable, and not merely convenient; Water, L. & G. Co. v. Hutchinson, 207 U. S. 385, 28 Sup. Ct. 135, 52 L. Ed. 257.

But, it is said to be also true that a municipal corporation may do many acts not expressly authorized by its charter, and it has been said that "it is a mistake to assume that municipal corporations should not keep abreast with the progress and improvements of the age;" Linn v. Borough, 160 Pa. 511, 28 Atl. 842, 25 L. R. A. 217. This fairly expresses the elasticity which characterizes the decisions with respect to their implied powers. The functions of such corporations are so well understood that there is usually little difficulty in deciding whether a particular power is essential to its purpose or necessarily implied.

These powers have been recognized: To grade and pave streets; Williamsport v. Com., 84 Pa. 487, 24 Am. Rep. 208; to establish and maintain a sewerage system; Cincinnati v. Penny, 21 Ohio St. 499, 8 Am. Rep. 73; provide for a water supply and an electric light plant; Ellinwood v. Reedsburg, 91 Wis. 131, 64 N. W. 885; erect public buildings; French v. Quincy, 3 Allen (Mass.) 9; prevent damage by fire; Robinson v. St. Louis, 28 Mo. 488; and to that end appropriate money to fire companies; Van Sicklen v. Burlington, 27 Vt. 70; to make pleasure drives around public squares; Com. v. Beaver Borough, 171 Pa. 542, 33 Atl. 112; regulate poles and electric wires; Allentown v. Tel. Co., 148 Pa. 117, 23 Atl. 1070, 33 Am. St. Rep. 820; even to the extent of requiring them to be placed underground; 6 Am. Elec. Cas. 64 (it is settled that this power may be exercised by the legislature in the exercise of the sovereign power of the state; New York v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 12 Sup. Ct. 880, 36 L. Ed. 666; People v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593, 14 N. E. 820, 1 Am. St. Rep. 893); so it may make police regulations; Cranston v. Augusta, 61 Ga. 572; offer a reward for the detection of criminals; Crawshaw v. Roxbury, 7 Gray (Mass.) 374; Shuey v. U. S., 92 U. S. 73, 23 L. Ed. 697; contra, Gale v. South Berwick, 51 Me. 174; appropriate public money for a police pension fund; Com. v. Walton, 182 Pa. 373, 38 Atl. 790, 61 Am. St. Rep. 712; or, where it will promote the interests of the inhabitants generally, for a survey for a ship canal; Com. v. Pittsburg, 183 Pa. 202, 38 Atl. 628, 63 Am. St. Rep. 752; issue bonds in aid of a railway; see BONDS; and it was held that the city of Philadelphia had power to send the Liberty bell, owned by it absolutely, to the Atlanta Exposition; Morton v. Philadelphia, 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 523 (where Mr. Hampton L. Carson in his reported argument imparted to the court much historical information on the history of that famous relic).

Power in municipal corporations is denied: To provide for fireworks on the fourth of July; Love v. Raleigh, 116 N. C. 296, 21 S. E. 503, 28 L. R. A. 192; or to prohibit screens in bar rooms; Steffy v. Monroe City, 133 Ind. 466, 35 N. E. 121, 41 Am. Rep. 436; or issue commercial paper; Bordeaux v. Coquard, 47 Ill. App. 254; Concord v. Robinson, 121 U. S. 165, 7 Sup. Ct. 937, 30 L. Ed. 885. The municipal authorities may provide not only for the immediate, but also for the prospective, needs of the city, and may make temporary appropriation, as by lease for private use of such public property as is not presently needed; Attorney General v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400; The Maggie P., 25 Fed. 202; Worden v. New Bedford, 131 Mass. 23, 41 Am. Rep. 185.

A subject of the utmost importance is the power of a municipal corporation with respect to nuisances. Without legislative authority it cannot authorize a common nuisance; State v. Luce, 9 Houst. (Del.) 396, 32 Atl. 1076; nor for instance, prohibit the fencing by a railroad of its right of way; Grossman v. Oakland, 30 Or. 478, 41 Pac. 5, 36 L. R. A. 593, 60 Am. St. Rep. 832; but in the exercise of a granted power to suppress nuisances it may invoke the aid of a court of equity; Huron v. Bank, 8 S. D. 449, 66 N. W. 815, 59 Am. St. Rep. 769. In the Oregon case just cited, the subject was examined and the conclusion reached that even authority by charter to declare what shall constitute a nuisance does not authorize a city by ordinance to declare a particular use of property a nuisance, unless such use is such by common law or statute. See 36 L. R. A. 593, and 39 L. R. A. 520, 609, 649, for full annotations covering the entire ground of municipal power in regard to nuisances. See NUISANCE.

The power to borrow money and issue bonds therefor is not included among the implied powers of a municipal corporation, but when a debt has been lawfully incurred, it is not prohibited from issuing bonds for its payment; Williamsport v. Com., 84 Pa. 487, 24 Am. Rep. 208; but see Nashville v. Ray, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 468, 22 L. Ed. 164; Gause v. Clarksville, 5 Dill. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 5,276.

They possess the incidental or implied power to borrow money and issue bonds therefor in order to carry out their express powers, or any affecting their legitimate objects; Mills v. Gleason, 11 Wis. 470, 78 Am. Dec. 721.

The power to borrow money or to create a debt should not be implied against the spirit and policy clearly manifested by contemporaneous legislation as well as by the organic law in force when the legislation giving such power was enacted; Waxahachie v. Brown, 67 Tex. 519, 4 S. W. 207. It can only be implied from a special duty imposed, for the discharge of which it is necessary; the power to raise money does not include the power to borrow; Wells v. Salina, 119 N. Y. 289, 23 N. E. 870, 7 L. R. A. 759.

It was generally held that where express power is given to borrow money it includes the power to issue negotiable bonds or other securities to the lender; Galena v. Corwith, 48 Ill. 423, 95 Am. Dec. 557; Evansville, I. & C. S. L. R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395; Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 654, 18 L. Ed. 79. But, in cases very much discussed, it has been held by the United States supreme court that the power conferred upon a municipal corporation to borrow money or to incur indebtedness merely authorized it to issue the usual evidences of indebtedness but not "to issue for sale, in open market, a bond, as a commercial security, with immunity, in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, from equitable defences;" Merrill v. Monticello, 138 U. S. 673, 11 Sup. Ct. 441, 34 L. Ed. 1069. This case, it is claimed, was plainly at variance with Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 654, 18 L. Ed. 79, and Mitchell v. Burlington, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 270, 18 L. Ed. 350, though it did not in terms overrule them. But that they were considered overruled by the later cases was expressly stated in Brenham v. Bank, 144 U. S. 173, 12 Sup. Ct. 559, 36 L. Ed. 390, which was re-argued, before eight judges, by reason of the death of Bradley, J., pending its decision, and from the final decision in which Harlan, Brewer, and Brown, JJ., dissented. The decision was squarely to the effect that the power to borrow money did not authorize the issue of negotiable bonds, and that "even a bona fide holder of them cannot have a right to recover upon them or their coupons." See a review of these cases, 5 Harv. L. Rev. 157; 6 id. 53; BONDS; MUNICIPAL BONDS.

Where a statute confers power to borrow money and fixes the limit of the amount which can be borrowed, a municipality cannot exceed that amount under power conferred by a general provision to borrow money for any purpose within its discretion; Read v. Plattsmouth, 107 U. S. 568, 2 Sup. Ct. 208, 27 L. Ed. 414.

By constitutional provision in several states, the legislature is required to restrict municipal corporations in their power to borrow money, contract debts, or pledge their credit. These provisions vary, but are most commonly in the nature of a restriction of possible indebtedness to a certain percentage of the assessed value of property; see Sener v. Ephrata Borough, 176 Pa. 80, 34 Atl. 954, and for a note collecting authorities on the municipal power to borrow money, see Wells v. Salina, 119 N. Y. 280, 23 N. E. 870, 7 L. R. A. 759.

A creditor who had loaned to a municipal corporation in excess of the amount of the indebtedness authorized by the constitution money which had been used in part for the construction of public works, was not entitled to a decree in equity for the return of his money, because the municipality had parted with the specific money and it could not be identified, and further because a constitutional provision forbidding the municipality to borrow money operated equally to prevent moneys loaned to it in violation of this provision and used in the construction of a public work from becoming a lien upon the works constructed with it; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 5 Sup. Ct. 820, 29 L. Ed. 132.

A municipal corporation can incur no indebtedness for an object not within the powers expressed or implied granted by its charter and a purchaser of its bonds is chargeable with notice of its charter powers and limitations when the purpose for which the bonds were issued is fully disclosed in their recitals; White River S. B. v. Superior, 148 Fed. 1, 78 C. C. A. 169. Constitutional limitations on state indebtedness apply to the state alone and not to her political or municipal subdivisions; Prettyman v. Tazewell Co., Sup'rs, 19 Ill. 406, 71 Am. Dec. 230; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 607. As to both constitutional and statutory limitations, see Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 24 S. W. 872, 23 L. R. A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222.

There can be no union of public and private funds or credit, nor of that which is produced by such funds or credit; and a statute authorizing the union of public and private capital or credit in any enterprise whatever is unconstitutional; Taylor v. Ross Co., 23 Ohio St. 78; Wyscaver v. Atkinson, 37 Ohio St. 97; but a joinder of a city with a county in purchasing a building for a city hall has been upheld; De Witt v. San Francisco, 2 Cal. 289, where it was held that they could take as tenants in common.

Such corporations have not the power of taxation, unless such is conferred by the legislature, and when it is so conferred the statute must be strictly construed; Green v. Ward, 82 Va. 324; Hare v. Kennerly, 83 Ala. 608, 3 South. 683; Winston v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 210, 6 S. E. 114. A grant of the power of taxation by the legislature to a municipal corporation is subject to revocation, modification, and control by the legislature of the state; Williamson v. New Jersey, 130 U. S. 189, 9 Sup. Ct. 453, 32 L. Ed. 915.

While the power to make laws cannot be delegated, the creation of municipalities exercising local self-government cannot be held to trench upon that rule; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 9 Sup. Ct. 256, 32 L. Ed. 637. See LEGISLATIVE POWER. So from necessity, these corporations exercise a large measure of police power. A city council may by ordinance authorize police officers to arrest without warrant persons engaged in a breach of the peace, and an officer who, from the outside of a house, hears a disturbance or disorderly conduct within it, may, acting in good faith under such authority, enter the house and arrest the person guilty thereof as being the inmate of a disorderly house; Hawkins v. Lutton, 95 Wis. 492, 70 N. W. 483, 60 Am. St. Rep. 131.

The delegation of power to municipal councils to determine between alternative methods for payment of assessments for municipal improvements is authorized by a constitutional provision directing the legislature to provide for municipal corporations; Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057.

Delegations of power to municipal corporations have been held valid to provide for the increase of justices in proportion to population, and authorizing the appointment of the additional justices by county commissioners; Board v. Smith, 22 Colo. 534, 45 Pac. 357; allowing existing municipal corporations to elect to continue under their old charter or adopt the general incorporation law; Lum v. Vicksburg, 72 Miss. 950, 18 South. 476; authorizing a township committee to determine what territory shall be included in a proposed city; Glen Ridge v. Stout, 58 N. J. L. 598, 33 Atl. 858; authorizing cities of a given class to make laws for their local self-government, subject to the general laws of the state; Nelson v. Troy, 11 Wash. 435, 39 Pac. 974.

A municipality may require a street railway company to sprinkle the streets to protect the public health; St. Paul v. Ry. Co., 114 Minn. 250, 130 N. W. 1108, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1136; authorize the summary seizure and destruction of milk not conforming to the standard fixed by law; Nelson v. Minneapolis, 112 Minn. 16, 127 N. W. 445, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260; or prohibit its sale except in bottles; Com. v. Drew, 208 Mass. 493, 94 N. E. 682, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401; or prohibit the sale of food from cold storage unfit for human consumption; North American C. S. Co. v. Chicago, 211 U. S. 306, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 53 L. Ed. 195, 15 Ann. Cas. 276; establish a standard weight for a loaf of bread; 2 Ont. Rep. 192; prohibit the sale of other sizes; Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, 33 Sup. Ct. 182, 57 L. Ed. 364; regulate the rates which a water company may collect from private consumers (which partakes of the nature of a governmental power and of a business power); Omaha W. Co. v. Omaha, 147 Fed. 1, 77 C. C. A. 267, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, 8 Ann. Cas. 614.

It has been held that the vesting in some body of men or in the hands of a single individual the power to grant permits in special cases to carry on some particular business is contrary to the spirit of American institutions; Chicago v. Trotter, 136 Ill. 430, 26 N. E. 359; In re Frazee, 63 Mich. 396, 30 N. W. 72, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310; State v. Fiske, 9 R. I. 94; Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239; Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. D. 62, 60 N. W. 156, 25 L. R. A. 621, citing State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 14 S. E. 387, 15 L. R. A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 715, where an ordinance was held void because it prescribed no general rule for the exercise of discretion in granting permits, but allowed the granting of a permit to one and the refusal to another under the same conditions, with no reason therefor but the irresponsible and arbitrary will of the majority of the aldermen; and to the same effect, Newton v. Belger, 143 Mass. 598, 10 N. E. 464. Other cases have held that such authority cannot be delegated to adjoining lot owners; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 Pac. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218 (where their permission was required by municipal ordinance in order to carry on a laundry); St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 22 S. W. 470, 20 L. R. A. 721 (where the ordinance delegated to the owners of one-half the ground in any block the power to determine whether a livery stable may be erected thereon, on the ground that they might discriminate). In Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220, an ordinance was held invalid which conferred an arbitrary authority upon a board to give or withhold consent to the conduct of a certain business.

But the authority to delegate that discretion to a board appointed for that purpose is sustained by the great weight of authority; Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018; Quincy v. Kennard, 151 Mass. 563, 24 N. E. 860; State v. White, 64 N. H. 48, 5 Atl. 828; St. Paul v. Smith, 27 Minn. 364, 7 N. W. 734, 38 Am. Rep. 296. Ordinances have been sustained prohibiting awnings without the consent of the mayor and aldermen; Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray (Mass.) 161; forbidding orations, harangues, etc., in a park without consent; Com. v. Abrahams, 156 Mass. 57, 30 N. E. 79; or upon the Common or other grounds; Com. v. Davis, 140 Mass. 485, 4 N. E. 577; beating a drum, etc., or making any noise with any instrument for any purpose whatever, without written permission, on any street or sidewalk; Roderick v. Whitson, 51 Hun 620, 4 N. Y. Supp. 112; giving the right to manufacturers and others to ring bells and blow whistles in such mannen and at such hours as the board of aldermen or selectmen may in writing designate; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; prohibiting the erecting or repairing of a wooden building without permission; Hine v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 478; authorizing harbor masters to station vessels and to assign to each its place; Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 349; forbidding the occupancy of a place on the street for a market stand without permission; In re Nightingale, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 168; forbidding the keeping of swine without a permit; Quincy v. Kennard, 151 Mass. 563, 24 N. E. 860; forbidding the erection of any kind of a building without a permit; Easton v. Covey, 74 Md. 262, 22 Atl. 266; forbidding any person from remaining within the limits of the market more than twenty minutes unless permitted; Com. v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 355; Wilson v. Eureka City, 173 U. S. 32, 19 Sup. Ct. 317, 43 L. Ed. 603; giving the mayor power to determine whether a person applying for a license to sell cigarettes has a good character and reputation and is a suitable person to be entrusted with their sale; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725, affirming 176 Ill. 340, 52 N. E. 44, 48 L. R. A. 230; forbidding the use of bicycles on a certain road without permission; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477, 2 S. E. 458, 2 Am. St. Rep. 305; making the privilege of moving buildings on a street dependent upon permission; Eureka City v. Wilson, 15 Utah, 53, 48 Pac. 41; forbidding dairies within city limits without permission; Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018; prescribing water meters in its own water works; Cooper v. Goodland, 80 Kan. 121, 102 Pac. 244, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410.

It is held not to be within the constitutional powers of a municipality to prohibit the use of a cemetery which has never been and will never become a nuisance and is not dangerous to life or detrimental to the public health; Hume v. Cemetery, 142 Fed. 552; see Carpenter v. Yeadon, 158 Fed. 766, 86 C. C. A. 122.

The delegation, by the state to a city, of authority to act for it in granting franchises to build and operate street railways, does not include the power to institute and maintain actions for their forfeiture for misuse or abuse, and such fo[illegible] must be decreed in an action in the name of the state; Milwaukee E. R. & L. Co. v. Milwaukee, 95 Wis. 39, 69 N. W. 794, 36 L. R. A. 45, 60 Am. St. Rep. 81.

The delegated power of legislation involved in the authority of municipal corporations to enact ordinances springs naturally from the nature and functions of these corporations as an instrumentality of local government. Such ordinances, by the legislative body of the municipality, are the usual means of expressing the corporate will and enacting municipal laws and regulations. Such regulations may be by resolution as well as by ordinance where the charter is silent on the subject; Board of Education v. De Kay, 148 U. S. 591, 13 Sup. Ct. 706, 37 L. Ed. 573; Green Bay v. Brauns, 50 Wis. 204, 6 N. W. 503; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L. R. A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214; State v. Board, 54 N. J. L. 325, 23 Atl. 949; if, however, the charter requires action by ordinance, a resolution is ineffective; Avis v. Vineland, 55 N. J. L. 285, 26 Atl. 149; Newman v. Emporia, 32 Kan. 456, 4 Pac. 815; and where an ordinance is required in a particular form it cannot be repealed by resolution; San Antonio v. Micklejohn, 89 Tex. 79, 33 S. W. 735; so even if an ordinance has been passed, where a resolution would have been sufficient, the latter is not sufficient to repeal it; Ryce v. Osage, 88 Ia. 558, 55 N. W. 532. Where the charter authorized action by ordinance, a resolution is sufficient if adopted and approved by the mayor with such formalities as an ordinance would require; Springfield v. Knott, 49 Mo. App. 612; but where an ordinance requires the approval of the mayor, a resolution not presented to him is unavailing; Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph, 113 Mo. 395, 21 S. W. 8, 18 L. R. A. 590. See ORDINANCE.

The principles upon which rest the right to enact penal ordinances are thus stated: (1) Unless forbidden by the constitution, the legislature can clothe municipal government with power to prohibit and punish any act made penal by the state laws, when done within the municipal limits. (2) Such an ordinance is not invalid, merely because it prescribes the same penalties as the state law for the commission or omission of the same act. (3) It is no valid objection to such an ordinance, that the offender may be tried and punished for the same act under both the ordinance and the state law. (4) A conviction or acquittal by the municipal courts, under such an ordinance, is no bar to a prosecution under the state law. (5) Such an ordinance is not invalid, merely because the trial thereunder is without a jury. (6) Nor is it invalid, because it excepts from its operation certain business pursuits that are not excepted from the operation of the state law on the same subject; Theisen v. McDavid, 34 Fla. 440, 16

It has been held that the state has a constitutional right to delegate to a municipality power to regulate by ordinance subjects which are already governed by the state law; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 633. The power of the legislature to confer special authority to pass local laws which shall exclude general laws of the state on particular subjects is questioned in Washington v. Hammond, 76 N. C. 34.

That a municipality may not prohibit by ordinance that which is already made penal by state statute is held in Penniston v. Newnan, 117 Ga. 700, 45 S. E. 65; In re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405; Foster v. Brown, 55 Ia. 686, 8 N. W. 654; Washington v. Hammond, 76 N. C. 34; in some cases ordinances on a subject governed by a state statute, though there is no expressed delegation of authority, are sustained; Van Buren v. Wells, 53 Ark. 368, 14 S. W. 38, 22 Am. St. Rep. 214; Theisen v. McDavid, 34 Fla. 440, 16 South. 321, 26 L. R. A. 234; St. Louis v. Schoenbusch, 95 Mo. 618, 8 S. W. 791. It is sometimes held that offenses against the proper police regulations of a municipality, which are also violations of the penal laws, may be prosecuted under either; Ex parte Freeland, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 321, 42 S. W. 295; State v. Wister, 62 Mo. 592; McInerney v. Denver, 17 Colo. 302, 29 Pac. 516.

Ordinances must not only not conflict with constitutional or general statute law, but they must be reasonable. It is, however, said that what may be reasonable under ordinary circumstances, as a prohibition against driving on the street at a greater speed than six miles an hour, would be unreasonable and void as applied to the members of a salvage corps or fire patrol responding to an alarm; State v. Sheppard, 64 Minn. 287, 67 N. W. 62, 36 L. R. A. 305. An ordinance providing that "no person shall on any street or public place, or on land adjacent thereto, sing or recite any profane or obscene song or ballad, or use any profane or obscene language," was held unreasonable and therefore invalid; [1896] 1 Q. B. 290. It is suggested that the real ground of objection in this case was that the words "or on land adjacent thereto," were too wide, and that the other objection alone ought to be untenable because the use of profane or obscene language necessarily implies annoyance; 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 327. But an ordinance which conforms to a definite statutory grant of power cannot be set aside as unreasonable; Raffetto v. Mott, 60 N. J. L. 413, 38 Atl. 857. A statutory power to make ordinances regulating trade does not warrant one making it unlawful to carry on a lawful trade in a lawful manner; [1896] A. C. 88.

Municipal ordinances may be valid in some of their provisions and invalid as to others; Ex parte Byrd, 84 Ala. 17, 4 South. 397, 5 Am. St. Rep. 328; but where the invalid provisions are inseparably connected with the valid ones, the ordinance is void; Landis v. Vineland, 54 N. J. L. 75, 23 Atl. 357; Lucas v. Macomb, 49 Ill. App. 60. When a city council is vested with full power over a subject, and the mode of exercising it is not limited by the charter, it may exercise it in any manner most convenient; Beers v. Dalles City, 16 Or. 334, 18 Pac. 835. A city ordinance in conflict with the general policy and laws of the state is void; State v. Burns, 45 La. Ann. 34, 11 South. 878. See ORDINANCE.

With respect to the liabilities of municipal corporations it may be said generally that as parties to a contract where they act qua private corporations, they are liable on their contract, and contracting parties are liable to them in the same manner as private persons and corporations are. A city can bind parties by such contracts only as it is authorized by its charter to make; Syracuse W. Co. v. Syracuse, 116 N. Y. 167, 22 N. E. 381, 5 L. R. A. 546. Those who contract with them are protected where their contracts are made according to law; Mackey v. Columbus, 71 Mich. 227, 38 N. W. 899; Sullivan v. Leadville, 11 Colo. 483, 18 Pac. 736; and those who deal with them must exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain whether there be legally provided the funds from which the obligation to be created may be met; and the public is not estopped from setting up the illegality of the obligation by the fact that the other party has acted in reliance upon its validity; Atlantic City W. W. Co. v. Read, 50 N. J. L. 665, 15 Atl. 10.

Where a municipality acts in the dual capacity of furnishing public utilities both for public and private use, it stands upon the same footing as a private corporation and is liable for its negligent or unlawful acts; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 154, 34 N. E. 545, 21 L. R. A. 519; Omaha W. Co. v. Omaha, 156 Fed. 922, 85 C. C. A. 54; id., 147 Fed. 1, 77 C. C. A. 267, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, 8 Ann. Cas. 614.

No common law duty rests upon a municipality to light its streets and highways; Randall v. R. Co., 106 Mass. 276, 8 Am. Rep. 327; contra, Prather v. Spokane, 29 Wash. 549, 70 Pac. 55, 59 L. R. A. 346, 92 Am. St. Rep. 923; the mere fact that it has charter authority to light its streets does not render it guilty of negligence for failure to do so; Thuis v. Vincennes, 35 Ind. App. 350, 73 N. E. 1098; nor does mere statutory authority impose upon it the obligation to light the streets; White v. Newberne, 146 N. C. 447, 59 S. E. 992, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1166, 125 Am. St. Rep. 476; nor will the fact that an ordinance of the municipality required a light to be placed where the injury occurred render the city liable for its failure to maintain such light; Lyon v. Cambridge, 136 Mass. 419; but when a city has once undertaken to light its streets and is then guilty of negligence in furnishing the light, or furnishes one insufficient to put the street in a reasonably safe condition for travel at night in the ordinary modes, it will be liable; Chicago v. Baker, 195 Ill. 54, 62 N. E. 892.

A municipality is not bound to furnish water for fire protection, and if it does so, it does not subject itself to greater liability; a majority of the American courts hold that a tax payer has no such right under an agreement between the municipality and a water company as to enable him to sue in contract or tort for a violation of the public duty thereby assumed; German A. Ins. Co. v. Water Supply Co., 226 U. S. 220, 33 Sup. Ct. 32, 57 L. Ed. 195, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000.

Contracts may be entered into by the officers of a corporation binding upon it, without the use of the corporate seal; University v. Young Men's Soc., 12 Mich. 138. Without express legislative authority, a municipality cannot act as surety or guarantee; Clark v. Des Moines, 19 Ia. 199, 87 Am. Dec. 423. Where the statute provides that no city officer should be interested in a municipal contract, and that any such contract contrary to that provision should be void, a contract with a school director for street work was held void; Capron v. Hitchcock, 98 Cal. 427, 33 Pac. 431; and the same is true if the interest of the officer is indirect merely, as the member of a contracting firm or corporation; Stroud v. Water Co., 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 578; such contract may be ratified by subsequent municipal action after the officer has ceased to be such, for it is a new contract; Fort Wayne v. R. Co., 132 Ind. 558, 32 N. E. 215, 18 L. R. A. 367, 32 Am. St. Rep. 277. Even if there be no penal statute prohibiting the execution of such contract, it is void on grounds of public policy, but so long as it is executory it is voidable merely, and if entered into in good faith for a proper purpose and the city has received the benefit, there may be a recovery on a quantum meruit; Concordia v. Hagaman, 1 Kan. App. 35, 41 Pac. 133. For cases on the general subject of the liability of municipal corporations on contracts, see 6 L. R. A. 318, note.

The liability of municipal corporations for the misfeasance, or negligent nonfeasance, of their officers, is affected primarily by the distinction between their public functions as an instrumentality of government, and their private relations as a corporation transacting ordinary business. See supra. Within the sphere of the former they are entitled to exemption from liability, inasmuch as they are a part of the government, and to that extent their officers are public officers, and as such, entitled to the protection of this principle; but within the sphere of the latter, they drop the badges of their governmental offices and stand forth as the delegates of a private corporation in the exercise of private franchises, and are amenable as such to the fundamental doctrine of liability for the acts of a servant; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461. Although the difference between the two kinds of powers is plain and marked, yet, as they approximate each other, it is sometimes difficult to ascertain the exact line of distinction. All that can be done with safety is to determine, as each case arises, under which class it falls; Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347.

Where a city or town is exercising the judicial, discretionary, or legislative authority conferred by its charter, or is discharging a duty imposed solely for the benefit of the public, it incurs no liability for the negligence of its officers, though acting under color of office, unless some statute (expressly or by necessary implication) subjects the corporation to pecuniary responsibility for such negligence; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 965; but where such corporations are not in the exercise of their purely governmental functions, but are exercising, as corporations, private franchises, powers, and privileges which belong to them for their ordinary corporate benefit, or dealing with property held by them for their corporate advantage, gain, or emolument, though enuring ultimately to the benefit of the general public, then they become liable for the negligent exercise of such powers precisely as though they were individuals; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Providence v. Clapp, 17 How. (U. S.) 161, 15 L. Ed. 72; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 966.

The obligation and duty of a municipal corporation in the construction of public work is only the exercise of reasonable care; it does not insure against damage; Jenney v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 164, 24 N. E. 274. The inquiry must be whether the department or officer whose action or non-action is complained of is part of the machinery for carrying on the municipal government, and whether it was then engaged in discharging a duty resting upon it; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 22 N. E. 1095, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442. To constitute negligence in such actions, there must be a duty imperfectly discharged; Carpenter v. Cohoes, 81 N. Y. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 468; 8 C. B. N. S. 568; and if the duty is owed to the public, there is no action by an individual to whom the duty was not specially owed; Griffin v. Sanbornton, 44 N. H. 246; Tomlinson v. Derby, 43 Conn. 562. As illustrating the effect of their two-fold character, municipal corporations have been held liable for injuries resulting from negligence in the management of a public building rented out for profit; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 499, 3 Am. Rep. 485; otherwise, if let gratuitously; Larrabee v. Peabody, 128 Mass. 561. So they are liable for torts of their agents amounting to the negligent breach of municipal duty; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65. Upon this theory rests the exception to the general rule of exemption from liability for negligence in performance of a public duty, recognized in many states, as to defective highways; Smoot v. Wetumpka, 24 Ala. 112; see Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 42 N. W. 1011, 5 L. R. A. 143, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457; Goshen v. England, 119 Ind. 368, 21 N. E. 977, 5 L. R. A. 253; Thompson v. Quincy, 83 Mich. 173, 47 N. W. 114, 10 L. R. A. 734; as is also in many jurisdictions the liability for defective drains and sewers; Chope v. Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364, 4 L. R. A. 325, 12 Am. St. Rep. 113; Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 18 N. E. 88, 1 L. R. A. 296, 6 Am. St. Rep. 366; Bates v. Westborough, 151 Mass. 174, 23 N. E. 1070, 7 L. R. A. 156 (contra, that there is no liability for typhoid fever caused by a defective sewer, see Metz v. Asheville, 150 N. C. 748, 64 S. E. 881, 22 L. R. A. [N. S.] 940); but it was held that there was no liability for damage by fire resulting from failure to keep fire plugs, etc., in order; Wright v. Augusta, 78 Ga. 241, 6 Am. St. Rep. 256; Lenzen v. New Braunfels, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 35 S. W. 341; or from not preventing the erection of a wooden building within the fire limits; Hines v. Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278, 40 N. W. 333, 1 L. R. A. 844.

There is no liability for omission to exercise discretionary powers; Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 334, 47 Am. Rep. 434; Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 762; there must be a corporate duty imposed; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; L. R. 2 Q. B. 534; as, for example, a city is not liable for failure of its police to prevent crime which is a public duty, as distinguished from a strictly corporate duty; Wilmington v. Vandegrift, 1 Marvel' (Del.) 5, 29 Atl. 1047, 25 L. R. A. 538, 65 Am. St. Rep. 256. But if the corporation receives a benefit, it may be liable; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324.

The municipality has been held not liable for injuries resulting from negligence of a physician in charge of a pest-house; Brown v. Vinalhaven, 65 Me. 402, 20 Am. Rep. 709; see Hines v. Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278, 40 N. W. 333, 1 L. R. A. 844; or for tortious acts of agents in their nature unlawful; Brown v. Cape Girardeau, 90 Mo. 377, 2 S. W. 302, 59 Am. Rep. 28; Seele v. Deering, 79 Me. 343, 10 Atl. 45, 1 Am. St. Rep. 314; as a constable making an unlawful sale; Everson v. Syracuse, 100 N. Y. 577, 3 N. E. 784; for negligence of an officer in whose selection there was no negligence; Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 469, 70 Am. Dec. 505; or of officers selected under a statute independently of municipal control; Symonds v. Board, 71 Ill. 357; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 382, 94 Am. Dec. 461; see Hines v. Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278, 40 N. W. 333, 1 L. R. A. 844; for negligence of police; Boyd v. Insurance Patrol, 113 Pa. 269, 6 Atl. 536; unless there is statutory liability, express or implied; Carrington v. St. Louis, 89 Mo. 208, 1 S. W. 240, 58 Am. Rep. 108; or of firemen; Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402, 26 N. W. 228; or of a civil engineer in establishing a grade for the benefit of an individual for whom he was bound to do it on payment of a fee; Waller v. Dubuque, 69 Ia. 541, 29 N. W. 456; for damages resulting from the firing of a cannon under a license from the mayor authorized by ordinance; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 578, 20 N. E. 329, 3 L. R. A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601; for the publication of defamatory matter contained in an official report of an investigating committee duly selected; Howland v. Maynard, 159 Mass. 434, 34 N. E. 515, 21 L. R. A. 500, 38 Am. St. Rep. 445; for the wrongful act of its officers in closing an exhibition with intent to injure the owner thereof; Kansas City v. Lemen, 57 Fed. 905, 6 C. C. A. 627; for failure of its officers to provide by special tax a fund to pay street grade warrants; McEwan v. Spokane, 16 Wash. 212, 47 Pac. 433. See 3 L. R. A. 257, note; MANDAMUS; QUASI CORPORATIONS.

Municipal corporations may be dissolved in England; (1) by act of parliament; Co. Litt. 176, n.; (2) by the loss of an integral part; University v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 365, 31 Am. Dec. 72; (3) by a surrender of their franchises; 6 Term 277; (4) by forfeiture of their charter; 6 Beav. 220.

In the United States these modes of dissolution are not applicable, and there can be no dissolution, except by an act of the legislature which created the corporation. See Dodge v. People, 113 Ill. 491, 1 N. E. 826; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. Ed. 197; Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 289, 6 Sup. Ct. 398, 29 L. Ed. 620.

The change of name does not dissolve a municipal corporation; Girard v. Philadelphia, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 19 L. Ed. 53; Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 266, 23 L. Ed. 896; but the power of so changing exists only in the legislature.

Nor does the failure of the inhabitants of a municipality to elect officers operate as a dissolution of it; State v. Dunson, 71 Tex. 65, 9 S. W. 103; nor is a municipal charter forfeited by mere non-user for any period of time; Butler v. Walker, 98 Ala. 358, 13 South. 261, 39 Am. St. Rep. 61.

Upon the division of a municipal corporation into two separate towns, each is entitled to hold in severalty the public property within its limits; North Hempstead v. Hempstead, 2 Wend. 109. See Winona v. School Dist., 40 Minn. 13, 41 N. W. 539, 3 L. R. A. 46, 12 Am. St. Rep. 687.

A statute permitting the annexation of property belonging to women to municipalities without giving them an opportunity to make defenses to the proceedings does not deprive them of the equal protection of the laws; Carrithers v. Shelbyville, 126 Ky. 769, 104 S. W. 744, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421. In Taggart v. Claypool, 145 Ind. 590, 44 N. E. 18, 32 L. R. A. 586, it was held that a provision in an annexation statute granting the right of appeal to resident freeholders only, to the exclusion of owners of property within the territory who were not resident therein, was not in conflict either with the provision of the state constitution or with the XIVth Amendment. The right of a non-resident owner of property within the territory affected was denied; State v. Dimond, 44 Neb. 154, 62 N. W. 498.

While it is generally held that a municipal corporation may delegate to the abutter a duty of clearing ice and snow from the sidewalk, it cannot discharge itself from liability for any injury resulting from a failure to perform a delegated duty; 8 Yale Law J. 344.

One who places an obstruction in a public street by special authority from the proper municipal officers, cannot be held liable in trespass for an injury resulting to one using the street on the ground that such obstruction was a nuisance, but only on the ground of negligence; Sanford v. White, 150 Fed. 724, 80 C. C. A. 390.

In actions generally, the original minutes or records of a corporation are competent evidence of its acts and proceedings; Denning v. Roome, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 651. It is competent for the legislature to delegate to municipal corporations the power to make by-laws and ordinances which have, when authorized, the force, in favor of the municipality and against the persons bound thereby, of laws passed by the legislature of the state; Des Moines G. Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Ia. 508, 24 Am. Rep. 756; but ordinances can not enlarge or change the charter by enlarging, diminishing, or varying its powers; Thomas v. Richmond, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 349, 20 L. Ed. 453.

See DELEGATION; POLICE POWER; ASSESSMENT.

MUNICIPAL COURTS. At common law, municipal corporations frequently enjoyed the franchise of holding a court, and the franchise being a public right, could not be lost by non-user. A. & E. Encyc. L. See Dillon, Mun. Corp., 3d ed. § 424; 4 D. P. C. 562.

In the United States, in many of the larger cities, there are courts so designated, with statutory jurisdiction in criminal or civil cases, or both, usually limited not only in amount, but by the requirement that suits can only be instituted against residents, and crimes prosecuted which are committed within the city.

MUNICIPAL LAW. In contradistinction to international law, the system of law proper to any single nation or state. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 Bla. Com. 44.

Municipal law contrasts with international law, in that it is a system of law proper to a single nation, state, or community. In any one state the municipal law of another state is foreign law. See FOREIGN LAW. A conflict of laws arises where a case arising in one state involves foreign persons or interests, and the foreign and the domestic laws do not agree as to the proper rule to be applied. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The various provinces of municipal law are characterized according to the subjects with which they respectively treat: as, criminal or penal law, civil law, military law, and the like. Constitutional law, commercial law, parliamentary law, and the like, are departments of the general province of civil law, as distinguished from criminal and military law.

The term is now chiefly applied to laws relating to municipalities.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE. A statute or regulation enacted or adopted by a municipal corporation for the proper conduct of its affairs or the government of its inhabitants. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION; ORDINANCE.

MUNICIPAL SECURITIES. The evidences of indebtedness issued by cities, towns, counties, townships, school districts, and other such territorial divisions of the state. There are two general classes: (1) municipal warrants, orders, or certificates; (2) municipal negotiable bonds. A. & E. Encyc. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

MUNICIPALITY. The body of officers taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

MUNICIPIUM. In Roman Law. A free town which retained its original right of self-government, but whose inhabitants also acquired certain rights of Roman citizens. Morey, Rom. L. 51. See MUNICIPAL.

MUNIMENTS. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Termes de la Ley; Co. 3d Inst. 170. Cathedrals, collegiate churches, etc., sometimes have a muniment house, where the seal, evidences, charter, etc., of such cathedral are kept. Cowell.

MUNUS. A gift; an office; a benefice, or feud. A gladiatorial show or spectacle. Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange.

MURAGE. A toll formerly levied in England for repairing or building public walls.

MURAL MONUMENTS. Monuments made in walls.

Owing to the difficulty or impossibility of removing them, secondary evidence may be given of inscriptions on walls, fixed tables, gravestones, and the like. 2 Stark. 274.

MURDER. The wilful killing of any subject whatever, with malice aforethought, whether the person slain shall be an Englishman or a foreigner. Hawk. Pl. C. b. 1, c. 13, s. 3. The killing of any person under the king's peace, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express, or implied by law. 1 Russ. Cr. 421; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Archb. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 727 note; Whart. Cr. L. 303. When a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. Co. 3d Inst. 47.

The latter definition, which has been adopted by Blackstone, 4 Com. 195; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law, 724, and others, has been severely criticised. What, it has been asked, are sound mind and discretion? What has soundness of memory to do with the act? be it ever so imperfect, how does it effect the guilt? If discretion is necessary, can the crime ever be committed? for is it not the highest indiscretion in a man to take the life of another, and thereby expose his own? If the person killed be an idiot or a newborn infant, is he a reasonable creature? Who is in the king's peace? What is malice aforethought? Can there be malice aforethought? Livingston, Pen. Law, 186. It is, however, apparent that some of the criticisms are merely verbal, and others are answered by the construction given in the various cases to the requirements of the definition. See, especially, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. Mass. 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

According to Coke's definition, there must be, first, sound mind and memory in the agent. By this is understood there must be a will and legal discretion. Second, an actual killing; but it is not necessary that it should be caused by direct violence; it is sufficient if the acts done apparently endanger life, and eventually prove fatal; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 31, s. 4; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 431; 9 C. & P. 356. Third, the party killed must have been a reasonable being, alive in the king's peace. To constitute a birth, so as to make the killing of a child murder, the whole body must be detached from that of the mother; but if it has come fully forth, but is still connected by the umbilical cord, such killing will be murder; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1722, note. Fœticide would not be such a killing; he must have been in rerum natura. Fourth, malice, either express or implied. It is this circumstance which distinguishes murder from every description of homicide; Smith v. State, 83 Ala. 26, 3 South. 551. See MALICE.

Murder may be committed as the result of some illegal act, whether the design to take life is actually present or not; State v. Alexander, 30 S. C. 74, 8 S. E. 440, 14 Am. St. Rep. 879. Wilful omission of duty resulting in death is murder, where the exposure or neglect clearly shows danger to life; Territory v. Manton, 8 Mont. 95, 19 Pac. 387. It being contrary to the law of the land to commit suicide, if two persons meet together and agree so to do, and one of them dies, the other is guilty of murder; 10 Crim. L. Mag. 862. One who fires with deliberate purpose of killing A., and kills B., is as guilty as if he had killed A.; Com. v. Breyessee, 160 Pa. 451, 28 Atl. 824, 40 Am. St. Rep. 729; State v. Gilman, 69 Me. 163, 31 Am. Rep. 257; State v. Dugan, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 563; but see People v. Gordon, 100 Mich. 518, 59 N. W. 322; obstructing a railroad track, by which a human being is killed, is murder in the first degree; Presley v. State, 59 Ala. 98.

In some of the states, by legislative enactments, murder has been divided into degrees. In Pennsylvania, by the act of April 22, 1794, "all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, shall be deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder of the second degree; and the jury before whom any person indicted for murder shall be tried shall, if they find the person guilty thereof, ascertain in their verdict whether it be murder of the first or second degree; but if such person shall be convicted by confession, the court shall proceed, by examination of witnesses, to determine the degree of the crime, and give sentence accordingly."

Similar enactments have been made in many other states; Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533; Territory v. Rowand, 8 Mont. 110, 19 Pac. 595; State v. Woods, 97 Mo. 31, 10 S. W. 157; State v. Smith, 73 Ia. 32, 34 N. W. 597; Trumble v. State, 25 Tex. App. 631, 8 S. W. 814; Marshall v. State, 32 Fla. 462, 14 South. 92; McDaniel v. Com., 77 Va. 284.

The power of a state to punish crimes is limited to such as are committed within its territory, and consequently it cannot provide for the punishment, as crimes, of acts committed beyond the state boundary; People v. Merrill, 2 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 590; Watson v. State, 36 Miss. 593; Cooley, Const. Lim. [128]; but if the ultimate and injurious result of an unlawful act committed outside of a state is effected within it, the perpetrator may be punished by it as an offender; id.; and it was held constitutional to punish in Michigan a homicide committed by a mortal blow in Canada waters from which death resulted in the state; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320. See Cooley, Const. Lim. [128]. See 35 U. C. 603. A murder committed on a United States battleship lying within territory ceded to the United States by New York, is triable in the United States court for the Southern District of New York; U. S. v. Carter, 84 Fed. 622. See JURISDICTION.

One who kills his ancestor will nevertheless take the estate which would come to him under the statutes of descent and distribution; Carpenter's Estate, 170 Pa. 203, 32 Atl. 637, 29 L. R. A. 145, 50 Am. St. Rep. 765; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240, 6 S. E. 794; Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 631, 59 N. W. 935, 25 L. R. A. 564 (reversing 31 Neb. 61, 47 N. W. 700, 10 L. R. A. 810, 28 Am. St. Rep. 500); McAllister v. Fair, 72 Kan. 533, 84 Pac. 112, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 115 Am. St. Rep. 233, 7 Ann. Cas. 973 (where it was held that the court could not engraft an exception upon a plain provision of the statute of descent). In Iowa, however, there are statutory prohibitions against a murderer's inheriting from his victim either by descent or devise; In re Kuhn's Estate, 125 Ia. 449, 101 N. W. 151, 2 Ann. Cas. 657 (where however a widow was held entitled to her distributive share as a matter of contract and right even though she killed her husband); Gollnik v. Mengel, 112 Minn. 349, 128 N. W. 292; to the same effect [1892] 1 Q. B. 147 (an insurance case in which the insured [Maybrick] was killed by his wife, the beneficiary). It has been held that a murderer could not take the property of his ancestor by devise; Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 22 N. E. 188, 5 L. R. A. 340, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819; 24 Ont. Rep. 132, 24 Can. S. C. 650; or by descent; Box v. Lanier, 112 Tenn. 393, 79 S. W. 1042, 64 L. R. A. 458; it passes to the estate of the deceased; Ellerson v. Westcott, 148 N. Y. 149, 42 N. E. 540.

The proceeds of a policy were held to pass to the distributees of the decedent as though the murderer had never been in existence; Box v. Lanier, 112 Tenn. 393, 79 S. W. 1042, 64 L. R. A. 458. See McAllister v. Fair, 72 Kan. 533, 84 Pac. 112, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 115 Am. St. Rep. 233, 7 Ann. Cas. 973.

In cases where the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance causes the death of the insured, it is usually held that the murderer cannot take the fruits of his crime, such a result being, it is said, equivalent to permitting recovery of insurance money on a building which the beneficiary in the policy had wilfully burned; Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 6 Sup. Ct. 877, 29 L. Ed. 997; [1892] 1 Q. B. 147; Schreiner v. Order of Forresters, 35 Ill. App. 576; Schmidt v. Life Ass'n, 112 Ia. 41, 83 N. W. 800, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323; 25 Beav. 605.

But the killing of an insured person by an insane beneficiary does not forfeit his rights under the policy; Holdom v. A. O. U. W., 159 Ill. 619, 43 N. E. 772, 31 L. R. A. 67, 50 Am. St. Rep. 183; nor is there a forfeiture if the killing was accidental; Schreiner v. Order of Forresters, 35 Ill. App. 576.

Prof. James Barr Ames (Lectures, 310; Am. L. Reg. & Rev. April, 1897) considers that at common law the murderer would take, but that equity should compel the criminal to surrender the fruits of his crime, and expresses his regret that the cases in Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio and Pennsylvania did not apply the sound principle of equity that a murderer or other wrongdoer shall not enrich himself by his iniquity at the expense of an innocent person.

In Pleading. In an indictment for murder, it must be charged that the prisoner "did kill and murder" the deceased; and unless the word murder be introduced into the charge, the indictment will be taken to charge manslaughter only; Bish. Cr. Prac. § 548; Fost. Cr. Law 424; Yelv. 205; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law *243, and the authorities and cases there cited.

MURDRUM. During the times of the Danes, and afterwards till the reign of Edward III., murdrum was the killing of a man in a secret manner; and in that it differed from simple homicide.

When a man was thus killed, and he was unknown, by the laws of Canute he was presumed to be a Dane, and the vill was compelled to pay forty marks to the king for his death. After the conquest, a similar law was made in favor of Normans, which was abolished by 3 Edw. III.

See PROVING THE ENGLISHERY.

The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo. Prin. Pen. Law 219, note.

MURORUM OPERATIO. The service of work and labor done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle. Cowell.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION. The copyright act of March 4, 1909, provides for protection to dramatic or dramatico-musical compositions. It grants the exclusive right in the case of a musical composition to perform the copyrighted work publicly for profit, and, for the purpose of printing, publishing and vending the work, to make any arrangement or setting of it or of the melody of it in any system of notation or any form of record in which the thought of the author may be recorded and from which it may be read or reproduced, provided that the act, so far as it secures copyright controlling the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the musical work, shall include only compositions published and copyrighted after the act goes into effect, and not the works of a foreign composer unless his nation grants to citizens of the United States similar rights, and provided that when the owner has used or permitted or knowingly acquiesced in the use of the work upon the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the work, any other person may make similar use of it upon paying a royalty of two cents on each such part manufactured, and provided that the owner, if he uses the composition himself for mechanical reproduction or licenses others, shall file notice thereof in the copyright office. The reproduction of such composition upon coin-operated machines shall not be deemed a public performance for profit unless a fee is charged for admission to the place of reproduction.

A musical composition as an idea or intellectual conception is not subject to copyright, but only its material embodiment in the form of writing or print may be copyrighted; White-Smith M. P. Co. v. Apollo Co., 209 U. S. 1, 28 Sup. Ct. 319, 52 L. Ed. 655, 14 Ann. Cas. 628.

Perforated rolls for mechanical piano players do not infringe; id.

Where one sings an entire copyrighted song with musical accompaniment, it is an infringement, though the singer purports merely to mimic another. But not singing of a single verse and chorus without musical accompaniment; Green v. Luby, 177 Fed. 287, nor where, in mimicing an actress and her postures and gestures, the singer used the verse of the song only as a vehicle; Bloom v. Nixon, 125 Fed. 977.

See COPYRIGHT.

MUSTER. To collect together and exhibit soldiers and their arms. To employ recruits, and put their names down in a book to enroll them. In the latter sense the term implies that the persons mustered are not already in the service; Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen (Mass.) 480. The same term is applied to a list of soldiers in the service of a government. Articles of War, R. S. § 1342.

MUSTER-ROLL. A written document containing the names, ages, quality, place of residence, and, above all, place of birth, of every person of the ship's company. It is of great use in ascertaining the ship's neutrality. Marsh. Ins. p. 407; Jacobsen, Sea Laws 161; Ketland v. Lebering, 2 Wash. C. C. 201, Fed. Cas. No. 7,744.

MUSTIZO. A name given in a South Carolina Act of 1740 to the issue of an Indian and a negro. Miller v. Dawson, Dudl. (S. C.) 174.

MUTATION OF LIBEL. An amendment allowed to a libel, by which there is an alteration of the substance of the libel, as by propounding a new cause of action, or asking one thing instead of another. Law, Eccl. Law 165–167; U. S. v. Four Part Pieces of Woollen Cloth, 1 Paine 435, Fed. Cas. No. 15,150; The Harmony, 1 Gall. 123, Fed. Cas. No. 6,081.

MUTATIS MUTANDIS (Lat.). The necessary changes. This is a phrase of frequent practical occurrence, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like.

MUTE. When a prisoner upon his arraignment totally refuses to answer, insists upon mere frivolous pretences, or refuses to put himself upon the country, after pleading not guilty, he is said to stand mute.

In the case of the United States v. Hare et al., Circuit Court, Maryland Dist., May sessions, 1818, the prisoner standing mute was considered as if he had pleaded not guilty. See U. S. v. Borger, 7 Fed. 193, 19 Blatch. 251; In re Smith, 13 Fed. 27; State v. Ward, 48 Ark. 39, 2 S. W. 191, 3 Am. St. Rep. 213. In consequence an act of congress of March 8, 1825, provided that if any person, in case of an offence not capital, shall stand mute, the trial shall proceed as upon a plea of not guilty. A similar provision is to be found in the laws of many states, and, in England, the same practice is adopted by the court.

In former times, in England, the terrible punishment or sentence of penance or peine (probably a corrupted abbreviation of prisone) fort et dure was inflicted where a prisoner would not plead, and stood obstinately mute. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE. Prisoners sometimes suffered death in this way to save their property from forfeiture. In treason, petit felony, and misdemeanors, however, wilfully standing mute was equivalent to a conviction, and the same punishment might be imposed. Giles Corey, accused of witchcraft, was perhaps the only person pressed to death in America for refusing to plead. 3 Bancroft's Hist. U. S. 93. See DEAF AND DUMB.

MUTILATION. The depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. 1 Bla. Com. 130. See MAYHEM.

MUTINY. In Criminal Law. The unlawful resistance of a superior officer, or the raising of commotions and disturbances on board of a ship against the authority of its commander, or in the army in opposition to the authority of the officers; a sedition; a revolt. See Whart. Cr. L. § 1876.

Art. 22 of the United States Articles of War provides: Any officer or soldier, who begins, excites, causes, or joins in any mutiny or sedition, in any troop, battery, company, party, post, detachment, or guard, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial shall direct. Art. 23: Any officer or soldier who, being present at any mutiny or sedition, does not use his utmost endeavors to suppress the same, or, having knowledge of any intended mutiny or sedition does not without delay give information thereof to his commanding officer, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

Sedition is the raising of a commotion or disturbance with a view to create a mutiny or to incite revolt against military authority. Davis, Mil. L. 390 As to mutiny, see U. S. v. Smith, 1 Mas. 147, Fed Cas. No. 16,337; U. S. v. Kelly, 4 Wash. C. C. 528, Fed. Cas. No. 15,516; U. S. v. Borden, 1 Spra. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 14,625.

Art. 4 of the navy provides the punishment of death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, for any person in the naval service "who makes or attempts to make, or unite with any mutiny or mutinous assembly, or, being witness to or present at any mutiny, does not do his utmost to suppress it; or, knowing of any mutinous assembly or any intended mutiny, does not immediately communicate his knowledge to his superior commanding officer."

Mutiny, revolt, and the endeavor to make a revolt or mutiny, on board merchant-vessels, are made criminal, and a punishment provided for them; R. S. § 4596 (amended 1898): U. S. v. Nye, 2 Curt. C. C. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 15,906; U. S. v. Peterson, 1 Woodb. & M. 306, Fed. Cas. No. 16,037; U. S. v. Cassedy, 2 Sumn. C. C. 582, Fed. Cas. No. 14,745.

MUTINY ACT. In English Law. A statute, annually passed, to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed April 12, 1689, and was the only provision for the payment of the army. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 416. In 1879, the army discipline act consolidated the provisions of the mutiny act with the articles of war. This was reenacted (1881) as the Army Act, which is still in force. It is said that this act has of itself no force, but requires to be brought into operation annually by a short army act, thus maintaining the control of Parliament over the army. Clode, Mil. L. 38.

MUTUAL ACCOUNTS. Such as contain mutual credits between the parties; or an existing credit on one side which constitutes a ground for credit on the other, or where there is an understanding that mutual debts shall be a set-off pro tanto, between the parties. McNeil v. Garland, 27 Ark. 343. Such accounts, of however long standing, are not barred by the statute of limitations, if there be any items within the prescribed limit; 6 Term 189; Ang. Lim. 138. See MERCHANTS' ACCOUNTS; LIMITATIONS.

MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATIONS. See ASSOCIATION; BENEFICIAL SOCIETIES; INSURANCE.

MUTUAL CONSENT. Mutual consent is of the essence of every contract, and therefore it must always exist, in legal contemplation, at the moment when the contract is made. See Add. Contr. 13. It never, however, is the subject of direct allegation or proof, partly because it is generally incapable of direct proof, and partly because every contract is made by acts performed. Proof of the necessary acts carries with it presumptive proof of mutual consent. Thus, if two separate agreements be drawn up, signed and sealed, each of them purporting to be a contract between A. and B., and the parties, intending to deliver one of the instruments, deliver the other by mistake, there is no contract made; Langd. Contr. 193. Where the plaintiff's acceptance of the defendant's offer inadvertently made a slight change in a date, there was no contract, because there had not been mutual consent; 4 Bing. 653. Mutual consent must extend to the consideration as well as to the promise; Langd. Contr. 82.

MUTUAL CREDITS. Credits given by two persons mutually, i. e. each giving credit to the other. It is a more extensive phrase than mutual debts. Thus, the sum credited by one may be due at once, that by the other payable in futuro; yet the credits are mutual, though the transaction would not come within the meaning of mutual debts; 7 Term 378. And it is not necessary that there should be intent to trust each other: thus, where an acceptance of A. came into the hands of B, who bought goods of A, not knowing the acceptance to be in B's hands, it was held a mutual credit; 3 Ves. 65; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 179; Jones v. Robinson, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 310; Aldrich v. Campbell, 4 Gray (Mass.) 284; King v. King, 9 N. J. Eq. 44.

MUTUAL INSURANCE. That form of insurance in which each person insured becomes a member of the company, and the members reciprocally engage to indemnify each other against losses, any loss being met by an assessment laid upon all the members. See INSURANCE.

MUTUAL PROMISES. Promises simultaneously made by two parties to each other, each promise being the consideration of the other. Ans. Contr. 72; 14 M. & W. 855; Add. Contr. 13. If one of the promises be voidable, it will yet be good consideration, but not if void; Story, Contr. § 81; 2 Steph. Com. 114.

MUTUALITY. Reciprocity; an acting in return. Webster, Dict.; Add. Contr. 622; 9th ed. 13, 14; Spear v. Orendorf, 26 Md. 37. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

MUTUARY. A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him and returned to the lender in kind; the person who receives the benefit arising from the contract of mutuum. Story, Bailm. § 47.

MUTUATUS. A loan of money. See Gilbert, Com. Pleas 5.

MUTUUM. A loan of personal chattels to be consumed by the borrower and to be returned to the lender in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money which is to be used or consumed, and is to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. Story, Bailm. § 228. See LOAN FOR USE.

MYSTERY (said to be derived from the French mestier, now written metier, a trade). A trade, art, or occupation. Co. 2d Inst. 668.

Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery. See Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 23, s. 11.

MYSTIC TESTAMENT. A will placed in a sealed envelope. La. Civ. Code, art. 1567; Broutin v. Vassant, 5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 182; Lewis' Heirs v. His Executors, 5 La. 396; Schoul. Wills, § 9.
